In discussing § 2, chap. 14, Ill. Rev. Stat. relating to the procedure therein established for holding the defendant to bail, the court stated that it was immaterial what the legislature might have said, as they could prescribe no rule for imprisonment for debt, except in conformity with § 15, art. 13, Ill. Const.; they might prescribe a mode by which the debtor should surrender his estate for the benefit of his creditors, and for his failure to do so they might provide for his imprisonment; or they might provide for his imprisonment in case of strong presumption of fraud; and the court construed such act in connection with, and under the influence of the Constitution, and understood them as meaning that the affidavit must show, by facts stated and circumstances detailed, what the Constitution requires. It must either be construed so as to harmonize with the Constitution or else be held to violate it. Re Smith, 16 Ill. 347, 349.

So the courts of that state have further held that the provisions of the Illinois Constitution are to be regarded as having effectually abolished imprisonment for debt, as practiced under the common law; and therefore where a debt is the basis of the action, in order to justify imprisonment the foundation must be laid under one or both of the exceptions contained in § 12 of art. 2 of the state Constitution, namely, a refusal to deliver up his estate for the benefit of creditors, or fraud either in contracting or evading payment of the debt, such provisions extending to a writ of ne exeat. Malcolm v. Andrews, 68 Ill. 100, 104.

So, the limited imprisonment permitted under the Illinois statutes in actions ex contractu, where a tort is not the basis of the action, is not for or on account of the debt, but because of the fraud committed in fraudulently withholding and concealing property so that the same cannot be applied to the discharge of the indebtedness. Sawyer v. Nelson, 44 Ill. App. 184, 185.

And the requirements of the statute and Constitution must be fully complied with before defendant can be imprisoned for debt. Gorton v. Frizzell, 20 Ill. 291, 296. To the same effect Tuttle v. Wilson, 24 Ill. 553.

The imprisonment of the debtor under the Illinois Constitution is for his wrongful act in endeavoring to evade payment, and therefore, if in that state there is no imprisonment for debt, the rigid rules of the common law cannot be applied; and therefore if such imprisonment is abolished, prison, after delivering up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law." Const. 1819, art. 1, § 18; Const. 1861, art. 1, § 18; Const. 1865, art. 1, § 22. This change was made in the Constitution of 1868 (art. 1, § 22), where the provision assumed its present form. In Ex parte

Hardy, 68 Ala. 303, 318, it was held—and we do not understand that there was any division of opinion on this point—that the elimination of the exception as to frauds was a pregnant omission, which left the guaranty of immunity from imprisonment to the debtor to apply to all cases of debt, whether they involved fraud and it can only be had in cases of fraud or wrongful refusal to surrender his property for his creditor's benefit, it follows that the effect and consequences of imprisonment for debt at common law must fail. Strode v. Broadwell, 36 Ill. 419, 422; Burnap v. Marsh, 13 Ill. 585.

And the act of the debtor under such Constitution being an offense against the law, it should appear that all the elements required by the statute to render the act complete actually exist before the debtor forfeits the right to invoke in his behalf the general guaranty of personal liberty declared in the section of the Constitution, and before he can be said to be brought within the exceptions named. Maher v. Huette, 10 Ill. App. 66.

In Stafford v. Low, 20 Ill. 152, 154, it was held that Ill. Rev. Stat. 1845, chap. 14, p. 80, was directly in conflict with the Constitution, if, by such statute, it was intended to give a plaintiff the right to imprison his debtor merely by making an oath that the debt would be in danger of being lost or that the benefit of any judgment he might obtain would be in danger, unless the defendant was held to bail, for the reason that the Constitution prohibited imprisonment for debt, except when the debtor refused to surrender his property for the benefit of his creditors, or where there was a strong presumption of fraud; and until one of those causes was made to appear the writ could not issue, no matter what else might be established. Although the legislature undoubtedly imposed additional requirements, yet they had no power to abridge or dispense with those imposed by the Constitution, such requirements being indispensable to the validity of a writ to imprison a defendant for debt; and therefore unless the affidavit showed a compliance with the requirements of both Constitution and statute, the writ must not issue.

And it has been stated that the policy of the law in Illinois as shown by the Constitution is opposed to imprisonment for debt, and no person within that state can be so imprisoned, unless upon refusal to surrender his estate for the benefit of his creditors, as prescribed by law, or in cases where there is a strong presumption of fraud. Kitson v. Farwell, 122 Ill. 827, 834.

Where the respondent took into his possession or control a large sum of money, the proceeds of a stock of goods disposed of by him to different parties, and contumaciously refused to honestly, fairly, and truthfully testify in relation to such proceeds, and as to what he had done with them, and to turn the same over for the benefit of his creditors, it was held that such act came within the provisions of the Illinois statutes, and that he was not exempt from imprisonment, and therefore that his committal, although by way of contempt of court, was not illegal; and the court refused to release him and affirmed the judgment of committal. Berkson v. People, 154 Ill. 81, 85.

And where the debtor was charged with refusing to surrender his estate, and with fraudulently disposing of the same with a design to secure it to his own use, or to defraud his creditors, the court held that both of these grounds for arrest were within the contemplation of the Illinois Constitution of 1870, § 12, which provides that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt, unless upon refusal to deliver up his estate for the benefit of his creditors in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, or in cases where there is strong presumption of fraud. Huntington v. Metzger, 158 Ill. 272.

Indiana.

The Indiana courts in passing upon this question have held that every statute in restraint of personal liberty ought to be strictly construed, and construed, too, with reference to the current decisions and the usual practice which existed at the time of and before its adoption. Ramsey v. Foy, 10 Ind. 493.

So, in Wendover v. Tucker, 4 Ind. 381, the court in construing the statute of that state, abolishing imprisonment for debt, stated that as a law in favor of personal liberty it would seem that it ought to receive a liberal construction, but that such was not the rule theretofore adopted in that court, as in giving construction to a similar statute the court held the party to considerable strictness, stating that there were controlling reasons why such strictness should now be observed more rigidly. Imprisonment for debt was then the common mode of procedure to enforce payment, but it was abolished by the General Laws of 1842, p. 68, Rev. Stat. 1843, p. 752; 1 Rev. Stat. 1852, p. 346, and 2 Rev. Stat. p. 152.

Section 23 of art. 1 of the Indiana Constitution prohibits imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud, and in Baker v. State, Mills, 109 Ind. 47, 48, the court held that the leading, if not the only, purpose of the above section of the Constitution was to authorize imprisonment for fraud practiced in avoiding the payment of debts.

And it is only in case of fraud that a debtor can be either arrested or imprisoned under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1876, § 22, 104. Swift v. State, Clark, 63 Ind. 81.

Iowa.

Article 2, § 9, of the Iowa Constitution provides that no person shall be imprisoned for any debt in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace. Holmes v. State, 2 G. Greene, 501, 503.

Section 19, art. 1, of the Iowa Constitution provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud. In Ex parte Grace, 13 Iowa, 203, 213, 79 Am. Dec. 529, the debtor was imprisoned under an order made by a county judge sitting as judge, and not as a court, without power to hear witnesses or take testimony founded upon an examination as to his means, taken under chap. 123, Iowa Rev. Stat. 1880, from which it appeared that he had money in his possession which he refused to deliver up and apply toward satisfaction of the judgment, and it was held that such imprisonment was unconstitutional as contrary to § 9 and 10 of the state Constitution regarding the life and liberty of the subject and due process of law, the act conferring no jurisdiction. But yet with regard to § 19 of art. 1 of such Constitution the court stated that it did not consider the act in question a violation of such provision of the Constitution, for the reason that the failure of the debtor to surrender his property liable to execution to the payment of the judgment might well be such fraud as that, within the meaning of the Constitution, he would forfeit his right to claim exemption from imprisonment, and not only so, but that if the fraud was once found or not. So that the statute we are considering can derive no aid from the idea that the receipt of a deposit by a banker under the circumstances stated is a fraud, and hence that the transaction would constitute "a case of fraud," since even in such cases there can be no imprisonment for debt.

2. The "imprisonment for debt" which the framers of constitutions embodying this provision doubtless had most prominently in mind was imprisonment upon process issuing in civil actions the object and sole purpose of which were the collection of debts. It was to remove the evils incident to the system of taking the

by a competent tribunal the correctness of that finding could not be reviewed in another court or by any judge, upon habeas corpus, but the imprisonment must be in a manner and under circumstances which came within the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution.

The case of Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67 Iowa, 619, 56 Am. Rep. 360, was one wherein proceedings were taken under § 8145 of the Iowa Code, which provides that a party disobeying the order of the court judge, or referee, duly served, is punishable as for contempt. It was there held that the imprisonment of the defendant for noncompliance with the order of the court was not unconstitutional, but was a proceeding in aid of execution, the court distinguishing the case from that of Ex parte Grace, supra, upon the ground that in the case then before the court such court had full jurisdiction.

In this case, however, there are two dissenting opinions which hold that the statute in question was unconstitutional, and that the case was governed by the prior decisions in that state in Boyd v. Ellis, 11 Iowa, 98; Ex parte Grace, supra; Stewart v. Polk County Supers, 30 Iowa, 9; State v. Start, 7 Iowa, 503, 74 Am. Dec. 573.

Kansas.

In Howe Mach. Co. v. Lincoln, 24 Kan. 123, it was stated that fraud alone under the Constitution of that state justified arrest for debt. In that case the defendant had been imprisoned for fraud in obtaining a mortgage given for the purpose of covering his defalcations as the agent of the plaintiff. The court set aside an order liberating him on a motion for his discharge, holding that there was a clear case of fraud within the provisions of the Constitution, and this opinion was affirmed upon appeal in 25 Kan. 312.

The case of Tennent v. Weymouth, 25 Kan. 21, was one wherein the defendants had assigned and disposed of their property, or a part thereof, with intent to defraud their creditors, but as the facts merely showed that the defendants sold and disposed of their entire stock of goods for a certain sum, receiving in payment a certain amount in cash and two farms; and that the title deeds were executed to their wives; and that the defendants commenced business with their cash capital; and that at the time of the sale they owed a certain specified amount,—the court stated that such facts did not prove fraud without which no arrest for debt could be had under the Kansas Constitution; fraud never being presumed but always proved, the law neither favoring nor encouraging arrest and imprisonment, such a remedy being the dernier resort, the end of the law, quasi criminal. The proof of fraud must be clear and strong. To the same effect are Gillett v. Thiebold, 9 Kan. 427; Hauss v. Kohlar, 25 Kan. 640.

In that state the person of the debtor is now only taken in case of fraud. Randolph v. Simon, 29 Kan. 403, 410.

And such fraud must be established and proved; it will not be presumed. Re Roberts, 4 Kan. App. 302.

So, if the facts show fraud in the contracting of the obligation, the court will deny the motion for the discharge of the debtor,—especially if he shows no reasonable grounds for the disposition of his property. Heath v. Brown, 40 Kan. 33.

34 L. R. A.

In Re Heath, 40 Kan. 333, 337, it was urged that a district judge, at chambers or in vacation, had no power to issue an execution against the person of a judgment debtor, but the court stated that the Kansas statute expressly conferred that power, and there was nothing in the Constitution forbidding the exercise thereof where fraud existed.

So, fraud must be proved before a court having jurisdiction to pass upon the question; consequently, before one in that state can be imprisoned for fraud, there must have been a judicial finding upon due process of law. Re Roberts, supra.

Louisiana.

And although there does not seem to be any express declaration against such imprisonment, yet under the Louisiana laws it has been held that as a general rule debtors cannot be imprisoned for debt, and the Louisiana act of 1855, authorizing their arrest under certain circumstances, must be regarded as an exception to the rule, and viewed in that light it must be construed strictly, and it therefore devolves upon the creditor who seeks such harsh remedy to make out his case and show that the party arrested is clearly one of those contemplated by the act. Levi v. Levy, 20 La. Ann. 552, 553.

Where a debtor had been imprisoned for debt and confessed judgment in favor of the plaintiff, it was held that, notwithstanding such confession, he was not entitled to have the term of imprisonment for such debt put an end to, where the facts showed that it was his intention to depart permanently from the state without leaving property sufficient to satisfy his creditor's demand, such an act being a fraud on the defendant's part. State, Williamson, v. Fourth City Ct. Judge, 37 La. Ann. 385. Following Anderson v. Brinkley, 1 La. Ann. 126; State, Wung Chung, v. Orleans Parish Civil Sheriff, 31 La. Ann. 790.

Massachusetts.

The 12th article of the Declaration of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights declares, inter alia, no subject shall be arrested, imprisoned, despoiled, or deprived of his property, immunities, or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled, or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by a judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

By Mass. Stat. 1835, chap. 444, which took effect on the 4th of July of that year, imprisonment for debt was abolished, except in certain cases of fraud. Dooley v. Cotton, 3 Gray, 490.

In Frost's Case, 157 Mass. 550, 554, it was said that by the common law a creditor had the absolute right to arrest his debtor upon an execution for debt, but that this right was restricted by the Massachusetts statutes, which permitted an arrest on execution only where the creditor made affidavit, and proved to the satisfaction of the magistrate that he believed, and had reason to believe, that one of the six charges named in the statute was true. The affidavit and proof before the magistrate, for the purpose merely of obtaining the authority to arrest upon execution, were not proceedings in a criminal case, but were merely proceedings in the course of a civil suit for the collection of a debt to which the 12th article of the Declaration of Rights had no application, and therefore if a creditor made the affidavit as provided by the statute, and obtained a certificate of the magistrate duly annexed to the execution, he had complied with the requiredebtor's person upon a capias ad satisfaciendum that this organic inhibition came primarily to be ordained. But the effect of its ordination has been to establish a public policy much broader in its influence upon legislation and operation upon judicial proceedings than would have sufficed for the eradication of the ills which attended upon the recovery, or at tempted recovery, of debts by restraint of the debtor's person. This policy is inimical alike to the incarceration of a debtor as a means of coercing payment, and to his punishment by imprisonment for a failure to pay, at least when such failure results from inability. And ments of the statute and was justified in causing the arrest of his debtor.

In Massachusetts a purchase of goods with an intent not to pay for them is expressly recognized by statute as a fraud which will deprive the debtor of the benefit of the act for the relief of poor debtors, and may subject him to sentence of imprisonment without violating the constitutional provision. Gen. Stat. chap. 124, §§ 5, 34, Rev. Stat. chap. 98, §§ 31, 36. Dow v. Sanborn, 8 Allen, 181, 183. To the same effect, Way v. Brigham, 138 Mass. 384, 386, decided under the fifth charge contained in Mass. Stat. chap. 162, § 17; Noyes v. Manning, 162 Mass. 14.

Although poor-debtor proceedings under the Massachusetts statutes are in their main features of a civil and not of a criminal nature yet if a debtor is found guilty upon a charge of fraud, he may be imprisoned. Noyes v. Manning, supra. Everett v. Henderson, 160 Mass. 411, to the same effect.

Michigan.

In Re Teachout, 15 Mich. 346, the debtor was imprisoned for fraud in contracting the debt and in assigning his property with intent to defraud his creditors, and the facts as set forth in the affidavit showed a prima facie case of fraud. It was held sufficient to warrant the arrest and imprisonment under the Michigan statutes.

The provision of Mich. Const. 1852, art. 6, § 33, which declares that no person shall be imprisoned for debt arising out of or founded on a contract, express or implied, except in cases of fraud or breach of trust, or of moneys collected by public officers, or in any professional employment, was held to be understood and intended in precise accordance with the principles of the Michigan non-imprisonment law, and that the cases of fraud mentioned in such section included as well cases where the fraud was made use of to avoid payment of, as those where it was used in obtaining, the contract creating the debt. Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472, 487. In this case the plaintiff in error was arrested and committed by a circuit court commissioner under the Michigan statutes relating to the punishment of fraudulent debtors, the charge against him being that of fraud in contracting the debt and fraudulently assigning and disposing of his property.

Sections 7174, 7175, Mich. Comp. Laws, prohibit arrest in civil proceedings for the recovery of money on a judgment or decree founded on contract, or for recovery of money due on a contract, or for damages for the breach of a contract, and except from the prohibition proceedings for contempt to enforce civil remedies, actions for fines, penalties, or forfeitures, or for breaches of promise to marry, or for money collected by a public officer, or for neglect or misconduct in office, or in professional employment; and it has been stated that the exemption from imprisonment for debt has been extended by Mich. Const. 1852, so that there is now no power to arrest in some of the cases mentioned in § 7175 of the Compiled Laws of that state. Badger v. Reade, 39 Mich. 771.

Nevada.

Section 14, art. 1, of the Constitution of Nevada provides that there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud.

In Ex parte Bergman, 18 Nev. 331, it was held that § 4 L. R. A.

the exemption contained in the above section of the Constitution did not apply to a case of a fraudulent disposition of property by a debtor with the intention of defrauding his creditors, as in cases of tort, and where debts were fraudulently contracted, or where there was an attempt at a fraudulent disposition of property with intent to delay the creditor or deprive him of payment, the body of the debtor was allowed to be seized and confined.

New Jersey.

The New Jersey statute allowing imprisonment for debt in cases where the debtor "unjustly and unlawfully" declines to surrender property in his control to the payment of his debts, does not conflict with the provisions of the Constitution which prohibit imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud. Ex parte Clark, 20 N. J. L. 648, 45 Am. Dec. 394.

In Ex parte Clark, 20 N. J. L. 648, 649, 650, 45 Am. Dec. 394, it was contended that the Constitution of that state had entirely abrogated the act of 1842, and that therefore a man could only be imprisoned for a debt which had been fraudulently contracted; and that in such a case fraud must be judicially established by the judgment of a competent court, in due course of law, before the defendant could be imprisoned, but the court stated that such was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution; nor did the language of that instrument allow of, or give countenance to, such a construction. Its negative language, "no person shall be imprisoned for debt," coupled with the exception "except in cases of fraud," being equivalent to saying affirmatively, that a person might be imprisoned for debt in cases of fraud. Whether the fraud had relation to the time and manner of creating the debt, or to subsequent attempts to defeat the creditor's recovery of it by the ordinary process of the law, was said to make no difference, it being left to the legislature to say what should be deemed such fraud as should make a man liable to imprisonment; and how it should be proved, in order to justify the debtor's arrest, the clause of the Constitution being constructed to protect the honest, but unfortunate, debtor from imprisonment; leaving the legislature at liberty, from time to time, as public policy and experience might dictate, to reach the fraudulent and dishonest shifts and devices of the debtor, and subject him to imprisonment, for the debt he was seeking to avoid the payment of. Therefore it could not be said that you might imprison your debtor for the debt he owed, only when by indiotment, or some other mode yet to be devised, you had first convicted him of fraud in the creation of the debt, or in avoiding the payment of it.

In the above case it was also insisted, on behalf of the prisoner, that so much of the New Jersey act of 1842 as exposed a man to imprisonment for "unlawfully and unjustly" refusing to apply money or choses in action in his own possession, or in the hands of other persons for his use, to the payment of his debt, was incompatible with the clause of the Constitution, and therefore abrogated, upon the ground that there was nothing fraudulent in a man's having money or property in his own possession, or in possession of another for his use and subject to his control, and yet refusing to appropriate it to the payment of his honest debt; but the court stated that one of the most dishonest hence it is that, while neither the letter of the inhibition, nor the broader policy which is engendered by it and has come to be a part of it, has any application to criminal judgments for fines and costs, yet it is not within legislative competency to declare the mere nonperformance of a contract of indebtedness a misdemeanor, and punish the commission thereof by imprisonment, directly or indirectly; for, as said in the notes to State v. Brewer (S. C.) 87 Am. St. Rep. 753, 758, "as that which is prohibited to be done directly cannot be accomplished by indirection, the legislature cannot declare the mere nonperformance of a contract things a man could be guilty of was to refuse to pay his honest debts when he had the means to do so, and that whatever was dishonest was fraudulent in foro conscientie, and was so treated in a court of equity, fraud and dishonesty being synonymous terms. But mere refusal to apply money to the payment of a debt was held insufficient to constitute a fraud for which a debtor could be imprisoned. See also Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. C. 384, 386; and Re Concklin's Application, 5 Ohio C. C. 78, infra.

Where the facts shown were such that the commissioner might legally infer fraud and consider them proof of the fraudulent concealment and removal of the debtor's goods, with intent on his part to defraud his creditors, within the meaning of the New Jersey statute, the court affirmed the order of the commissioner under which the debtor was arrested, the weight and credibility of such evidence resting with the commissioner. Wire v. Browning, 20 N. J. L. 364. In that case the proceedings were before the adoption of the present Constitution and remained unaffected by any operation which that instrument might have upon the New Jersey act of 1842.

Inasmuch as the Constitution of the state of New Jersey, adopted in the year 1844, art. 1, § 17, declares that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any action, or on any judgment founded upon contract, unless in cases of fraud," imprisonment for debt in the state of New Jersey is restricted to cases of fraud, which is not to be presumed but must be proved, and the act of 1842, which abolished imprisonment for debt in all actions founded upon contract, express or implied, except in certain cases and under certain circumstances specified therein, still remains in force, except so far as any of its provisions are repugnant to the Constitution, these provisions still regulating and controlling those cases under which persons may be imprisoned for debt in that state. Hill v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 476.

The fact that the debtor showed bad faith in procuring time for the payment of the debt by inducing the plaintiff to accept a worthless mortgage was held such a fraud as would authorize his arrest and imprisonment for debt under the New Jersey statutes. Van Wagenen v. Coe, 22 N. J. L. 581.

In McKernan v. McDonald, 27 N. J. L. 541, it was held that the fraud must be clearly proved by such testimony as would be required in a court of justice, and that the affidavit might be taken by any person competent to take it, and the order might be made by any judge or commissioner to whom the affidavit might be exhibited.

New York.

Although there does not seem to be any express provision in the Constitution of the state of New York prohibiting imprisonment for debt, yet there are statutory provisions in that state which prohibit such imprisonment except in cases of fraud and fraudulent dealings on the part of a debtor, and the same would seem to be in keeping with the provisions contained in the statutes of other states which have been passed for the purpose of carrying out the provision of their respective Constitutions.

Until the passage of the New York act of April 26, 1831, a capias ad satisfaciendum, upon which the judgment debtor might be arrested and imprisoned, was one of the usual and customary remedies to enforce the judgments of the courts, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto; but that act, which was passed to abolish imprisonment for debt, and to punish fraudulent debtors, declares that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned on any civil process issuing out of any court of law, or on any execution issuing out of any court of equity, in any suit or proceeding instituted for the recovery of any money due upon any judgment or decree founded upon contract, or due upon any contract, express or implied, or for the recovery of any damages for the nonperformance of any contract. But § 179 of the Code of Procedure provides for the imprisonment of a defendant in actions for the recovery of damages on a cause of action not arising on contract, where such defendant is not a resident of the state or is about to remove therefrom, or where the action is for an injury to person or character, or for injury to or wrongfully taking, detaining, or converting of property. Merritt v. Carpenter, 30 Barb. 66, 67.

The New York act abolishing imprisonment for debt was intended to prevent arrests for debt alone, but the legislature continued the power to arrest for certain wrongs committed in contracting the debt, thus clearly indicating an intention to subject the wrongdoer to the prescribed consequences of his unlawful act, and the same provisions are embodied in the New York Code. National Bank v. Temple, 30 How. Pr. 432, 436, 2 Sweeny, 344.

The legislature of New York intended to abolish imprisonment for debt in respect to all honest debtors, but still to continue it in respect to dishonest ones, with certain specific qualifications. Moak v. De Forrest, 5 Hill, 606.

By subdivision 4 of § 549 of the New York Code, a defendant may be arrested in an action upon contract, express or implied, where it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant was guilty of a fraud in contracting or incurring the liability. Valentine v. Riehardt, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 289.

And under § 179 of the New York Code, subd. 4, which provides that "when the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action is brought, or in concealing or disposing of the property, for the taking or detention of which the action is brought," it has been held that where the action is one of debt or of contract strictly speaking, the right of arrest cannot be sustained under the first clause of the above subdivision or clause of the section, as the action is one for fraud or deceit, and strictly the old form of action on the case. Crandall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. 48, 53.

So the question whether a defendant can, since such subdivision of the New York Code came into operation, be arrested in an action for fraud or deceit in the case of a sale of lands, depends upon the construction to be given to the word "obligation" as used therein. Ibid.

In the above case of Crandall v. Bryan the court held that the words "incurred an obligation for which the action is brought," as used in the above subdivision of the section of the Code, covered cases of fraud in fact where the remedy was not on the contract in form, where fraud was committed in some matter of contract whereby the plaintiff had been deprived of his property, the word "obligation" being used in a general sense, including all to be a misdemeanor, for that would amount to an attempt to legalize imprisonment for debt." And so, in Tennessee, there was a statute which made it unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, etc., to refuse to cash any checks or scrip issued by them if presented to them within thirty days of the date of issuance, and declared that any such person, etc., so refusing to cash in lawful money such checks or scrip would be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, should be fined not less than $10, nor more than $25. The constitutional provision in that state is that "the legislature shall pass no law authorizing imprisonment cases, beyond those embraced in the first clause, when the fraud is committed "in contracting the debt for which the action is brought," the fraud being a violation of a legal duty, and not resting upon the contract.

The general rule is, that no debtor shall be imprisoned; but the exception is affirmatively and explicitly made that to punish fraud, the fraudulent debtor may be taken and committed as other criminals, and the legislature intended to punish the fraudulent debtor, and provided for the punishment by a clear discrimination between him and the honest man. National Bank v. Temple, 39 How. Pr. 432, 435, 2 Sweeny, 344; People, Latorre, v. O'Brien, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 63.

In the above case of National Bank v. Temple the court cited with approval the statement made by Kent in volume 2 of his Commentaries, p. 300, an "imprisonment for debt is not usual, unless the debt was contracted, in the first instance, under deceitful assurances, or unless the debtor has applied his property unfairly, or refused to give to his creditor any reasonable or satisfactory explanation. And in all those cases he deserves punishment."

Where the action brought against the defendant merely alleged that he converted the proceeds of certain stock unlawfully and fraudulently, and did not allege that he did the same in a fiduciary relation, nor was there any allegation of a violation of a trust, or wrongdoing, the court held that his arrest under § 549 of the New York Code was illegal, even though the action, since the amendment of such Code, was to be treated as in the nature of an action ex delicto. Wilbur v. Allen, 5 N. Y. Supp. 746.

In Wanzer v. De Baum, 1 E. D. Smith, 261, 264, it was held that the New York statute abrogated the right to hold to bail in certain cases, but not where the debt was fraudulently contracted, and that therefore where a debt was fraudulently contracted the right to hold to bail remained whatever the form of action might be, and through whatever changes the security might pass until the debt was satisfied or discharged, the legislature, in intending to discriminate between the classes of persons who should and should not be held to bail, not intending that a fraudulent debtor should enjoy the same exemption from imprisonment as the honest though unfortunate citizen, and it did not therefore exempt the fraudulent debtor from arrest.

The right to arrest a debtor under the New York Code depends, not upon the character of the action, but upon the question whether the defendant has concealed, removed, or disposed of the property so that it cannot be found or taken by the sheriff, and with the intent that it shall not be so found or taken, or with the intent to defraud plaintiff of the benefit thereof; and in such action the defendant cannot be held to bail as a matter of course. Janique v. De Luc, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. 419, in which case the action was brought to recover lace and for damages for the unlawful detention thereof, an order for arrest having been made against the defendant, which order upon appeal was vacated.

North Carolina.

In order to avoid a violation of the constitutional provisions, and at the same time protect honest creditors against dishonest debtors, the North 84 L. R. A.

Carolina courts have held that it devolves upon the legislature, in cases of fraud, to enact such laws as are necessary in its discretion, for arrest and imprisonment in proper cases, and to provide for all necessary proceedings in relation thereto, and the Code of that state having so provided, the court must interpret and ascertain its meaning. Premis v. Cohen, 117 N. C. 54, 59.

Under art. 1, § 16, of the Constitution of North Carolina, which abolishes imprisonment for debt in that state, except in cases of fraud, there is no constitutional protection against arrest for fraud, whether the person be a resident or nonresident, and therefore a nonresident when within the jurisdiction of the court will not be allowed immunities not accorded to citizens of that state. Powers v. Davenport, 101 N. C. 226, 233, in which case the defendant was arrested for a fraud committed after contracting the debt, by concealing the property and resorting to other devices for defeating the creditor.

The sole object of the constitutional provisions is to protect the unfortunate but honest debtors, but not to shelter the knave or assist him in carrying out his purposes, nor to prevent the creditor from the use of all lawful means to procure satisfaction of his debt. Brown v. Walk, 8 Ired. L. 517, 520; State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. 20, 34.

In Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. C. 384, 386, the court stated that the words "except in cases of fraud," as used in such Constitution, were broad, and comprehended, not only fraud in attempting to hinder, delay, and defeat the collection of a debt by concealing property and other fraudulent devices, but embraced also fraud in making the contract, false pretenses and fraud in incurring the liability.

The 20th article of the Constitution of that state protects free negroes and free people of color who have not been guilty of fraud, and such section, under the operation of the act of 1778, prohibits the imprisonment of an insolvent debtor after his insolvency has been ascertained to be bona fide in any manner directed by law, either before or since the adoption of the Constitution. State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. 20, 23.

So it has been held that such a debtor is protected from arrest at the suit of any creditor, not by virtue of the statutory provision, but by the constitutional provisions. Burton v. Dickens, 3 Murph. (N. C.) 108.

Fraud committed by a defendant in contracting a debt is sufficient to justify his arrest under the provisions of the North Carolina Constitution. Paige v. Price, 78 N. C. 10.

And it has been held that, even in cases of fraud, a debtor is entitled to be discharged upon giving bail or surrendering his property for the benefit of his creditors according to the terms of the statutes of that state. Burgwyn v. Hall, 108 N. C. 489.

In Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. C. 384, 386, the defendant was an administrator fixed with assets to a certain amount, and there being no proof that he had embezzled the amount, or put it into his own pocket, the court held that although fixed with assets which should be forthcoming, he was not thereby found guilty of fraud so as to exclude him from the privilege of being exempted by the Constitution from imprisonment for debt, and was not to be treated as a dishonest debtor.

In State v. Norman, 110 N. C. 484, the defendant contended that chapter 444 of the Acts of 1899, for debt in civil cases,"—terms which would seem to allow greater latitude of legislation in respect of cases of the class we are considering than our own provision,—and, bringing the statute to the test of this inhibition, the court said: "The act of the legislature in question, while not directly authorizing imprisonment for debt, does attempt to create a crime for the nonpayment of debts evidenced by checks, scrip, or order, and for such crime provides a penalty, which may or may not be followed by imprisonment. In that way and for that reason the act is violative of the spirit if not the letter of the constitutional provision above amended by chapter 106 of the Acts of 1891, which provides that if any person with intent to cheat or defraud another shall obtain any advances in money, provisions, goods, wares, or merchandise of any description from any other person or corporation, upon and by color of any promise or agreement that the person making the same will commence or begin any work or labor of any description for said person or corporation from whom said advances are obtained, and said person so making said promise or agreement shall unlawfully and wilfully fail to commence and complete said work according to contract, without lawful excuse, the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $50, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, was unconstitutional, as being in violation of § 16, art. 1, of the Constitution, which abolished imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud; but the court held that the offense denounced by the statute was not a failure to comply with the contract, but the fraud in making it, in obtaining advances with intent to cheat and defraud, and that therefore the act was constitutional.

So, in McNeely v. Haynes, 76 N. C. 122, it was held that one of two partners who had not been guilty of fraud, or connived at his partner's actions, in contracting the debt, could not be imprisoned for a debt incurred by his partner through fraud, and was therefore entitled to constitutional exemptions.

And in Claffin v. Underwood, 75 N. C. 455, there had been an arrest upon the ground of fraudulent concealment suggested by the affidavit of the plaintiff, and the court stated that the case of fraud not being proved, but on the contrary left open by consent, there was no authority for the writ of ca. sa., and the defendant was entitled to his discharge, there being no case of fraud within the provisions of the Constitution.

Ohio.

It has been held that art. 1, § 15, of the Ohio Constitution of 1851, which provides that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud," clearly contemplated legislation before any arrest could be made in civil actions, though fraud might have intervened, and therefore courts, whether of general or limited jurisdiction, had now no common-law power to authorize arrests in such cases, and that the power, if it existed at all, must be conferred by express legislation. Spice v. Steinruck, 14 Ohio St. 212, 218.

And in Re Concklin's Application, 5 Ohio C. C. 78, it was stated that the legislature having provided for the poor and honest man by the homestead and exemption laws, the balance of his property was subject to his debts, and any act of the judgment debtor that prevented this balance from being so applied, constituted a fraud within the meaning of art. 1, § 15, of the Ohio Bill of Rights.

Oregon.

By art. 1, § 19, of the Constitution of Oregon, it is provided, "there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud or absconding debtors," and § 106 of the Code provides that a debtor may be arrested in certain cases therein specified, that is to say, when he is a nonresident of the state, or is about to remove therefrom, or when he is guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or in concealing or disposing of his property, or when he has removed or disposed of his property, or is about to do so with intent to defraud his creditors.

In Norman v. Zieber, 3 Or. 197, 204, it was said that the above constitutional provision was negative in its character, and had only a restrictive effect, which would not, of its own force, and without legislation, authorize an arrest in any case, the legislature having definitely provided in what cases and in what transactions fraud should be a ground for arrest, the authority to arrest for fraud being limited to the kinds or classes of fraud which the legislature had designated, the words "about to remove therefrom," as used in § 106 of the Code being construed with reference to the subject-matter, and without reference to the constitutional restriction; and further, that if the language would admit of a construction consistent with the Constitution, such should be given rather than a construction that would conflict with the Constitution, and thus defeat the intent of the legislature by rendering their acts void; therefore the construction in order to be consistent with the Constitution must include the idea of "absconding" and any "removal" which was neither fraudulent nor an absconding, could not, under the Constitution, be made a cause of arrest.

In that case it was further stated that the act expressly named as causes of arrest removal of property with intent to defraud creditors, and by omitting to mention the removal of the person with such intent it made the conclusion unavoidable that the removal of the person with that intent was not of itself a ground for arrest, and that there must be an absconding, as distinguished from any other kind of fraud, to come within the provisions of both the act and Constitution. Norman v. Zieber, supra.

Pennsylvania.

In Pennsylvania the Constitution prohibits such imprisonment in cases wherein there is not a strong presumption of fraud, and after delivery of his estate for the benefit of his creditors in manner prescribed by law.

In Gosline v. Place, 33 Pa. 520, 529, it was stated that if the debt was fraudulently contracted, or if it be fraudulently attempted to be evaded, the remedy of imprisonment might be applied whether the fraud was committed in or out of the state in the same manner as actions of tort were allowed, without question as to the place where the wrong was done, the proceedings under the act being in their nature interlocutory.

Where the suit was not brought upon contract, but was for a fraud committed by the defendants for which it was contended the proper remedy was an action of deceit, it was held that it was not included in the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842, which merely abolished imprisonment in actions on contracts, leaving torts in the same situation as to remedies as before the passing of the act, and that therefore the defendant could be held to bail. Sedgbeer v. Moore, Brightly (Pa.) 197, 200.

In Duff v. McDonough, 2 Super. Ct. (Pa.) 373, where the defendant was imprisoned for not obeying a decree of the court which required him to deliver up a certain deed and also to pay the costs of the suit, the court held that the case of fraud being shown he was not within the provisions of the Pennsylvania act of 1842 (Pamph. Laws, 339) cited. It is an indirect imposition of imprisonment for the nonpayment of debt, and is therefore clearly within the constitutional inhibition." State v. Paint Rock Coal & C. Co. 92 Tenn. 81. And this principle of applying the policy of the organic law on this subject to cases which may not be strictly within its letter has received recent recognition by this court. Ex parte Russellville, 95 Ala. 19.

The statute involved in the case at bar is a much more flagrant attempt to authorize imprisonment for debt, in our opinion, than that denounced by the supreme court of Tennessee. It was not the avowed purpose of that act to abolishing imprisonment for debt, and therefore his imprisonment was lawful.

But where the action was to recover for a breach of warranty on the sale of a horse, and the declaration was in form for discharge, in case of false warranty, without any averment of fraud or deceit, and the case was treated as one of an alleged breach of warranty on a contract, it was held that it was error in the court below to issue a writ of ca. sa., as the case was not within the exceptions mentioned in the act abolishing imprisonment for debt, but was within the provisions of the section which forbid imprisonment. Howard v. McKee, 62 Pa. 409.

All the provisions of the Pennsylvania act of 1836 upon the subject of imprisonment for debt, so far as they relate to arrests upon writs of a ca. sa. in actions for the recovery of debts founded upon contracts, were forever swept out of existence by the act of 1842, and in Blanco v. Bosch, 8 W. N. C. 171, 172, the court stated, but this was so plainly written on the face of the act that he who runs might read, that the personal liberty of the debtor was no longer at the mercy of the creditor, and no man could be lawfully arrested in Pennsylvania for a debt without the warrant of a judge founded upon an affidavit bringing the debtor within the measures of the 3d section of the act of 1842.

In Beers v. West Branch Bank, 7 Watts & S. 365, it was held that when the legislature of Pennsylvania abolished imprisonment for debt in all but a few excepted cases, it virtually abolished special bail in all but those cases, and consequently every recognition with condition to surrender the body, and therefore the courts were not authorized to substitute anything for it, and the great constitutional right of trial by jury was not to be clogged without an explicit declaration of the legislative will, constitutionally expressed, and therefore appeals from awards of arbitrators were to be had without any sort of bail whatever.

South Carolina.

In South Carolina, art. 1, § 20, of the Constitution provides, no person shall be imprisoned for debt except in cases of fraud, and § 200 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for arrests on warrant in six cases, the first four of which cover cases of fraud ex nomine, the fifth provides for the arrest of an absconding debtor, though the debt be not yet due, and the sixth authorizes arrest in an action for the recovery of damages in a cause of action not arising out of contract, when the debtor is about to remove from the state, or when the action is for injury to person or character, or for the wrongful taking, detaining, or wrongful conversion of property; and therefore imprisonment for debt being abolished in all cases but those of fraud, a warrant for arrest will not issue where fraud is not alleged. The Bremen v. Card, 38 Fed. Rep. 144, 145.

Vermont.

Under § 38 of the Constitution of Vermont (chap. 2, Vt. Rev. Laws 1880, p. 41), it is provided that the person of a debtor, where there is not strong presumption of fraud, shall not be continued in prison after delivering and assigning over bona fide all his estate, real and personal, in possession, reversion, or remainder, for the use of his creditors in such manner as shall be hereafter regulated by § 4 L. R. A.

law. And all prisoners, unless in execution or committed for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or presumption great, shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, nor shall excessive bail be exacted for bailable offenses.

Under the Vermont act of January, 1839, which abolished imprisonment for debt except in certain cases therein specified, it is not sufficient for the creditor to state merely that his debtor was about to leave the state, but he must show that he was about to abscond and had secreted his money or other property, before he can have an attachment against his body. Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500.

In Bank of Vergennes v. Barker, 27 Vt. 243, the writ in an action of assumpsit upon bills of exchange, issued as a ca. sa. and was served by arresting the defendant, who pleaded that he was a citizen and inhabitant of another state, privileged from arrest, as he was not about to abscond or remove from the state, but the court held his arrest legal, the creditor's affidavit showing, and the words of the statute "abscond or remove" implying, such absconding or removal as such a person was capable of. Bank of Rutland v. Barker, 27 Vt. 293, to the same effect.

Washington.

In Burrichter v. Cline, 8 Wash. 125, action was brought upon a foreign judgment the defendant being arrested and held to bail on an affidavit charging that he was about to leave the state with intent to defraud his creditors, upon which judgment was given for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The court upheld the defendant's claim that his arrest was illegal and improvident, on the ground that by article 1, § 17, of the Constitution imprisonment for debt, except in the case of absconding debtors, was abolished, and upon the further ground that the affidavit was insufficient under the provisions of the Code, an absconding debtor being one who leaves, or is about to leave, the jurisdiction, or who conceals himself within the jurisdiction for the purpose of avoiding the process of the court.

Wisconsin.

In Re Mowry, 12 Wis. 53, the applicant for mandamus sought to be discharged from imprisonment under an execution rendered against his body, upon a judgment in an action for damages for the wrongful and fraudulent misapplication and conversion of school-land certificates deposited as security, his contention being that such execution would not lie, as the judgment was a debt arising out of a contract and therefore within the inhibition imposed by § 16, art. 1, of the state Constitution; but the court held that he was not entitled to the privilege from arrest therein contained.

Where a debtor is about to leave the state, either openly or secretly, with the intention of hindering, delaying, or defrauding his creditors, he is considered as an absconding debtor, and in such a case the state legislature may authorize his arrest and imprisonment,—especially where the state Constitution declares "there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud and absconding debtors." Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. 484, 459.

For further cases showing that the constitutional inhibition does not apply in cases of fraud, see State v. Benson, 28 Minn. 424, infra, IV. a, Fines and pen- enforce the payment of a debt by means of a prosecution under it. This one cannot be read without conviction that its purpose is to impose imprisonment for debt, and to coerce the payment of a debt by the duress it authorizes. Its requirement that the fine shall be paid only in money, that it shall be double the amount of the deposit, and that one half of it—that is, a sum equal to the amount deposited—shall go to the person who made the deposit, tends, at least, to show that coercion of payment of the debt which the depositary owed the depositor, —for the transaction created the relation of debtor and creditor between them,—by means alties as debts; Tryon v. Hassinger, Clark (Pa.) 184, supra, III. a; United States v. Walsh, Deady, 281, 285, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66, and Com., Colvert, v. Kerr, 25 Pitts. L. J. N. 8, 367, infra, IV., Fines and penalties as debts; Armstrong v. Ayers, 19 Conn. 540, 545, supra, III. a; Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472, 487; Parker v. Follensbee, 45 Ill. 473, 478, and Ex parte Prader, 8 Cal. 239, supra, II. a, What are debts in general. See also cases under supra, II. c, Breach of promise to marry.

IV. Fines and penalties as debts.

a. In general.

The cases may be regarded as unanimous in holding that fines and penalties imposed upon defendants for the violation of state laws are not debts within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition, and that therefore a defendant can be imprisoned for nonpayment thereof.

In support of this doctrine the courts have stated that certain duties are cast upon all citizens for the welfare of society, and when a citizen by his own misconduct exposes himself to the punitive powers of the law, the expense incident to his prosecution and conviction may result in subjecting the defaulter to a money liability, but liabilities thus incurred are not debts incurred by contract inter partes, but are the result of being members of the social compact, or body politic, and are therefore not within the constitutional prohibition. Lee v. State, 75 Ala. 29, 30.

So, a penalty is imposed as a quasi punishment for the violation of law, or the neglect or refusal to perform some duty to the public, or individuals enjoined by law, in furtherance of some public policy, and as a means of procuring obedience to law, and the persons who incurred them are, either in morals or in law, wrongdoers and not simply unfortunate debtors unable to perform their pecuniary obligations, and therefore the constitutional provisions prohibiting imprisonment for debt were not intended to apply to, or include, such cases. United States v. Walsh, Deady, 281, 285, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66.

For this reason, therefore, fines, forfeitures, mulcts, damages for a wrong or tort, are not debts within the clause of the Alabama Constitution, § 21, of the Declaration of Rights, prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Lee v. State, supra.

And the Alabama statute of February 23, 1883, passed for the purpose of securing the payment of fines and costs in criminal cases in the courts of that state, is not contrary to the provisions of the Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Ibid.

The same conclusion was reached in State v. Leach, 75 Ala. 36, wherein the defendant moved in arrest of judgment, upon the ground that the above act was unconstitutional, the court reversing the judgment of the court below which arrested the judgment of a lower court, and discharging him, the court sustaining the authority of Lee v. State, supra.

So, the imprisonment of a defendant for nonpayment of a fine imposed upon his conviction for a violation of § 5480 of the United States Revised Statutes, in using the postoffice establishment of the United States in carrying out a scheme of fraud, has been held not to be imprisonment for debt within the meaning of art. 1, § 15, of the California Constitution, or with § 980 of the Revised 34 L. R. A.

Statutes of the United States, under which no person can be imprisoned for debt in any state on process issuing from a court of the United States, where, by the laws of such states, imprisonment for debt has been or shall be abolished. Re Sanborn, 59 Fed. Rep. 583.

The prohibition of the Illinois Constitution against imprisonment for debt does not extend to actions for torts, nor to fines or penalties arising from a violation of the penal laws of the state. Kennedy v. People, 122 Ill. 649, 653.

So, it has been held that § 452, div. 14, § 14, chap. 38, Ill. Rev. Stat. 1885, which provides that when a fine is inflicted the court may order, as a part of the judgment, that the offender be committed to jail, until the fine and costs are fully paid, or he is discharged according to law, is not unconstitutional, as it can work no hardship, for the reason that § 455 of the same chapter provides that whenever it is made satisfactorily to appear to the court, after all legal means have been exhausted, that any person who is confined in jail for any fees or costs of prosecution for any criminal offense, hath no estate wherewith to pay such fine or costs, or costs only, it shall be the duty of the court to discharge him. Ibid.

Neither does such prohibition include fines or penalties arising from the violation of municipal ordinances or penal laws, and the commitment of a defendant until the fine is paid is necessary in such cases. Chicago v. Kenney, 35 Ill. App. 57, 66.

And this is so for the reason that the entire section clearly indicates that reference was had to debts arising ex contractu, and embraced debts which exist from the relation of debtor and creditor. Rioh v. People, 66 Ill. 513, 515.

And in McCool v. State, 28 Ind. 127, 131, the court stated that in prosecutions for crimes fines were assessed against the parties convicted as a punishment for their criminal acts, such fines when assessed becoming a fixed liability to pay the state a definite amount of money; yet such fine was not a debt, and the fact that it was payable to the state was no ground for distinguishing it from the costs in such prosecution, which were payable to individuals, neither being a debt within the meaning of the constitutional provisions.

So, in Smith v. State, 23 Ind. 132, the court held there was no error in ordering the defendant to be committed to prison until the fine and costs were paid, in an information for retailing spirituous liquors without license.

Where the judgment directed that the plaintiff should be imprisoned until the fine and costs were paid, and it was conceded that § 484 of the Iowa Code in terms so provided, but it was contended that the costs were no more than a debt and that imprisonment for debt had been abolished by art. 1, § 19, of the Constitution, the court stated that, even conceding such to be the case, the plaintiff was not entitled to be discharged until the fine was paid or satisfied as contemplated by law, and that if the judge below was of opinion that the plaintiff could not be imprisoned for the nonpayment of costs, he should in an appropriate order have so directed. Jackson v. Boyd, 53 Iowa, 538, 539.

The 44th section of the third article of the Maryland Constitution declares, no person shall be imprisoned for debt, and in State v. Mace, 5 Md. 337, 350, it was held that a fine imposed by a justice of the peace for a violation of the Maryland Act of 1854, of the restraint which the imposition of the fine itself immediately put upon the defendant, not to speak here of his imprisonment preliminary to the trial, and, that failing to enforce payment, by means of imprisonment at hard labor for the payment of the fine and costs, was the moving purpose and efficient cause of the enactment of the statute. And what doubts on this point might have been left, had the statute stopped here, are removed beyond peradventure by its further provision that payment to the depositor at any time before conviction "shall be a good and lawful defense to any prosecution under this act." There canchap. 138, relating to lottery tickets, was not a debt within the constitutional meaning of the term.

In holding that a fine was not a debt within the meaning of the Maryland Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt, the court stated that it was not the intention of the Convention which framed the Constitution to destroy the whole police system of the state, or to impose upon the legislature the necessity to expressly provide by new legislature imprisonment in all cases in which fines and penalties had been pronounced against the violators of the public law. They used the term "debt" in its popular sense, and the people evidently so understood it. They regarded it as a protection to the unfortunate, and not an immunity to the criminal. State v. Mace, supra.

But in Day v. State, 7 Gill, 322, it was held that fines recovered before a justice of the peace in an action for debt for penalties imposed by the Maryland act of 1846, relating to lotteries, were civil actions, and were in the nature of actions in debt in the same way as if they had been for money had and received.

In State v. Benson, 28 Minn. 424, the defendant was charged before a justice of the peace under § 23 of chap. 124 of Minn. Gen. Stat. 1873, with procuring food, entertainment, and accommodation without paying therefor, and with intent to cheat and defraud the hotel keeper of the same, and with removing his baggage from the hotel with a like fraudulent intent, and his contention was that the statute was unconstitutional for the reason that it attempted to imprison for debt. The court held the contrary, the statute imposing the penalty, not because, nor for the purpose, of collecting the debt, but because of the fraud, and that therefore a prosecution and punishment under such statute in no way affected the debt.

The Constitution of Missouri, art. 2, § 16, provides that imprisonment for debt shall not be allowed except for the nonpayment of fines and penalties imposed for violations of law, and this by implication is conclusive that the proper legislative authority may direct imprisonment for the nonpayment of fines and penalties without violating the Constitution. Ex parte Kiburg, 10 Mo. App. 442, in which case the prisoner was committed for nonpayment of a fine for violating an ordinance prohibiting the sale of lottery tickets.

In State v. Cannady, 78 N. C. 539, 544, it was held that neither a fine nor costs inflicted as a punishment was a debt within the meaning of the North Carolina Constitution.

So, a fine imposed for an offense against the criminal law of the country is a punishment, and after it has been judicially imposed the same means may be used to enforce its collection which, by law, the state may employ to collect its debts. It may for this purpose be regarded as a debt due to the state, yet it is not a debt within the meaning of the 39th section of the Constitution of North Carolina. State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. 20, 26.

And in Re Beall, 26 Ohio St. 195, where the applicant, convicted of assault and battery, had been sentenced to imprisonment and the payment of a fine, and after serving his term of imprisonment was arrested on a writ of execution, no property being found, and again imprisoned, and it was contended that the provisions of the Ohio act of April 7, 1863, authorizing such arrest and imprisonment, did not apply to the case, it being no part of the judgment that he should stand imprisoned till the fines and costs were paid, and further that even if such provision did apply the act was unconstitutional,—the court held that the statute authorized the proceedings, and that no provision of the Constitution had been violated.

The Oregon act of assembly allowing the arrest of a defendant in an action for a penalty is not in conflict with the Oregon Constitution, and is therefore valid and binding. United States v. Walsh, Deady, 231, 235, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66.

In the above case a match manufacturer sold his goods without stamping them pursuant to the law. It was held that he thereby committed a fraud against the United States, and might be arrested and imprisoned in an action brought by the states to recover the penalty incurred by such violation, in the same way as if the debt had been incurred by fraud.

So, a judgment recovered for a penalty prescribed by law as a punishment for the commission of an act forbidden by a clear statutory provision is not within the purview of the Pennsylvania act to abolish imprisonment for debt, as it is not a judgment founded on a contract but a penal infliction intended to discourage the violations of the law, in the same manner as a fine imposed upon an offender after a conviction in a court of sessions. Com. v. Colbert, v. Kerr, 25 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 337, in which case the defendant was convicted and fined under the Pennsylvania act of May 21, 1865, relating to oleomargarine, which had for its object the protection of the public health, and the prevention of the adulteration of dairy produce and fraud in the sale thereof.

In Cagle v. State, 6 Humph. 391, the plaintiff was convicted of misdemeanors and ordered into custody of the sheriff until he secured the fines and costs. He was held in custody until he gave bond with surety, with the condition that it should be void if he appeared and paid the debt and costs, or made surrender of his property, or took the benefit of the act passed for the benefit of insolvent debtors, the benefit of which act he took, but the court refused to permit him to take the oath and rendered judgment against him for final costs considering the deed executed by him as fraudulent. It was held that the court had power to commit such person, and that the sheriff had a right to take such bond, and that the power of the court to so permit the defendant was not affected by the Tennessee act of 1842, which repealed the writ of ca. sa.

So, in Hill v. State, 2 Yerg. 247, the defendant, who was indebted for gaming, pleaded guilty, was fined and adjudged to stand committed until the fine and costs were paid, or until he was otherwise discharged by due course of law, and appealed, upon the ground that the court could not make such an order. It was held that the court below had such power, and that no practice was better settled; but that the defendant in such a case stood precisely on the same footing of one imprisoned on a ca. sa. and was entitled to the benefits of the insolvent debtor's act.

And the provisions of the Texas Constitution, which prohibit imprisonment for debt, do not apply to the case of fines imposed for the violation of the laws, and for the punishment of crimes and misdenot be two opinions as to the intent and meaning, or the effect upon the whole enactment, of this last and most remarkable provision. It is a declaration of the baldest and most direct character to one party to a transaction, whereby he has incurred a debt to the other, in the name of the state, that, unless he pays that debt, he shall be arrested, held to trial, tried, convicted, fined, and imprisoned at hard labor, and this obviously not for any taint of criminality in the transaction out of which the debt arose, but purely and simply for the nonpayment of the debt. For this default, and until it is purged either by simply paying the debt and means, and such fines are not debts within the meaning of the Constitution. Dixon v. State, 2 Tex. 481.

In upholding the constitutionality of the Texas act of 1886, § 47, 1 Stat. 187, passed for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors, the court stated that it could not have been the intention of the legislature to degrade the subject of misfortune to the level of the criminal, and to confound debt and crime, and that there was nothing to be found in the legislature of the country to warrant such a supposition, but on the contrary they had been made the subject of distinct and quite dissimilar provisions, the constitutional guaranty having been given as a shield to protect the unfortunate debtor, the act of 1886 having been enacted to punish, and thereby restrain, the offender against the laws of society, and that fines and costs imposed for offenses were not so properly the principal as an incident; not the end, but a means of enforcing obedience to the laws, and that the object of the imprisonment authorized by the 47th section of the act in question was not so much to enforce payment as to insure punishment, the great object and design of the penal laws being the prevention of crime. Dixon v. State, supra.

Again, in Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 623, the petitioner applied by way of habeas corpus to be released from imprisonment for contempt of court in the nonpayment of a fine imposed for a civil contempt, upon the ground that the fine and imprisonment inflicted were imposed for the purpose of securing and enforcing the payment of a debt due to the plaintiff in a sequestration suit, and therefore in contravention and violation of the 18th section of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution, art. 1, which declares that no person shall ever be imprisoned for debt; but the court held that such fine was not a debt within the meaning of the Constitution.

And in Graham v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 53 Wis. 473, 478, it was stated that notwithstanding the state Constitution abolishing imprisonment for debt, arising out of or founded upon contract, express or implied, yet the statutes of that state had always provided that the defendant might be arrested and held to bail in an action to recover a forfeiture or a penalty.

In Re MacDonald (Wyo.) 83 Pac. 18, 20, the petitioner, convicted and fined for the publication of an unlawful and malicious libel, contended that his imprisonment for nonpayment of the fine was contrary to art. 1, § 5, of the Wyoming Constitution, which provides no person shall be imprisoned for debt except in cases of fraud; but the court held that such imprisonment could not be considered as imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the Constitution.

But in Glens Falls Paper Co. v. White, 58 How. Pr. 172, upon a motion for an order to arrest the defendant in an action to recover a debt owing the plaintiff by the association, under a statute making the trustees of such association who failed to file a report liable for the debts of the association, the plaintiff contending that such debt was a penalty inflicted upon the defendant by reason of the non-compliance with the law, the court held that the debt thus incurred was not a fine or penalty within the meaning of subdiv. 1, § 549, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore denied the motion. The court stated that to subject a party to arrest, the cause of action must be a fine or penalty and not something of a penal character, the court not being disposed to order the arrest of a citizen in a doubtful case, or to strain a statute in that direction,—especially for the sake of calling a debt a penalty in order to procure an arrest while the law had abolished imprisonment for debt.

And it has been held that although the court has power to imprison a party for disobeying its lawful order as to property in a civil case when having power to comply with the order, yet the court has no power, upon making an order committing the party, to impose a fine or imprisonment as punishment for contempt, neither has it power to adjudge the payment and imprisonment until the costs and expenses are paid in favor of the opposite party, for the reason that by so doing it would contravene the provisions of the Missouri Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Ex parte Crenshaw, 80 Mo. 447, 453.

See also State v. Paint Rock Coal & C. Co. 22 Tenn. 81, 46 Pa. V.II.

b. Fines imposed by city authority.

With respect to fines and penalties inflicted upon a defendant for the violation of city ordinances, the courts have almost unanimously held that the imprisonment inflicted upon the defendant is no violation of the constitutional provisions.

Where the execution is levied against the body of the offender for the violation of a city ordinance and the charter of the town gives such remedy, the provisions of the Constitution are not thereby violated. Brown v. Jerome, 102 Ill. 871.

In Hardenbrook v. Ligonier, 95 Ind. 70, it was contended that the penalty imposed by the ordinance of the town regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors which was by way of imprisonment in case of conviction and failure to pay the fine assessed, was contrary to the provisions of the Indiana Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt. The court held that a penalty accruing for a breach of an ordinance of a municipal corporation was not a debt within the meaning of the section of the Constitution, the court citing in support of its authority, McCool v. State, 23 Ind. 127. To the same effect, Lower v. Wallick, 25 Ind. 68; Turner v. Wilson, 49 Ind. 581; McIlvain v. State, Emery, 87 Ind. 602; Flora v. Sachs, 64 Ind. 157; Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 71, 19 L. ed. 101; Dunlop v. Keith, 1 Leigh, 430, 19 Am. Dec. 755; Caldwell v. State, 55 Ala. 133; Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155, 23 Am. Rep. 442; Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. L. 398.

A city charter authorizing the confinement of offenders against the by-laws and ordinances of the city until the fines and costs are paid, or discharged by labor, or otherwise, and making the costs a part of the punishment or penalty, do not conflict either with the provisions of the Kentucky statutes or Code, neither are they in conflict with the state or Federal Constitution. Berry v. Brian, 86 Ky. 5, 9, 10.

Where in proceedings for the violation of a city ordinance, it was contended that the petitioner was entitled to be discharged, for the reason that he was not proceeded against in the name of the state but was sued in the name of the city if a civil action, and that the recovery had was for a debt, and therefore as there was no imprisonment for debt in that state (Missouri) he was illegally held in custody, the court stated that while there could accrued costs before conviction or by working out double the debt and the costs, the debtor may be imprisoned for an indefinite time before trial, merely and only because he does not pay the debt and the expenses of putting this coercion upon him, there being no pretense even of ultimately punishing him for taking the deposit, if the preliminary imprisonment shall have the desired effect of extorting the money he owes the depositor out of him; and if, as is the case here, the compulsion of preliminary imprisonment fails of its intended effect, he may, under the guise of punishing an act which was not criminal before this statute, and which upon the statutory definition does not necessarily involve abstract criminal-not be any imprisonment for debt in that state, yet imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine duly imposed was fully authorized, the constitutional provision interpreting itself; and this was so even though in one sense it might be said that every fine imposed for a violation either of a law of the state or an ordinance of a municipal corporation, either in criminal proceedings by the state or in a civil proceeding quasi criminal, in the name of the corporation, was a debt against the party upon whom it was imposed and who was adjudged to pay it; still it was nevertheless a debt for a fine for the nonpayment of which the party against whom it was adjudged might be imprisoned. Ex parte Hollwedell, 74 Mo. 393, 400.

So, in Deadwood v. Allen (S. D.) 68 N. W. 338, where the complaint charged the violation of a city ordinance and defendant contended that unless the action was criminal the enforcement of such ordinance by imprisonment for the fine imposed was contrary to § 15, art. 6, of the Bill of Rights, the court held that such contention was not sustainable as the provisions in the Bill of Rights in question related only and expressly "to debts arising out of or founded upon a contract" and therefore such imprisonment was not contrary to the Constitution.

In Mosley v. Gallatin, 10 Lea, 494, where the keeping of gaming tables was made a misdemeanor by § 10 of chap. 15 of the by-laws and ordinances of the defendant corporation, the penalty being a fine of not less than $3 nor more than $50, and the court in its judgment directed that if the fine and costs be not paid or secured the defendant should be committed to the workhouse until the same were paid, and it was insisted that the act was repugnant to the state Constitution, § 18, art. 1, which prohibited imprisonment for debt, and which provided that the legislature should pass no law authorizing imprisonment for debt in civil cases,—the court held that such provisions in the Constitution had no reference to the enforcement of the collection of fines, penalties, and costs from the defendants, who had been convicted of misdemeanors and the violation of the statute of the state, or the ordinances of a municipal corporation, and that therefore the court had power to make such order against the plaintiff in such action.

In Markie v. Akron, 14 Ohio, 596, 591, it was held that an ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors under a penalty was constitutional, and that the proceedings under such ordinance were in the nature of an action for debt, although quasi criminal in their nature.

Where jurisdiction was by the city charter expressly given to the mayor's court for the recovery of fines, forfeitures, penalties, debts, and other demands recognizable in the city court, "it was held that the exercise of such jurisdiction was clear of all objections on constitutional grounds, but where the by-law of a city corporation enacted a penalty for a misdemeanor, and imposed imprisonment in default of payment on conviction by the mayor, it was held void; and even though the city charter did give him a right to imprison on summary conviction, and without appeal to a jury, it was held that such charter would be so far unconstitutional and void. Barter v. Com. 3 Penn. & W. 253.

34 I. R. A.

In Ex parte Russellville, 95 Ala. 12, the charter of the municipality gave authority to the city officials to impose hard labor or imprisonment in case of nonpayment of the fine and costs on conviction for violating the liquor law, "until the fine and costs are paid." It was held that the act did not contemplate hard labor or imprisonment as alternative punishment, or as punishment to be imposed in lieu of the fine, but as a means of coercing the payment of the fine, and that while it might be that the defendant could be put to hard labor at a reasonable rate of compensation, for a sufficient length of time for his earnings to equal the fine and costs, yet, in so far as the provision in question undertook to authorize his imprisonment until the fine and costs were paid, it was inoperative and void, otherwise the imprisonment might be for a period as indefinite as the duration of the defendant's life, and have much in common with imprisonment for debt, which was forbidden by the organic law, hence involved the violation of the policy of general jurisprudence.

So, in Odell Trustees v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353, it was held that a town officer had no power to imprison, or take in custody, one against whom a verbal order of commitment for nonpayment of a fine had been made by a police justice, for breach of a town ordinance, for the reason that the liberty of the citizen cannot be so trifled with, the Constitution prohibiting it, such imprisonment not being a rightful imprisonment through proceedings appointed by the law.

And where the action was brought to recover a penalty for the violation of an ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquors without a license, and judgment was rendered against defendants, and they were committed to jail until fine and costs were paid, it was held upon appeal that the county court erred in adjudging imprisonment against defendant, the action being in debt and the suit a civil one. Kinmundy v. Mahan, 72 Ill. 462, 464.

See also, Ex parte Kiburg, 10 Mo. App. 442; Chicago v. Kenney, 85 Ill. App. 57, 66, supra.

V. Taxes as debts.

In cases where it has been sought to enforce the payment of taxes by attachment and imprisonment, the question has been raised whether such proceedings are unconstitutional as being contrary to the provisions of the state Constitutions prohibiting imprisonment for debt. The courts have, however, for the most part, held such proceedings regular, holding that taxes are not debts within the constitutional inhibition.

Taxes are not debts within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. A debt is a sum of money due by contract, express or implied. A tax is a charge upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes, and is not founded upon contract. It does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor between the taxpayer and the state. It does not draw interest, and it cannot be pretended that an act providing for the collection of debts would include, by force merely of the term "debt," the collection of taxes also. Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318, 350.

So, in Geren v. Gruber, 26 La. Ann. 694, 697, it was said that taxes were not debts in the ordinary sense of that word, but were forced contributions for the ity or the taint of moral turpitude, and which might up to the very moment of conviction have been shorn of even its factitious criminality by the payment of a debt, be held to hard labor until his services at the statutory rate shall yield the amount of the debt, and for an equally long time to work out a like sum imposed upon him as an additional penalty for his failure to pay the debt before conviction.

There can, in our opinion, be no sort of doubt that this enactment is violative of the constitutional provision, and therefore void. The trial court erred in overruling the demurrers which went to this point, and the motion in arrest of judgment based upon them. Its judgment will be reversed, and a judgment will be here entered discharging the defendant.

Reversed and reentered.

support of the body politic, and it was competent for the sovereign to provide how these contributions should be collected, and to say whether the right of preference should exist and for what length of time. In that case, however, the question as to whether a tax was a debt did not arise in proceedings in which it was sought to imprison the delinquent taxpayer for nonpayment, but the proceedings were such as that he sought to enjoin the tax collectors from a sale of the tax premises.

So, in Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. L. 308, 402, where an action of debt was brought for the recovery of taxes assessed by the city authorities, it was held that a tax was not a debt, neither was it in the nature of a debt, but was an impost levied by authority of the government upon its citizens or subjects for the support of the state, and that the remedies for its recovery were more stringent than that which the action of debt would afford, particularly in the coercive power in imprisonment.

Again, in State, Linn, v. O'Neil, 55 N. J. L. 58, it was said that taxes were not debts in the ordinary acceptance of the term, and that therefore statutory measures might be resorted to for their collection. The Revised Statutes of this state, p. 1143, § 12, give power to arrest the body of the delinquent taxpayer where no goods, etc., of his are found wherewith to satisfy the demand.

And in Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 47, 52, the question arose whether a license tax was a debt in the sense of the word as used in the clause of the state Constitution which abolished imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud. The court held that it was not, stating that there was not any doubt but that the framers of the Constitution, and the people who adopted it, designed to use the word "debt" in the clause under consideration in its ordinary sense, and did not intend that it should be held to embrace taxes levied for the support of the government, or any of its agencies; the manifest object was to deprive the citizen of the power to have his fellow citizen imprisoned for nonpayment of his debt, which power in the hands of private individuals had long been a subject of discussion, and had been previously circumscribed by enactment by the legislature of the insolvent debtors' and prison bound acts, which had no application to taxes, and the object of the clause in question undoubtedly was still further to limit this power by confining it to cases of fraud.

In Webster v. Seymour, 8 Vt. 125, 140, the court stated that in the most extensive sense of the term "debt," everything was a debt which was of absolute obligation, but in its more limited sense it imports only a particular kind of duty, and in that sense was substantially synonymous with contract; that in that sense it was more generally used in statutes relating to the executions of process, and especially in those which were intended to mitigate the rigor of the common law; and to create certain privileges and exemptions in behalf of a debtor; that it was a distinctive term and had reference in such cases to a distinction between different classes of debtors while founded in the nature of things, and which had an important bearing upon statutory provisions of that character, and that the common use of the term, in similar statutes, required that it should be taken in its limited sense, and therefore a citizen of that state, who was liable to taxation by reason of his property, did not acquire an exemption from taxation or from arrest for nonpayment of the taxes by enlisting in the United States army.

84 L. R. A.

In Com. v. Byrne, 20 Gratt. 165, 184, the petitioner sought to be released from imprisonment for the nonpayment of a tax, upon the ground, inter alia, that the law authorizing an arrest and imprisonment in such cases was unconstitutional and void by virtue of article 5 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and also contrary to that part of clause 10 of the Bill of Rights, art. 1 of the Constitution of Virginia, which declares that no man shall be deprived of his liberty except by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers. The court held that such bill was not contrary to either Constitutions and that the payment of such taxes could be compelled by imprisonment when no personal property was found, the 5th article of the Amendment of the United States Constitution being a limitation of the power of the national government inapplicable to state legislation.

So, in Appleton v. Hopkins, 5 Gray, 530, 532, the question was whether the laws authorizing the arrest of a party on a warrant in distress for the nonpayment of a tax assessed pursuant to the laws of the commonwealth, had been repealed by the Statute of 1855, chap. 444, abolishing imprisonment for debt and punishing fraudulent debtors. The court held that such statute had no application to the case of imprisonment for the nonpayment of taxes, even though the language of the statute "imprisonment for debt is hereby forever abolished in Massachusetts" was pointed and emphatic.

In Appleton v. Hopkins, supra, it is said that in a certain large and general sense taxes may be said to be debts due to the commonwealth, the county, town, and parish respectively, but in the mode of collection and enforcement they have always been regarded as distinct. The special provisions by statute for their allowance implies that they would not in the view of the legislature be included under a general provision of law respecting debts.

But in Cooper v. Savannah, 4 Ga. 68, a tax had been imposed by the city ordinance upon free persons of color, and in case of nonpayment the act provided that such persons should be arrested and committed to the common jail, and there confined until the same was paid. It was held that such imprisonment was illegal by the laws of the state, and therefore void.

Again, road assessments or levies are not debts within the meaning of the constitutional provision abolishing imprisonment for debt. Re Dassler, 35 Kan. 678, 684.

VI. Costs as debts.

With respect to the constitutionality of the imprisonment of a debtor for the nonpayment of the costs in an action, the question would seem largely to depend upon the question whether such action is civil or criminal in its nature, and also upon the question whether the action, if civil, arises from contract, express or implied, or from a tort committed by the defendant. The courts hold cases of

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT

STATE of Tennessee, Appt.,

v.

Sallie YARDLEY.

1 (36 Tenn. 544.)

1. The subject of Laws 1895, chap. 67, providing for the protection of hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers, is sufficiently embraced in the title "An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers," although the means or instrumentalities for such protection are not recited therein.

2. Acts 1895, chap. 67, entitled "An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers," is not unconstitutional on Contract, that such costs form part of, and become incident to, the debt. In other cases they are not so unanimous, the weight of authority being in favor of holding that, in cases of torts or in criminal cases, they are not debts within the meaning of the state Constitutions.

a. Debts in civil actions.

There is no law which authorizes the imprisonment of a defendant for the nonpayment of costs, except where the judgment is also for fine or imprisonment. The authority to imprison in such cases must be expressly conferred by statute and will never be inferred. State v. Jackson, 46 Ark. 137.

Where the defendant was adjudged to pay the costs occasioned by his removal from the office of constable, and the court refused to order him to be confined in the county jail for nonpayment thereof, and there was also a motion to tax a fee for the prosecuting attorney, upon which the state appealed, it was held that the costs in such proceedings constituted a mere debt to the officers of the court for which the defendant became liable upon his removal, but that he could not be made to work out such costs, the only remedy being by execution, imprisonment for debt being abolished. Ibid.

The nonpayment of costs by a guardian ad litem does not constitute a tort or a fine within the meaning of § 15 of the Constitution of North Dakota, and hence the omission to pay, not being a contempt of court, will not authorize a court to arrest and incarcerate the guardian on nonpayment of any civil process whatsoever. Granholm v. Swelgie, 3 N. D. 478.

And it has been held that although a court may suspend judgment upon the understanding that a defendant will compensate an injured party by payment of money, it adds no force to such a condition to make it a matter of record. The collection of such damages cannot be enforced by imprisonment without coming in conflict with the constitutional inhibition against imprisonment for debt; but when a judgment has been suspended on the agreement of the defendant to pay the costs, and the costs have not been paid, the judgment may be enforced for such failure. State v. Whitt, 117 N. C. 804, 808. State v. Crook, 115 N. C. 760, 22 L. R. A. 260, to the same effect.

In Meace v. Crump, 12 W. N. C. 534, in an action of trespass after judgment and taxation of costs a. ca. sa. was issued to enforce their payment. The court held the judgment for costs was a debt, although it arose out of a tort, and therefore made the rule to set aside the ca. sa. absolute.

In Lang v. Finch, 166 Pa. 255, a capias ad satisfaciendum for the costs was issued and executed in an amicable action of ejectment, and thereupon the court quashed the writ and discharged the defendant from custody, and the plaintiff then entered a rule for leave to issue an alias ca. sa. for costs. The sole question was whether the defendant was liable to arrest and imprisonment for the costs in question, and the court stated that the plaintiff's right of action, as well as the remedy of which he availed himself, sprang, not from a tort, but solely from a breach of contract, and hence the defendant was within the protection of the act of July 12, 1842, abolishing imprisonment for debt, the judgment containing no element of damages in the nature of mere profits; and that, so far as the costs of suit might be regarded as a species of damages, they were in that case merely a debt, arising, not from tort, but from a breach of contract. The court therefore affirmed the rule discharging the writ.

In Selden v. Conard, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 664, the defendant imprisoned for costs in an action of ejectment claimed his discharge under § 1 of the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842 (Pamph. Laws, 339, Purd. 741, pl. 21), which provides that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned on any civil process issued out of any court in this commonwealth, in any suit or proceeding issued for the recovery of money due upon any contract or decree founded upon contract, or due upon any contract express or implied, or for the recovery of any damage for the nonperformance of any contract, excepting, etc., and the question turned upon the point whether the defendant's obligation to pay the costs for which the judgment was recovered against him arose from contract or otherwise. The court stated that if it did arise from contract it was within the purview of the act, otherwise it was not, and held that the defendant was not entitled to his discharge under such act, his obligation to pay costs not arising from a contract, no promise, express or implied being imputed to him with respect to the land, the damages, or the plaintiff's costs in such an action, the court pointing out the difference between a plaintiff and a defendant in such cases, the plaintiff being the actor and consenting to do what the law makes it his duty to do even in the event of defeat, the judgment against such a plaintiff for costs being founded on contract.

See also Pieroe's Appeal, 103 Pa. 27, infra, VIII. a. So, in Thompson v. Berry, 5 R. I. 25, 103, it was held that costs adjudged against a plaintiff in an action of trespass and ejectment were included in the term "debt," and that the Rhode Island statute ought to receive a liberal interpretation to carry out its purposes, the court stating that there was no ground for distinction between a judgment for costs and for a pre-existing debt or damages, the judgment being one equally for money which it required the same means to pay.

The same was said in Thayer's Petition, 11 R. I. 160, where the petitioner sought to be discharged from imprisonment on an execution for costs awarded against her in an action for trover.

See also Jackson v. Boyd, 53 Iowa, 536, 539; Ex parte Crenshaw, 80 Mo. 447, 456, supra, IV. a.

b. Not debts in civil actions.

In cases where the action, though civil in its nature, is for a tort or other wrong committed by the defendant, the imprisonment of the defendant for nonpayment of the costs has been held not to be imprisonment for debt, the action being for such tort, ex delicto in its character and not ex contractu, such costs not arising from or out of any contract.

Where the action was for unlawful detainer, and such action was made tortious by express statutes, it was held that the plaintiff was not imprisoned for the ground that the title embraces more than one subject.

3. More than one subject is not embraced, in violation of the Constitution, in Acts 1895, chap. 67, providing that specified fraudulent acts to the prejudice of hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers shall be misdemeanors which shall constitute prima facie evidence in a prosecution for such acts, and authorizing the sale of baggage left by defaulting patrons.

4. A statute which does not expressly repeal, revive, or amend any former law, but states that "all laws and parts of laws in conflict" therewith are repealed, is not within the provisions of Const. art. 2, § 17, requiring all acts which repeal, revive, or amend former laws to recite the title or substance of the law repealed, revived, or amended.

5. The prohibition against any law authorizing imprisonment for debt, in Const. art. 1, § 13, is not violated by Laws 1895, chap. 67, providing that any person who fraudbreach arising out of or founded on contract, express or implied, within the meaning of § 16, art. 1, of the Constitution of Wisconsin, where the execution was issued against him for nonpayment of costs. Total v. Clapp, 64 Wis. 223, 227.

By Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 124, § 5, it is provided that no person shall be arrested on execution issued for debt or damages in a civil action, except in actions of tort, unless the judgment creditor, or some person in his behalf, after execution is issued amounting to $20, exclusive of all costs, shall make an affidavit as therein provided. In Hildreth v. Brigham, 12 Allen, 71, it was held that under this section of the act, where judgment in foreclosure had been rendered against defendant for recovery of the property and costs upon which an execution had issued, the defendant was liable to be arrested for the costs, and that no affidavit was necessary under the statute, the action being really brought to recover for an injury to property by reason of its wrongful detention, and therefore strongly analogous to an action in tort.

Where the action was originally brought to recover damages for malpractice as a physician, and the defendant was charged with fraud in disposing of his property in order to avoid payment of the judgment, the costs were said to be merely incident to the debt, and fraud being proved the imprisonment was held legal. Nev. Const. art. 1, § 14, not prohibiting imprisonment in cases of a disposition of property with intent to defraud creditors, especially where the action is in tort. Ex parte Bergman, 18 Nev. 381.

In the above case the court stated that in cases of that nature costs were but an incident of the debt and were necessarily incurred in order to procure the enforcement of the judgment, and the imprisonment of the petitioner was for the fraud practised in attempting to evade the payment of any judgment obtained against him, and this imprisonment, while in the nature of a punishment, was a coercive means, given by the statute and sanctioned by the Constitution, to enforce the collection of the judgment, and, in all cases of such a character, was considered an element of remedial justice, and it must therefore necessarily follow that imprisonment was authorized for the costs which were incurred in using such coercive means to enforce the collection of the judgment, as well as for the amount of the principal debt or demand.

In Parker v. Spear, 62 How. Pr. 364, 366, the court, under § 66 of the New York Code, allowed the arrest of the unsuccessful party in a suit for the costs incurred by the defendant's attorney, but the court severely criticized the section of the Code which permitted an arrest in such cases.

A breach of trust is within the exceptions mentioned in the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt, and therefore an attachment for costs may be issued in such a case even though the nature of the suit be ex contractu. Church's Appeal, 103 Pa. 263.

So, where the decree of a court found that the appellant had been unfaithful in the discharge of his duties under a letter of attorney, and that he had mismanaged and wasted the estate committed to his trust and applied the moneys to his own use, a breach of trust being thereby committed, it was held that the case was exempt from the operation of the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt, and that therefore an attachment might issue for the costs. Wilson v. Wilson, 142 Pa. 247.

See also Berry v. Brislan, 86 Ky. 5, 9, 10, supra, IV. b.

c. Debts in criminal actions.

In some cases the courts have looked upon the costs, even in criminal causes, as debts for the nonpayment of which the defendant could not be imprisoned.

Where a defendant had been convicted of larceny, and was sentenced to work on the streets and to pay costs, and in default of the payment of such costs was condemned to an additional period, the court held that such costs were merely a debt, whether in criminal or civil cases, a result from the operation of the law condemning the party cast to pay the costs of the proceedings, and that therefore such part of the sentence as imposed the additional penalty was unconstitutional. State v. Braannon, 54 La. Ann. 942, 946.

In Re Mitchell, 39 Fed. Rep. 396, the petitioner was convicted of a misdemeanor, and was ordered to pay a fine, or to stand committed to jail until the fine and costs were paid; and with respect to the costs, the court held that the costs were part of the punishment for disobeying the laws of the state, imposed by statute, and the officers of the court claimed them, not in their individual capacity or name, but as officers of the state and in the state name, and that if such costs were due to the officers personally, they could sue petitioner for them in their own name, but after recovery he could not be imprisoned for nonpayment of the judgment, as the Virginia laws forbid all imprisonment of debt except under peculiar circumstances; the court therefore held that the petitioner who had discharged the fines was entitled to be liberated from arrest in respect to costs.

The costs which the defendant in a criminal case is adjudged to pay, belong to individuals, and they are matter of private right. The costs in a criminal case are a matter of mere indebtedness, for which, in the absence of fraud, a defendant cannot, in view of his constitutional immunity, be ordered to be imprisoned. Thompson v. State, 16 Ind. 516. State v. Farley, 8 Blackf. 239, to the same effect.

Where the plaintiff had been sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for the term of a year, and was also to stand committed until the costs of the prosecution were paid or replevied, the court stated there was error in ordering the defendant to stand committed until the costs were paid, although the order was made pursuant to § 123 of the Indiana Revised Statutes of 1892, such provision being in conflict with the Constitution of that state, which provides, art. 1, § 22, that there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud. Thompson v. State, supra.

Yet in a later case in that state the court stated that in criminal prosecutions fines were assessed against the parties convicted as a punishment for their criminal acts, and they were also taxed with the costs of prosecution,—the costs were but an in-ulently obtains accommodations at an inn, hotel, or boarding house, or fraudulently removes his baggage or other property, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and punished accordingly.

6. The provision that proof of certain things enumerated shall be prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent in procuring accommodations at a hotel, inn, or boarding house, which is made a misdemeanor by Laws 1886, chap. 67, does not violate Const. art. I, §§ 6, 8, 9, guaranteeing the right of trial by an impartial jury.

(November 9, 1886.)

A PPEAL by the State from a judgment of the Criminal Court for Knox County

cident of the fine assessed resulting from the same act, and, although they were due to the officers of the court and witnesses for services rendered, they were adjudged against the defendant because of his criminal act, and might be fairly regarded as part of the punishment. The fine when assessed became a fixed liability to pay the state a definite amount of money. The costs were taxed and were due to the officers and witnesses, and were not a debt within the meaning of the section of the Indiana Constitution, neither was the fine a debt, and the fact that the one was payable to the state and the other to individuals furnished no ground for distinction, neither being a debt within the meaning of the constitutional provisions. McCool v. State, 23 Ind. 127, 131.

This case expressly overruled the prior case of Thompson v. State, supra, and also by inference the still earlier case of State v. Farley, supra, as that case was relied upon in the case of Thompson v. State.

In State v. Kenny, 1 Bail. L. 375, although the question did not turn upon the right or the constitutionality of imprisonment for debt, yet the court stated that the costs of a criminal prosecution constituted a mere debt to the court officers for which the defendant became liable on conviction, and although made no part of the sentence that he should be committed until they were paid, yet he was entitled to the benefit of the insolvent debtor's act and prison bound act if unable to pay them.

d. Not debts in criminal actions.

The Revised Code of Alabama, § 3759, directs that "where a fine is assessed the court may allow the defendant to confess judgment with good and sufficient sureties for the fine and costs," but under § 3760, "if the fine and costs are not paid, or a judgment confessed according to the provisions of the preceding section, the defendant must either be imprisoned in the county jail, or, at the discretion of the court, sentenced to hard labor for the county."

In a case involving the construction of these sections where the fine was paid and the costs were not paid, and no judgment was confessed and security given for the same, and the defendant was condemned to hard labor for the county until the costs were paid, it was held that the judgment was not equivalent to a sentence of imprisonment until the costs were paid, and it did not therefore violate the section of the state Constitution declaring that no person shall be imprisoned for debt. The court stated that the question how the payment of the costs should be enforced in criminal cases, was for the general assembly to determine, and for the courts to carry into effect, its opinion being that a party could not be imprisoned to enforce the payment of costs in such a case, for the reason that costs were not strictly a part of the punishment, but only a debt the collection of which might be enforced by execution as any other debt, but if the costs were not paid or secured as allowed by law, it knew of no restraint on the legislature which forbade the state to impose a certain amount of work for the county on the defendant as a mode of securing the payment of the costs in a criminal case. Nelson v. State, 46 Ala. 186, 189, 190.

And the same conclusion was arrived at by the 34 L. R. A.

court in a later case directed under the same section of the statute, the court holding that in such a case, which was criminal in its nature, the costs were not a debt any more than a fine, and that therefore the section in question was not violated. Morgan v. State, 47 Ala. 34, 36.

It is competent for the legislature to declare that the payment of costs that may accrue to the officers in the prosecution and conviction of an offender shall constitute a part of the punishment, and no provisions of the Alabama Constitution forbid this. And the fact that the costs when collected go to the officers of the court, and not to the state or county, exerts no decisive influence on the question. And on conviction for malicious mischief under §§ 3738-3739, of the Revised Code, the fine goes to the party injured when private property is the subject of the mischief; yet it cannot be contended that such fines are not punishments for the public offense, and the fact that the nonpayment of costs in such a case goes to increase the punishments, does not conflict with any constitutional provision, therefore the provisions of the Constitution which prohibit imprisonment for debt do not apply to such costs. Caldwell v. State, 55 Ala. 133.

The imprisonment of one convicted of crime for the satisfaction of costs incurred by the state in his prosecution, or to which the state, if it were liable for costs, should be subjected, is not an infringement of that provision of the Constitution which provides that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt." Bailey v. State, 87 Ala. 44, 45.

In Bailey v. State, supra, the defendant had been convicted of larceny, and was sentenced to perform hard labor for the county, for a certain period of time, to satisfy certain costs incurred in the prosecution, and taxed as fees in favor of the solicitor, clerk of the court, sheriff, and certain state witnesses, the sentence being in accordance with the rules prescribed by § 4504 of the Code of that state, which provides for the sentence of convicts to additional hard labor imposed for costs, if not presently paid, or if judgment is not confessed therefor, as provided by law. And while the defendant did not deny the authority of the decisions which made the imprisonment in such a case no infringement of the constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt, it was contended that, inasmuch as he was sentenced to hard labor under the provisions of the Alabama act of February 18, 1887, relating to the working of male convicts sentenced to hard labor for the county, upon the public roads thereof, the fees were no longer due to the officers and witnesses, and there was no authority for the enforcement of their collection by hard labor, and the court held that the act of 1887 authorized the imposition of additional hard labor to pay the fine and costs, in conformity with the provisions of the general law as contained in §§ 4503, 4504, of the Code, and that the objections taken to its constitutionality were without any force.

Under the Illinois statute, which provides that when a fine is inflicted, the court may order as a part of the judgment that the offender be committed to jail, there to remain until the fine and costs are fully paid or he is discharged according to law, the court held that the liability of the party convicted to pay the costs in a criminal proceeding did not arise out of an implied contract, the costs being quashing an indictment against defendant for violation of the statute against procuring accommodations as a boarder and then removing baggage from the boarding house without the consent of the proprietor or payment of the board bill. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Pickle, Attorney General,

E. F. Mynatt, and Grafton Green, for appellant:

Making out a prima facie case does not change the burden of proof.

Com. v. Williams, 6 Gray, 1.

On a charge of murder, malice is presumed from the fact of the killing, unaccompanied with circumstances of extenuation; and the fixed by the statute, and were creatures of the law incident to the prosecution of the proceeding, and growing out of it, therefore following the judgment and a part of it, and such costs were not therefore a debt within the meaning of the prohibition of the Constitution. Kennedy v. People, 123 Ill. 649, 652.

Section 4509 of the Iowa Code provides, in case of fine, for imprisonment until the fine shall be satisfied, and § 4611 provides when any person convicted of a criminal offense is sentenced to pay the fine and costs only, and stand committed until sentence be pronounced, if the sentence be not complied with by payment of the sum due within thirty days next following, the sheriff may liberate him from imprisonment if committed for no other cause, and also if he is unable to pay such fine and costs.

Where defendant was fined and committed to hard labor until the fine and costs were paid, and it was contended that the court erred in ordering him to be imprisoned until the costs were paid, the court stated that the above sections seemed to assume that a person might be sentenced to stand committed for nonpayment of costs, and not arise from mere assumption that it had been conferred; and not having been expressly conferred by the statute in that case it did not exist, the costs not being a part of the fine. State v. Erwin, 44 Iowa, 637.

In a case where the defendant had been convicted of violating the statute relating to a sale of intoxicating liquors, and sought to be released upon habeas corpus, it was held that the costs which, under the Iowa statute, were to be taxed to the defendant were such as accrued in the proceeding for the enforcement of the penalty against the defendant, and were merely incidental to the proceeding, and were collected for the compensation of public officers who rendered service in the cause, and witnesses; but they were, in no proper sense, a part of the penalty which might be imposed upon the defendant by the judgment of the court, by way of punishment for his violation of the statute, the sum exacted from him as punishment for his criminal misconduct being that definite and certain sum called a fine, which the court was empowered by statute to impose upon him; which was the sum which he was compelled to pay to the state as a penalty for its violated law, the costs being exacted as a mere incident of the proceeding, to enforce that penalty against him, and for the purpose of compensating those who rendered service in the proceeding, the only effect of the statute on the power of the court with reference to the taxation of costs, being to empower it to commit the defendant in case of his refusal to pay such costs as might be taxed, the provision with respect to the imprisonment being that he should stand committed until such fine and costs were paid, which did not empower the court to imprison him in punishment for his offense. Albertson v. Kriebbaum, 65 Iowa, 11, 17.

Where a judgment provided that the defendants should each pay a fine of a specified amount, and a further sum for costs of the action, and that in default of the payment of the same they should each stand committed to jail for a certain number of days, unless the same was sooner paid, and it was contended that such judgment was illegal inasmuch as it provided for imprisonment in case of default of payment of the costs,—the court stated that as the imprisonment did not exceed the statutory limit, it must be held to apply only to the fines imposed, and was therefore not illegal as a judgment for imprisonment for costs. State v. Boynton, 75 Iowa, 753, 757.

In Boyer v. Kinnick, 90 Iowa, 74, the plaintiff was convicted of violating the law against the sale of intoxicating liquors. A fine was imposed and a judgment rendered against him for costs with an order for imprisonment until both were paid. He paid the fine and was imprisoned for nonpayment of the costs, and the proceedings were instituted to test the validity of such imprisonment. The court stated that the imprisonment was authorized by the statute, and the only question was the constitutionality of such law. Section 19 of art. 1 of the Iowa Constitution providing no person shall be imprisoned for debt in a civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud, and no person shall be imprisoned for a military fine in time of peace, it was claimed that the judgment for costs was a debt and therefore the legislature could not authorize the imprisonment. The court stated that if it was a debt the act authorizing the imprisonment for it was not vulnerable to the section of the Constitution quoted, for the reason that the costs were adjudged in a criminal and not in a civil action, the section applying only to the latter; and further, that a judgment for costs in a criminal action was not within the constitutional meaning a debt, and that although the costs were due to individuals and only incident to the fine.

In Re Boyd, 84 Kan. 570, the facts showed that the petitioner for writ of habeas corpus was convicted for violating the liquor law, fined and adjudged to pay the costs of the prosecution; to find bond for good behavior, and to stand committed until the judgment should be complied with. He gave the bond but failed to pay the fine and costs, and was arrested, but upon petition he was discharged from custody upon condition that he pay the costs adjudged against him for which the county was liable. It was held that such costs were not debts within the meaning of the constitutional provisions prohibiting imprisonment for debt.

In Re Ebenback, 17 Kan. 618, 622, the question was as to the constitutionality of § 18, p. 681, of the General Statutes of that state, that provides, in effect, that when upon a trial before a justice of the peace for misdemeanor it shall be found that the prosecution was instituted maliciously, or without probable cause, the prosecuting witness shall be adjudged to pay the costs, and, unless a bond is given therefor, shall be committed to the county jail until they are paid. It was contended that the proceedings were in conflict with § 16 of the Kansas Bill of Rights, which provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt except in cases of fraud, and the court stated that such exception was not well taken, as the costs were imposed upon him as a penalty, and they did not constitute strictly and simply a debt, in a technical sense of the word, any more than the fine imposed upon a party convicted for assault and battery was a debt, the legislature in effect declaring that an unwarranted appeal in that class of cases to the criminal law was itself a burden of disproving the malice is thrown upon the accused.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 84.

Possession of the fruits of the crime recently after its commission is prima facie evidence of guilty possession; and if unexplained it is taken as conclusive.

Ibid.; Com. v. Wallace, 7 Gray, 222; Com. v.

Rowe, 14 Gray, 47; Jones v. McLeod, 103 Mass. 58; State v. Hurley, 54 Me. 562; State v. Day, 87 Me. 244.

The prisoner in rebutting this prima facie case need only introduce evidence enough to raise a reasonable doubt of his guilt.

Sahlinger v. People, 102 Ill. 241; State v. Richart, 57 Iowa, 245.

violation of law, subjecting the offender to punishment; the penalty imposed being the costs of the unwarranted proceedings.

The costs of a conviction are not a debt within the meaning of the Constitution of North Carolina. State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. 20, 25.

Neither are costs imposed as a punishment with a fine debts within the meaning of such Constitution. State v. Cannady, 78 N. C. 599, 544.

The costs of a prosecution imposed against a prosecutor when the prosecution terminates in a nolle prosequi acquittal or arrest of judgment, or imposed upon the accused upon a verdict of guilty, and for which either party may be put in the sheriff's custody until they are paid or discharged according to law, do not constitute a debt within the meaning of the clause of the North Carolina Constitution by which imprisonment is forbidden, but are in the nature of a penal infliction, punitive in character and purpose, as a fine imposed by one guilty of crime. State v. Wallin, 89 N. C. 578, 580.

In State v. Dunn, 95 N. C. 697, the judge found that the prosecution was frivolous, and adjudged the prosecutor to pay the costs, and to stand committed until they were paid. The court held, affirming the decision in State v. Cannady, supra, that the costs put upon a prosecutor did not constitute a debt in the sense of the Constitution, but were essentially punitive for a false and unfounded clamor, and were such that the prosecutor ought to bear, and which the general assembly had a right to enact that he should bear.

And it has been held that § 737 of the Code of North Carolina, which empowers the court trying a cause to determine at any stage of a criminal proceeding who the prosecutor is and tax him with the costs, if such court shall be of opinion that there was not reasonable ground for the prosecution, or that it was not required by the public interest, and § 738 of the same, which empowers the court to imprison the prosecutor for nonpayment of costs, if it shall be adjudged the prosecution was frivolous and malicious, are constitutional. State v. Hamilton, 106 N. C. 660, 661; State v. Cannady, 78 N. C. 539.

VII. Statutory, criminal, or quasi criminal cases.

A person who violates the Alabama act of February 21, 1898 (Acts 1892, 1893, p. 1089) for the protection of landlords, proprietors, or keepers of hotels and boarding houses, is imprisoned, not for the debt which he owes the proprietor, or for the purpose of making him pay it, but to punish him for the wrong he has perpetrated, which is made a crime by such act. Ex parte King, 102 Ala. 182.

In that case it was held that the act was not a violation of the Constitution, which forbids imprisonment for debt, or the making of laws giving any special privileges or immunities, the act being in line with other statutes against false pretenses, frauds, cheats, acts to injure and the like.

In Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279, 291, the defendant contended that the Colorado act "to provide for the punishment of a person receiving deposits in, or creating indebtedness by, any bank or banking institution with knowledge of the insolvency of such bank or banking institution" was unconstitutional, as being in violation of § 8 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the state of Colorado, which provides that "all persons have certain 34 L. R. A.

natural, essential, and inalienable rights, among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness;" and also as a violation of § 12 of the said Bill of Rights, which reads: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt unless . . . where there is a strong presumption of fraud," and further that such statute violated § 25 of the Bill of Rights, which reads "that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law;" and also that such statute was in violation of article 14 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The court held, however, that the imprisonment under such act was not an imprisonment for debt, but for a crime in the nature of a misdemeanor, and therefore that the constitutional provisions regarding imprisonment for debt did not apply; and further stated that to make receiving money on deposit under such circumstances prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of the owner of the bank that it was then in failing circumstances or insolvent, violated no constitutional guaranty.

The constitutionality of a similar act was involved in Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 55, the Illinois act of June 4, 1879, making it a crime of embezzlement for a bank to receive moneys on deposit, knowing himself to be insolvent, and it was contended that the same was unconstitutional upon the ground, inter alia, that it deprived the defendant of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and further that the relation of a banker to his depositor was an ordinary contract relation of debtor and creditor, the moneys deposited becoming the property of the banker and not trust funds, and that every person in the state other than a private banker engaged in the ordinary and common callings of life, was allowed to enter into contracts the result of which was to establish himself debtor to every other person in the community dealing with him, and that to deny to the private banker the right to prosecute his business and, as incident thereto, to contract in regard to the same on the like terms as other ordinary and common callings, business, or pursuits, was to deprive him of both liberty and property to the extent that he was thus denied the right to contract without due process of law; but the court held that such act was constitutional.

And the same conclusion was arrived at with regard to the Wisconsin statute which makes it a misdemeanor for a banker to receive a deposit of money as a banker, knowing himself or his bank to be insolvent, the imprisonment thereunder not being for debt, much less for a debt arising out of or founded on any contract within the meaning of Wis. Const. art. 1, § 16, such act not expressly or impliedly violating either the state or national Constitution. Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 363.

But § 73 of the California Practice Act, which provides that "defendant may be arrested when the action is for wilful injury to person or character," has been held to be directly in conflict with § 15 of art. 1 of the state Constitution, which provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil case on mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud. Ex parte Prader, 6 Cal. 239.

So, in State v. Paint Rock Coal & C. Co. 92 Tenn. 181, where the defendants were indicted for refusing

This statute does not provide for imprisonment for debt.

Ex parte King, 102 Ala. 182; State v. Norman, 110 N. C. 484.

Mr. S. G. Heiskell also for appellant.

Messrs. E. E. Houk, Charles Nelson, and R. A. Mynatt for appellee.

to cash a certain check of their own which was presented within thirty days of its date, and for unlawfully refusing to redeem in lawful currency a certain check which they had issued, and moved to quash such indictment upon the ground that no criminal offense was alleged, and that the Tennessee act of 1887, under which the indictment was drawn, was unconstitutional in that it impaired the obligation of the contract, and attempted to imprison the defendant for refusing to pay a debt, within art. 1, § 12, of the state Constitution, which provided, "the legislature shall pass no law authorizing imprisonment for debt in civil causes," the court held that the act in question, while not directly authorizing imprisonment for debt, did attempt to create a crime for the nonpayment of debts evidenced by check, scrip, or order, and for such a crime provided a penalty which might or might not be followed by imprisonment, and in that way violated the spirit, if not the letter, of the constitutional provisions, the act being an indirect imposition of imprisonment for the nonpayment of a debt, and therefore unconstitutional.

In declaring the above act unconstitutional, the court stated that in other words the act said that when any person who owed a debt which was evidenced by check or scrip issued by him did not cash the same within thirty days of its issuance, he should be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined accordingly, which judgment under the general law would be liable to be enforced by confinement in the workhouse. State v. Paint Rock Coal & C. Co. supra.

The act in question enacted that it should be unlawful for any person or persons, etc., to refuse to cash any check or scrip of their own, which might be presented within thirty days of the date of issuance, and that such person refusing to redeem in lawful currency shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine for such offense. Ibid.

See also State v. Norman, 110 N. C. 484, supra, III. d; Meyer v. Herlandt, 39 Minn. 438, 1 L. R. A. 777, supra, II. b; Mosley v. Gallatin, 10 Lea, 484, supra, IV. b; Barber v. Com. 3 Penn. & W. 253, supra, IV. b.

VIII. Enforcing orders and decrees of court.

a. In general.

The question whether the imprisonment of a party to a cause for disobeying the order of a court is an infringement of the constitutional provisions respecting imprisonment for debt has often been raised, but the courts have held that where such imprisonment is not merely for the enforcement of a money decree, but for enforcing the court's order and as a punishment for wilful disobedience, such imprisonment does not conflict with the constitutional provisions prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Yet where the imprisonment is merely to force the payment of money under a money decree the contrary would seem to be the law, the courts holding such decrees merely judgments for the payment of money.

In Geery v. Geery, 68 N. Y. 252, 255, it is said to be doubtful, since the passing of the Revised Statutes and the Code of that state, and the act abolishing imprisonment for debt, whether decrees for the payment of money could be enforced by attachment or sequestration.

And in that state it has been held that when an order is in effect a final judgment for the payment 34 L. R. A.

Caldwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Sallie Yardley was indicted for obtaining accommodations as a boarder in the boarding house of Amanda Smith, in Knoxville, and thereafter unlawfully and surreptitiously removing her baggage and property from said of money, whether the proceeding in which it is made is of equitable or legal cognizance, it cannot be enforced by imprisonment, upon the theory of a contempt, such a proceeding violating the state law which permits no imprisonment for debt. Re Atlantic Mut. L. Ins. Co. 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 368.

In Ex parte Hardy, 68 Ala. 303, the petitioner was imprisoned under an order of the court in proceedings by way of discovery, and contended that §§ 3887-3889 of the Alabama Code, which embraced the act of March 8, 1871, extending the chancery jurisdiction, were unconstitutional and void for the reason that they violated the Bill of Rights, § 2, art. 1, of the State Constitution, so far as they authorized imprisonment for debt, the question for the determination of the court being whether the sentence to imprisonment for the alleged contempt was in its essential nature and purposes "an imprisonment for debt." The court held that although the act of 1871 had enlarged the jurisdiction of the chancery court, and had given that court power to coerce payment of a debt by contempt proceedings and imprisonment thereunder, yet the legislature having no power to do indirectly that which was directly prohibited by the law, the section of the act in question authorizing such imprisonment was unconstitutional and void.

The provision of the Constitution of Georgia, that there shall be no imprisonment for debt, was not intended to interfere with the traditional power of chancery courts to punish for contempt all refusals to obey their lawful decrees and orders. Clements v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 451, 454.

Under the Georgia statutes, when a party is decreed to perform a duty, or to do any act other than the mere payment of money, which the court has jurisdiction to adjudge he shall do, if he disobeys, the authority of the court is defied, he is guilty of contempt, and the arrest and imprisonment of his person is not imprisonment for debt in any appropriate sense of the term. But if a court of equity should render a simple decree for money on the simple money verdict, a decree which it may now enforce by the ordinary common-law process against property, the failure to pay the decree would not be a contempt, nor could compulsory process against the person of the party in default be resorted to in order to enforce payment. Ibid.

So, in Goodwillie v. Millmann, 56 Ill. 523, 525, it was stated that the remedy of enforcing decrees in equity by imprisonment should be limited to cases of necessity only, in accordance with the spirit that dictates the constitutional restriction, and courts of equity should act as justly in regard to the liberty of parties as to their rights of property, and there was no reason for declaring a party in contempt for failing to pay a money decree, than there would be for refusing to pay a judgment at law, and that it would seem that equity was not authorized to imprison in the first instance for the failure to pay a money decree.

For this reason, therefore, unless a defendant wilfully refuses to obey a money decree made in chancery proceedings, he cannot be imprisoned for the failure to make such payment. Dinet v. People, 73 Ill. 183, 186; O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan, 69 Ill. 552.

Where the United States marshal moved for an order requiring an officer of the insurance company upon whose petition the company was adjudicated a boarding house, without the consent of the proprietor thereof or the payment of her bill. On motion of the defendant, the indictment was quashed, and the state appealed in error.

The substance of the motion to quash is as follows: That the act upon which the indictment is based is unconstitutional (1) because its subject is not stated in the title; (2) because the title embraces more than one subject; (3) because the act seeks to repeal, amend, and revive former laws, and does not recite, in its caption or otherwise, the title or substance of the laws repealed, amended, or revived; and (4) because the act was intended to make the creation of certain debts a criminal offense, punishable by imprisonment. The court ad-bankrupt, to pay the fees of the marshal in executing the warrant, the proceedings in bankruptcy having been vacated, the court held that unless the authority to issue an attachment in that case rested upon the power of the court to punish for contempt, a commitment would contravene the statute abolishing imprisonment for debt, the power of the court of the United States to punish for contempt and to imprison for debt being substantially coextensive with that vested in the courts of the state [New York], or the power to punish for contempt was possibly somewhat more circumscribed than that conferred by the laws of the state, the power conferred to imprison for debt being precisely that given by the laws of the state. Re Atlantic Mut. L. Ins. Co. 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 368.

As above stated, the courts make a distinction between an order in the shape of a direct decree for the payment of money and an order directing certain things to be done, and while in the former cases they will not enforce such orders, decrees, or judgments by imprisonment, yet in the latter they will enforce them by such a method, as the punishment is not to compel the payment of money, strictly speaking, but to compel obedience to the court's decree and to punish the offender for contempt.

In Hogue v. Hayes, 53 Iowa, 377, where a judgment had been recovered against defendant for moneys owing by him to plaintiff, under which judgment he had been examined under supplementary proceedings, and had been ordered to pay over moneys found to be in his hands, it was held that his wilful disobedience of such order was a contempt of court for which he might be imprisoned, the same not being contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, although in that case the defendant was released, upon the ground that it was not shown that he had wilfully disobeyed the court's order.

See also Ex parte Grace, 12 Iowa, 208, 79 Am. Dec. 529; Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67 Iowa, 619, 56 Am. Rep. 860, supra, III. d.

An order made in a suit for the taking of partnership accounts, upon the person occupying the position of manager and treasurer of the partnership concern to pay over to the receiver moneys in his possession belonging to the concern, was held not to be an order to imprison for debt, within the Louisiana Constitution, but to compel obedience to the order of the court in relation to a fund which the court was entitled to as custodian, and which it was within the power of the relator to hand over to the receiver as the officer of the court, and the habeas corpus was therefore denied. State, Audibert, v. Maubertret, 47 La. Ann. 384, 385.

So, proceedings to enforce an order of the court, taken under chap. 66, § 307, and chap. 87, Minn. Gen. Stat., which order a defendant had wholly neglected to comply with, although able to do so, were held not to be contrary to, inter alia, § 12 of the Bill of Rights of that state, which declares that no person shall be imprisoned for debt, the imprisonment in that case being for contempt of court, even though the order related to a debt evidenced by the judgment, the imprisonment being for contempt and not for debt, such contempt not consisting in the neglect or refusal to pay the debt, but in the disobedience of the order of the court, the commitment not being in a proper sense an imprisonment for debt. State, Warfield, v. Becht, 23 Minn. 411.

And the imprisonment of an insolvent debtor upon his refusal to obey the order of the court ordering him to turn over his property to his creditor's assignee, was held not to be contrary to the provisions of the Minnesota Constitution, as he was not imprisoned for debt, neither was he imprisoned for the reason that he could not or would not pay a debt which he owed, but for the reason that the court had found a specific sum of money which belonged to his creditors which should have been turned over by him to his assignee for their benefit, pursuant to the court's order, which order he refused to obey, and it was therefore for such refusal that he was punished by imprisonment. Re Burt, 56 Minn. 397.

A trustee wilfully retaining funds contrary to the order of the court may be imprisoned without infringement of the law, and so may an executor or administrator, who wilfully disobeys an order to pay over moneys shown to be in his hands. People v. Marshall, 7 Abb. N. C. 386.

For a wilful disobedience of an order of a court, a defendant may be committed to prison without infringing the law prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Dusenberry v. Woodward, 1 Abb. Pr. 452.

In Ferguson v. Cummings, 1 Dem. 435, the court stated that the extraordinary power given to the surrogate's court to enforce obedience to their decrees for the payment of money by punishment of the delinquent for contempt should be exercised in conformity to the liberal spirit of the legislature on the subject of imprisonment for debt. The following cases are the same in effect. Doran v. Dempsey, 1 Bradf. 490; Re Latson, 1 Duer, 603; Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige, 608; Re Callahan, Tucker, 62; People v. Marshall, supra.

A commitment for not obeying the order of the court to apply certain properties in defendant's possession to the satisfaction of a judgment is not contrary to the constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt, the order not being for payment of a debt but a direction to apply certain property to the satisfaction of the judgment. State v. Burrows, 38 Kan. 17.

So, the imprisonment of a judgment debtor for contempt in not delivering property or money to a receiver appointed in proceedings supplementary to execution is not in violation of § 15, art. 1, of the Constitution of Ohio inhibiting imprisonment for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud. Re Conkling's Application, 5 Ohio C. C. 78.

The Pennsylvania act of 1842 expressly prohibits imprisonment to enforce decrees for the payment of money due on contracts, and the rule of the supreme court must not be construed as a repeal of that statute, as it was not intended as a construction of it, and therefore a decree in equity cannot in that state be enforced by the attachment of the defendant, the act of 1842 having abolished imprisonment for debt. Scott v. The Jailor, 1 Grant, Cal. 237, 239.

So, in the case of a final decree founded on contract the defendant cannot be punished for con-judged all the grounds of the motion well taken, and therefore held the indictment bad.

The act in question is in the following words and figures:

An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, that persons who shall, at any hotel, inn, or boarding house, order and receive or cause to be furnished any food or accommodation, with intent to defraud the owner or proprietor of such hotel, inn, or boarding house out of the value or price of such food or accommodation; and any person who shall obtain credit at any hotel, inn, or tempt upon his omission to pay either the debt or costs, especially where no breach of trust is involved. Pierce's Appeal, 103 Pa. 27.

In Re Hugg's Estate, 1 Clark (Pa.) 237, it was sought to set aside an attachment issued to compel the payment of money due to the estate by defendant as assignee, upon the ground that he was exempt from imprisonment by reason of the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt but the court stated that when a decree was for the payment of money founded upon a contract, the defendant could not be taken in execution either by process in equity or at common law, yet where the proceedings were those of which a court of equity operated upon the conscience of the party and compelled the performance of the specific act, the defendant might be imprisoned as for contempt of court.

But the Pennsylvania act of 1842 does not exempt a trustee from liability to attachment for contempt of court in disobeying a positive order of the court to pay over money. Chew's Appeal, 44 Pa. 247, 251.

So, where the decree of a court found that the appellant had been unfaithful in the discharge of his duties under a letter of attorney, and that he had mismanaged and wasted the estate committed to his trust and applied the moneys to his own use, a breach of trust being thereby committed, it was held that the case was exempt from the operation of the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt, and that therefore an attachment might issue to the costs. Wilson v. Wilson, 142 Pa. 247.

And a master's fees in a divorce suit are not a debt within the meaning of the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt, and therefore an attachment may be issued against a husband who refuses to comply with the order of a court for payment thereof. Calhoun v. Calhoun, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 177.

The imprisonment of an assignor in insolvency proceedings after a hearing and examination and a full disclosure of his property for a neglect and refusal to turn over the property in his possession to his assignee as ordered by the court for which he is adjudged in contempt, is not imprisonment for debt, and does not contravene § 12, art. 1, of the Minnesota Constitution, and the court has therefore the power to punish him by imprisonment for such contempt. Re Burt, 56 Minn. 387.

The provisions of the Wisconsin Constitution were not designed to cripple, or take away the ordinary and well-defined powers of the court or judge when exercising equitable jurisdiction, and therefore decrees and orders in equitable suits and proceedings not coming clearly within the prohibition may still be enforced by coercion. Re Milburn, 59 Wis. 24, 31.

The imprisonment of a defendant for refusing to obey the order of a court, commanding him to hand over moneys in his hands to a receiver, is not an imprisonment for debt, but is a punishment for the disobedience of the order of the court and for contempt thereof, and therefore § 3037 of the Wisconsin Revised Statutes, which authorizes such imprisonment, is not contrary to the Constitution, and this is so although the judgment may be for a debt founded on a contract. Ibid.

So, the imprisonment of a defendant for the disobedience of the order of a court, which commanded him not to transfer or dispose of his property, was held not to be an imprisonment for debt, even though the judgment was for a debt founded on a contract, such imprisonment being for contempt of the court's order. Re Perry, 30 Wis. 268.

It has been held that it was not the design of § 3029 of the Revised Statutes of that state, relating to proceedings in aid of execution, to revive the power and practice of imprisonment for debt, and that under such section a commitment for failure to pay over money ordered to be paid would not be made unless the evidence showed clearly and satisfactorily that the party had the money within his power, and so had the present ability to comply with the order, and it was only in such manner that the liberty of the citizen could be adequately conserved. Warren v. Rosenberg (Wis.) 69 N. W. 539, 341.

b. In decedents' estates.

The same doctrine is applied by the courts in cases of orders or decrees made in matters relating to decedents' estates. The difference being between an order directing acts to be done and an order which merely amounts to a money decree.

Therefore by virtue of § 20 of the Declaration of Rights of the Constitution of South Carolina, inhibiting imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud, an administrator who has failed to comply with an order of the court of probate, which was in the nature of a money decree, was held exempt from arrest and imprisonment, the court having no power to issue a warrant for the imprisonment of a defendant in such a case. Gilliam v. McJunkin, 2 S. C. N. S. 442, 450.

In that case the court stated that if the mere non-payment of a sum of money was to be construed as a fraud within the language of the above section of the Constitution, the humane and liberal provisions which it made against imprisonment for debt would have been not only senseless in meaning, but delusive, and if the section of the Code under which it was sought to hold the defendant had directly authorized the probate court to imprison a party for failure to comply with its orders directing the payment of money, it would also have been nugatory because in violation of the Constitution.

So, in Re Leach, 51 Vt. 630, the court held that the proceedings by way of contempt upon an order of the probate court, ordering him as executor to pay a widow a certain monthly stipend, were invalid by reason of their noncompliance with the requirements of the statutes; and further, that the order of the court being for the payment of money, it was a judgment for debt, and as such was abolished by the statute, a judgment or decree for the payment of money being a mere contract within the purview of the statute, and that the probate court had no power to make a commitment which was denied to a court of common law, and also to the court of chancery, discretion in the latter courts so far as pretense to imprisonment of the body of the debtor is concerned being like judgments at common law.

Again, in Re Blingham, 32 Vt. 329, where the order which it was sought to enforce was a mere money decree calling upon the administrator to pay over a specific sum of money, it was held that such order could not be enforced by imprisonment.

boarding house, by the use of any false pretense or device, or by fraudulently depositing at such hotel, inn, or boarding house, any baggage or property of less value than the amount of such credit, or of the bill by such person incurred, unless credit be given by express agreement; and any person who, after obtaining credit or accommodation at any hotel, inn, or boarding house, and shall surreptitiously remove his or her baggage or property therefrom, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished accordingly.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that proof that lodging, food, or other accommodation was obtained by false pretense, or by false or fictitious show or pretense of baggage, or that the

as the money was a mere debt the imprisonment for which was forbidden under the state statute.

The provision in art. 1, § 5, W. Va. Const., in effect renders void any order or judgment of any court or officer in that state, which directs the imprisonment of a person in any case where the debt for or on account of which he is imprisoned arises out of or is founded on a contract.

Where the decree in equity ordered the relator, an executor and trustee, to pay the complainant moneys in his hands for his use and benefit, and also gave execution against the relator for the sum, together with interest, it was held that, although it was his duty to pay such sum, and the decree was right in awarding an execution against him in case it was not paid, yet the decree did not authorize the imprisonment of the relator, for the reason that it only showed that he owed the money which came to his hands as a trustee, and therefore the debt arose out of and was founded on a contract. Re Blair, 4 Wis. 522, 534, 535.

Where a decree against an executor ordered him to pay money over to a legatee, it was held that he was entitled to an execution to enforce the performance of such decree, but that he was not entitled to an alternative decree, to the effect that upon failure of such payment the executor should be deemed to be in contempt, the facts not authorizing such alternative order imprisoning the defendant on failure to pay, the court stating that the power to order imprisonment was never exercised by chancery courts, except in those cases where a trust in the property or fund arose between the parties litigant, or some specific interest in it was claimed, or the chattel had such peculiar value and importance, that a recovery of damages at law for its detention or conversion was inadequate. Such interference was in the nature of a bill quia timet, and was asserted only on a proper showing that the fund or property was in danger of loss or destruction. No jurisdiction to compel the payment of an ordinary money demand unconnected with such peculiar equities ever existed in chancery courts, nor had they the power to compel such payment by punishing the refusal to pay under the guise of contempt. Clements v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 451, 454.

When, however, the order which it is sought to enforce is not a mere decree for the payment of money amounting to a mere judgment against the defendant or debtor, the power of the court to enforce such order by imprisonment would seem to be denied under the state Constitutions and laws abolishing imprisonment for debt.

It has been held that proceedings for the settlement of the estate of a decedent are not a civil action within the meaning of § 15, art. 1, of the Constitution of California, nor is the amount of money which by the order of distribution the executors are required to pay over to the distributees, a debt due from the executors to the distributees, and therefore the case does not fall within the clause of the section of the Constitution forbidding imprisonment for debt in a civil action. Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204, 207. To the same effect, Ex parte Cohn, 55 Cal. 193, 196.

The provisions of the New York act to abolish imprisonment for debt do not extend to proceedings as for contempt to enforce civil remedies. They relate only to civil process for executions issuing out of courts of law or equity, and they are not therefore applicable to proceedings in the surrogate's court. Doran v. Dempsey, 1 Bradf. 490, 492, in which case an attachment was issued against an executor to compel his obedience to the order of the court directing the payment of a legacy.
34 L. R. A.

In Tome's Appeal, 50 Pa. 235, 237, the court applied the construction placed upon the nonimprisonment law of 1842 in the case of Chew's Appeal, 44 Pa. 247, to the case when an executor was ordered to pay and deliver over to a successor the estate of a decedent in his hands.

In Leach v. Peabody, 58 Vt. 435, the court held that an executor wilfully refusing to obey the order of the court of probate under which he was to pay a certain amount to the widow and children of a decedent for their maintenance, pending the settlement of the estate, was lawfully imprisoned, and distinguished the case from that of Re Bingham, 32 Vt. 330, in which the order made by the judge of probate created a debt, the imprisonment for non-compliance and the court's order in that case being unlawful, § 15, chap. 48, of Vt. Gen. Stat., which empowered probate courts to issue warrants for the imprisonment of a person refusing to perform its orders, applying in the case then before the court but not in the latter.

The same principles would seem to be applied by the court, in the case of Re Leachy, 58 Vt. 724, where the petitioner had been committed for neglect in obeying the order of the court to pay over money in his hands as administrator, which sum had been recovered in a judgment obtained in an action brought by his successor against him; the court stating that the debt was not one of simple contract which he was liable to pay to a creditor, but the funds in his hands were not his, but were held by him as a strict trust to pay them away only as ordered by the court. See also Wood v. Wood, 84 Ga. 102; Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige, 603, supra, II. b; Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. C. 384, 386, supra, III. d.

c. In admiralty.

By rule 46 in admiralty, made in December, 1860, by the supreme court, it is provided imprisonment for debt on process issuing out of the admiralty court is abolished in all cases where by the laws of the state in which the court is held imprisonment has been or shall be hereafter abolished upon similar or analogous process issuing from a state court, and by § 920 of the Revised Statutes of the United States it is provided: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any state on process issuing from a court of the United States where by the laws of such state imprisonment for debt has been or shall be abolished, and all modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt provided by the laws of any state shall be applicable to the process issuing from the courts of the United States to be executed therein, and the same course of proceedings shall be adopted therein as may be adopted in the courts of such state." The Bremena v. Card, 38 Fed. Rep. 144.

Section 990, U. S. Rev. Stat., rule 47, of the Amended Admiralty Rules, and § 17, art. 1, of the Washington Constitution, refer only to imprisonment for debt, and do not affect the power of the court to issue a warrant of arrest as process for compelling the defendant to respond to the claim for unliquidated damages, which is not a debt, any party refused to pay for such food, lodging, or accommodation on demand, or that he absconded without paying or offering to pay for such food, lodging, or other accommodations, or that he surreptitiously removed or attempted to remove his or her baggage, shall be prima facie proof of the fraudulent intent mentioned in § 1 of this act.

Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, that at any time after thirty (30) days after the person incurring the debt or obligation has left the hotel, inn, or boarding house, and the debt or obligation being still due and unpaid, the owner or proprietor of said hotel, inn, or boarding house, may sell, at public auction, for cash, at hotel or boarding-house office, any or all baggage or more than it restricts the power of the court to imprison defendants for nonpayment of fines, or by way of punishment for contempt, the word "debt" when used in a statute, without some plain or explicit declaration making it applicable thereto, not including taxes or claims for unliquidated damages, its legal definition being opposed to unliquidated damages or a liability in the sense of an inchoate or contingent debt or an obligation not enforceable by ordinary process. Bolden v. Jensen, 69 Fed. Rep. 745, where the action was in libel to recover damages for personal injury and cruelty inflicted on the libellant while serving on board a vessel as a seaman.

As the right to a warrant of arrest of the person is unauthorized and illegal under the Constitution of Alabama, so is an attachment issued under rule 2 of the rules of practice in admiralty, which is dependent on such warrant of arrest, the right to the writ being dependent on the right to imprison for debt, which right is abolished by the Constitution of that state. Chiesa v. Conover, 36 Fed. Rep. 334.

So, in Hanson v. Fowle, 1 Sawyer, 497, 505, where the plaintiff sought damages for a trespass and consequent injuries to his person, committed by defendant, who was arrested pursuant to the admiralty rules, it was contended that such imprisonment was illegal by reason of the Oregon statute of March 2, 1867, which modified the law respecting imprisonment for debt. It was held that such statute did not apply to the case in question, as the action was not one to recover a debt, neither was the claim for damages a claim for a debt within the meaning of such act, or within the meaning of Or. Const. art. 1, subd. 19, not, however, until such claim had ripened into a decree for a sum of money certain.

In The Blanche Page, 15 Blatchf. 1, 8, it was held that the stipulations and bonds of sureties in suits in rem in admiralty amounted to contracts and contracts to pay money, and that the decrees were judgments requiring the payment of money due upon contracts, and the statutes of New York having abolished imprisonment for debt as a remedy in execution of a judgment requiring the payment of money due on a contract, the circuit court of the United States had no power to enforce such judgment by imprisonment.

d. Alimony.

The question has often been raised as to whether the imprisonment of the defendant in divorce proceedings for nonpayment of alimony is imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the provisions of the various state Constitutions inhibiting imprisonment for debt.

The majority of the cases are in favor of the theory that alimony is not a debt within the meaning of such Constitutions, and therefore the defendants' imprisonment is not contrary to the constitutional provisions, the question being regarded as an imprisonment for the wilful contempt of the court's order and in the nature of a punishment therefor, rather than as a means of enforcing payment of a debt.

The only state which seems to hold an opinion in direct conflict with the above doctrine is Missouri, wherein the courts hold that alimony is a debt within the prohibitory provisions of the state Constitution.

34 L. R. A.

In a case where the wife's bill against the husband prayed for alimony, but did not seek a divorce, the court, in passing upon the duty of the husband to maintain his wife, and in enforcing an order for the payment of such alimony, stated that the court of chancery might and did enforce the obeying of such orders by attachment of the person of the husband, and that such a proceeding was not imprisonment for debt within the prohibition of the Alabama Constitution. Murray v. Murray, 84 Ala. 363.

In Ex parte Murray, 35 Fed. Rep. 490, it was contended on behalf of the petitioner that he was imprisoned without due process of law, and that § 3801 of the Alabama Code of 1893, which provided that such decree might be enforced by process of attachment against the defendant therein, and by sequestration of his property, as well as by execution, was unconstitutional. The court held that the prisoner was not imprisoned without due process of law, and that the section in question was not a violation of the Constitution of the United States, relating to the liberty of the subject, and that as the courts had held that a decree for alimony was not a money decree, but was a decree to enforce the performance of a duty, the nonperformance of it was a wrong, quasi criminal, and that therefore the writ of attachment was an appropriate mode for enforcing such decree, and for this reason there was no law or constitutional provision of the United States which was violated by such arrest and imprisonment.

So, in Ex parte Perkins, 18 Cal. 60, the main question had relation to the power of the district court to order the applicant to pay a sum of money for expenses incurred by the defendant wife in an action for divorce, the question turning upon the legality of the husband's imprisonment for non-compliance with an order of the court respecting the alimony, the husband's contention being that such sum was a debt within the meaning of the words of the California Constitution prohibiting imprisonment for debt. The court held that such was not the case, and that the sum so ordered to be paid was not within the provisions of the Constitution.

But in Re Wilson, 75 Cal. 590, 584, where the petitioner applied to be discharged from custody, and alleged his inability to pay, the court held that an opportunity should be given him to prove his inability to comply with the order of the court, as to hold that he should, when utterly penniless, suffer a life imprisonment for debt, because of the particular form in which the imprisonment was imposed, would be a gross violation of the provisions of the Code.

Where, in contempt proceedings for nonpayment of alimony, the defendant insisted that the decree stood on the same ground as a judgment at law, or an ordinary decree in equity, for the payment of a mere debt or sum of money, enforceable as in those cases, by an accustomed writ of execution, and if necessary by an appropriate resort to a court of equity; and that an enforcement of the decree by process of contempt for noncompliance with it would deprive the defendant of the exemption from imprisonment, or in case of imprisonment the privilege of the oath, provided by law for poor debtors; to which he would be entitled in an ordinary writ of execution, the court stated that such property, left at said hotel, inn, or boarding house, to satisfy said debt or obligation without any process at law or equity, provided that said sale shall be advertised by written or printed posters for at least ten days before said sale.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, that all laws, and parts of laws, in conflict with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed.

Acts 1895, chap. 67.

was not a decree for the payment of a debt as the court did not decree alimony as a debt due to the wife, but as a part of her husband's estate to which she became legally entitled. Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 185, 197.

So, in Carlton v. Carlton, 44 Ga. 216, 220, it was held that § 18, art. 1, Ga. Const. 1868, abolishing imprisonment for debt, did not take away the power of the judge to commit to jail for contempt of court in refusing to obey an order for the payment of temporary alimony in divorce proceedings, although § 17 of the same article of the Constitution would seem to imply that such power exists, since it makes it the duty of the general assembly to limit the power of the courts to punish for contempts in such cases. The imprisonment must, however, be clearly for the contempt of the process of the court, and be of one who is able and unwilling to obey the order of the court.

And in Lester v. Lester, 68 Ga. 356, where the defendant was imprisoned for contempt for the nonpayment of alimony, the court stated that while the imprisonment which impends over the respondent is not for debt, it can be prevented by the same means as if it were, that is, by payment, and that, harsh as was the only remedy of imprisonment for debt, yet it had its wholesome effect in many cases, and was so far a beneficial instrumentality.

And this is so for the reason that the means used to compel his obedience to such decree by attachment do not amount to an imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the Constitution, the court having stated that "when a bird can sing, and will not sing, he must be made to sing." Lewis v. Lewis, 89 Ga. 706.

In Illinois the courts have held that a commitment to jail for the nonpayment of alimony is not an imprisonment for debt, under the provisions of the Illinois Constitution and the laws enacted on that subject. Wightman v. Wightman, 45 Ill. 187, 173.

The amount found and ordered to be paid under a decree of alimony is not originally founded upon contract, and therefore if the means adopted for enforcing such payment are in accordance with the Illinois Chancery Code, they are not contrary to the provisions of the 15th section of the 8th article of the Illinois Constitution, prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Ibid.

So, in Becker v. Becker, 15 Ill. App. 247, the court stated that decrees for alimony might be enforced by execution as other decrees in chancery, or in any other mode consistent with the practice of the court of chancery. No doubt the court may enforce decrees for the payment of alimony, as sequestration of real or personal estate by attachment against the person, by fine or imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court, but while such extraordinary power is conceded to rest in the courts, it is subject to those limitations imposed by the Constitution that a party may not be imprisoned except in cases where it shall appear he has the pecuniary ability to enable him to comply with the decree, and his disobedience is wilful.

The court may punish wilful disobedience by imprisonment, but the spirit of the Illinois Constitution forbids the pecuniary inability of the party in proceedings to enforce the payment of alimony not resulting from his fraudulent conduct to produce such condition from being made a ground for punishment as for a contempt by imprisonment. O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan, 69 Ill. 552, 554, 555; Blake v. People, 80 Ill. 11, 14.

And the Indiana courts have held that alimony is not a debt growing out of law founded upon a contract, express or implied, within the meaning of the Constitution. Menzie v. Anderson, 65 Ind. 220.

So, the restrictions imposed by the Massachusetts general statutes apply to executions issued to pay debts or damages in a civil action, except in actions of tort, and the allowance of alimony or the award to the wife of her own or a part of her husband's estate, upon granting a divorce, is not a debt or damages in the sense of the statute. Chase v. Ingalls, 97 Mass. 524, 530.

And in Foster v. Foster, 130 Mass. 189, it was held that a defendant lawfully arrested on execution for alimony had no right to be discharged from imprisonment, except in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law as a person arrested on execution for debt or damages in a civil action, and by applying to take the poor debtor's oath he assumed the risk of meeting charges of fraud filed by a creditor.

In Hurd v. Hurd (Minn.) 65 N. W. 723, it was contended that the statute authorizing imprisonment for contempt in refusing to pay alimony violated the Minnesota Constitution forbidding imprisonment for debt, but the court held that if the statute was to be construed as authorizing the imprisonment of a party neglecting or refusing to pay alimony which the court had ordered him to pay, until he did pay, without reference to his power to comply with the order, it was unconstitutional, but the statute in question was to be construed as applying only to cases where the husband had the ability to comply with the order of the court and would not do so, and so construed it was constitutional, and therefore if it was in his power to comply with the order of the court his refusal was a contempt of the court, and he might be imprisoned until he purged himself of the contempt by complying with the order, and such imprisonment was for contempt and not for debt, and therefore did not contravene the constitutional provision.

Executions for alimony have in New Hampshire been made to run against both the property and the body, as the court may have seen fit to direct, and the provisions of the statute exempting the body from arrest do not apply to decrees and orders of this nature. Sheafe v. Sheafe, 36 N. H. 155, 156; Sheafe v. Loughton, Id. 240.

So, in North Carolina the courts have held that the allowance of alimony is not a debt within the meaning of the state Constitution, for which imprisonment is not permitted. Pain v. Pain, 80 N. C. 322.

And N. C. Act 1896, chap. 63, abolishing imprisonment for debt, does not embrace cases relating to the payment of alimony pendente lite, and therefore in case the defendant neglects to obey the orvoke the 2d clause of § 17 of art. 2 of the state Constitution, which clause declares that "no bill shall become a law which embraces more than one subject, that subject to be expressed in the title." That requirement of the organic law is mandatory, and, unless obeyed in every instance, the legislation attempted is invalid and of no effect whatever. Cannon v. Mathes, 8 Helsk. 518; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 482.

1. The subject of the present act is "protection" to hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers; and that subject is plainly and unmistakably expressed in the title, which is as follows: "An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers." It is a vain impeachment of the law to say that it is bad because the means or instrumentalities by which that protection is to be afforded are not recited in the title. Recitation of details in the title of an act is not necessary to its validity. It is sufficient to state der of the court in such cases he may be arrested and imprisoned until he complies with the order of the court. Wood v. Wood, 61 N. C. 538. To the same effect, Clerk's Office v. Allen, 7 Jones, L. 158.

In Effinger v. State, 11 Ohio C. C. 389, 391, it was held that upon sufficient evidence the court had power to imprison for contempt on failure to pay alimony, as such alimony was not a debt, and imprisonment for failure to perform was not against the provisions of the Constitution of that state, or within the state statutes.

The punishment of a defendant in a divorce suit for noncompliance with an order for the payment of alimony under § 5540 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, which provides that a person guilty of any of the following acts may be punished as for a contempt, that is, disobedience or resistance to a lawful writ, process, order, rule, judgment, or command of a court or of an officer, is not imprisonment for a debt within the meaning of the state Constitution, as the order for temporary alimony does not create a debt. Stewart v. Stewart, 28 Ohio L. J. 38.

Again, in Tolman v. Leonard, 28 Wash. L. Rep. 343, 345, it was held that an allowance of alimony was not in the nature of an absolute debt, inasmuch as it was not unconditional and unchangeable, as it might be changed in amount, even when in arrears, upon good cause shown to the court having jurisdiction, and therefore an order committing the defendant to prison for the nonobservance of the court's order respecting the payment of such alimony was not within the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt.

But in Aspinwall v. Aspinwall, 58 N. J. Eq. 684, upon proceedings to compel the specific performance by a husband of a contract made by him upon articles of separation, wherein the wife sought by attachment for contempt to compel him to pay the stipulated weekly allowances, the court refused the writ, and upon appeal it was held that such refusal was right, the court stating that under N. J. Rev. Stat. § 55, p. 112, and § 64, p. 115, the court of chancery had power to enforce its decrees by sequestration of the real and personal estate of the defendant, and by issuing writs of f. fa. and of a capias ad satisfaciendum, and the effect of such legislation was to do away with the process of contempt as a method of enforcing decrees for the payment of moneys due upon contracts between the parties, in cases where no special equities exist, and to substitute therefor sequestration of the defendant's estate, the writ of fieri facias against his real and personal property, and, in cases of fraud, the writ of capias against his person, the court's conclusion being that decrees of that kind in cases where there was no pretense of fraud, which were ordinarily enforced in that state by process of attachment, could only be reached by ignoring that provision of the New Jersey Constitution which forbids the imprisonment of any person for debt in any action, or on any judgment founded on contract, except in cases of fraud; for the ultimate result of proceedings for contempt, where they were used as a method of relief inter partes, was the imprisonment of the party proceeded against.

So, in Steller v. Steller, 25 Mich. 159, the defendant insisted that the constitutional provisions inhibiting imprisonment for debt exempted him from being committed to jail for nonpayment of temporary alimony and expenses. The court stated that whatever might be the proper construction to be placed upon the Michigan statutes, it was clear that with imprisonment for debt forbidden, a party could not be imprisoned on noncompliance with such an order, except on the ground of contempt of the authority of the court.

And in Missouri the courts have held that an order for the payment of alimony is simply an order for the payment of money, and, imprisonment for debt being abolished in that state, and imprisonment for nonpayment of alimony being the imprisonment for debt only, the commitment of the defendant in such a case is without authority of law and contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. Neither can such a party be imprisoned for contempt of court in refusing to obey such an order, as there is no means of putting a party in contempt for disobeying orders or decrees for the mere payment of money. Coughlin v. Ehler, 30 Mo. 235.

Again, in Elmer v. Elmer, 150 Pa. 205, where, upon petition and affidavit of a wife that no alimony had been paid to her, and praying process to compel the payment of the same, the court issued a f. fa. and a ca. sa. for the collection of the same, and subsequently refused to set the same aside, it was held that a f. fa. or attachment was the proper process under the Pennsylvania act of 1854, § 1, but that ca. sa. was not the proper remedy as it was not authorized. In this case, however, the constitutionality of the imprisonment was not directly raised, neither was the point that imprisonment for debt was abolished in that state by statute passed upon, the court merely holding the arrest unauthorized.

And where upon a motion for an attachment for the nonpayment of alimony, the libellant suggested that the proper remedy was a ca. sa. under which he could be discharged upon complying with the provisions of the insolvency laws, the court stated that if it were to award such a writ it would only raise the question whether the court had power to enforce a decree for alimony by attachment, and, the Pennsylvania act of 1842, which abolished imprisonment for debt, excepting proceedings for contempt, to enforce civil remedies, the proceedings by way of attachment for contempt were legal. Wallen v. Wallen, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 664.

Upon the question of contempt proceedings to compel the payment of alimony, see note to Staples v. Staples (Wis.) 24 L. R. A. 433.

e. In bastardy.

The question whether the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the reputed father of an illegitimate child and those who prosecute him, so as to create a debt within the meaning of the constitutional provisions abolishing imprisonment for debt so as to exempt such father from attachment and imprisonment for nonpayment of the amount ordered to be paid by him, has often been raised when it has been sought to punish such father by imprisonment.

In most cases, however, the courts have held that such a relation is not created thereby, and that the liability of the father is not a debt within the mean-the object in the title, and the manner of its accomplishment in the body of the act. Luehrman v. Shelby County Tazing Dist. 2 Lea, 425; Ex parte Griffin, 88 Tenn. 547; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 494. A late author says: "In regard to the particularity required in the title of a statute, it is the accepted doctrine that it is sufficient if the title described with adequate clearness the general purpose and scope of the act. It need not amount to an index or epitome of the statute, nor is it necessary that the title should set forth the modes, means, or instrumentalities provided in the law for its administration and enforcement." Black, Const. Law, § 107. It cannot be truly said, therefore, that the title under consideration does not express the subject of legislation because it fails to indicate the paring of the state Constitutions, so as to exempt him from imprisonment.

In Iowa, however, the courts have reached a contrary conclusion, holding the amount to be paid by such father to be in the nature of a debt within the provisions of the state Constitution.

The constitutional inhibition of imprisonment for debt is not infringed by the imprisonment of the reputed father of a child, if he fails to execute the bond for the support of the child required of him upon conviction. He is not imprisoned for the failure to pay a debt, but for his failure to perform a duty enforced in the name of the state for the protection of the state. Paulk v. State, 52 Ala. 427, 429.

And the relation of debtor and creditor cannot be said to exist between the reputed father of an illegitimate child and the people who prosecute him, to support such child, and therefore the amount ordered to be paid by him for such support cannot be said to be a debt within the provisions of the constitutional prohibition. Rich v. People, 66 Ill. 513, 515.

In Indiana there would seem to have been a conflict of opinion upon the question, but the later cases have overruled the earlier ones, which held such imprisonment to be for a mere debt.

Where a bond was executed in a bastardy case to save the defendant from imprisonment, it was stated that if the prosecution for bastardy was not founded on a criminal or appeal statute, it was simply for the enforcement of a civil obligation, and the bond was executed to escape imprisonment for debt, which was a proceeding to enforce a mere civil obligation for the nonperformance of which a defendant could not be imprisoned. Byers v. State, Hutchison, 20 Ind. 47, 48; State, McArthur, v. Evans, 19 Ind. 92.

But it has been held that the provisions of the Indiana statutes relating to bastardy proceedings are not in conflict with the provisions of the Indiana Bill of Rights, § 22, which prohibits imprisonment for debt, and therefore such act is constitutional, and the statute relating to the discharge of insolvent debtors has no application to a party imprisoned under such acts. Lower v. Wallick, 25 Ind. 68.

So, in Ex parte Teague, 41 Ind. 278, the court held that the opinion expressed with regard to the constitutionality of imprisonment of a defendant under the bastardy acts in the case of Lower v. Wallick, supra, was correct, and that such imprisonment was legal, and that the fact that the defendant was unable to replevy the demand did not entitle him to a discharge, the court stating that the question should no longer be regarded as open and unsettled in that state. To the same effect State, Billman, v. Hamilton, 33 Ind. 602; Ex parte Voltz, 37 Ind. 237.

In the above case the court looked upon the case of Byers v. State, Hutchison, supra, which held so much of the bastardy act as provided for the imprisonment of the defendant unconstitutional and void, was to be taken as overruled by the court in the case of Lower v. Wallick, supra, and subsequent cases.

And the same construction was placed upon the statute and the proceedings thereunder in McIlvain v. State, Emery, 37 Ind. 602, the court stating 34 L. R. A.

that it did not consider the question an open one, and cited the earlier cases of Lower v. Wallick, and Ex parte Teague, supra; Reynolds v. Lamont, 55 Ind. 308; and Turner v. Wilson, 49 Ind. 581,—in support of its theory.

A judgment rendered against the father of an illegitimate child for the payment of money for its support and maintenance is not a debt within the meaning of the constitutional provision abolishing imprisonment for debt. Turner v. Wilson, supra.

In Turner v. Wilson, supra, which followed the holding of the court in the previous cases of Lower v. Wallick, State, Billman, v. Hamilton, Ex parte Voltz, Ex parte Teague, and Reynolds v. Lamont, supra, there was, however, a dissenting opinion by Chief Justice Pettit, who held that the provisions of the bastardy act, which provide that after judgment for money due had been rendered the defendant should be imprisoned until he paid or replevied the judgment, was a palpable violation of both the letter and spirit of the 22d section of article 1 of the Constitution, the ingredient of fraud not being in the judgment for bastardy, and upon the further ground that a judgment for money was a debt no matter what the cause of action was, whether tort or contract, the judgment being a debt of record, and therefore the debtor could not be imprisoned to enforce or coerce the payment of it in cases of fraud.

So, it has been held that a proceeding by way of imprisonment of a defendant in cases arising under the Indiana statute relating to bastardy, is a means of enforcing the court's order and a part of the remedy, and not merely a contempt of court. Reynolds v. Lamont, supra.

So, in Kansas the courts have held that the order calling upon the father to support the child do not make the money ordered to be paid for the support of such child a debt in the ordinary acceptation of the terms, and that therefore the constitutional provisions do not apply. Re Wheeler, 24 Kan. 90.

Again, in Nebraska the sum charged against a petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus for the support of an illegitimate child has been held not to be a debt in the sense in which that word is used in the Nebraska Constitution, and therefore the imprisonment of the father to enforce such judgment is not contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. Ex parte Cottrell, 13 Neb. 193, 195.

In the above case, the question was whether proceedings in bastardy for the maintenance of an illegitimate child were in the nature of a civil action, and so within § 20 of art. 1 of the Constitution of that state, which provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud. The court held that such proceedings were not within the provisions of the Constitution, and that therefore the father might be committed to prison for nonpayment of the amount ordered to be paid by him for the maintenance of the child.

So, in Ex parte Donahoe, 24 Neb. 69, the court upheld the constitutionality of the Nebraska statute relating to the maintenance and support of illegitimate children, and of the imprisonment of the father for noncomplying with the order of the court, upon the ground that such imprisonment ticular provisions to be made. Nor can it be successfully contended that it fails to express the subject because of the general terms used for that purpose. Generality of title is not objectionable, so long as it is not made to cover legislation incongruous in itself, or which, by fair intendment, may not be considered as having a necessary or proper connection with the subject expressed. Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th

ed. p. 174; Cannon v. Mathes, 8 Helsk. 519; Fraser v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 140; State v. Wilson, 12 Lea, 247; Greene v. State, 15 Lea, 711.

2. The title does not embrace more than one subject. That it names its proposed beneficiaries in three classes, as hotel keepers, inn keepers, and boarding-house keepers, does not make it double; and yet there is no other was not an imprisonment for debt, but to enforce the statutory penalty under a conviction of bastardy involving a private injury and a public wrong to be compounded only by the assent of the complaining witness, or satisfied by compliance with the terms of the statute, such imprisonment not being in aid of an execution for debt, such as could be discharged under § 557 of the Code of Civil Procedure of that state.

And the Ohio courts have held that the proceedings under the Ohio statute, whereby the father of an illegitimate child may be imprisoned to enforce the sentence and order of the court, with respect to the child's maintenance, are not in conflict with § 15, art. 1, of the Constitution of that state, for the reason that the liability sought to be enforced is not founded upon a contract, express or implied, but originates in the wrongful act of the defendant, and therefore the imprisonment of the defendant in such a case is not contrary to the Constitution. Musser v. Stewart, 21 Ohio St. 353, 356.

In State v. Brewer, 38 S. C. 233, 19 L. R. A. 362, the question raised was whether a person who has been convicted of bastardy, who fails or refuses to enter into the recognizance as required by the law of that state for the support of the child, can, after execution against his property has been returned wholly or partially unsatisfied, be arrested under a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, and committed to jail, subject, however, to the privileges accorded to insolvent debtors arrested under a similar writ. The court held that he might be so proceeded against, and was entitled to the same privileges, and that the provisions of the South Carolina statute relating to such proceedings did not violate the provisions of the Constitution which prohibited imprisonment for debt.

But in Holmes v. State, 2 G. Greene, 501, 503, where the question was whether, since the article of the Iowa Constitution abolishes imprisonment for debt in all civil actions, except in cases of fraud, a prosecution under the bastardy act was a civil or a criminal proceeding, the court stated that such proceedings were not in the nature of a criminal action, and that therefore the provisions of the Constitution applied, and for that reason the defendant was not liable to be imprisoned for debt. The provisions of the Constitution adopted since the bastardy act was passed repealing such act so far as it related to imprisonment.

In the case of State v. Brewer, supra, the court in its opinion cites the case of Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 623, as an authority in favor of the theory that such orders are not debts within the terms of the constitutional inhibition, but this case is not a direct authority upon the point as it deals with the question of the imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine imposed upon a constable for refusing to execute and return a writ of sequestration issued in a civil cause, which case will be found under head IV. a, of this note.

As to prosecutions for bastardy, see brief in Moore v. State, Vernon (Kan.), 17 L. R. A. 714.

1. Against officers of the court.

The objection has, in many cases, been raised that it is contrary to the Constitution to imprison an officer of the court for neglect in obeying an order of the court, especially where such order directs the payment of money; but the courts have generally supported the validity of such proceedings.

Imprisonment under an attachment for contempt to compel obedience by an officer of the court to a lawful order to pay over money which he has collected in the course of his official or professional duty is not imprisonment for debt, but is sound disciplinary dealing with an unruly member of the forensic household, and the imprisonment of such a person is not contrary to a Constitution. Smith v. McLendon, 59 Ga. 523, 527.

In Bogart v. Electrical Supply Co., 23 Blatchf. 552, it was held that the statutes prohibiting imprisonment for debt had no application to the case of an attorney required by the order of the court to pay costs to which his client had been unjustly subjected, upon his application for relief to substitute a new attorney which resulted in a reference to a master, and a decision that the attorney was not entitled to further compensation than he had already received.

Imprisonment under an attachment for contempt to compel obedience by an officer of the court, such as an attorney to a lawful order to pay over money which he has collected in the course of his official or professional duty, is not imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the Georgia Constitution, and in such case the court treats him, not as a mere debtor who will not pay, but as a domestic of the law who refuses to obey his master. Smith v. McLendon, supra.

The neglect of an attorney to pay over money collected for his client is a case of "neglect" in "professional employment" within the meaning of the exception contained in the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842, abolishing imprisonment for debt, and therefore such an attorney may be arrested and imprisoned under a ca. sa. even in an action in assumpsit. Wills v. Kane, 2 Grant, Cas. 60.

In the above case, however, there was a dissenting opinion by Justice Woodward, wherein he held that such an attorney could not be so arrested, as the act of 1842, as properly understood, exempted from imprisonment defendants in actions of assumpsit.

And in Cotton v. Sharpstein, 14 Wis. 223, 230, 80 Am. Dec. 774, it was held that the fact that the applicant for the writ of mandamus was an attorney created no exception to the doctrine laid down by the court in the prior case of Re Mowry, 13 Wis. 53, supra, III. a. In this case the attorney had unlawfully converted a certificate of sale to his own use, and a body execution had been issued against him under a judgment in an action for such wrongful conversion, the liability in such an action resting in tort and not upon contract.

In Chaffe v. Handy, 36 La. Ann. 32, 33, where the defendant had been proceeded against under the Louisiana act of February 10, 1841 (art. 730 of the Code of Practice), which provides that whenever a judgment is rendered against a sheriff or other public officer for money by him or them received in his or their official capacity, and converted to his or their own use, or not accounted for, and a writ of fi. fa. is returned, "no property found," a capias ad satisfaciendum may be taken out and executed against such defendant or defendants, it was held that the remedy so granted by the statute, ground, even so plausible as that, upon which to rest the insistence that it embraces more than one subject. The number of persons or classes of persons or kinds of business to be affected by a particular act has no bearing upon the question as to whether the title embraces one subject or more. The subject expressed in the title may be single, and still authorize legislation for every individual in the state; as in case of general assessment acts, etc.

3. Does the body of the act embrace more than one subject? Though not raised in the motion to quash, this is a question to be considered in determining the validity or invalidity of the act. If it should be answered in the affirmative, then the act is void, without reference to the questions raised in that motion. The 1st section declares that certain fraudulent acts, to the prejudice of hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers, shall be misdemeanors; the 2d section declares what shall constitute prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent in prosecution for those acts; and the 3d section authorizes the sale of baggage or other property left by defaulting patrons of hotels, inns, and boarding houses. The 1st and 2d sections combined, are intended to prevent and suppress, by criminal punishment, the fraudulent acts therein enumerated; and the 3d section is intended to reduce the injury resulting from such acts as much as possible by providing a speedy civil remedy. They all tend to the same end, and facilitate the same purpose. They are consistent parts of one general scheme, promotive of the object and germane to the subject expressed in the title, namely, protection to hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers. This being true, the act, though consisting of different parts, embraces but one subject in legal contemplation. Sutherland, in the 98d section of his work on Statutory Construction, says: "Where the title of a legislative act expressed a general subject or purpose which is single, all matters which are naturally and reasonably connected with it, and all measures which will or may facilitate the accomplishment of the purpose so stated, are properly included in the act, and are germane to its title." Chief Justice Nicholson, speaking for this court in the case of Cannon v. Mathes, said: "It is obvious, therefore, that the true rule of the construction, as fully established by the authorities, is, that any provision of the act, directly or indirectly relating to the subject expressed in the title, and having a natural connection thereto, and not foreign thereto, should be held to be embraced in it." 9 Heisk. 523. That rule, though expressed in somewhat different phraseology, has

Although created immediately after the abolition of imprisonment for debt, was explicitly provided for, not only in article 730 of the Code of Practice, but was also to be found sparsim in two sections of the Revised Statutes of 1870, namely §§ 3444, 3616, which clearly indicates an intention on the part of the legislature to retain that mode of coercion of payment against delinquent officials as a conspicuous feature of the Louisiana legislation.

In State v. Nicholson, 37 Md. 1, the defendant, a tax collector, was indicted under Md. act 1872, chap. 329, relating to the duty of tax collectors and making a defaulter upon conviction subject to imprisonment in the penitentiary, unless the amount be paid, and it was contended upon demurrer that such act was unconstitutional, for reason that it was in conflict with the Constitution of the state which abolishes imprisonment for debt. The court held that there was a broad distinction between imprisonment for debt within the meaning of the Constitution and imprisonment for a breach of duty on the part of a public officer, although such breach of duty might be the neglect or refusal on his part to pay money received by him for the use of the state, the court stating that public officers were by the common law indictable for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and although the Constitution abolishes imprisonment for debt, that in no manner interfered with the power of the legislature to punish such offenses by imprisonment or otherwise as the public interest might require.

IX. Due process of law.

The question has been raised whether the imprisonment of a debtor is not an infringement of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, § 1 of which provides, inter alia: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In Gates v. M'Daniel, 3 Port. (Ala.) 356, 359, where the defendant was arrested in the first instance without any order or rule to show cause why he should not be committed to prison, the court in holding such imprisonment contrary to the constitutional provisions relating to due process of law, stated that there would seem to be a distinction between an execution directed in the first instance against the body of the defendant under which he is imprisoned and deprived of his liberty, and a case in which the practice is not to direct a seizure of the body in the first instance, but to give notice of a motion against the party charged as with the contempt, that he shall stand committed, wherein, if he is not prepared to defend, the court usually gives a day to show cause, and then, after hearing both sides, decides as to the guilt of the party, and makes its order thereon.

The Iowa act, chap. 126, Rev. Stat. 1880, providing for imprisonment for contempt of an order in proceedings to aid execution requiring a debtor to pay over money when made by a county judge not sitting as the court, was declared unconstitutional by reason of its violating §§ 9 and 10 of art. 1 of the Constitution, which provides that the right to trial by jury shall remain inviolate, and that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Ex parte Grace, 12 Iowa, 208, 79 Am. Dec. 529.

So, in Re Roberts, 4 Kan. App. 292, it was held that the General Statutes of that state of 1889, §§ 4572, 4573, relating to the arrest and imprisonment of a judgment debtor upon the affidavit of the plaintiff, his attorney, or agent alone, were unconstitutional and void, as they violated art. 14, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, the debtor being imprisoned merely upon the affidavit of the plaintiff filed after judgment, without any provision for a hearing or determination of the question of fraud.

In upholding the imprisonment of the debtor in the case, Re Burt, 56 Minn. 397, the court stated that when an insolvent debtor had taken the initiative under the insolvent law, and sought its benefit by making an assignment in the expectation that he might be released from his debts, and he swore that he had assigned all of his property and turned it been applied in several subsequent cases some of which we cite: Frazier v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 158; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 488; Illinois O. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 498. The act construed and adjudged to embrace but one subject in the last-named cause provides (1) that any person, corporation, company, lessee, or agent owning or operating any railroad in this state shall be liable for any injury done to live stock upon an unfenced track; (2) that three householders may be appointed to assess the damage resulting from such injury; (3) that the appraisalment by such appraisers shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of damage in any action for such injury; (4) that the defendant in such action shall be liable also for a reasonable attorney's fee for plaintiff's counsel; (5) that the master of the section of road on which the injury was done shall give notice thereof to the owner, his agent, or the nearest magistrate; and (6) that any section master who knowingly fails to give such notice shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Acts 1891, chap. 101. That act, like this one, it will be observed, treats of both criminal and civil remedies, and declares what facts, when established, shall constitute prima facie evidence (of amount of civil liability under the one act, and of the intent to commit the offense prohibited by the other); and, in addition, that act contains three provisions in excess of those contained in this one, in consequence of which it is to that extent more comprehensive in its scope and purpose. Yet that act was, in the case cited, held to embrace but one subject; and it has been applied and enforced as a valid law in subsequent cases. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Russell, 92 Tenn. 108; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hughes, 94 Tenn. 450; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Stonecipher, 95 Tenn. 811. The subject of legislation is single in each of the two acts, though the liabilities declared therein are both criminal and civil, and the remedies prescribed are more than one.

4. Passing next to the third ground of the motion to quash, the inquiry is whether or not the act is in violation of the 8d clause of § 17, art. 2, of the Constitution, which requires that "all acts which repeal, revive, or amend former laws shall recite in their caption or otherwise the title or substance of the law repealed, revived, or amended." The word "caption," as here used, is synonymous with "title;" and the word "otherwise" refers to the "body" of the repealing, reviving, or amending act. Shelton v. State, 96 Tenn. 521; State v. Runnels, 93 Tenn. 322; Ransome v. State, 91 Tenn. 718. Neither in its caption nor otherwise (title nor body) does the act before us recite either "the over to the assignee, when in fact he had not done so, it was not depriving him of his property or liberty without due process of law to compel him to disclose what other property, if any, he had concealed, and in default of his doing so punish him for contempt of court. If the assignor could in such cases defy the law and the courts, he could retain large sums of money after making the fraudulent assignment, and the insolvency law would become an instrument for the perpetration of fraud and swindling instead of one intended for the equal protection of all.

See also Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 53, supra, VII.; Ez parte Murray, 35 Fed. Rep. 496, supra, VIII. d.

X. Ne exeat.

In West v. Walker, 6 Blackf. 420, a defendant in chancery, who was a prisoner on a writ of ne exeat to secure the performance of a pecuniary demand, was discharged from custody on motion under the Indiana act of 1842, abolishing imprisonment for debt, no fraud being shown.

But the constitutional inhibition against imprisonment for debt as found in art. 1, § 16, Wis. Const., which provides, no person shall be imprisoned for debt arising out of law founded on a contract, express or implied, was held not to apply to an arrest by virtue of a writ of ne exeat, which is in the nature of equitable bail and issued only by the special order of the court when the party against whom it is asked is about to leave the jurisdiction of the court, so that the decree of the court will be ineffectual and thus prevent the person going from the state until he gives surety for his appearance, and it is not therefore imprisonment for debt within the proper meaning and sense of the words. Dean v. Smith, 23 Wis. 483, 498, 90 Am. Dec. 198.

See also Malcolm v. Andrews, 68 Ill. 100, 104, supra, III. d.

XI. Debts owing to the United States.

The state legislature has full constitutional authority to pass laws whereby insolvent debtors shall be released or protected from arrest or imprisonment of their persons, on any action for any debt or demand due by them. Beers v. Houghton, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 323, 360, 9 L. ed. 145, 157.

34 L. R. A.

The act of Congress of the 28th of February, 1890, adopts the state law with reference to the imprisonment of debtors for the nonpayment of debt. Gray v. Munroe, 1 McLean, 523, 523.

The imprisonment of private debtors sued in courts of the United States is to be governed by the laws and policy of each state wherein the execution issues, but with respect to those who are debtors to the United States it is to be governed by the united and fixed laws of Congress. Moan v. Wilmarth, 3 Woodb. & M. 369.

Where a debtor after being sued in the circuit court took the benefit of the Massachusetts insolvent laws, it was held that he was, under the acts of Congress, entitled to have execution issued against his property alone, and could not be imprisoned for debt, the surrender by the debtor of his property being one of the abolitions under certain "conditions and restrictions" provided for in the Massachusetts statutes. Ibid.

In United States v. Hewes, Crabbe, 307, the defendant sought to be discharged from imprisonment by virtue of an act of Congress the 28th day of February, 1890, entitled, "An Act to Abolish Imprisonment for Debt in Certain Cases," which enacted "that no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any state on process issuing out of a court of the United States, where, by the laws of such state, imprisonment for debt has been abolished; and where, by the laws of a state, imprisonment for debt shall be allowed, under certain conditions and restrictions, the same conditions and restrictions shall be applicable to the process issuing out of the court of the United States; and the same proceedings shall be had therein, as are adopted in the courts of such state," it was held that persons indebted to the United States were not to be considered as included in the provisions of the statute, for the reason that the United States could not be bound by such general words, and that in order to bind the sovereignty it must be expressly included or there must be a necessary implication to so include such power.

See also State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. 20, 28 supra, II. a.

R. W.

title or substance" of any former law. No former law is mentioned or designated in any way in any part of that act; hence the act is necessarily void if that constitutional requirement is applicable to any part of it. That requirement does not apply, however, to all legislation. It relates alone to those acts which expressly repeal, revive, or amend former laws; and does not embrace implied amendments (Shelton v. State, 96 Tenn. 521), nor implied repeals (Home Ins. Co. v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 4 Lea, 644; Maney v. State, 6 Lea, 221; Knoxville v. Lewis, 12 Lea, 181; Ballentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea, 638; Poe v. State, 85 Tenn. 495; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 507; Hunter v. Memphis, 93 Tenn. 571), nor implied revivora. If any former law is amended or revived by this act, that result is accomplished by implication alone; there is no express amendment or revivor. No word indicating a purpose to amend or revive any former law is used in any part of the act. With equal propriety and certainty, it may be said that no express repeal was intended, and that any repeal actually effected was by implication simply. The words of the 4th section "that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed," do not make it an expressly repealing act. Really, that section adds nothing of virtue or meaning to the act, and takes nothing from it. All prior conflicting laws and parts of laws were impliedly repealed by the former section of the act; and, as a consequence, no such laws or parts of laws were left for the 4th section to operate upon. That section was therefore useless, and of no force or effect whatever. It had no office to perform, and performed none. Its presence in the bill did not make the act a repealing law or a non-repealing law; and it will not be regarded for the purpose of vitiating the law, nor will it be permitted to have that effect. Such provision is of frequent occurrence in the concluding sections of legislative acts. It has generally appeared, and as often been disregarded, in those cases in which the court has held that the constitutional requirement last mentioned did not apply, and that repeals were wrought by implication. See Acts 1879, chap. 84, § 13, and Home Ins. Co. v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 4 Lea, 644; Acts 1879, chap. 186, § 4, and Poe v. State, 85 Tenn. 495; Acts 1891, chap. 101, § 8, and Illinois C. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 507; Acts 1893, chap. 89, § 12, and Hunter v. Memphis, 93 Tenn. 571; Acts 1881, chap. 171, § 88, and Knoxville v. Lewis, 12 Lea, 181. It may be repeated that this act does not expressly repeal, revive, or amend any former law; therefore, it is not obnoxious to the 8d clause of § 17 of art. 2 of the Constitution. If invalid at all, it must be so for some reason or reasons yet to be considered.

5. Is it invalid for the fourth and last reason assigned in the motion to quash? That is to say, does it violate § 18 of article 1 of the Constitution, which declares that "the legislature shall pass no law authorizing imprisonment for debt?" It does not in terms provide imprisonment or any other specific punishment; it only declares that certain things shall be misdemeanors and receive punishment as such. That is sufficient, however, to authorize imprisonment; for misdemeanors whose punishment is not specifically prescribed by the law creating them are punishable by fine and imprisonment,—one or both, in the discretion of the court. 1 Bishop, Crim. L. § 719; Atchison v. State, 13 Lea, 275. But that does not decide the whole question. The act authorizes imprisonment. That much is certain. But is that imprisonment for debt or for something else? To determine that, the act must be construed; and, in ascertaining its true construction, all intendments will be made and all doubts resolved in favor of that interpretation which will support the act, and avoid conflict with the Constitution. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 832; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 218; Black, Const. Law, § 28; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 673, 674; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Falls, 90 Tenn. 469; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 507; Ellis v. State, 93 Tenn. 93. Applying that rule, the act assailed in this case will not be held to impose or authorize imprisonment for debt if any other reasonable construction can be placed upon the language used therein. The threefold provision is that any person (1) who shall procure the accommodations mentioned "with intent to defraud" the person furnishing them "out of the value or price" thereof, or (2) who shall obtain credit for such accommodations "by the use of any false pretense or device, or by fraudulently depositing" baggage or other property, or (3) who, having obtained credit, "shall surreptitiously remove his or her baggage or property," shall be "guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished accordingly." § 1. Or, stating it more briefly still, the act provides that any person who fraudulently obtains such accommodations, or who fraudulently removes his baggage or other property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. The offense consists, not in the creation of a debt, nor in its nonpayment, but rather in the fraud through which credit may be procured or payment evaded. The latter, and not the former, is the thing for which punishment is to be inflicted. As well said by one of the attorneys for the state, the legislative intent was "to punish the debtor for his fraud, and not for his debt." Honest debtors are not within the act. It relates to those alone who shall intentionally pursue a certain course of fraudulent conduct; and that course of fraudulent conduct intentionally pursued constitutes the offense for which punishment is prescribed, and without which punishment will not be inflicted. Without intentional fraud no offense is committed, no penalty incurred. The intention of the legislature, as we get it from the words and the tenor of the act, was to authorize punishment, including imprisonment, not for debt, but alone for particular intentional frauds, whereby the offender may obtain the property of his victim—for temporary use in case of lodging, and for absolute consumption in case of food—without compensation, or whereby, after obtaining such accommodation, he would defeat the landlord's lien upon his baggage. To our minds, this is not only a fair and reasonable construction of the act, but the most easy and natural one that can be given the language employed. The manifest object was to protect the property and the lien of the landlord against those persons who would, by intentional fraud, wrongfully use or consume the one or defeat the other; and, to make that protection effectual, the offender is subjected to punishment for his fraud, whether practised in the wrongful use or consumption of the landlord's property, or in the removal of his own property upon which the landlord has a lien. In either case the landlord has an interest in property, which the state, as a matter of public policy or of individual right, may well protect by the passage and enforcement of a penal statute, such as that before us. Of like nature are all our laws against false pretenses (Mill & V. Code, §§ 5468-5472, inclusive), and against the removal of mortgaged property (Id. § 5626, sub-sec. 8). Statutes similar to that impeached in this case seem to have been passed in many of the states, including Alabama, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, and Ohio; but, so far as we are aware, the question as to whether or not such legislation violates the usual constitutional prohibition of imprisonment for debt has been considered by only one court of last resort. Hearing a case on appeal from a judgment refusing to discharge the petitioner on a writ of habeas corpus, the supreme court of Alabama said: "There is nothing in the point raised in the application that the act 'for the protection of landlords, proprietors, or keepers of hotels and boarding houses' is violative of §§ 21 and 28 of art. 1 of the Constitution, which forbids imprisonment for debt, or the making of laws giving any special privileges or immunities. The act is in line with our other statutes against false pretenses, frauds, cheats, acts to injure, and the like. One who violates the act is imprisoned, not for the debt he owes the proprietor, and not to make him pay it, but to punish him for a wrong he has perpetrated, which is made a crime. And this is no more of a special privilege to the hotel keeper than the statute against burglary from a store or a dwelling is to the merchant who owns the store, or to the owner of the dwelling. Habeas corpus denied." Ex parte King, 103 Ala. 182.

6. The 2d section of the act does not impair the right of trial by an impartial jury, as guaranteed by §§ 6, 8, 9, art. 1, of the Constitution. It simply provides that proof of certain things therein enumerated shall be "prima facie" evidence of fraudulent intent. The language used indicates no purpose to abridge the right of trial by jury; nor can it be held, by any proper construction, to have that effect. A person arraigned under the 1st section of the act is left to his trial by an impartial jury, and is allowed the presumption of innocence as fully as in any other case. That right and that presumption are in no degree affected by the 2d section. Neither can be impaired by a mere provision that proof of certain facts shall be taken as prima facie evidence of a fraudulent intent; and yet that is the sum total of the 2d section. It cannot be true that a declaration by the legislature or a holding by the courts that proof of certain facts is prima facie or presumptive evidence of one ingredient of an offense, as of guilty intent, is an invasion of the peculiar province of the jury, or an impairment of the defendant's sacred right of jury trial. In every case the defendant is entitled to trial by an impartial jury and to the benefit of a presumption of innocence; but that right and that presumption can no more preclude a presumption of guilty intent from sufficient proof adduced than they can preclude the introduction of proof altogether. The courts have long held that juries may and should be instructed that proof of recent possession of stolen property, unexplained, affords prima facie or presumptive evidence of guilt (1 Greenl. Ev. § 84; McGuire v. State, 6 Baxt. 621; Wilcox v. State, 3 Heisk. 118; Hughes v. State, 8 Humph. 75; Fields v. State, 6 Coldw. 526; Boyer v. State, 93 Tenn. 220); and that, upon a charge of murder, proof of the killing, without more, raises a presumption of malice (1 Greenl. Ev. § 84; Coffee v. State, 3 Yerg. 283, 24 Am. Dec. 570; Draper v. State, 4 Baxt. 246; Gray v. State, Id. 331; Witt v. State, 6 Coldw. 5; Epperson v. State, 5 Lea, 291). The power of the legislature to, prescribe rules of evidence, and to declare what shall be evidence, is practically unrestrained, and legislation, to those ends, will be upheld so long as it is impartial and uniform, and does not "preclude a party from exhibiting his rights." Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 452-454. In the case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Orider, 91 Tenn. 498, 499, this court so held, and sustained as constitutional a provision (Acts 1891, chap. 101, § 4) that the report of appraisers as to value of live stock killed, and as to amount of damages to live stock injured, by moving train upon unfenced track, "shall be prima facie evidence" of such value or damage in the event of suit therefor. That was a civil case, dealing with a provision as to evidence of civil liability. It is true; but that fact does not avoid the force of the decision as a precedent in this case. A man can no more be deprived of his property than of his life or liberty by unconstitutional legislation. Const. art. 1, § 8. It is not an unusual or prohibited thing for the legislature to declare in penal statutes what particular wrongful acts, when proved, shall constitute certain criminal offenses, or the ingredients thereof. One striking instance of the rightful exercise of that power is found in Mill. & V. Code, § 5849, which is as follows: "Every murder perpetrated by means of poison, lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, or committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or larceny, is murder in the first degree." When the fact that murder, as defined in the preceding section (5348), has been committed, is established by proof, and it is further shown that the offense was "perpetrated by the means of poison," or by "lying in wait," or in any other one of the several ways mentioned, then the offender is guilty of "murder in the first degree,"—so declared by the legislature. Thus, the facts that shall constitute one of the highest crimes known to our law are set forth in a legislative act, whose validity is unquestioned and unquestionable, and under which scores of unfortunate men have been executed or consigned to imprisonment for life. Would that act have been any more subject to adverse criticism on constitutional grounds had it merely declared that proof of the killing, by the means or in the manner mentioned, should be prima facie or presumptive evidence of an intent to commit murder in the first degree? We apprehend not.

7. It should be added, by way of construction, that the clause "or that the party refused to pay for such food, lodging, or accommodation, on demand," used in the 2d section to describe one of the acts which, when proved, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent, does not refer to or include an honest refusal—a mere failure or declination—to pay on demand. Standing alone, the words used would naturally embrace every refusal; but when they are considered in connection with other parts of the act, and in their true relation thereto, it is manifest that only a fraudulent refusal or evasion was in the legislative mind when that clause was introduced. Every other clause of that section, and every clause of the 1st section, by express terms, relates to fraudulent conduct, and to that alone as the matter for investigation and punishment in the courts. Only fraudulent acts are contemplated and embraced in the first and second sections.

Reverse and remand.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Charles D. RATHBONE

James C. HOPPER et al.

(.....Kan.....)

1. The term "municipal corporations," employed in the title of chapter 50 of the Laws of 1879, includes townships; and the provisions of that act authorizing the refunding of township indebtedness are not in conflict with § 16 of art. 2 of the Constitution.

2. That act authorizes the issue of negotiable bonds.

(Allen, J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(July 11, 1890.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel the levy of a tax for the payment of interest upon certain bonds which had been issued by Forrester township. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gleed, Ware, & Gleed, for plaintiff:

The title of a law need not be a duplicate of the law itself; all that is necessary is, that such a title should be given to a bill that the localities or persons affected thereby may be apprised by the title and have an opportunity to investigate, and if necessary, or deemed proper, to oppose the bill.

The mere generality of the title to an act does not render it objectionable, so long as the act has but one general object, and the title is such that neither the members of the legislature nor the people to be affected can be misled.

Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89.

The township may build bridges, vote bonds to railroads, may establish and maintain a free library and reading rooms, public parks and cemeteries, and they may levy a tax for the purpose of paying their indebtedness, expenses, and bonds. It is in Kansas a municipal corporation.

Pleasant View Twp. v. Shawgo, 54 Kan. 742;

*Headnotes by JOHNSTON, J.

Ralston v. Dodge City, M. & T. R. Co. 53 Kan. 337; Center Twp. v. Hunt, 16 Kan. 430; Alma Twp. v. Kast, 37 Kan. 433; Salt Creek Twp. v. King Iron Bridge & Mfg. Co. 51 Kan. 526; Riley v. Finney County Twp. 54 Kan. 463.

A municipal corporation is a subordinate branch of the domestic government of a state.

Nashville v. Ray, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 475, 22 L. ed. 168, East Tennessee University v. Knoxville, 6 Baxt. 171; Pirley v. Western P. R. Co. 33 Cal. 186, 91 Am. Dec. 623; Horton v. Mobile School Comrs. 43 Ala. 607; Winspear v. Holman Dist. Twp. 37 Iowa, 542; Williams v. Nottawa Twp. 104 U. S. 209, 26 L. ed. 719; Doon Dist. Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 373, 35 L. ed. 1047; Indiana, Stanton, v. Glover, 153 U. S. 513, 39 L. ed. 243; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 40 L. ed. 301.

A municipal corporation, in its broader sense, is a body politic, such as a state, and each of the governmental subdivisions of the state, such as counties, parishes, townships, hundreds, New England "towns," and school districts, as well as cities and incorporated towns, villages, and boroughs. Every one of these is properly susceptible of the general appellation.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Municipal Corporations, p. 958.

The distinction between municipal corporations proper and municipal corporations quasi is one of great convenience, and furnishes a key to many wise decisions, but public corporations quasi are nevertheless in the fullest and strictest sense municipal corporations.

West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 69 Fed. Rep. 943.

The refunding bonds were valid.

Ashley v. Presque Isle County Supers. 60 Fed. Rep. 55, 16 U. S. App. 656; Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Sav. 58 Fed. Rep. 935, 16 U. S. App. 545; Cummins v. Doon Dist. Twp. 42 Fed. Rep. 644; National Bank of Commerce v. Grenada, 41 Fed. Rep. 87, Portland Sav. Bank v. Evansville, 25 Fed. Rep. 389; Sinton v. Carter County, 23 Fed. Rep. 535; Chandler v. Attica, 18 Fed. Rep. 299; Ballou v. Jasper County, 8 Fed. Rep. 630.

NOTE.—As to town bonds, see also Brownell v. Greenwich (N.Y.) 4 L. R. A. 635; and State, Charles v. L. R. A.

ton, C. & C. R. Co., v. Whitesides (S. C.) 3 L. R. A. 777.

Messrs. Buchan, Freeman, & Porter, for defendants:

A township is not a municipal corporation. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 12, 20; Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 2-6; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 952; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109; Finch v. Toledo Bd. of Edu. 80 Ohio St. 87, 27 Am. Rep. 414; Askeo v. Hale County, 54 Ala. 639, 25 Am. Rep. 730; Harris v. School Dist. No. 10, 28 N. H. 61; Fourth School Dist. v. Wood, 18 Mass. 192; Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 85; Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23; Eikenberry v. Bazaar Twp. 22 Kan. 561, 31 Am. Rep. 198; Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255; Cooley, Torts, 622; Waltham v. Kemper, 55 Ill. 846, 8 Am. Rep. 652; Russell v. Decon County, 2 T. R. 671; Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124; Freeland v. Stillman, 49 Kan. 197.

A statute or a title to a statute is to be so construed as to give sense and meaning to every part.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 70, 71.

In the construction of a statute the words "municipal corporation" are not, as a definition, broad enough to include counties, townships, and school districts.

Freeman v. Stillman, supra.

The Constitution has said that the title must be an index to the law, and the court may not sanction, as a valid enactment, any part of the statute to which the finger of the title does not point.

State v. Brown, 38 Kan. 390; Re Wood, 84 Kan. 645; State v. Bankers & M. Mut. Ben. Assn. 23 Kan. 499; Swygas v. Britton, 17 Kan. 627; Shepherd v. Helmers, 23 Kan. 505; Sedgwick County Comrs. v. Bailey, 18 Kan. 600.

The original bonds voted in aid of the Ness County Sugar Mill Company were absolutely void.

Bonds issued in aid of a private enterprise are invalid.

Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 23 Kan. 745; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Iola, 2 Dill. 353; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Citizens' Sav. Assn. v. Topeka, 3 Dill. 376, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655, 32 L. ed. 455.

Chapter 60, Laws 1879, even if it applies to townships, does not authorize the issue of negotiable bonds, or bonds such as those set out in the alternative writ.

The powers of such governmental agencies as counties, townships, and school districts are more strictly construed than in the case of incorporated municipalities. It is settled that this class of corporations have not the implied power to borrow money and issue negotiable bonds. Direct legislative authority is necessary.

Clatsop County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400-407, 28 L. ed. 470-472; Hill v. Memphis, 184 U. S. 199, 38 L. ed. 887; Young v. Clarendon Twp. 183 U. S. 840, 38 L. ed. 356; Kelley v. Milan, 127 U. S. 139, 32 L. ed. 77; Nashville v. Bay, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 468, 22 L. ed. 164; Brenham v. German-American Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 36 L. ed. 390; Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 652; Merrill v. Monticello, 188 U. S. 673, 34 L. ed. 1069; Anthony v. Jasper County, 101 U. S. 698, 25 L. ed. 1005. 34 L. R. A.

Johnston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the levy of a tax upon the property in Forrester township, Ness county, for the payment of interest which has accrued upon refunding bonds issued by the township. It appears that in April, 1889, the township voted $20,000 in bonds, payable in twenty years, and bearing interest at 7 per cent per annum, to aid the Ness County Sugar-Mill Company; and, on October of the same year, they were refunded in bonds running thirty years, and bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 50 of the Laws of 1879. The petition alleges that the refunding bonds were negotiable, payable to bearer, and had been duly registered by the auditor of the state of Kansas, who certified that they had been regularly and legally issued, in conformity with the laws of the state. Default has been made in the payment of the interest, and the local authorities decline to levy a tax, claiming that the original bonds were invalid, because they were issued in aid of a private enterprise, and also that the act under which they were issued does not authorize the issue of refunding bonds by townships, nor the issue of negotiable bonds, such as were issued by the township, in any case.

The questions submitted for decision are raised on a motion to quash the alternative writ, and the first is that the title of the act under which the bonds were issued is not broad enough to cover the provisions authorizing the refunding of township indebtedness. The title is as follows: "An Act to Enable Counties, Municipal Corporations, the Boards of Education of Any City and School Districts to Refund Their Indebtedness." Express authority is given in the body of the act for refunding township indebtedness. Townships are mentioned in connection with counties, cities, and school districts in almost every section; and the provisions of the act apply substantially alike to each municipality, except that townships and school districts cannot refund their debts without the assent of the voters, expressed at an election held for that purpose. It was the manifest purpose of the legislature to confer authority upon townships to refund their indebtedness, and the question for decision is whether the general term "municipal corporations," employed in the title, is sufficiently broad to cover those provisions. In this state, each organized township is a body politic and corporate, with power to make all contracts that may be necessary and convenient for the exercise of its corporate powers, and, in its proper name, may sue and be sued. A township is generally spoken of as a municipality or municipal corporation, but, strictly speaking, every political subdivision of the state organized for the administration of civil government is a quasi corporation. In this respect they are placed on the same plane as counties and school districts; and in this court in determining the liability of this class of corporations for failure to perform some corporate duty, or for the neglect or misfeasance of its officers and agents, it has been held that counties, townships, and school districts are not municipal corporations proper, and that their liabilities in this respect are not the same as incorporated cities, towns, and villages. Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23; Eikenberry v. Bazaar Twp. 22 Kan. 561, 31 Am. Rep. 198; Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255; Freedland v. Stillman, 49 Kan. 197. In all these cases and for the purpose of determining their liabilities and powers, the distinction between municipal corporations proper and other public corporations has been made. In the broader sense and in common usage, the term "municipal corporations" includes counties and townships. All public corporations, including counties, cities, and townships are frequently referred to as "municipalities" and "municipal corporations," to distinguish them from private corporations, and it is not uncommon to find them so designated in the state and Federal courts, and in the published reports of their decisions. In a very recent case, Chief Justice Horton referred to a township as "a public municipal corporation;" and the same language is employed both in the syllabus and in the opinion. Riley v. Garfield Twp. 54 Kan. 463. In 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 953, the following definition is given: "A municipal corporation, in its broader sense, is a body politic, such as a state, and each of the governmental subdivisions of the state, such as counties, parishes, townships, hundreds, New England 'towns,' and school districts, as well as cities and incorporated towns, villages, and boroughs. Every one of these is properly susceptible of the general appellation." Here, then, we have in the title a term which, if taken in the broader sense and popular signification, would include townships, and render the act valid, while, if taken in the more restricted and technical sense, it would render it invalid. What sense shall be imputed to the legislature, and which interpretation should be given to the term? No one can doubt that the legislature intended to make a title broad enough to cover the provisions of the act with reference to townships, and this is the more apparent from the amendments made to the act long after the passage of the original act, and after large amounts of township indebtedness had been refunded under its provisions. Laws 1891, chap. 163; Laws 1893, chap. 118. The obvious intention of the legislature is entitled to great weight in determining the sufficiency of the title. In Woodruff v. Baldwin, 23 Kan. 494, it was held in a similar case to be more just and fair to say that the legislature used the title in its broadest sense,—a sense broad enough to include the subject-matter of the act,—rather than to apply the restricted meaning, which would to some extent defeat the legislative purpose. The same view was taken in Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89. There a term was employed in the title to an act which, if given the broader meaning, would uphold the act, while, giving it the narrower and perhaps more common meaning would render it invalid; and it was held that, the legislature having employed the word in its broadest sense, and one which fairly covered the provision assailed, the court was not warranted in adopting the narrower meaning, and thus holding the act invalid. It was said that the fact that general terms are employed in the title does not render it objectionable so long as the title to the act is such that neither the members of the legislature nor the people to be affected are misled. The defendants place some reliance upon the language used in Freedland v. Stillman, supra; but an attentive reading of the decision shows that it is not controlling. In that case the court was not considering the title to an act, but was endeavoring to ascertain the intention of the legislature, and from the connection in which "municipal corporations" was used it could be readily seen that school districts were not within the purpose of the legislature in framing the act. Here the provisions of the body of the act in question show beyond cavil that the legislature intended to authorize townships to refund their indebtedness; and the question we have to decide is whether that intention shall be thwarted by a technical interpretation of the title to the act. In making the distinction between the different kinds of public corporations, it is common to refer to cities as municipal corporations proper. This is a discriminating expression frequently used by the courts of this state, and, if that term had been employed in the title, there would be some reason for the strict interpretation for which the defendants contend. A technical interpretation, however, has never been applied in this state to the titles of legislative acts. On the other hand, it has been consistently held that the constitutional limitation should not be enforced in any narrow or technical spirit, but should be liberally interpreted, with a view of upholding the acts of the legislature. It has been regarded to be the duty of the court to view the acts of the legislature with great respect, and, so far as possible, endeavor to reconcile and sustain them. Illustrations of liberal interpretations placed upon the title of the acts may be found in almost every volume of our decisions, but we need only to refer to a few of them. Woodruff v. Baldwin, supra; Philpin v. McCarty, 24 Kan. 393; Marion County Comrs. v. Harvey County Comrs. 26 Kan. 181; Cherokee County Comrs. v. State, 36 Kan. 387; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Harrelson, 44 Kan. 258; State v. Bush, 45 Kan. 140; Re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89; State v. Lewelling, 51 Kan. 562; Re Sanders, 53 Kan. 191, 23 L. R. A. 603; Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 867; Rogers v. Morrill, Id. 737. The act has been in force for more than seventeen years, and, upon the theory that the title was good and the act valid, a vast number of the townships of the state have issued bonds, which have been negotiated in the money markets of the country, and accepted as valid securities. The official reports show that the state holds a considerable amount of such bonds, purchased as an investment of the permanent school and other funds. The validity of the act is assailed here for the first time, but we think the scope and effect of the series of decisions heretofore cited compel us to hold that the term "municipal corporations," as used in the title of the act, should be interpreted so as to include townships.

We are unable to agree with the contention that the refunding bonds are non-negotiable, and that in the hands of bona-fide holders they are subject to the same defenses as would have been available against the immediate payee. They are specifically alleged to be negotiable in the alternative writ, are negotiable in form, and we think the act under which they are issued contains no restrictions which take away the attribute of negotiability, or except them from the rules commonly applied to such municipal securities. Prior to the enactment of the refunding law of 1879, a great number of special acts had been passed to refund the accrued and accruing indebtedness of counties, cities, townships, and school districts. It was the obvious purpose of the legislature of 1879 to frame a general refunding law, which would be available to all municipalities. The act provides for the issuance of interest-bearing bonds, with coupons attached, to run for a period of thirty years or less; the bonds and coupons to be signed by the officer and in the ordinary manner in which municipal bonds are executed. They are required to be issued in denominations from $100 to $1,000, payable at a place to be designated upon the face thereof, and to contain a recital of the act under which they are issued. Where authority is given to a municipality to issue bonds of this character, without restriction as to negotiability, there is a fair implication that negotiable bonds are to be issued. The provisions of this act in respect to the character of the bonds to be issued are substantially the same as those of the numerous refunding acts of Kansas, and the bonds that have been issued under them have been regarded as negotiable by the people of the state, and have been so accepted in the commercial world. This question was recently before the United States circuit court of appeals, and it was held that the objection that the act did not authorize the issue of negotiable bonds was untenable. Sanborn, J., in pronouncing the judgment of the court, said that "the act under consideration in this case authorized this township to 'issue new bonds,' without any restriction as to their negotiability. This grant of power to a municipal body to issue bonds must be interpreted to give that body power to issue municipal bonds in the usual form of such securities. The usual—nay, it may almost be said the universal—form of such securities is that of a negotiable bond payable to bearer; and, in our opinion, it was bonds in this form, and in no other, that the legislature of Kansas had in mind and intended to give this township power to issue by this act. Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Sav. 7 C. C. A. 574, 58 Fed. Rep. 985, 16 U. S. App. 545; Ashley v. Presque Isle County Supers. 8 C. C. A. 455, 60 Fed. Rep. 53, 16 U. S. App. 656." West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 16 C. C. A. 553, 69 Fed. Rep. 943. In the same connection, that court held, and we think correctly, that the provision that new bonds should be issued to the holder of the old indebtedness does not require that he shall be named as payee in the bonds, and is not to be interpreted as a restriction upon the negotiable character of the bonds issued. The issue and delivery of the bonds payable to bearer, which is the usual method employed, would seem to be a full compliance with that provision of the statute. Its main purpose was to require the officers to deal directly with the holder of the indebtedness, so that no refunding bonds should be issued until the old indebtedness was delivered up for cancellation. It is significant, too, that the amendatory act of 1891, passed twelve years after the original act, distinctly provides for the sale of the refunding bonds, and restricts the municipal authorities from negotiating such bonds at less than par, or at a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent per annum. This provision goes upon the theory that the bonds are negotiable, and, in a certain sense, is a legislative interpretation of that part of the act. Neither can we see that the provision requiring the county clerk to keep a record of the refunding proceedings, showing the character of the refunding bonds, and the persons who surrendered the old and received the new form of indebtedness, indicates a legislative purpose to restrict the negotiable character of the securities to be issued. It is no more than the ordinary record which officers are required to keep of important business concerns, and is but a repetition of what already appears in the records of the township.

The peremptory writ will be allowed.

Martin, Ch. J., concurring specially:

I entertain much doubt of the correctness of the decision of the majority as expressed in the first point of the syllabus. Heretofore the distinction between municipal corporations and quasi corporations has always been maintained by this court. Bench v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23, 28, 29; Eikenberry v. Bazaar Twp. 22 Kan. 556, 561, 31 Am. Rep. 198; Marion County Comrs. v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255, 258; Freland v. Stillman, 49 Kan. 197, 207. The title of this act is restrictive; and following the plain course of reasoning pursued by Justice Johnston in Freland v. Stillman, supra, it would seem that the inclusion in the title of certain quasi corporations is inconsistent with the contention that another class of the same kind not mentioned is included in the phrase "municipal corporations." An act of the legislature should not, however, be held unconstitutional upon a mere doubt, but only when it cannot be supported upon any fair and legitimate line of argument; and this consideration is strengthened by the long time that this act has remained unchallenged on our statute books, and the important rights supposed to have accrued under it, and which should not be disturbed except for weighty reasons. I am therefore constrained to yield my assent, although other statutes have been, upon slighter grounds, condemned by this court as enacted in violation of § 16 of article 2 of the Constitution.

On the second point of the syllabus I fully concur:

Allen, J., dissenting:

I concur in holding the title of the act sufficient to include municipal townships, but dissent from the proposition that the act of 1879 authorizes the issuance of negotiable bonds. Neither the word "negotiable" nor any of its synonyms are to be found in the act. The right of the plaintiff to recover in this case depends entirely on the negotiability of the bonds, there being no contention that the origimal bonds issued in aid of the sugar-mill company were valid. The rule of law rendering the private maker of negotiable paper liable for the full face of it in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, even though he in fact received no consideration for its execution, is often exceedingly harsh, and is frequently invoked to perpetrate a fraud. It is still more harsh to impose a burden on the taxpayers, who have taken no part in the execution of written instruments, to pay for that for which they have received no benefit in return; and the courts have generally held that to authorize public officers to execute negotiable instruments in the name of a township or other political subdivision of the state, and thereby impose on the public a burden of debt wrongfully and illegally, and without benefit to the public, there must be explicit legislative authority. In the case of Merrill v. Monticello, 188 U. S. 673, 84 L. ed. 1069, Mr. Justice Lamar, in delivering the opinion of the court, quotes with approval the language of Chancellor Kent, as follows: "The modern doctrine is, to consider corporations as having such powers as are specifically granted by the act of incorporation, or as are necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the powers expressly granted, and as not having any other. The Supreme Court of the United States declared this obvious doctrine, and it has been repeated in the decisions of the state courts. . . . As corporations are the mere creatures of law, established for special purposes, and derive all their powers from the acts creating them, it is perfectly just and proper that they should be obliged strictly to show their authority for the business they assume, and be confined in their operations to the mode, and manner, and subject-matter prescribed." In Hill v. Memphis, 184 U. S. 198, 83 L. ed. 887, Mr. Justice Field said: "The inability of municipal corporations to issue negotiable paper for their indebtedness, however incurred, unless authority for that purpose is expressly given or necessarily implied for the execution of other express powers, has been affirmed in repeated decisions of this court." And in Brenham v. German-American Bank, 144 U. S. 178, 86 L. ed. 390, it was held: "Power in a municipal corporation to borrow money not being nugatory, although unaccompanied by the power to issue negotiable bonds therefor, it is easy for the legislature to confer upon the municipality the power to issue such bonds; and, under the well-settled rule that any doubt as to the existence of such power ought to be determined against its existence, it ought not to be held to exist in the present case." See also the dissenting opinion of Judge Caldwell in the case of West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 16 C. C. A. 553, 69 Fed. Rep. 952, cited in support of the opinion of the court in this case.

The act does not expressly authorize negotiable bonds to be issued. What necessity, then, requires the court, by construction and implication, to confer such power? Are not purchasers fairly dealt with if they are allowed to collect bonds rightfully and lawfully issued? What necessity is there for going further, and saying that the law implies power, as was attempted in this case, to create a debt without lawful consideration? There is much in the act indicating that the legislature did not intend that negotiable bonds should be issued and placed on the market, imposing an absolute liability, whether with or without a valid consideration. The bonds are to be issued only to the holder of the prior indebtedness, in pursuance of a compromise agreed on, and on the delivery and cancelation of the evidences of the prior debt. He, of course, has full knowledge of everything affecting the validity of the bonds. It is with him, and him alone, that the township deals in making the exchange. A purchaser from him, of course, might not have full knowledge concerning the original transaction, but § 4 of the act requires the county clerk to keep a record of all bonds issued in the county under the act, showing the date, number, and amount thereof, to whom, and on what account issued, and requires also a register of the number, amount, and date of issue of the canceled obligations. From these records and the inquiries they suggest, a purchaser might readily ascertain whether the refunding bonds were issued for a valid indebtedness or not. He who invests his money in such securities ought to have a motive for inquiring into the reason for the issuance of them. The attention of the taxpayers is not challenged to the transaction, and no good reason exists for holding them to the exercise of diligence in protecting their rights. They are not parties in any sense to the transaction between the original payee of the bonds and the purchaser from him. A debt of the taxpayers ought not to be created by a transaction between strangers merely because one of them advances his money in reliance on his own ignorance concerning the consideration of the securities he purchases.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

George S. TILLINGHAST, Madison County Treasurer, Resp't.,

J. Herman MERRILL et al., Appts.

(151 N. Y. 135.)

A supervisor is liable on grounds of public policy for public money lost by the failure of a firm of private bankers with whom he had deposited it, although he acted in good faith and without negligence.

NOTE.—As to liability on official bonds for loss of money by bank failure, see note to Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 449; also State, Overton County, v. Copeland (Tenn.) 31 84 L. R. A.

(Gray, J., dissenta.)

(December 1, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court,

L. R. A. 844; Fairchild v. Hedges (Wash.) 81 L. R. A. 851; Bush v. Johnson County (Neb.) 82 L. R. A. 228; and Allibone v. Ames (S. D.) 83 L. R. A. 585.

Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of the Madison County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action upon a supervisor's bond to recover public money lost by him through a bank failure. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry B. Coman, for appellants:

The defendant, Merrill, was liable only as a bailee for ordinary care and prudence, and the plaintiff was not entitled to a recovery without establishing negligence or bad faith.

Lane v. Cotton, 1 Ld. Raym. 646; Whitfield v. Lord Le Despencer, 2 Cowp. 754; Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440; People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 481; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 885, 888; Story, Bailm. §§ 180, 620; 2 Kent, Com. Holmes' ed. 827; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 837, 21 L. ed. 89; Peck v. James, 3 Hend. 75; Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 857, 31 Am. Rep. 284; United States v. Adams, 24 Fed. Rep. 848; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59, 83 Ala. 361; Houghton v. Freeland, 26 Grant. Ch. (U. C.) 500; York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1. 40 Am. Rep. 675; Trotty v. Houser, 7 S. C. N. S. 153; Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449.

It is no longer the law of the United States courts that a public officer is an insurer of the public moneys which come to his official custody.

United States v. Thomas, supra.

There is nothing in the language of the statutes which indicates an intention on the part of the legislature to impose a more stringent liability than that of the common law.

Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 1288.

The cases in the United States Supreme Court which hold receivers and collectors of public moneys to a more stringent liability than that imposed by the common law are largely based upon the ground that the United States statutes have imposed the larger liability and responsibility.

United States v. Thomas, supra.

There are a few cases in this state in which it has been held that a certain class of public officers are liable as debtors or insurers for the public moneys coming to their hands.

Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233; Looney v. Hughes, 26 N. Y. 514; Fake v. Whipple, 89 N. Y. 894; Bradley v. Ward, 58 N. Y. 401.

These are all cases of town collectors, and the decisions were put upon the ground that the terms of the statute make the collector an absolute debtor for the money, even before he has received a dollar of it.

People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 487.

An official bond neither adds to nor diminishes the liability of the officer. It is simply a security that he will faithfully perform the duties of his office, and not a contract imposing additional duties or liabilities.

People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 489; Wilson v. People, Pueblo & A. V. R. Co., 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 837, 21 L. ed. 89.

Public policy, in this state, at this time, does not require that public officers be held to a more stringent rule of responsibility than that of the common law.

People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477.

34 L. R. A.

No prudent business man, in the latter part of the nineteenth century, carries $2,000 around with him in his pocket by day, or sleeps with it under his pillow at night. He places it in some bank in which he has confidence, and, as he has occasion to use it, checks it out.

In case of a special depositor without compensation, the bank is merely the bailee of the depositor, and is bound only for slight care, and responsible only for gross negligence.

Pattison v. Syracuse Nat. Bank, 80 N. Y. 82, 36 Am. Rep. 582.

Even had he compensated the bank for its care of the property, it would still have been only a bailee and liable only for ordinary care and prudence—a much less stringent liability than it assumed when he made a general deposit.

Story, Bailm. 9th ed. § 898; Second Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 11 Blatchf. 862.

The bank being in good standing and credit he had a right to assume that the money would be forthcoming when demanded, but he had no right to assume that it might not be robbed or destroyed by fire, or his special deposit otherwise lost without gross negligence on the part of the bank; in either of which events, he could not have recovered from the bank.

Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9; Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 114.

Mr. Joseph Mason, with Mr. John E. Smith, for respondent:

Upon the receipt of the school moneys by the defendant he became the debtor of the town in the sum so received by him.

Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233; Fake v. Whipple, 89 N. Y. 894.

The supervisor of the town as it respects these school moneys, being the debtor of the town, such indebtedness can only be discharged by the payment of the money upon the orders of trustees for teachers' wages and library purposes, and the payment of the balance in his hands, if any, to his successor.

Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440, is not the law of this state to-day.

United States v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 784; Boyd v. United States, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 21, 20 L. ed. 529; Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jereil, 44 Minn. 437; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 87 Iowa, 550; Thompson v. Township Sixteen, 80 Ill. 99; Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 23 Ind. 125; Hennepin County Comrs. v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199; Jefferson County Comrs. v. Lineberger, 3 Mont. 281, 85 Am. Rep. 462; Morbeck v. State, Jackson Twp., 28 Ind. 86; Rock v. Stinger, 86 Ind. 346; Union Dist. Twp. v. Smith, 89 Iowa, 9, 18 Am. Rep. 39; Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112; Redwood County Comrs. v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45; State v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 162; State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 383; New Providence v. McEachron, 38 N. J. L. 339; State, Bladen County Comrs. v. Clarke, 73 N. C. 255; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. 372.

His liability rests upon the conditions of his bond; and if by them he is required to do an act which without his fault becomes impossible on account of anything occurring subsequent to the contract, he will not be released.

Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, Thompson v. Township Staten, Hennepin County Comrs. v. Jones, Jefferson County Comrs. v. Linberger, Morbeck v. State, Jackson Twp., Rock v. Stinger, Union Dist. Twp. v. Smith, Hancock v. Hazzard, State v. Nevin, State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, New Providence v. McEachron, and State, Bladen County Comrs., v. Clarke, supra.

The loss of the money in question by reason of the insolvency of E. C. Stark & Co., private bankers, with whom the defendant, Merrill, deposited the same as a general deposit, thereby making himself their creditor, is no defense to this action.

State, The Township, v. Powell, 67 Mo. 395, 29 Am. Rep. 512; Ward v. Colfax County School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 293, 35 Am. Rep. 477; Lowry v. Polk County, 51 Iowa, 50, 33 Am. Rep. 114; Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647; Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637; Nason v. Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445; Hart v. Pittsburgh Guardians of Poor, 81* Pa. 466; Omro Supra. v. Kaime, 39 Wis. 468; State, Mississippi County, v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; United States v. Morgan, 52 U. S. 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 648; United States v. Dashiell, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 182, 13 L. ed. 819; United States v. Keebler, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; Boyden v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 581; Bevans v. United States, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 581; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 837, 21 L. ed. 89; Parndine v. Jans, Aleyn, 26; Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 4 Q. B. 184.

The courts of many of the states have followed the rule herein contended for, with respect to the liability of the sureties of an officer for money lost or stolen, or of which he was robbed while it was in his hands.

Holbert v. State, Martin County Comrs., 22 Ind. 125; Morbeck v. State, Jackson Twp., 28 Ind. 86; Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 550; Hancock v. Hazzard, 12 Cush. 112; Redwood County Comrs. v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45; Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427; State, Mississippi County, v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; Jefferson County Comrs. v. Linberger, 8 Mont. 231, 35 Am. Rep. 462; State v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 162; New Providence v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 339; State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Com. v. Comly, 8 Pa. 372.

The state of North Carolina even refuses to acknowledge an exception from the act of God or a public enemy.

State, Bladen County Comrs., v. Clarke, 73 N. C. 255.

And a territorial ruling holds that the sureties are liable although the officer was murdered as well as robbed.

United States v. Watts, 1 N. M. 553.

Where a statute exempted an officer and his sureties from any loss arising from "irresistible superhuman cause" it was held that an accidental fire not caused by lightning, whereby the money was destroyed, was not within the statutory exemption.

Clay County v. Simonsen, 1 Dak. 403; Union Dist. Twp. v. Smith, 39 Iowa, 9, 18 Am. Rep. 89.

34 L. R. A.

Where public money has been deposited by an officer in a bank, and is lost by the failure of the bank, the officer and his sureties are liable for the money although the bank was then in good credit, and the officer was not chargeable with want of care.

Lowry v. Polk County, 51 Iowa, 50, 33 Am. Rep. 114; Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637; State, The Township, v. Powell, 67 Mo. 395, 29 Am. Rep. 512; Harens v. Lathene, 75 N. C. 505; Hart v. Pittsburgh Guardians of Poor, 81* Pa. 466; Nason v. Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445; Wilson v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647; Omro Supra. v. Kaime, 39 Wis. 468; Ward v. Colfax County School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 293, 35 Am. Rep. 477.

The obligation assumed by the officer is in most instances fixed by the terms of the statute providing for the office, or by the terms of his official bond, under which he is not regarded as a bailee, and his obligation to keep it safely is deemed absolute and without condition to be discharged only by payment.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 481; State v. Peck, 58 Me. 123; Scio Bd. of Edu. v. Melandborough, 36 Ohio St. 227, 33 Am. Rep. 582; Mount v. State, Richey, 30 Ind. 29, 46 Am. Rep. 192.

The supervisor should be held to a strict accountability. He should exercise the highest degree of vigilance.

United States v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant Merrill, while supervisor of the town of Stockbridge in the county of Madison, deposited with a firm of private bankers, to his credit as supervisor, certain of the public moneys in his hands. The banking firm afterwards failed and the money was totally lost. This action was brought by the county treasurer to recover the money of Merrill and his bondsmen, upon the theory that Merrill, on receiving the money, became the debtor of the county, and that the deposit of the same was at his own risk. The trial judge found that Merrill acted in good faith and without negligence in all that he did in the premises. Under these circumstances the learned counsel for the defendants has urged, with much earnestness and ability, that a supervisor rests under the common-law liability, whereby he was bound to exercise good faith and reasonable diligence in the discharge of his duties, and is not responsible for any loss of money which came to his official custody, occurring without fault on his part; that proof of the failure of the banking firm, where he had deposited the money in good faith and without negligence, is a complete defense to this action. The trial judge and general term have found against the defendants, and it remains for this court to determine which measure of liability is to be applied to a supervisor under the circumstances stated.

The question is an open one in this state, and, as the case at bar presents a claim against a supervisor who acted in good faith and without negligence, we are permitted to consider and decide this appeal upon general principles, and in the light of public policy. It is rather remarkable that, in a great business state like New York, this question should not have been decided long since by the court of last resort. In 1841 the case of Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440, came before the supreme court, composed of Chief Justice Nelson and Justices Bronson and Cowen. Dorr was county treasurer, and had given a bond to faithfully execute the duties of his office, and pay according to law all moneys. The declaration was on the bond, alleging breaches in not paying over, and in not accounting. Dorr pleaded that the identical money received by him was stolen from his office without negligence on his part. To this plea the plaintiff demurred. Chief Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion of the court, stated that the question was "whether an officer concerned in the receipt and disbursement of the public funds is an insurer of the same, ex virtute officii, whilst they necessarily remain in his custody." He then stated that "the principle was decided in favor of the defendant, in Lane v. Cotton, 1 Ld. Raym. 646, and subsequently confirmed in Whitfield v. Lord Le Despencer, 2 Cowp. 754, and is in conformity with the general rule of daily application, that in order to subject the officer it is necessary to prove misconduct or neglect in the execution of his duties." Justices Bronson and Cowen concurred. An appeal was taken to the court of errors, and that court equally divided upon the question, the effect of which was to affirm the judgment below, and the case stands with no more force as a precedent than a unanimous opinion of the supreme court. Chancellor Walworth, in the court of errors, wrote for affirmance, thus adding his name to those of the distinguished justices of the supreme court who had decided to limit the liability of a public officer, by the rule of the common law.

It has been a mooted question whether this case was overruled by Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233, decided in 1845. Mr. Hill, in his note to Albany Supers. v. Dorr, in court of errors (7 Hill, 584), says that in Muzzy v. Shattuck the law seems to have been settled, and properly, directly the other way. On the other hand, Judge Earl, in People, Nash, v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 486, in referring to Albany Supers. v. Dorr, says: "The doctrine of that case has been erroneously supposed to have been overruled by the decision in Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233. In the latter case the action was upon the official bond of a town collector, and the defense was that the money was stolen from him. It was held that the defense was not good, the supreme court then being composed of Bronson, Ch. J., and Justices Beardsley and Jewett; and Bronson, who concurred in the prior decision, also concurred in this, without any indication that he had changed his views. The prior decision was referred to in the opinion of the court, but not criticised or disapproved. This decision was based, not upon the common law, and not upon the force and effect of the official bond given by the collector, but upon the statutes defining the duties and liabilities of the collector; and the court held that by those statutes he was made an absolute debtor for the money collected by him, and that the fact that the money was stolen, therefore, constituted no defense." The learned judge, after a further elaboration of his views as to Albany Supers. v. Dorr, reaches the conclusion that, in view of the decisions of the Federal and state courts, the case should probably not be regarded as binding authority in this state, and that the question therein decided is an open one. He also held that it was not necessary to decide the question in the case in which he was writing, as the money received by the defendant surrogate was not public money, but belonged to a private estate, or to individuals. It therefore comes to this, that for forty-five years the case of Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440, has stood without being directly overruled by any case in this state, and the rule of the limited liability of the common law approved therein by four of our most distinguished judges. It must be admitted, however, that the weight of authority in the Federal and state courts is in favor of holding officials having the custody of public moneys liable for its loss, although accruing without their fault or negligence. In many of these cases the decision turned upon the construction of the local statute or the official bond, but others squarely decide the question on principles of public policy.

In the case at bar, the defendant Merrill is sought to be held liable for school moneys paid to him by the county treasurer, to disburse in payment of the salaries of school teachers upon the orders of the trustees. The statute imposing this duty reads as follows, viz.: "It is the duty of every supervisor (1) to disburse the school moneys in his hands, applicable to the payment of teachers' wages, upon and only upon the written orders of a sole trustee, or a majority of the trustees, in favor of qualified teachers. . . ." 2 Rev. Stat. 8th ed. p. 1293, § 6. By ¶ 8 of the same section a supervisor is required to pay to his successor all school moneys remaining in his hands. In this statute it will be observed that there are no explicit declarations of the legislative intent, as in the case of town collectors, to create a supervisor the debtor of the county for public moneys in his hands, and the condition of the bond to safely keep, faithfully disburse, and justly account for the same does not add to the liability created by statute. As before intimated, we must consider and decide this question upon general principles, and in the light of public policy. In the case of an officer disbursing the public moneys, much may be said in favor of limiting his liability, where he acts in good faith and without negligence; and a strong argument can be framed against the great injustice of compelling him to respond for money stolen or lost while he is in the exercise of the highest degree of care, and engaged in the conscientious discharge of duty. When considering this side of the case, it shocks the sense of justice that the public official should be held to any greater liability than the old rule of the common law, which exacted proof of misconduct or neglect. It is at this point, however, that the question of public policy presents itself, and it may well be asked whether it is not wiser to subject the custodian of the public moneys to the strictest liability, rather than open the door for the perpetration of fraud in numberless ways impossible of detection, thereby placing in jeopardy the enormous amount of the public funds constantly passing through the hands of disbursing agents. Without regard to decisions outside of our own jurisdiction, we think the weight of the argument, treating this as an original question, is in favor of the rule of strict liability, which requires a public official to assume all risks of loss, and imposes upon him the duty to account as a debtor for the funds in his custody.

We do not wish to be understood as establishing a rule of absolute liability in any event. The United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Thomas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 837, 21 L. ed. 89, held the surveyor of customs for the port of Nashville, Tennessee, and depository of public money at that place, not liable, when prevented from responding by the act of God or the public enemy. If that state of facts is hereafter presented to this court, it will, doubtless, be carefully considered whether it does not present a proper exception to the general rule. It would not be profitable to refer in detail to the many cases, Federal and state, which sustain the strict rule of liability, and we content ourselves with a reference to a number of them involving losses by robbery, burglary, bank failure, and the like. United States v. Prescott, 44 U. S. 8 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734; United States v. Morgan, 52 U. S. 11 How. 154, 18 L. ed. 643; United States v. Dashiell, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319; United States v. Keebler, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; Boyd v. United States, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; Bevans v. United States, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531; Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cusb. 112; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. 372; New Providence v. McEachron, 38 N. J. L. 839; State, The Township, v. Powell, 67 Mo. 895, 29 Am. Rep. 512; Lourey v. Polk County, 51 Iowa, 50, 33 Am. Rep. 114; Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 133, 20 Am. Rep. 687; Nason v. Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445; Omro Supers. v. Kaine, 39 Wis. 468; Redwood County Comrs. v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45; State, Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 87 Am. Dec. 868; Halbert v. State, Martin County, 23 Ind. 125; Ward v. Colfax County School Dist. No. 15, 10 Neb. 293, 35 Am. Rep. 477.

The views we have expressed lead to a final judgment against the defendant Merrill as supervisor of the town of Stockbridge, although he is shown by this record to have discharged his official duties in an honorable and faithful manner.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Gray, J., dissenting, and Martin, J., not sitting.

Harry C. ADAMS, Respt.,

NEW JERSEY STEAMBOAT COMPANY,
Appl.

(151 N. Y. 163.)

1. The relations between a steamboat

NOTE.—The above case is a novel and important one on the subject of the liability of a carrier by steamboat as an innkeeper.

84 L. R. A.

company and a passenger occupying a state room are those that exist between an innkeeper and his guest.

2. Theft of money from the clothing of a steamer passenger during the night while he is occupying a state room with door locked and windows fastened renders the carrier liable for the loss as an insurer and without any proof of negligence. If the sum lost was reasonable and proper for the passenger to carry on his person to defray the expenses of his journey.

(December 8, 1883.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York affirming a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money stolen from him while a passenger on one of defendant's boats. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Prentice and R. K. Prentice, for appellant:

The mere proof of the loss of money by a passenger while occupying a berth does not make a prima facie case, and to sustain a recovery some evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant must be given.

Morris v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 148 N. Y. 182; Henderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 123 U. S. 61, 31 L. ed. 92; Steamboat Crystal Palace v. Vanderpool, 16 B. Mon. 302; Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 275, 19 Am. Rep. 456; Gleason v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 32 Wis. 85, 14 Am. Rep. 716; Abbott v. Bradstreet, 55 Me. 530; McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 115; Weeks v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 50, 28 Am. Rep. 104.

Carriers of passengers by water are not innkeepers.

2 Hutchinson, Carr. § 700, note 1.

But innkeepers are held to no such liability as this without a chance of defense.

Rosenplaenter v. Rasse, 54 N. Y. 262; Becker v. Warner, 90 Hun. 187.

There was notice to deposit valuables with the clerk.

Hyatt v. Taylor, 51 Barb. 682, Affirmed 42 N. Y. 258; Walah v. Porterfield, 87 Pa. 376; Swann v. Smith, 14 Daly, 114; Becker v. Warner, supra; Hayes v. Forty-Second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 259; Belch v. New York O. & H. R. Co. 90 Hun. 477.

No negligence on the part of defendant had been shown. Every precaution and care required of defendant had been exercised.

Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 53, 11 L. R. A. 759; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. 112 N. Y. 443, 8 L. R. A. 74; Potter v. New York O. & H. R. B. Co. 136 N. Y. 77.

The plaintiff had not shown facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and in addition had not shown that the property of which he claimed the loss had been committed to the care of the defendant.

Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. supra; Roth v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. 27 Jones & S. 49; Morris v. New York C. &

As to the liability to passengers on sleeping car, see Mann-Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre (C. C. App.) 21 L. R. A. 220, and note.

H. R. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 678; Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 359, 57 Am. Rep. 729, and cases there cited; Wohlfahrt v. Beckert, 92 N. Y. 490, 44 Am. Rep. 406.

Messrs. Gibson & Davis, for respondent:

Defendant is a common carrier and an insurer.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. pp. 63, 199, 818; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 234, 83 Am. Dec. 455; Cole v. Goodwin, 19 Wend. 251, 82 Am. Dec. 470; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. 190; Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. 591.

The liability of the defendant is also analogous to that of an innkeeper.

Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. 43 How. Pr. 466; Mudgett v. Bay State S. B. Co. 1 Daly, 151; Gore v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 2 Daly, 254.

And the liability of an innkeeper is that of an insurer.

Hulett v. Swift, 88 N. Y. 571, 88 Am. Dec. 405; Piper v. Manny, 21 Wend. 282; 3 Parsons, Cont. 6th ed. p. 145.

Defendant being liable both as common carrier and as an insurer, the presumption is that the loss occurred through defendant's default, and this can only be repelled by proof that the loss was attributable to negligence or fraud of plaintiff, or to act of God, or of the public enemy.

Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co., and Hulett v. Swift, supra.

Defendant is liable though loss happened without its fault.

Hulett v. Swift, supra; Grinnell v. Cook, 8 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Macklin v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 229 (affirmed in court of appeals though not reported); Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. supra.

Nor can defendant by a mere notice relieve itself from the vigorous rule of the common law, which, in the absence of a clear, special, and express contract, makes it an insurer.

Holsapple v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 275; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 543, 19 Am. Rep. 300; Edsall v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 50 N. Y. 661; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 818, 328, 829, 21 L. ed. 297, 302.

And no presumptions will be indulged in, in favor of exemptions from common-law liability.

Edsall v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. supra.

An express contract cannot spring from a notice.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. p. 370.

The money and clothing which plaintiff was entitled to have in his stateroom were in the custody and possession of defendant.

Mudgett v. Bay State S. B. Co. supra; Macklin v. New Jersey S. B. Co. supra; Calley's Case, 8 Coke, 88; Gore v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., and Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. supra.

Plaintiff was entitled to have in his stateroom sufficient money for the expenses of his journey, and while there it was in the custody of defendant.

Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. supra; Merrill v. Grinnell, 30 N. Y. 594; Torpey v. Williams, 8 Daly, 162; Taylor v. Monnot, 1 Abb. Pr. 325; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. p. 819; 34 L. R. A.

Fairfax v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 167, 29 Am. Rep. 119; Curtis v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 371; Merrill v. Grinnell, and Holsapple v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., supra.

Defendant is unquestionably liable for plaintiff's loss, unless plaintiff, by his own negligence contributed to the loss; and if such were the fact, the burden of proof was on defendant to show it, as well as his own freedom from negligence.

Aiken v. Westcott, 14 Daly, 504; Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 377; Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. 43 How. Pr. 466.

Plaintiff was under no obligation whatever to read a notice posted in his stateroom.

Macklin v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 229; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 234, 83 Am. Dec. 455; Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. v. Belknap, 21 Wend. 354.

Nor can defendant claim exemption under the hotelkeepers' liability act. Such act specifically applies to hotelkeepers and innkeepers; and it is well settled that statutes in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed.

Fitzgerald v. Quann, 109 N. Y. 441; Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 861; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. p. 287.

But even if plaintiff saw the notice, or if it was brought home to his knowledge, it was unreasonable, so far as it claimed to cover personal effects and money necessary for traveling expenses.

Pope v. Hall, 14 La. Ann. 324; Profillet v. Hall, Id. 530; Johnson v. Richardson, 17 Ill. 802; Krohn v. Sweeney, 3 Daly, 200; Gile v. Libby, 86 Barb. 70.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the night of the 17th of June, 1889, the plaintiff was a cabin passenger from New York to Albany on the defendant's steamer Drew, and for the usual and regular charge was assigned to a stateroom on the boat. The plaintiff's ultimate destination was St. Paul, in the state of Minnesota, and he had upon his person the sum of $160 in money for the purpose of defraying his expenses of the journey. The plaintiff, on retiring for the night, left this money in his clothing in the stateroom, having locked the door and fastened the windows. During the night it was stolen by some person who apparently reached it through the window of the room.

The plaintiff's relations to the defendant as a passenger, the loss without negligence on his part, and the other fact that the sum lost was reasonable and proper for him to carry upon his person to defray the expenses of the journey, have all been found by the verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal presents, therefore, but a single question, and that is, whether the defendant is in law liable for this loss without any proof of negligence on its part. The learned trial judge instructed the jury that it was, and the jury, after passing upon the other questions of fact in the case, rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of money so stolen. The judgment entered upon the verdict was affirmed at general term, and that court has allowed an appeal to this court.

The defendant has therefore been held liable as an insurer against the loss which one of its passengers sustained under the circumstances stated. The principle upon which innkeepers are charged by the common law as insurers of the money or personal effects of their guests originated in public policy. It was deemed to be a sound and necessary rule that this class of persons should be subjected to a high degree of responsibility in cases where an extraordinary confidence is necessarily reposed in them, and where great temptation to fraud and danger of plunder exists by reason of the peculiar relations of the parties. Story, Bailm. § 464; 2 Kent, Com. 592; Hulett v. Swift, 83 N. Y. 571, 88 Am. Dec. 405.

The relations that exist between a steamboat company and its passengers, who have procured staterooms for their comfort during the journey, differ in no essential respect from those that exist between the innkeeper and his guests. The passenger procures and pays for his room for the same reasons that a guest at an inn does. There are the same opportunities for fraud and plunder on the part of the carrier that was originally supposed to furnish a temptation to the landlord to violate his duty to the guest.

A steamer carrying passengers upon the water, and furnishing them with rooms and entertainment, is for all practical purposes, a floating inn, and hence the duties which the proprietors owe to the passengers in their charge ought to be the same. No good reason is apparent for relaxing the rigid rule of the common law which applies as between innkeeper and guest, since the same considerations of public policy apply to both relations.

The defendant, as a common carrier, would have been liable for the personal baggage of the plaintiff unless the loss was caused by the act of God or the public enemies, and a reasonable sum of money for the payment of his expenses, if carried by the passenger in his trunk, would be included in the liability for loss of baggage. Merrill v. Grinnell, 80 N. Y. 594; Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 150, 86 Am. Dec. 292; Elliott v. Russell, 10 Johns. 7, 6 Am. Dec. 806; Brown, Carr. § 41; Redf. Carr. § 24; Angell, Carr. § 80.

Since all questions of negligence on the part of the plaintiff, as well as those growing out of the claim that some notice was posted in the room regarding the carrier's liability for the money, have been disposed of by the verdict, it is difficult to give any good reason why the measure of liability should be less for the loss of the money under the circumstances than for the loss of what might be strictly called baggage.

The question involved in this case was very fully and ably discussed in the case of Crozier v. Boston, N. Y. & N. S. B. Co. 43 How. Pr. 466, and in Macklin v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 229. The liability of the carrier in such cases as an insurer seems to have been very clearly demonstrated in the opinion of the court in both actions upon reason, public policy, and judicial authority. It appears from a copy of the remittitur attached to the brief of plaintiff's counsel that the judgment in the latter case was affirmed in this court, though it seems that the case was not reported.

It was held in Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 53, 11 L. R. A. 759, that a railroad running sleeping coaches on its road was not liable for the loss of money taken from a passenger while in his berth, during the night, without some proof of negligence on its part. That case does not, we think, control the question now under consideration. Sleeping car companies are neither innkeepers nor carriers. A berth in a sleeping car is a convenience of modern origin, and the rules of the common law in regard to carriers or innkeepers have not been extended to this new relation.

This class of conveyances is attached to the regular trains upon railroads for the purpose of furnishing extra accommodations, not to the public at large nor to all the passengers, but to that limited number who wish to pay for them. The contract for transportation and liability for loss of baggage is with the railroad, the real carrier. All the relations of passenger and carrier are established by the contract implied in the purchase of the regular railroad ticket, and the sleeping car is but an adjunct to it only for such of the passengers as wish to pay an additional charge for the comfort and luxury of a special apartment in a special car. The relations of the carrier to a passenger occupying one of these berths are quite different with respect to his personal effects from those which exist at common law between the innkeeper and his guest, or a steamboat company that has taken entire charge of the traveler by assigning to him a stateroom. While the company running sleeping cars is held to a high degree of care in such cases, it is not liable for a loss of this character without some proof of negligence. The liability as insurers which the common law imposed upon carriers and innkeepers has not been extended to these modern appliances for personal comfort, for reasons that are stated quite fully in the adjudged cases and that do not apply in the case at bar. Ulrich v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 80; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 258; Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. v. Diehl, 84 Ind. 474, 43 Am. Rep. 102; Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car Co. 143 Mass. 267, 58 Am. Rep. 185.

But aside from authority, it is quite obvious that the passenger has no right to expect, and in fact does not expect, the same degree of security from thieves while in an open berth in a car on a railroad as in a stateroom of a steamboat, securely locked and otherwise guarded from intrusion. In the latter case, when he retires for the night, he ought to be able to rely upon the company for his protection with the same faith that the guest can rely upon the protection of the innkeeper, since the two relations are quite analogous. In the former the contract and the relations of the parties differ at least to such an extent as to justify some modification of the common-law rule of responsibility. The use of sleeping cars by passengers in modern times created relations between the parties to the contract that were unknown to the common law, and to which the rule of absolute responsibility could not be applied without great injustice in many cases. But in the case at bar no good reason is perceived for relaxing the ancient rule, and none can be deduced from the authorities. The relations that exist between the carrier and the passenger who secures a berth in a sleeping car or in a drawing room car upon a railroad are exceptional and peculiar. The contract which gives the passenger the right to occupy a berth or a seat does not alone secure to him the right of transportation. It simply gives him the right to enjoy special accommodations at a specified place in the train. The carrier by railroad does not undertake to insure the personal effects of the passenger which are carried upon his person against depredation by thieves. It is bound, no doubt, to use due care to protect the passenger in this respect, and it might well be held to a higher degree of care when it assigns sleeping berths to passengers for an extra compensation than in cases where they remain in the ordinary coaches in a condition to protect themselves. But it is only upon the ground of negligence that the railroad company can be held liable to the passenger for money stolen from his person during the journey. The ground of the responsibility is the same as to all the passengers, whether they use sleeping berths or not, though the degree of care required may be different. Some proof must be given that the carrier failed to perform the duty of protection to the passenger that is implied in the contract before the question of responsibility can arise, whether the passenger be in one of the sleeping berths or in a seat in the ordinary car. The principle upon which the responsibility rests is the same in either case, though the degree of care to which the carrier is held may be different. That must be measured by the danger to which the passenger is exposed from thieves and with reference to all the circumstances of the case. The carrier of passengers by railroad, whether the passenger be assigned to the ordinary coaches or to a berth in a special car, has never been held to that high degree of responsibility that governs the relations of innkeeper and guest, and it would perhaps be unjust to so extend the liability when the nature and character of the duties which it assumes are considered.

But the traveler who pays for his passage, and engages a room in one of the modern floating palaces that cross the sea or navigate the interior waters of the country, establishes legal relations with the carrier that cannot well be distinguished from those that exist between the hotel keeper and his guests. The carrier undertakes to provide for all his wants, including a private room for his exclusive use, which is to be as free from all intrusion as that assigned to the guest at a hotel. The two relations, if not identical, bear such close analogy to each other that the same rule of responsibility should govern.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the defendant was properly held liable in this case for the money stolen from the plaintiff, without any proof of negligence.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

Justus TABER.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Provisions in a carrier's contract that notice of injury to cattle must be given before they are unloaded or mixed with others, and that no animal shall be considered as worth more than a specified sum, conflict with a constitutional provision that common carriers shall not contract for relief from their common-law liability.
2. Prohibiting common carriers from contracting to limit their common-law liability does not interfere with the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

(September 24, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hardin County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to live stock while in defendant's possession for transportation. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to the power of a carrier to limit the amount of liability in cases of negligence, see note to Bailou v. Earle (R. I.) 14 L. R. A. 432.
84 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. H. Marriott, for appellant:

The petition, in failing to set out the whole contract and aver the performance of the condition precedent, has failed to show facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Newman, Pl. 678; Hodges v. Holeman, 2 Dana, 396.

As between plaintiff and defendant this was a contract for interstate commerce, and cannot be controlled by state legislation, and the provision of the Constitution referred to, as to such a contract, is void.

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. 88 Va. 95, 13 L. R. A. 107; Leisy v. Hardin, 185 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 86; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 186 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 394, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 19 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 9, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411.

To say that the defendant shall not insert a condition in its contracts for the carrying on of interstate commerce would be to regulate commerce between the states.

The condition imposed by the 11th section of the bill of lading is a reasonable stipulation and valid, and will be enforced in the absence of fraud or mistake, unless waived.

Owen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 87 Ky. 626; Hutchinson, Carr. p. 801, § 258; Sprague v. Missouri P. R. Co. 84 Kan. 847; Southern Exp. Co. v. Hunnicutt, 54 Miss. 566, 28 Am. Rep. 885.

Nor was it necessary that the plaintiff should read the contract.

See Hutchinson, Carr. § 240, p. 272, note 1; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brownlee, 14 Bush, 597.

It is not a contract for relief from its common-law liability, but is only a condition with which the shipper must comply or lose his claim.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Hunnicutt, supra; Selby v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 118 N. C. 588; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 6 L. R. A. 849; Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329; Dorr v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. 11 N. Y. 485; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 844, 12 L. ed. 465; New York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 170; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hedger, 9 Bush, 647, 15 Am. Rep. 740.

The care to be exercised is not such as would require the company receiving the car to test the strength of the metal or the material out of which the car was constructed, or to make that rigid examination into the car's condition as could only be arrived at by actual tests.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams, 95 Ky. 189.

In Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 831, 28 L. ed. 717, Blatchford, J., observes: "There is no justice in allowing the shipper to be paid a large value for an article which he has induced the carrier to take at a low rate of freight on the assertion and agreement that its value is a less sum than that claimed after a loss."

Gibson v. Paynton, 4 Burr. 2298; Batson v. Donovan, 4 Barb. & Ald. 31; Squire v. New York C. R. Co. 98 Mass. 289; Moulton v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 81 Minn. 85; Alair v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Minn. 160, 19 L. R. A. 764; Southern P. R. Co. v. Maddox, 75 Tex. 300; Conover v. Pacific Exp. Co. 40 Mo. App. 31; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 326; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sowell, 80 Tenn. 17; Coward v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 16 Lea, 225.

Such a contract, fairly made, is not void as against public policy or for any other reason.

Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 831, 348, 28 L. ed. 717, 721; Baughman v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 268; Orndorff v. Adams Exp. Co. 3 Bush, 194; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Owen, 98 Ky. 201, and Baughman v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. supra,—all recognize the right of the carrier and the shipper to agree upon the value of the property shipped.

See Hoeing v. Adams Exp. Co. 8 Ky. L. Rep. 154; Harvey v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 74 Mo. 588; Johnstone v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 89 S. C. 55.

On petition for rehearing.

The contract sued on in this case was a contract to carry a carload of cattle from Cecilian in the state of Kentucky to Cincinnati in the state of Ohio

34 L. R. A.

That this was a contract for interstate commerce there can be no doubt.

Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 847; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 86.

Persons engaged in interstate commerce are within the protection of the commercial power of Congress, and cannot be molested in another state by state burdens or impediments.

Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 80 Fed. Rep. 9, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. 88 Va. 95, 13 L. R. A. 107.

If the commerce so attempted to be regulated is interstate commerce such statutes are invalid.

Corington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244.

Railroad companies, in the absence of statutory requirements or of special contract, are not liable as common carriers in the transportation of live stock.

Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 Mich. 165, 4 Am. Rep. 466; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 Mich. 329, 12 Am. Rep. 275; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hedger, 9 Bush, 647, 15 Am. Rep. 740.

Mr. Charles H. Gibson, with Mr. Walker D. Hines, also in support of petition for rehearing:

The common-law liability of a common carrier does not apply to the transportation of live stock. Section 196 of the Constitution has no application in any case to the transportation of live stock.

Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hedger, 9 Bush, 645, 15 Am. Rep. 740.

The word "commerce" includes the transportation of property and of persons.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania ("State Freight Tax"), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 275, 21 L. ed. 161; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 208, 29 L. ed. 161; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325.

A regulation of the rates of carriage is a regulation of commerce, and, moreover, a regulation which a state is not permitted to make, as to interstate commerce, even though Congress may have been silent on the subject.

Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 575, 30 L. ed. 244, 250; Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 485.

The Kentucky Constitution absolutely fixes the liability of the common carrier in all cases, and denies to the parties the right of varying that liability as they see fit.

The Supreme Court of the United States has always recognized these provisions as regulations of commerce.

Moore v. American Transp. Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 1, 16 L. ed. 874; Roid v. Heatt ("The Lottawanna"), 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 581, 23 L. ed. 663; Lord v. Goodall, N. & P. S. Co. 102 U. S. 541, 26 L. ed. 224; Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 27 L. ed. 1088.

As to all regulations of that part of interstate commerce consisting in transportation of persons and property from state to state the power of Congress is exclusive.

Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 53 U. S. 12 How. 299, 816, 13 L. ed. 996, 1008; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania ("State Freight Tax"), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 232, 279, 21 L. ed. 146, 162; Wetton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 280, 23 L. ed. 847, 849; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 204, 29 L. ed. 158, 162; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 123 U. S. 847, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 806; McGann v. Eddy (Mo.) 27 S. W. 541; Gatton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 28 L. R. A. 556.

The agreement in the contract of shipment herein, that $30 apiece for the cattle is as much as they are reasonably worth, being the basis of a reduced rate of freight, is valid and should be enforced.

Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 381, 28 L. ed. 717; Graves v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 137 Mass. 33, 50 Am. Rep. 282; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Hentlein, 52 Ala. 606, 23 Am. Rep. 578; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Oden, 80 Ala. 38; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sherrard, 84 Ala. 178; Western R. Co. v. Harwell, 91 Ala. 340; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lesser, 46 Ark. 286; Ex. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397; Coupland v. Housatonic R. Co. 61 Conn. 581, 15 L. R. A. 534; Rosenfeld v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 103 Ind. 121, 53 Am. Rep. 500; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Foley, 46 Kan. 457, 12 L. R. A. 799; Graves v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 137 Mass. 33, 50 Am. Rep. 282; Hill v. Boston, H. T. & W. R. Co. 144 Mass. 284; Moulton v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 81 Minn. 85, 47 Am. Rep. 781; Alair v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Minn. 160, 19 L. R. A. 764; Harvey v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 74 Mo. 538; McFadden v. Missouri P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 843; Dunley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 66 N. H. 283, 9 L. R. A. 449; Durgin v. American Exp. Co. 66 N. H. 277, 9 L. R. A. 458; Ballou v. Earle, 17 R. I. 441, 14 L. R. A. 438; Johnstone v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 39 S. C. 55; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sovell, 90 Tenn. 17; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 6 L. R. A. 849; Abrams v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Wis. 485; Boorman v. American Exp. Co. 21 Wis. 153; Black v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 55 Wis. 319, 42 Am. Rep. 718.

The same doctrine seems to have been recognized for a long time in Illinois.

Oppenheimer v. United States Exp. Co. 69 Ill. 63, 18 Am. Rep. 596; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chapman, 133 Ill. 96, 8 L. R. A. 508; Brehms v. Adams Exp. Co. 25 Md. 328; Zimmer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 460, and cases there cited.

The supreme court of Texas has stated in Southern P. R. Co. v. Maddox, 75 Tex. 300, that a fairly agreed valuation would be upheld.

No decision of the court of appeals of Kentucky is in conflict with this firmly established principle.

Orndorff v. Adams Exp. Co. 3 Bush, 194, 96 Am. Dec. 207; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Owen, 93 Ky. 201; Baughman v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 94 Ky. 150.

Messrs. Hobson & O'Meara, for appellee:

The carrier of live stock is an insurer of his vehicle and answerable for all loss from defects in it.

Rixford v. Smith, 52 N. H. 355, 13 Am. Rep. 53, note; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 292, 293, 505; Schouler, Bailm. § 402.

The state had the same right to prohibit the making of such contract within her borders as to pass the statute of frauds or the statute of limitations.

McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 485; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. §§ 8814, 8873.

The proposed notice in this case was to have been given after the carriage had ended and after the liability accrued, and the state had a right to dispense with this requirement just as it might have dispensed with the requirement of a prior notice in any other form of action.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gann, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 620; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 428; Armstrong v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 247; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Vandevanter, 26 Neb. 232, 8 L. R. A. 129; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 75 Tex. 572.

The carriage of live stock is within the common-law liability of a carrier.

Schouler, Bailm. § 370, note; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 216a-221; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Nichols, 9 Kan. 235, 12 Am. Rep. 494; Bamberg v. South Carolina R. Co. 9 S. C. N. S. 61, 30 Am. Rep. 18.

This contract, being made here, and being sued on here, will be governed by our laws.

Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 140-145; 7 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 3715.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment of the Hardin circuit court rendered in the suit of the appellee against the appellant. It appears that the appellee contracted with the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company to transport one carload of cattle from Cecilian, Kentucky, to Cincinnati, Ohio, which company had no line of road to Cincinnati, but under authority from the appellant to contract for the carrying of the cattle over appellant's lines; at least, such is the contention of appellee. It further appears that after the cattle were placed in appellant's charge, and while being transported to Cincinnati, one of them was killed, and others injured, in the sum of $200, for which sum suit was instituted in the Hardin circuit court, and a trial resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor for $135. Appellant's motion in arrest of judgment, and also for a new trial, having been overruled, it prosecutes this appeal.

A number of grounds for reversal are insisted upon, some of which need not be noticed in detail. We are of opinion that the Hardin circuit court had jurisdiction of the cause of action. The contract having been made in that county, and service had upon appellant's agent or chief officer in Jefferson county, the slight mistake in the true name of the appellant is not sufficient to invalidate the service. We do not think that any error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant was made in the admission of testimony. If it be conceded that appellee should not have been allowed to state or read the report of what the cattle sold for in Cincinnati, yet the same facts were testified to by Bethel, who knew the facts of his own knowledge, and no attempt was made to disprove the same; hence the testimony of Taber did not prejudice the substantial rights of the appellant. The instructions given contained the law of the case, and those refused were properly refused.

It appears that a written contract was signed by appellee and the agent aforesaid, which, among other things, provided that written notice of any injury to the cattle, or claim for damages, should be given to appellant before the cattle were unloaded, or mixed with other cattle,—otherwise, appellee should not be entitled to recover for any injury or damage; also, that it was agreed in said contract that the cattle were not worth over $30 each. No written notice was given, nor was appellee held on the trial to the valuations mentioned; and of this appellant complains, and insists that appellee could not recover anything, no notice having been given. Appellee admits the signing of the contract, but says he did not read it, and pleads that the stipulations therein are in violation of § 196 of the Constitution of this state, which provides that no common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common-law liability. It seems to us that the provisions quoted are in violation of the section supra. We do not agree with counsel for appellant that the section quoted is void because it conflicts with the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. It is in no sense an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, but simply determines what may or may not be a valid contract in this state. See Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 485. It is true that the common law as to the transportation of live stock is not the same in all respects as in regard to other articles, yet the carrier is bound to furnish a suitable and safe car, and no special contract can exonerate the carrier from liability for damage caused by the failure to so provide. Rhodes v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 9 Bush, 690.

The proof conduces to show that the injury complained of was the result of the floor of the car breaking. Certain it is that when the car reached Cincinnati there was a large break in the floor of the car containing the cattle. Public policy, as well as the weight of authority, requires that the carriers, in such cases, must show that the injury was not caused by the breakage, else they will be liable for such injuries or damage as may accrue to the stock, when it appears that such breakage would reasonably cause the injuries or damage shown to have occurred.

The proof in this case was sufficient to authorize the verdict.

Judgment affirmed, with damages.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Guffy, J., on June 5, 1896, handed down the following response:

We have considered the very earnest and 34 L. R. A.

able petition of appellant for a rehearing in this case, and its brief in support of the same, but we fail to see that the former opinion delivered herein is in any respect erroneous. The contract relied on by appellant, if enforced, would practically relieve it from all the responsibility of a common carrier. The notice required to be given as a condition precedent to appellee's right to sue or recover, if enforced, would clearly limit the liability of appellant for injury to the cattle to a much shorter time than the common law allowed, and would, if enforced, relieve appellant from all liability in this case, however gross or negligent appellant might have been; and, this being true, the stipulation is void, because prohibited by § 196 of the Constitution. And this case illustrates the propriety and justice of the provision, supra. The cattle were injured in the car, one being dead and the others injured, and the bottom of the car broken, thus making it important to unload and dispose of the cattle as soon as possible, and it was the privilege, if not the bounden duty, of appellant's agents or servants to see to the unloading of the cattle, and it is fair to conclude that the agents did see to the unloading and were therefore well aware of the damage sustained; and it further appears that the shipper was not in fact aware of any such provision being in the bills of lading, and, besides, it nowhere appears that appellant was in any way injured, or any advantage taken of it, by appellee's failure to give the notice. The case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gann, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 620, was a case where the shipper had signed or accepted a bill with a condition requiring notice of damage before suit should be brought, but a Texas statute provided, in substance, that such agreement should be invalid; and the court sustained the validity of the statute, and allowed the shipper to recover, notwithstanding he had failed to give the stipulated notice. In Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Johnson (decided by the same court January 23, 1897), reported in 29 S. W. 428, substantially the same question was raised, and decided adversely to the contention of appellant. The shipment was made from Texas to another state. The opinion of the court was delivered by James, Ch. J. We quote as follows: "The first assignment presents the action of the court sustaining plaintiff's (appellee's) exception to that part of the answer which set up that plaintiff was barred of his action by reason of a clause in the contract of shipment providing that suit should be commenced within forty days after the damages accrued, or such lapse of time should be conclusive against the validity of the claim. The pleadings showed an interstate shipment of live stock, and the position that appellant takes, in making this defense, is that our statute of March 4, 1891, prohibiting the making of a stipulation contract or agreement by which the time is limited to a shorter period than two years, has no application to such contracts. The provision plainly does not in any manner attempt to regulate commerce. It imposes no burden or restraint on trade or transportation, but does that which every state has power to do, namely, to provide and regulate the remedy within its jurisdiction when a cause of action arises. It would not be contended that its statutes of limitation prescribing a period of time within which suits may be brought do not apply to actions growing out of a transaction of interstate commerce as well as to others. It must follow from this that the states may make such statutes absolute; that is to say, not subject to be varied in their operation by a contract. The provision above referred to is within the scope of such power, and it applies to actions growing out of a contract of interstate character. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 75 Tex. 572; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eddins, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 116." In Armstrong v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (decided Feb. 27, 1895) reported in (Tex. Civ. App.) 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 247, the same question was presented and decided in the same way. See also Missouri P. R. Co. v. Vandewater, 26 Neb. 222, 8 L. R. A. 129. If a mere statute of a state can render null and void such contracts, surely a constitutional provision can do the same. In the case of Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hedger, 9 Bush, 645, 15 Am. Rep. 740, it was held that if live stock should be lost or injured while in the custody and care of the company or its agents, for transportation, this should be prima facie evidence of negligence, and the burden of proof is on the carrier to rebut this presumption. It was also held that a carrier cannot release himself by contract for ordinary negligence. Former decisions of this court, quoted by appellant to sustain its contention, have no application to this case, because they were rendered before the adoption of the present Constitution.

The case of McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 416, was an action against the railroad to recover for injury to cattle shipped from Clinton, Iowa, to Branch Station, Chicago, Illinois. The contract of shipment contained a provision exempting the company from any liability over $100 on horses or valuable live stock, except by special agreement. The damage claimed was over $100. We quote as follows from the opinion in that case: "By chapter 118 of the Laws of the Eleventh General Assembly, it is enacted 'that in the transportation of persons or property by any railroad or other company, or by any person or firm engaged in the business of transportation of persons or property, no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such railroad or other company, person, or firm from the full liabilities of a common carrier, which, in the absence of any contract, receipt, rule, or regulation would exist with respect to such persons or property.' Laws 1866, p. 121. No question is made but that under the operation of this statute the special contract in this case would be void, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties would be measured by the common law, as applicable to common carriers. But it is claimed by appellant's counsel that the contract, though made in Iowa, was to be, by its terms, wholly performed in Illinois, and that the law of the place where the contract is to be performed must govern in determining its validity and effect. The general rule is that, in conformity to the presumed intention of the parties, the contract, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance. Story, Conf. L. § 280. But it is also a general rule that, if the contract is void or illegal by the law of the place where it is made, it is held void and illegal everywhere. Id. § 248, and authorities cited. In this case, however, it is unnecessary to rest the decision upon any general rule; for by the express terms, as well as by the necessary implication, of the contract, it was to be partly performed in Iowa. The cattle were received in Clinton, Iowa, 'to be delivered at Chicago, Illinois.' To do this, it was necessary to transport them some distance, more or less, in Iowa, before they could reach Illinois. The contract being entire and indivisible, made in Iowa, and to be partly performed here, it must, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, be governed by our law. And by our law, so far as it seeks to change the common law, it is wholly nugatory and inoperative. The rights of the parties, then, are to be determined under the common law, the same as if no such contract had been made." The foregoing opinion was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 457, 32 L. ed. 797, in the following language: "In McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412, 417, cattle transported by a railroad company from a place in Iowa to a place in Illinois, under a special contract made in Iowa, containing a stipulation that the company should be exempt from liability for any damage, unless resulting from collision or derailling of trains, were injured in Illinois by the negligence of the company's servants; and the supreme court of Iowa, Chief Justice Dillon presiding, held the case to be governed by the law of Iowa, which permitted no common carrier to exempt himself from the liability which would exist in the absence of the contract. The court said: 'The contract being entire and indivisible, made in Iowa, and to be partly performed here, it must, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, be governed by our law. And by our law, so far as it seeks to change the common law, it is wholly nugatory and inoperative. The rights of the parties, then, are to be determined under the common law, the same as if no such contract had been made.'"

The case of Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 486, was a suit to recover damages for injury to horses shipped from Des Moines, Iowa, to the town of Miller, in Dakota territory. The contract provided, in substance, that the defendant should not be liable for more than $100 damages to each horse. Section 1808 of the Code of Iowa provides that no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt any corporation engaged in transporting persons or property by railway from liability of a common carrier or carrier of passengers which would exist had no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation been made or entered into. We quote the third and final paragraph of the decision in the above named case: "The evidence tended to prove that two of the horses were worth $150 each, and that two others were worth $125 each, and that the others were worth $100 each. Defendant asked the circuit court to instruct the jury that, under the contract, defendant's liability for the horses could not exceed $100 per head. The court refused to give this instruction, and ruled that, if plaintiff was entitled to recover, the jury should award him the full value of the property. Whether a common carrier, in the absence of any statute restricting his powers in that respect, can, by rule, regulation, or contract, limit his liability for the property received by him for carriage, has been the subject of much discussion, and there is great conflict in the decision of the courts on the question. We have no occasion, however, in this case, to enter into that question. No one would question that, in the absence of a contract limiting the amount of his liability, the shipper would be entitled, in case of the destruction or injury of the property under such circumstances as that the carrier was liable for the loss, to recover full compensation for injuries sustained. The statute quoted above prohibits the making of any contract that would exempt him from the liability of a common carrier which would exist if no contract, rule, or regulation existed. If the statute is applicable to a contract in which the undertaking is to transport the property from this state into another state or territory of the United States, it cannot be doubted, we think, that the provision of the contract in question, by which it was sought to limit the liability of defendant for the horses to an amount less than the actual value of the property, is repugnant to its provisions, and consequently invalid. It is contended, however, that the state has no power to place a restriction of that character upon the carrier who contracts for the transportation of property from this state into another state or territory. The position is that the restriction, if applicable to a contract of this character, would be a regulation of commerce among the states,—a subject which, under the Federal Constitution, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. In our opinion, however, this position cannot be maintained. The provision is in no just or legal sense a regulation of commerce. It prescribes no regulation for the transportation of freight upon any of the channels of communication. It leaves the parties free to make such contracts as they may choose to make with reference to the compensation which shall be paid for the services to be rendered. The carrier is left free to demand such compensation for the carriage of the property as is just, considering the responsibility he assumes when he receives it. He is forbidden to make any contract that would exempt him from any of the liabilities which arise by implication from his undertaking to carry the property. But no burden is placed upon the property which is the subject of the contract; nor is any rule prescribed for his government respecting it. That it is within the power of the state to prescribe such a limitation upon his power to contract, we have no doubt. The statute was enacted by the state in the exercise of the police power with which it is vested, and it is applicable to all contracts entered into within its jurisdiction. The question involved is not different in principle from that decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in what are known as the 'Granger Cases.' See Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97."

It seems clear to us that the contract relied upon by the appellant is in violation of § 196 of the Constitution, and therefore void where the contract was made; and, being void in this state, it is void everywhere. Story, Conf. L. § 248; 7 Laws, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 8878. Section 196, supra, is in no sense an attempt to regulate or interfere with interstate commerce. It does not seek to impose any condition on commerce, nor to regulate freight charges, rate of speed, or kind of cars, nor change or define the duties or responsibilities of common carriers, but is merely the exercise of the undoubted right of the states to determine what shall be a valid contract, and to control the remedy in her own courts. Owen v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Ky. 696.

Judgment affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

R. A. FRAME et al., Appts.,

v.

Charles F. SLITER et al., Respts.

(29 Or. 12L.)

A grantor of real estate has no implied equitable lien thereon for the unpaid purchase money after he has delivered an absolute deed to the property and placed the grantee in possession.

(June 15, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clatsop County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enforce a vendor's lien. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. B. Thompson, for appellants:

The doctrine of vendor's lien exists.

Pease v. Kelly, 8 Or. 417; Kelly v. Ruble, 11 Or. 75; Gee v. McMillan, 14 Or. 268, 58 Am. Rep. 815; Lewis v. Henderson, 23 Or. 548; Thomas v. Thomas, 24 Or. 251; Jones v. Gates, Id. 411.

There is nothing in the policy of our laws, or of the laws in relation to the registration of instruments affecting the title to real property generally, which calls for the overthrow of this doctrine.

NOTE—In connection with the above case as to vendor's liens, see some authorities in note to 34 L. R. A.

O'Connor v. O'Connor (Tenn.) 7 L. R. A. 38, and Gemmer v. Palmater (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 187.

See Hill's Code, § 414.

The grantee of the original vendee took the title with full notice. So there is no secret lien. The policy which permits the enforcement of secret liens as to personal property, after the same has gone out of the possession of the true owner as the case of Singer Mfg. Co. v. Graham, 8 Or. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 572, should permit the adoption of the doctrine of vendor's lien, in this state.

Chilton v. Lyons, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 458, 17 L. ed. 804; Peters v. Bowman, 98 U. S. 56, 25 L. ed. 91; Thredgill v. Pintard, 58 U. S. 12 How. 24, 18 L. ed. 877.

The following states have adopted and recognized the doctrine:

Alabama: Bankhead v. Owen, 60 Ala. 457.
Arkansas: Harris v. Hanie, 87 Ark. 848.
California: Cahoon v. Robinson, 6 Cal. 226.
Colorado: Francis v. Wells, 2 Colo. 660.
Dakota: Civil Code, § 1801.
District of Columbia: Ford v. Smith, 1 MacArth. 592.

Florida: Woods v. Bailey, 3 Fla. 41.
Idaho: Code, § 8440.
Illinois: Manning v. Frazier, 96 Ill. 279.
Indiana: Richards v. McPherson, 74 Ind. 158.

Iowa: Eaecher v. Simmons, 54 Iowa, 269;
Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S. 183, 37 L. ed. 109.

Kentucky: Emison v. Riasque, 9 Bush, 24.
Maryland: Schours v. Stein, 29 Md. 117;
Glise'in v. Fergusson, 4 Harr. & J. 525.
Michigan: Hiscock v. Norton, 42 Mich. 320.
Minnesota: Selby v. Stanley, 4 Minn. 65.
Mississippi: Walton v. Hargroves, 42 Miss. 18, 97 Am. Dec. 429.

Missouri: McKnight v. Bright, 2 Mo. 110.
New Jersey: Ogden v. Thornton, 30 N. J. Eq. 589.

New York: Chase v. Peck, 21 N. Y. 581.
Ohio: Whetzel v. Roberts, 31 Ohio St. 503.
Rhode Island: Kent v. Gerhard, 12 R. I. 92, 84 Am. Rep. 612.
Tennessee: Russell v. Dodson, 6 Baxt. 16.
Texas: Waldrom v. Zacharie, 54 Tex. 503.
Wisconsin: De Forest v. Holm, 38 Wis. 516.

In the states of Georgia, Vermont, and Virginia the earlier decisions adopted the doctrine. Manly v. Slason, 21 Vt. 271, 52 Am. Dec. 60; Tompkins v. Mitchell, 2 Rand. (Va.) 428; Mims v. Lockett, 23 Ga. 287, 68 Am. Dec. 521. But it is now abolished by statute.

In the following states it has neither been adopted nor repudiated:

Connecticut: Watson v. Wells, 5 Conn. 472;
Meigs v. Dimock, 6 Conn. 468.
Delaware: Budd v. Busti, 1 Harr. (Del.) 69.
New Hampshire: Arlin v. Brown, 44 N. H. 102.

In Washington the doctrine has been recognized, though not directly decided to exist: Sheldon v. Jones, 4 Wash. 692.

The only states which have denied the existence of the doctrine are:

Kansas: Simpson v. Mundee, 3 Kan. 172.
Maine: Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410.
Massachusetts: Ahrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449.
Nebraska: Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265.
34 L. R. A.

South Carolina: Wragg v. Comptroller General, 2 Desaus. Eq. 509.

In North Carolina the case of Mast v. Ripper, 81 N. C. 830, seems to recognize the doctrine, though the earlier case of Wemble v. Battle, 3 Ired. Eq. 182, denied it.

The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly recognized the doctrine.

Chilton v. Lyons, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 458, 17 L. ed. 804.

The doctrine was adopted and enforced by Judge Deady, in Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. v. Crocker, 6 Sawy. 574.

See 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1249 et seq.; Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 829.

BEAN, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question in this case is whether a grantor of real estate, by absolute deed, followed by delivery of possession to his grantee, has an implied equitable lien thereon for the unpaid purchase money. It has been several times mooted in this court, but the doctrine of the English court of chancery, which recognizes and upholds such lien, has never been recognized or established here, although the state is classed by many text-writers among those in which the lien prevails. The earliest case in which reference is made to the question, and the one most strongly relied upon to sustain the doctrine, is Pease v. Kelly, 3 Or. 417, but the court in that case only decided that, by taking a mortgage to secure the payment of purchase money, the vendor waived the equitable lien and therefore could not maintain the suit. Nothing more was in fact decided in that case, although it is stated in the opinion that "the lien exists if there is no higher security." It is next referred to in Kelly v. Ruble, 11 Or. 75, where the court, after disposing of the case on other grounds, says: "We have thus far impliedly admitted the existence of the equitable lien of a vendor of real estate for the unpaid purchase price. But we doubt the actual existence of the lien in this state. Ahrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449; Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64, 10 Am. Dec. 428. It is not believed the existence of such a lien was decided in Pease v. Kelly, 3 Or. 417." The question again arose in Gee v. McMillan, 14 Or. 268, 58 Am. Rep. 315; and Mr. Justice Strahan puts his decision in that case squarely on the doctrine of the existence of a grantor's lien, but Chief Justice Lord dissents in toto, and Mr. Justice Thayer, while concurring in the result upon other grounds, expressly disclaimed any intention to decide whether the principles upon which the doctrine is supposed to be founded are broad enough "to uphold a vendor's lien to the extent of raising a trust in favor of a grantor who has conveyed by deed of absolute conveyance, so as to admit of the purchase price being made a charge upon the property conveyed, in an ordinary case of sale of real estate." In Lewis v. Henderson, 22 Or. 548; Thomas v. Thomas, 24 Or. 254; and Jones v. Gates, Id. 415, where the doctrine is again referred to, the court carefully avoided approving it even by inference. From these decisions it is apparent that it has never received judicial sanction, or become a law of real property in this state, and its decision is now made necessary for the first time. We therefore feel at liberty to determine the question as one of first impression, and, after having given it the careful and deliberate consideration which its importance demands, we are clearly of the opinion that the doctrine of a grantor's lien is so opposed to the general policy and course of legislation in this state that it ought not to prevail here. The whole tenor of our legislation is to make the title to real estate as simple and easily understood as possible, and to facilitate its transfer, by discouraging all secret or latent equities, and requiring all conveyances thereof and encumbrances thereon to be made a matter of public record.

The doctrine seems to have been borrowed by the English courts of chancery from the civil law, as a means of evading the rule of the common law under which land was not liable, both during and after the life of the debtor for simple-contract debts, and, after the reason for its original adoption had ceased to exist, was enforced upon the ground that the previous decisions had "the effect of contract, though no actual contract had taken place." Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. Jr. 329. Many of the courts of this country, following the English cases, have adopted the rule; but they have never been able, in our opinion, to place the doctrine upon any satisfactory principle applicable to the condition of affairs in a country where real estate is one of the principal articles of commerce, and liable for the debts of the owner, and in which a system of registration prevails. The doctrine has been variously stated to rest upon natural equity, a supposed intention of the parties, a trust arising out of the vendee's holding the land without paying the price, the implied agreement of the parties, and an equitable mortgage. But, manifestly, it cannot be supported as an equitable mortgage, because there is no pretense in such cases that there was any agreement for security on the land, which is essential to an equitable mortgage; nor can it be supported as a trust, for a constructive trust cannot arise from the mere breach of a contract to pay money in the absence of fraud; nor on the ground of an implied agreement, because, as said by Mr. Justice Gibson, in 7 Serg. & R. 76, 10 Am. Dec. 428, "the implication that there is an intention to reserve a lien for the purchase money in all cases where the parties do not, by express acts, evince a contrary intention, is in almost every case inconsistent with the truth of the fact, and in all instances without exception, in contradiction of the express terms of the contract, which purports to be a conveyance of everything that can pass." Nor do we think it can now be put upon the natural equity "that a person having got the estate of another shall not, as between them, keep it and not pay the consideration," because there is no reason for a resort to equity in this country, where real estate is liable to seizure upon attachment and execution, and the courts of law afford a creditor a speedy remedy for the enforcement of his claim. And, besides, "it is inconsistent with natural justice," quoting again from Mr. Justice Gibson, in the case referred to, "that a vendor who publishes to the world, by the terms of his deed, that he has parted with his whole interest and has trusted to the personal security of the vendee, should become an object of special protection, against the consequences of his own negligence; and that, too, at the expense of a third person, who, in purchasing from the vendee, even with notice that the purchase money was unpaid, has been guilty of nothing positively immoral or even unconscionable." If a vendor sells and conveys real estate, and, either through negligence or overconfidence, chooses to rely upon the personal security of his vendee for the purchase money, he has no special claim to the aid of a court of equity to protect him from the consequences of his own act, by enforcing some secret lien which, in the nature of things, could be known only to himself and his vendee and such persons as they might take into their confidence—a practice which, if tolerated, would have a tendency to open wide the door to fraud and perjury.

The earliest English case which contains a full discussion of the doctrine and the reason and authorities by which it is supported is Mackreth v. Symmons, supra. In that case, Lord Eldon was only able to determine that two points were clearly settled: (1) That, generally speaking, there is such a lien; and (2) that, in those general cases in which there would be a lien as between vendor and vendee, the vendor will have a lien against a third person with notice that the money was not paid. But, as to what would be sufficient to make a case in which the lien would not exist, he felt obliged to declare, from the authorities, that it was "obvious that a vendor, taking a security, unless by evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain, he shows his purpose, cannot know the situation in which he stands without the judgment of a court, how far that security does contain the evidence, manifest intention, or declaration plain upon that point;" and that "it has always struck me, considering this subject, that it would have been better at once to have held that the lien should exist in no case, and the vendor should suffer the consequences of his want of caution, or to have laid down the rule the other way so distinctly that a purchaser might be able to know, without the judgment of a court, in what cases it would, and in what it would not, exist." And, although the doctrine of the English court of chancery has been the subject of much learned discussion in this country, it is no more satisfactory now than it was in Lord Eldon's time. Indeed, it is much less so. From the very nature of the lien itself, there can be no fixed rules concerning it. It is "a mere creature of a court of equity, which it molds and fashions according to its own purposes," and "has no existence until it is established by the decree of a court in the particular case, and is then made subservient to all other equities between the parties." Story, J., in Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, 191. And Mr. Justice Potter says: "Its existence depends upon and is controlled by no settled rules, but, on the contrary, the existence of the lien generally is made to depend upon the peculiar state of facts and circumstances surrounding the particular case, that is, whether or not a case of natural equity is established:

and, if so, whether it is not made to yield to higher or superior equities in some other person,—whether the party is not to be regarded as having waived it, or as having intended to waive or postpone it to another equity, or whether, by the acts or omissions to act, or by the neglect of the party claiming such lien to enforce it within a reasonable time, the right is not lost as being the superior claim. These considerations control and vary the result as equity demands." Pisk v. Potter, 2 Keves, 64.

Under the authorities, it would seem that, where the doctrine prevails, each case must be determined upon its own peculiar circumstances, according to the views of the chancellor, and the weight of the argument at the bar; so that it is impossible to tell, without the judgment of a court, whether the lien does or does not exist. It may be well doubted whether any subject connected with the American law of real property has provoked more judicial discussion and controversy, and is now in a more chaotic state, than the doctrine of a grantor's lien where such lien is held to exist. There is hardly a rule upon the subject which has not been somewhere denied, and hardly any two states agree upon the essential points of the doctrine. "No other single topic belonging to the equity jurisprudence," says Mr. Pomeroy, "has occasioned such a diversity and even discord of opinion among the American courts as this of the grantor's lien. Upon nearly every question that has arisen as to its operation, its waiver, or discharge, the parties against whom it avails, and the parties in whose favor it exists, the decisions in different states, and sometimes even in the same state, are directly conflicting. It is practically impossible to formulate any general rules representing the doctrine as established throughout the whole country." 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1251. Indeed, the remark attributed to Lord Mansfield, that "the more we read, the more we shall be confounded," is peculiarly applicable to the condition of the law upon this question. It has been adjudged that the lien does not exist under any circumstances after an absolute conveyance, by such able jurists as Mr. Justice Gray, of Massachusetts (now of the Supreme Court of the United States), Gibson of Pennsylvania, Nash and Ruffin of North Carolina, Crozier of Kansas, Shipley of Maine, and Maxwell of Nebraska, to whose opinions in Kaufelt v. Bower, 7 Serg. & R. 64, 10 Am. Dec. 428; Ahrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449; Womble v. Battle, 3 Ired. Eq. 183; Simpson v. Mundee, 8 Kan. 173; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Edminster v. Higgins, 6 Neb. 265,—we refer for arguments which seem to us conclusive against the existence of such a lien. In some of the states it has been adopted by the courts, and afterwards abolished by the legislature; and in others, although the courts have felt bound to follow earlier cases, it has of late years been done with expressions of regret that such liens were ever admitted in this country, where registration is so generally provided for and practised.

In courts of the United States the doctrine has been recognized where established by the local laws of different states (Rice v. Rice, 86 84 L. R. A.

Fed. Rep. 858); but it does not seem to have been looked upon with favor, if we may judge from the remarks of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in Bayley v. Greenleaf, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 51, 5 L. ed. 395, that "it is a secret invisible trust, known only to the vendor and vendee, and to those to whom it may be communicated in fact. To the world the vendee appears to hold the estate divested of any trust whatever; and credit is given to him, in the confidence that the property is his own in equity, as well as law. A vendor relying upon this lien ought to reduce it to a mortgage, so as to give notice of it to the world. If he does not he is in some degree, accessory to the fraud committed on the public, by an act which exhibits the vendee as the complete owner of an estate on which he claims a secret lien." The authorities pro and con. are collated in 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 163; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1251; 2 Jones, Liens, § 1061; 1 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. §§ 296, 297; and note to Mackreth v. Symmons, 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 447. And we think an examination of them and the discussion of the question by the several authors will clearly show that the whole doctrine is inconsistent with the general policy prevailing in this country of making all matters of title dependent upon record evidence, so that interested parties may know whether the land is encumbered by a lien without waiting for the judgment of a court, as is admittedly the case in many instances where a grantor's lien exists; that it bristles with difficulties, snares, and dangers, and ought not to find lodgment in this state, where its only effect would be to render the title to real estate uncertain, embarrass its alienation, foster litigation, and offer temptation to fraud and perjury, with no substantial benefit to anyone except to protect some grantor from the consequences of his own voluntary act. The decided tendency of modern legislation and legal learning is clearly against the existence of such a lien under any circumstances. Mr. Pomeroy ventures the opinion "that the original grounds and reasons for admitting the grantor's lien do not exist in our own country, and the lien itself is not in harmony with our general real property law. The tendency both of our legislation and of our social customs is to make land a subject of commerce, and its transmission as free as possible; while the rights of grantors can be fully protected by mortgages which, in nearly all the states, are widely different from the instrument bearing the same name in England." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., note to § 1250. And Mr. Jones says that "it is to be noticed that, within a few years, several states have abolished this implied lien, and that strong expressions of disapprobation of the doctrine have been used in others. Moreover the practical tendency in the older states is to rely upon formal instruments for security when security is wanted. It may be doubted, therefore, whether this doctrine will long survive." 2 Jones, Liens, note to § 1063. And the learned editors of the Leading Cases in Equity, upon an exhaustive review of the authorities, conclude that "there can be little doubt that this principle, of an implied lien for purchase money, has no just application in a country where every debt may be at once made a lien by judgment, and where debts generally are a lien on the lands of decedents; and that the courts of those states which have wholly expelled the doctrine have exhibited a more accurate appreciation of its nature and purpose than those which have retained it." 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 502. The doctrine may have been less objectionable in a country where land was not liable for the contract debts of the owner, although incurred in its purchase, and where the policy of the law was to discourage the alienation of real estate; but we are satisfied that it is repugnant to the registration law and general policy of this state, and is no part of our law.

The decree of the court below will be affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CHICAGO

v.

PHENIX FURNITURE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

A decree in a sister state as to the amount of assets and debts of an insolvent mutual insurance company, and of the amount of assessments necessary to liquidate its liabilities, rendered by a court to which a statute has given entire jurisdiction in the matter, without service upon or notice to the stockholders or members, is conclusive on a stockholder when sued upon a note which was a chose in action in possession of the company and under the control of the court which made the decree, although the court in which he is sued takes a different view of the case as to the assessments.

(McGrath, Ch. J., and Long, J., dissent.)

(December 31, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kent County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce an assessment on a note given for premium for fire insurance. Affirmed.

Plaintiff was an Illinois corporation doing mutual fire insurance business in Michigan. Defendant is a Michigan corporation which insured with plaintiff and executed the following premium note:

Chicago, Ill. May 1, 1889.

For value received in policy No. 5739, dated the 1st day of May, 1889, we promise to pay the Mutual Fire Insurance Company the sum of two hundred and forty dollars, by instalments, at such a time as the directors of said company may order and assess, for the losses and expenses of said company, pursuant to its charter and by-laws. It is hereby expressly understood and agreed that this note is not transferable, and that there is no liability beyond the face amount thereof.

The secretary is authorized to number and date application and note, No. 5739.

(Signed)

Phoenix Furniture Co.

R. W. Merrill, Treas.

Plaintiff made one assessment on this note which was paid by defendant on October 1, 1890. The auditor of public accounts of the state of Illinois instituted proceedings to wind up the affairs of the company, collect its assets, pay its debts; and for this purpose a receiver was appointed. The receiver instituted a proceeding to determine the amount of assessment on premium notes which would be necessary to liquidate the debts of the corporation to which only the company and its officers and directors were made parties. The court found that an assessment of 65 per cent would be necessary for that purpose and this action was instituted to enforce that assessment.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Meers, Fletcher & Wanty, for plaintiff in error:

An assessment can only be laid upon the conditions stated in the charter, and for the purposes therein mentioned.

NOTE.—Effect of assessment on stockholders made under order of court in another state as res adjudicata.

Since the extent to which a decision of a state court must be held conclusive in another state is a Federal question, the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States constitute the final authority on the question of the extent to which an assessment upon stockholders, made under order of a state court, will be binding upon nonresident stockholders in other states. That court has to a considerable extent settled the law of the subject.

It held in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 102 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 936, that a release, or payment, or the statute of limitations, or any other defense going to show that the defendant is not liable upon his contract of subscription, can be pleaded by him in an action brought to enforce an assessment made by a court in another state.

34 L. R. A.

An order of assessment which is, in effect, as it is in terms, simply a "call or assessment" upon all stockholders who had not paid for their shares in full, whether it is made by the directors as provided by the contract of subscription or by the court as the successor of the directors in this respect, is not and does not purport to be a judgment against anyone, and does not undertake to determine the question whether any particular stockholder is or is not liable in any amount. Id.

Yet it also said in the same case that such an order is doubtless conclusive evidence of the necessity for making such an assessment, and to that extent binds every stockholder without personal notice to him, unless it is directly attacked and set aside by appropriate judicial proceedings.

So, in Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 533, 34 L. ed. 232, it was decided that a stockholder in a foreign corporation when sued on an assessment cannot impeach, except for fraud, the conclusiveness of a 2 May, Ins. § 557; Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. v. Guss, 49 Mo. 829, 8 Am. Rep. 132; American Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 19 Iowa, 502.

It is necessary for an assessment to be made for the just proportion of the losses and expenses which occurred during the life of the policy for which the premium note was given, and it is therefore necessary to ascertain and have before the court proof of such losses and expenses for each assessment made on each note.

Davis v. Oakkosh Upholstery Co. 82 Wis. 488; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Burnham, 79 Wis. 47; Boren v. Kuehn, Id. 58.

A receiver must show that the contingency has happened which authorizes an assessment, and that the assessment is a legal one assessed on each premium note according to the contract therein contained, and for losses and expenses which have occurred during the life of the policy for which the notes were given; and this is true even when the assessment is made by order of the court.

Bangs v. Duckinfield, 18 N. Y. 592; Jackson v. Roberts, 81 N. Y. 804; Cuykendall v. Corning, 88 N. Y. 129.

Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184, was a case of a suit against the stockholder of an ordinary corporation whose subscription was payable absolutely and not conditionally. In such a corporation the directors have the power while the corporation is a going concern to make and call for any portion or all of an unpaid subscription, and such a call is binding upon the stockholders.

Budd v. Multnomah Street R. Co. 15 Or. 418; Chouteau Ins. Co. v. Floyd, 74 Mo. 286.

The directors having the power, before the corporation becomes insolvent, to make a call binding upon the stockholders, a court of equity can do the same thing.

Under the statute of Illinois the assessment made on the stockholders under an order of the court would have no binding force on any stockholder who was not made a party to the proceeding.

Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 32, § 25; Chandler v. Brown, 77 Ill. 338; Lamar Ins. Co. v. Gulick, 102 Ill. 41; Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 338.

We should not be assessed to pay losses which had not been incurred, and the unearned premiums were not a proper subject of assessment, and including them in it made the assessment void, for the defendant by its contract contained in its notes agreed to pay assessments for losses and expenses of the company only, and it cannot be assessed for anything else.

Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 398; Dewey v. Davis, 82 Wis. 500.

Messrs. D. J. Schuyler and Mark Norris, for defendant in error:

By the laws of Illinois the decree of the Illinois court bound defendant.

Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Gray, 123 Ill. 630; Rand, McN. & Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 58 Ill. App. 528; Ill. Rev. Stat. 1887, pp. 848 et seq.

And being binding there, it is here, as it must here receive the same faith and credit that are given it in Illinois.

Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 90 Am. Dec. 90; Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 Mich. 624; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 905; Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 8 L. ed. 411; Hampton v. McConnell, 76 U. S. 3 Wheat. 284, 4 L. ed. 378; M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177; Christmas v. Russell, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 200, 18 L. ed. 475; Green v. Van Burkirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 139, 19 L. ed. 109; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 4, 29 L. ed. 536; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 111, 33 L. ed. 541.

The proceedings in Illinois were taken under an act entitled, "An Act in Regard to the Dissolution of Insurance Companies," approved February 17, 1874, and in force July 1, 1874.

Ill. Rev. Stat. 1887, p. 848, §§ 103-111; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Gray, supra.

A court acquires jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of corporate assets by service of process upon the corporation. The stockholder is represented in his interest, as such, by the presence of the corporation.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 822; Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 598; Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 98; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. ed. 230.

Defendant's promise was to pay as the directors, from time to time, might order. The directors, who were defendant's agents, having neglected to make order for payment, a court of equity in their place might make the order.

Sanger v. Upton, supra; Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184; Glenn v. Williams, supra; Hamilton v. Glenn, 86 Va. 901; Wardle v. Cummings, 86 Mich. 896; Hamilton judgment rendered in another state establishing the propriety and necessity of making an assessment.

In Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184, it held that the fact that a foreign stockholder was not a party to the cause between a creditor and the corporation in which an assessment was made does not prevent him from being bound by the call which is made by the court, and that it is not necessary that he should be present or have any service of process or notice in order to make a valid assessment.

In Glenn v. Springs, 26 Fed. Rep. 494, it was held that an assessment made by a court upon stockholders of a corporation in a suit against it by creditors is conclusive even upon one who was not personally served with notice, in the absence of fraud, on the questions of the power to make the call, the informalities in the incorporation, the existence of bona fide debts against the company, and the defenses of laches and the statute of limitations.

"If an assessment has been made in the state of Illinois, either by the board of directors or by the court, such assessment cannot conclude or affect the stockholders in this state, and who are defendants in this case, because they were not parties to it or in anywise bound by it," said the court in Holmes v. Sherwood, 16 Fed. Rep. 723, in an action brought in the circuit court of the United States in Iowa. But this was said in a case in which it did not appear that any assessment had been made, and it was said in upholding the right of judgment creditors of a corporation to sue stockholders in Iowa without any previous assessment and without making all the stockholders parties.

In an action in the circuit court of the United States in Indiana to recover of an Indiana stock-

Mut. Ins. Co. v. Parker, 11 Allen, 574; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Langley, 62 Md. 212.

The decree of the Illinois court in making the assessment in question was binding upon the members of the company in Illinois.

Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Gray, 122 Ill. 630.

This contract was made, as appears by its face, in Illinois, under Illinois law, and should therefore be decided according to Illinois law.

Story, Confli. L. §§ 263, 266; Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 459; Collins Iron Co. v. Burkam, 10 Mich. 289; Holdridge v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 16 Mich. 70; McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co. 52 Mich. 193.

It therefore cannot be presumed to be a Michigan contract.

American Ins. Co. v. Cutler, 36 Mich. 261; Rand, McN. & Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 58 Ill. App. 528.

Members of a mutual company are liable to be assessed for unearned premiums as a part of the losses and expenses of the company.

Re Minnesota Mut. F. Ins. Co. 49 Minn. 291; Clark v. Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 180 Ind. 832.

The item of $25,000 for expenses of receivership come within the word "expenses" in the premium note and may be included in an assessment.

Wardle v. Townsend, 75 Mich. 385, 4 L. R. A. 511; 3 May, Ins. § 559; 3 Biddle, Ins. § 986.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

After a full argument upon the rehearing of this cause, we are satisfied that we were in error in reversing the judgment. The testimony was not returned, and the case is before us on findings of fact and law, to which no exceptions were taken. The sole question, therefore, is, Do the facts found support the judgment? We held, in Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 393, that the defendants, under such a note, were not liable to an assessment for unearned or return premiums. That case would, of course, control this, unless the decree of the Illinois court is conclusive upon the courts of this state. The Constitution of the United States declares that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state." Article 4, § 1. In the early case of Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 3 L. ed. 411, it was held that the decrees and judgments of the courts of one state were conclusive in the courts of sister states. This case has since been uniformly followed. Where a court has jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties, its judgment is conclusive in other courts, and the only remedy is by direct proceeding in the original cause. Hanley v. D. oghue, 116 U. S. 4, 29 L. ed. 536; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 111, 33 L. ed. 541; Bone steel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 871, 80 Am. Dec. 90. It is conceded that as against the corporation itself, and the directors and officers thereof, the rule applies. It is, however, contended that it does not apply to a stockholder of such corporation who is not made a direct party to the original suit. That is the question in this case. We are not dealing with a case where a stockholder is interposing the defense of payment, or any other defense which was not passed upon in the original suit against the corporation. In such a case there is no judgment or decree of the court of a sister state which other courts must recognize. But the very point now urged as a defense was involved and determined by the Illinois court. This was an Illinois contract. These notes were chosen in action, were first in possession of the company in Illinois, were turned over by it to the receiver, and were under the direct control of the Illinois courts. That court entered a decree, upon evidence placed before it, determining the amount of assets and debts, and the amount of the assessment necessary to liquidate its liabilities. If every stockholder may now contest this decree, the difficulty thus thrown in the way of an orderly and practical settlement of the affairs of the insolvent corporation is apparent. Different courts might adopt different rulings upon the amount of the assessment. We think the better doctrine is that each stockholder or member of the corporation is an integral part thereof, and is represented in such suit through the corporation itself, and that such decree is binding and conclusive upon him. Two courts have so held in regard to the case now under consideration. Rand, McN. & Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 58 Ill. App. 528; Parker v. Stoughton Mill Co. 91 Wis. 174. In the latter case two points were raised: First, that the receiver in Illinois could not sue in the courts of Wisconsin, and, second, that the as-holder the amount of an assessment decreed by the district court of the United States in Illinois against the stockholders of a bankrupt insurance company is enforced in Payson v. Withers, 5 Bias. 200. But the question whether or not the assessment was res adjudicata was not discussed, and various defenses were made and considered at length.

In respect to an assessment rendered against stockholders ordered by a court of one state when suit thereon is brought in a Federal court sitting in another state, an objection that it appears to have been ex parte is answered by saying that if the assessment were to have the force of a judgment against the defendant there would be great force in the objection, though possibly not controlling force; but the court says: "I understand that all defenses specially applicable to this defendant, such as that he was not a stockholder, etc., are still open to him, and, indeed, perhaps the 84 L. R. A.

whole subject may be open. Enough is alleged in the declaration to put him to his defense. Demurrer overruled." Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 842.

An order by the bankrupt court under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4972, that the balance unpaid upon stock of an insolvent corporation should be paid to the assignee, can be made without the presence of the stockholder. Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 66, 23 L. ed. 220. This was a case in which the action against the stockholder to recover the amount due from him was brought in the same court, but the decision seems applicable to such an action brought anywhere.

A decree against a corporation by a court of the state in which it is domiciled is conclusive against the stockholders wherever they reside, so far as it affects the condition and status of the corporate property, although they were not personally made assessment was inequitable and unjust and hence should not be enforced. The distinction between the rights of property situated in other states, and those of choses in action, is there very clearly pointed out. Upon the first point the court says: "There is no question here of a transfer of property in this state. No such transfer was attempted. The property in question (that is, the defendant's note and its liability to pay assessments) was in Illinois at the office of the company. They were choses in action, and their situs was at the residence of the company." Upon the second point the court says: "If a judgment is conclusive in the state where rendered, it is conclusive here. The decree by which the assessment in question was made was undoubtedly conclusive on the members or policy holders of the defunct company, unless attacked in a direct proceeding, notwithstanding they were not present when it was rendered."

... We can come to no other conclusion than that we are bound under the constitutional requirement of 'full faith and credit' to hold that the decree making the assessment in question, being conclusive in Illinois upon all members and policy holders unless attacked by direct proceeding is conclusive here and not open to collateral attack."

The point appears to be expressly decided in Hawkins v. Glenn, 181 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184. The proceedings in that case were substantially the same as in this. The defense was that the stockholder was not a party to the suit, that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, that he was not responsible on 150 shares, and that interest should not have been allowed. The stockholder was sued in North Carolina. A decree had been rendered in a court of chancery in Virginia which had ascertained the extent of the liabilities and assets of the corporation, and decreed the assessment required to pay its liabilities. The court held the decree conclusive, and, in deciding it, speaking through Chief Justice Fuller, says: "A stockholder is so far an integral part of the corporation that, in view of the law, he is privy to the proceedings touching the body of which he is a member," citing Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. ed. 220. The same question was again before the court in Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 538, 34 L. ed. 262, and the same conclusion reached, quoting from Hawkins v. Glenn.

The same was held in Looming F. Ins. Co. v. Langley, 62 Md. 311. The learned counsel for the defendant cite Chandler v. Brown, 77 Ill. 333, and Lamar Ins. Co. v. Gulick, 102 Ill. 41. These cases are distinguished from a case like the present in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Gray, 123 Ill. 630. The two former cases were based upon a statute which provided that stockholders should be made parties to the suit. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1889, chap. 32, §§ 1-40. The decree of the Illinois court in this case was based upon an act in regard to the dissolution of insurance companies. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1889, chap. 73, §§ 103-111. This does not provide for any service upon or notice to the stockholders or members, but confers the entire jurisdiction in such cases upon the courts. Upon the question of notice to stockholders, see Wardle v. Cummings, 36 Mich. 400. Mr. May, in his work on Insurance (vol. 2, § 557), says: "The receiver of an insolvent corporation stands upon no better footing" than would the directors in making an assessment, and cites Jackson v. Roberts, 81 N. Y. 804; Embree v. Shideler, 36 Ind. 428.

If these decisions sustain the rule contended for, we could not follow them, as we think they are opposed to the clear weight of authority. The New York statute is clearly different from that in the present case. It reads as follows: "In case the corporation, in regard to which a receiver has been or shall hereafter be appointed, is or shall be a mutual insurance company, such receiver shall have full power under the authority and sanction of the court appointing him, to make all such assessments on the premium notes belonging to such corporation, as may be necessary to pay the debts of such corporation, as by the charter thereof the directors of such corporation have authority to make; and the notice of such assessment may be given in the same manner as is provided in the charter of said company for the directors of said company to give; and the said receiver shall have the like rights and remedies upon and in consequence of the nonpayment of such assessments, as are given to the corporation or the directors thereof by the charter of said corporation." Laws 1852, chap. 71. It thus appears that the power of the receiver was expressly limited to the power of the board of directors, and to the modus operandi of collecting the assessments. In Embree v. Shideler, it ap-parties to the proceedings by service of process. Lehman v. Glenn, 87 Ala. 618.

The fact that Maryland stockholders were not parties to the proceedings in Virginia in which a decree was made directing an assessment upon stockholders of the Virginia corporation is held, in Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 98, to be insufficient to prevent the Virginia assessment from being conclusive against them.

So, in Howard v. Glenn, 35 Ga. 228, it is held that the fact that a stockholder of a corporation is a citizen of another state, and is not served with process in a suit against the company at his domicile, in which it is declared insolvent, and a trustee in insolvency appointed and an assessment and call upon the stockholders made, does not prevent the decree from being binding upon him when an action is brought against him for the assessment in another state.

34 L. R. A.

Maryland stockholders who had been sued at their residence for assessments on stock of an insolvent Virginia court, appeared in that court in the case of Hamilton v. Glenn, 85 Va. 901, and asked that the cause might be reheard on the ground that the suit against the insolvent corporation was in effect against the stockholders, and that they were not represented in the suit by the company nor by trustees to whom its property had been assigned, but their petition was denied.

Another action to enforce an assessment decreed by the Virginia court was sustained in McKim v. Glenn, 66 Md. 479.

Long delay in making a call on stockholders is held, in Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 538, 34 L. ed. 262, to constitute no defense to a stockholder in another state when sued in a Federal court, and the statute of limitations is held to constitute no defense until the full period of the statute has run after peared, upon the face of the complaint, that neither the receiver, nor the court to which he had reported his action, had examined and determined upon the validity of the claims against the company. This was expressly required by the charter of the company. It was therefore said that "the assessment is the act of the receiver, and in and with him is the authority to act in the premises." The decree in the present case was erroneous only in that it included some items which, under Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, this court would have excluded. Judgments and decrees cannot be attacked collaterally because they include items which courts, other than those by whom they were rendered, might hold to be illegal. See Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 822.

The judgment must be affirmed.

Montgomery and Hooker, JJ., concurred with Grant, J.

McGrath, Ch. J., dissenting:

After reargument of this cause, I see no good reason for a change of opinion upon the main issue involved. The case presents two questions: First, whether the decree of the court is res judicata as to the amount of the assessment directed; and, second, whether we are bound, under the constitutional requirement of "full faith and credit," to regard that decree as conclusive.

1. There are a number of authorities which hold that, in a proceeding against a stockholder, under a statute which makes him liable to creditors, and based upon a judgment against the corporation, such judgment is prima facie evidence of the indebtedness of the corporation. Grand Rapids Sav. Bank's Appeal, 52 Mich. 557; Hoagland v. Bell, 86 Barb. 57; Hastings v. Drew, 76 N. Y. 9; Schaeffer v. Missouri Home Ins. Co. 46 Mo. 248. Other authorities hold that the judgment is conclusive, and cannot be attacked, except for fraud. Corse Bros. v. Sanford, 14 Iowa, 235; Grund v. Tucker, 5 Kan. 70; Coalfield Co. v. Peck, 98 Ill. 139; Conklin v. Furman, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 161; Miliken v. Whitehouse, 49 Me. 527; Henry v. Vermillion & A. R. Co. 17 Ohio, 187; Wilson v. Pittsburgh & Y. Coal Co. 43 Pa. 424; Merchants' Bank v. Chandler, 19 Wis. 457; Marsh v. Burroughs, 1 Woods, 468; Stephens v. Fox, 88 N. Y. 518. There is still another class of cases which holds that a stockholder, in the absence of a statute requiring it, is not a necessary party to proceedings to wind up the affairs of the corporation, determine its insolvency, and appoint a receiver; that a decree of court determining such matters, declaring the necessity for an assessment upon stockholders or for the collection of unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, and directing the collection thereof, is not open to attack in a suit brought to enforce the collection of the assets of the corporation, the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, or assessments so ordered. Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 93; Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Langley, 63 Md. 196; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. ed. 230; Glenn v. Springs, 26 Fed. Rep. 494; Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184; Lehman v. Glenn, 87 Ala. 618; Gilchrist v. West Virginia Oil & Oil Land Co. 21 W. Va. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 555. The cases, with many others, recognize the rule, but some of them carry the rule to an extent which is not warranted by the principle which underlies the rule, and others use language which is inapplicable to the facts of the particular case before the court. A judgment against a corporation is decisive, as against a stockholder of that corporation, because the proceeding in which it was obtained was one between the contracting parties,—the parties who had the legal right to determine that question.

The only question, then, open, is the amount due from the stockholder to the corporation, or, if he is liable by reason of a statute, the extent of his liability under the statute. If he is exempted from certain classes of claims against the corporation, such exemption may be shown. If the statute imposes a liability as for labor claims, the character of the claim must be established. In Wilson v. Pittsburgh & Y. Coal Co. supra, the stockholders were made personally liable for all debts except loans, and the court held that the defendant might show either that he was not a stockholder, or that the debt was a loan. In other words the judgment is conclusive as to the amount due from the corporation to the creditor, but is only conclusive as to the stockholder when his liability is established.

As is said in Union Bank v. Wando Min. & Mfg. Co. 17 S. C. 389, 359: "There can be no doubt of the rights of the stockholders in this action to set up any available defense that goes the making of a call or demand, although by the laws of the state in which the stockholder is sued the insolvency of a corporation would set the statute running without any call or demand. To the same effect are Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184; Glenn v. Marbury, 45 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 790.

The plea of the statute of limitations, set up by a stockholder in a foreign corporation, against whom action was brought on an assessment made under a decree in another state, was also ineffectual in the Georgia case of Glenn v. Howard, 81 Ga. 383, on the ground that the statute did not begin to run until the call was made.

A defense of the statute of limitations raised by stockholders in a foreign corporation when sued to recover assessments made by decree in another state also failed on the ground that the statute did not begin to run until the call was made, in Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 93.

34 L. R. A.

Suit by the trustee of a foreign corporation to recover an assessment from a stockholder was also contested in the Alabama case of Glenn v. Semple, 80 Ala. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 92, solely on the ground that the liability was barred by the statute of limitations, and this turned on the question whether the statute began to run before the call or assessment was made, and it was held that it did not.

In suit against a stockholder of a Virginia corporation to recover an assessment made by a Virginia court, where he contended that there had been no recognition of his liability as a subscriber from the time when his subscription was made up to the time of suit, which was more than twenty years, and that the claim was barred on the ground that the law would presume that the call for assessments had long since been made and satisfied, the Alabama court held that the Virginia decree to the question of their liability upon the note upon which judgment has been obtained against the company. The defendants in this action were not, as individuals, parties to the action in which judgment was recovered. That suit was against the corporation, which, in law, is a distinct person from the individual members which compose it. The ground of the liability of the company may not prevail against the stockholders. For it is only when a judgment is obtained against the company upon debts of a certain description, and upon which suits have been brought within a specified time, that the stockholders are liable. In this action it is, therefore, necessary to establish that the conditions of the liability of the stockholders exist. To do this necessarily involves an inquiry in this action into the grounds of the stockholders' liability. Of course, then, it is competent for these defendants to interpose any defense that goes to the question of their liability upon the notes upon which the judgments were obtained."

In Marsh v. Burroughs, supra, it was contended that the unpaid subscriptions of capital stock were not assets for the payment of debts, either legal or equitable; that they existed merely as possibilities; that they were not a debt due, having never been called in; that no one could call them in but the directors; and in them it was a mere discretionary power, which could not be exercised either by the assignee, the receiver, or the court itself, and could not be assigned; that said unpaid subscriptions were no part of the capital stock of the bank; and that the real capital stock was what had been called in. The court held, however, that the amount subscribed, and not the sums actually paid in, was the capital stock; that the authority to make calls was not a mere power vested in the bank, to be exercised or not, in its discretion, but that it was a right; that the mode of calling it in prescribed by the charter was a mere form of remedy given to the bank to enforce the subscription, and that unpaid subscriptions were corporate property, constituting a trust fund which could be reached by creditors.

In Sanger v. Upton, supra, it was held that the order of the bankruptcy court as to the right of the assignee to bring suit was conclusive. The court refers to the application of the rule to an order made by the comptroller of the currency, citing Kennedy v.

Gibson, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 505, 19 L. ed. 478, wherein the court says: "It is for the comptroller to decide when it is necessary to institute proceedings against the stockholders to enforce their personal liability, and whether the whole or a part, and if only a part how much, shall be collected. These questions are referred to his judgment and discretion, and his determination is conclusive. The stockholders cannot controvert it. It is not to be questioned in the litigation that may ensue. He may make it at such time as he may deem proper, and upon such data as shall be satisfactory to him." The court then says: "It was competent for the court to order payment of the stock, as the directors, under the instructions of a majority of the stockholders, might, before the decree in bankruptcy, have done. The former is as effectual as the latter would have been." Other questions affecting the liability of the stockholders were raised and the court determined them.

In Hall v. United States Ins. Co. 5 Gill, 484, the question arose upon the admissibility in evidence of the equity proceeding in which the order directing the call had been made, and the court held that the order for the institution of the suit was conclusive.

In Glenn v. Williams, supra, it was held that the chancery court of Richmond had power and jurisdiction to make assessments upon the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock to raise funds with which to pay its debts, and that the decree of the court determining and making an assessment upon the capital stock for such purpose was binding and effective upon stockholders not parties to that cause.

In Parker v. Sloughton Mill Co. 91 Wis. 174, a demurrer was interposed to the complaint, on the ground of want of capacity in the plaintiff to sue. The court below sustained the demurrer, and the supreme court reversed that holding. There is no doubt of the correctness of that decision. That question is res judicata.

In Hawkins v. Glenn, supra, Mr. Chief Justice Fuller thus states the issues involved: Counsel for plaintiff in error contend that the decree of the Richmond chancery court making the call and assessment was void as against him, because he was not a party to the suit; that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations; that he was not responsible upon 150 shares of the stock; and that interest making the assessment was binding prima facie on all whose names appeared upon the company's books as members and stockholders, and necessarily adjudged that the assessment was not then barred by prescription or laches. Semple v. Glenn, 91 Ala. 245.

So, in Lehman v. Glenn, 87 Ala. 618, the assessment in Virginia is conclusive as to the effect of the statute of limitations on the claims of creditors up to the time it is rendered and as to the authority of the court to make a call or assessment and the right of the trustee to bring suit thereon.

A horizontal assessment on all shareholders alike except those who have paid in full, made by a court of equity in another state which had appointed a receiver of a corporation, was refused enforcement in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Burnham, 79 Wis. 47, and Bowen v. Kuehn, Id. 53, where the complaints to recover such assessment showed 34 L. R. A.

that some of the stockholders assessed had paid as much as 40 per cent on their shares, while others had not paid more than 2 per cent. The court held that any call or assessment must be uniform and in ratable amounts, and that any call or assessment which requires some of the shareholders to pay a higher rate than other shareholders is unjust and should not be enforced. To the contention that full faith and credit must be given to the proceedings of the court of another state, and that it could not be presumed that such court would make an unfair and unequal assessment, it is answered that the allegations of the complaint must be taken as they stand with their obvious sense and meaning, and that from them it fairly appears that an unequal and unjust assessment was made. The court says: "Nor can the fact that the call or assessment was made by the court in the suit before it change our conclusions as to its inequality and unfairness. A should not have been allowed from the date of the call, but only from the time of the filing of the complaint. While the learned chief justice does say, as to the determination of the Richmond chancery court, that the court may have erred in its conclusions, but its decree cannot be attacked collaterally, the court does not rest its decision upon the adjudication referred to, but proceeds to discuss the question at length, holding that, as between creditor and stockholder, the latter could not protect themselves from paying what they owe by setting up the default of their own agents.

It must be borne in mind that that case was one for an unpaid subscription to stock. It was a sum which was a part of the capital stock of the company,—a trust fund, held for the benefit of creditors, and the obligation to pay which could not be discharged, as against creditors, by the corporation itself. The contract to pay the sum sought to be recovered was one arising under the charter at the outset. It could not be affected as to creditors by the acts or laches of the corporation. In the present case the limit of the liability of the defendant member is not only expressed in the note upon which suit is brought, but in the charter of the corporation as well. No act of the corporation could extend that liability. Defendant pleads no release from his undertaking, nor does he seek to escape by reason of the laches of the corporation in their failure to enforce the contract, nor have creditors any demands upon defendant except such as arise from his undertaking. The receiver, on behalf of the creditors, is simply subrogated to the claim of the corporation against defendant. No assessment made by the corporation in excess of his liability would have been binding upon him. This is a proceeding against the stockholder as an adversary party. He has the same right to insist that the class of debts for which he has been assessed are not such as he contracted to pay as a stockholder would have, under our own statute, in respect to labor claims, if sued upon a judgment against the corporation.

2. In view of the conclusion reached, it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether the finding of facts supports plaintiff's contention that the note in question is an Illinois contract. No attempt was made to show that the charter and by-laws of the plaintiff corporation enlarged the defendant's liability. The adjudication which, it is insisted, is binding upon us, was not one involving the validity of a contract, or the validity or construction of a local charter, statute, or Constitution; nor was it a question of construction, depending upon the intent of the parties, as affected, at the inception of the contract, by any fixed local rules of law; nor did it involve a rule of property. The Federal judiciary act provides that the laws of the several states, except in given cases, shall be regarded as rules of decisions in trials at common law in the courts of the United States; yet, at an early day, the Supreme Court of the United States held that this provision did not apply to the decisions of the state courts in the construction of ordinary contracts or on questions of general commercial law. Swift v. Tyson, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865. And it has been held that the Federal courts were not bound by decisions of the state courts construing and determining the legal effect of insurance contracts (Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 495, 10 L. ed. 1044); nor by decisions of state courts as to rights of the parties to negotiable paper, such rights depending on the law of negotiable paper (Oates v. First Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 239, 25 L. ed. 580; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61); nor by a decision on the construction of a contract of carriage (Michigan C. R. Co. v. Myrick ("Myrick v. Michigan C. R. Co."), 107 U. S. 102, 27 L. ed. 825); nor by a decision construing a deed by the rules of the common law (Farcraft v. Mallett, 45 U. S. 4 How. 853, 11 L. ed. 1008). See also, as to the application of this doctrine, cases cited in 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 40, 41.

The question here presented is whether the determination of the Illinois court, made after the insolvency of the corporation, as to the legal effect of defendant's promise, is conclusive upon the defendant, and binding upon us. I think not. There was no law of place that attached to and formed a part of the contract at its inception. The judgment should have been for defendant, with costs of both courts.

Long, J., concurred with McGrath, Ch. J.

court by its decree cannot make that which is essentially wrong and unjust right and just."

But substantially overruling this case, a decree of a court in another state levying an assessment of a certain per cent upon all the premium notes and membership liabilities of all the members of a mutual insurance company was held, in Parker v. Stoughton Mill Co. 91 Wis. 174, to be conclusive and not open to collateral attack, since it is protected by the constitutional requirement of full faith and credit. The assessment in this case was attacked on the ground that it was inequitable and unjust, and was in fact a horizontal assessment. The court says that whatever was said in Great Western Tele. Co. v. Burnham, supra, inconsistent with this conclusion, will not be followed.

An order made by an English court under the English companies acts 1862 was held not to be conclusive in Canada under a statute then in force. Barnes's Banking Co. v. Reynolds, 36 U. C. Q. B. 256. In this case it was held that defendant might set up any defense which he could set up in the original proceedings. After an amendment to the 84 L. R. A. declaration in this case it appears again in 40 U. C. Q. B. 435, and 3 Ont. App. Rep. 371, and was passed upon by the supreme court February 3, 1880, in a decision which does not seem to be reported. But these later appearances of the case involve the sufficiency of the declaration, which is finally held bad without passing directly upon the conclusiveness of the order of the English court.

In PARKER v. LAMB, assessments by a receiver under direction of a court of another state for a percentage of the premium notes held by a mutual fire insurance company was expressly held not to constitute an adjudication against the defendant in that case who was not a party to the proceedings in the other state, and whose policy had been surrendered and his notes delivered up to him before the insurance company became bankrupt. But the conclusiveness of the assessment in this case was considered with reference to a defense that the defendant had ceased to be a stockholder, and not with reference to the validity of the claims against the corporation and the propriety and necessity of making an assessment to that amount. The case

Willard E. WARNER, Receiver of the Minneapolis Mutual Fire Insurance Company, Pf. in Err.,

DELBRIDGE & CAMERON COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

1. One who becomes a member of a foreign corporation subjects himself to such laws of the government of its situs as affect its powers and obligations.
2. An assessment which will be binding on nonresident policy holders may be made under the Minnesota statutes upon the premium notes of the holders of mutual policies in an insurance company organized in that state to repay unearned premiums on cash policies issued by the company.
3. The suggestion that a foreign insurance company had no authority to do business in the state comes too late on appeal to prevent the enforcement of an assessment upon premium notes.

(July 31, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to compel defendant to pay an assessment upon its premium note which had been given for insurance.
Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. E. Warner, for plaintiff in error:

It was even proper for the receiver to include a liberal sum for contingencies and an assessment on members might include the expenses of receivership and an amount to cover shrinkages and uncollectible assessments.

Ionia, E. & B. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 100 Mich. 606; People's Equitable Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Rabbitt, 7 Allen, 235; Bangs v. Gray, 12 N. Y. 477; People's Mut. Equitable F. Ins. Co. Petitioners, 9 Allen, 319; Wardle v. Townsend, 75 Mich. 885, 4 L. R. A. 511; Seamans v. Miller Mut. Ins. Co. 90 Wis. 496; Davis v. Shearer, Id. 250.

If we exclude all liability for unearned premiums, it appears that the receiver could not realize at best an amount exceeding about $30,000 to pay fire losses and expenses of the company amounting to $40,386.53.

In Re Minneapolis Mut. F. Ins. Co. 49 Minn.

291, the court considered the liability of premium note makers for unearned premiums in cash policies so called, and after a consideration of the several statutes of Minnesota applicable to the corporation the court upholds the assessment.

The rights of the parties in the present case must be adjudicated according to the requirements of the statutes and jurisprudence of the state of Minnesota which state created a corporation and in reference to whose laws the contracts of the members were made.

Glenn v. Liggett, 185 U. S. 533, 84 L. ed. 264; Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020; Life Assn. of America v. Rundle ("Reife v. Rundle"), 103 U. S. 232, 26 L. ed. 337; Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phantix Furniture Co. (Mich.) ante, 694, holds that the maker of a premium note given to a mutual fire insurance company operating in the state of Illinois will be bound by a decree entered in a proceeding had before the courts of that state fixing the amount of an assessment to be paid to the receiver of such corporation.

A receiver or other trustee appointed in another state will be permitted on the principle of comity to bring an action in the domestic forum for the purpose of collecting the assets of the insolvent for distribution in accordance with the laws of the jurisdiction within which the receiver has been appointed, when so to do will not contravene the rights of the citizens of the state in which the action is brought.

Baldwin v. Hosmer, 101 Mich. 119, 25 L. R. A. 789; High, Receivers, 2d ed. § 211; Manlove v. Burger, 38 Ind. 211; Hayes v. Brotzman, 46 Md. 519; Frank v. Morrison, 53 Md. 428; Terry v. Bamberger, 44 Conn. 558; Cooke v. Orange, 48 Conn. 401.

Authority was expressly conferred upon the receiver by the order appointing him to bring suit in his representative capacity, and this is sufficient.

High, Receivers, § 201; Coops v. Bowles, 42 Barb. 87.

Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, does not repudiate the doctrine of Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phantix Furniture Co. supra.

Mr. E. E. Kane for defendant in error.

does not intimate that as to matters of this sort the decree would not be conclusive.

The three cases of MUTUAL F. INS. CO. v. PHANTIX FURNITURE CO., WARNER v. DELBRIDGE & C. CO., and PARKER v. C. LAMB & SONS seem to be good illustrations of the different phases of the subject, and not inconsistent with each other. The case of MUTUAL F. INS. CO. v. PHANTIX FURNITURE CO. does not go beyond the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, although those which were relied upon therein are said in the later case of WARNER v. DELBRIDGE & C. CO. to have been limited by the decision in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, which was rendered after the decision in MUTUAL F. INS. CO. v. PHANTIX FURNITURE CO.; but the gist of the latter case is that a decree in a sister state is binding so far as it determines the amount of assets and debts of the corporation and the amount of assessments necessary to liquidate its liabilities. To that extent the cases generally agree that the decree in another state is binding. In WARNER v. DELBRIDGE & C. CO. the 34 L. R. A.

defense against an assessment of 100 per cent made on stockholders by the Minnesota court was that the assessment included an allowance for unearned premiums which could not be allowed if the contract to be enforced was to be treated as a Michigan contract, but it was held that the Minnesota statute as construed by the supreme court of that state must be deemed to be the law of the contract, and that under that law the assessment might include an allowance for unearned premiums.

The rule to be deduced from all the decisions does not differ materially from that laid down in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, supra, to the effect that an assessment which purports simply to make a levy upon all stockholders is not conclusive of the question whether or not a particular stockholder is or is not liable in any amount, but that it is conclusive of the necessity for making the assessment, that is to say, it is conclusive so far as it decides the amount of liabilities and of assets of the corporation and the need of making an assessment to such an amount as it orders. B. A. R.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 8d of April, 1890, defendant applied for and received a policy of insurance in the Minneapolis Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and executed and delivered the following agreement:

Minneapolis, Minn., April 8d, 1890.

For value received, in policy No. 01,087, dated the 8d day of April, 1890, we promise to pay the Minneapolis Mutual Fire Insurance Company the sum of three hundred and seventy-five dollars, by instalments, at such time as the directors of said company may order and assess, for the losses and expenses of said company, pursuant to its charter and by-laws. It is hereby expressly understood and agreed that this note is not transferable, and that there is no liability beyond the face amount thereof.

Delbridge, Cameron, & Dingeman Co.

No. 01,087.

On the 18th of December, 1890, an application was made by a policy holder, in the district court of Hennepin county, Minnesota, alleging the insolvency of the company and praying for the appointment of a receiver and the distribution of its assets among the creditors entitled thereto. On the 24th of January, 1891, a decree passed adjudging the insurance company insolvent and appointing a receiver. On the 19th of May following, an order making an assessment of 50 per cent upon all premium notes and policy obligations was made; but this order was subsequently set aside as illegal, and a petition was filed showing the financial condition of the company, and the necessity for an assessment; and February 8, 1892, an order was made authorizing an assessment of 100 per cent or as much thereof as might be necessary to pay the claims which accrued against the said insolvent company during the time said policies were in force, to be levied upon the balance due upon each and all of said premium notes and policy obligations at the time of the appointment of a receiver for the insolvent company in 1890. This order further directed that upon this assessment the receiver should credit and deduct the amount of any especial assessment theretofore made by the insurance company, and actually paid by the makers of the premium notes and policy obligations, and also the amount actually paid upon the assessment of 50 per cent theretofore ordered by the court. The items included in this assessment of 100 per cent were for losses, salaries, unearned premiums on cash policies, and miscellaneous claims. On the application of the complainant in the original suit, made to the circuit court for the county of Wayne, in chancery, setting forth the proceedings in Minnesota, complainant was appointed an ancillary receiver in the state of Michigan. This suit was brought against the defendant to recover, upon the premium note mentioned, the 100 per cent assessment.

On the trial, the circuit judge directed a verdict for defendant, on the ground that the assessment was void, for the reason that it included an assessment for unearned premiums, 34 L. R. A.

acting upon the authority of Detroit Manufacturers Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 393. If this contract is to be treated as a Michigan contract the holding should be sustained, unless it be held that the order making the assessment, made at the situs of the home company, is conclusive, not only as to the authority to make the assessment, but as to the extent of the defendant's liability. This question was recently before the court in the case of Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co. (Mich.) ante, 694; and the conclusion was then reached that the decision of a court of a sister state is binding upon the courts of this state in all these respects. This conclusion was based upon the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. Article 4, § 1. And an examination of the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court led us to the conclusion that a stockholder of a corporation is so far an integral part of the corporation that, in view of the law, he is privy to the proceedings touching the body of which he is a member, and that a determination that an assessment upon the policy holders in a certain amount and for certain obligations of the company should be made was final and conclusive, and could not be attacked collaterally when suit was brought upon such assessment in another state. In reaching this conclusion, the question involved being a Federal question, we felt ourselves bound by the determination of the Federal Supreme Court in Hawkins v. Glenn, 131 U. S. 319, 33 L. ed. 184, and Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 533, 34 L. ed. 234. But since the decision of this court in Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co. the question has been again before the Federal Supreme Court, and the doctrine of the cases upon which we relied for our decision limited; and in Great Western Telog. Co. v. Purdy, 163 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, it is held that an order making a call or assessment upon all stockholders of a corporation who have not paid their shares in full is merely such a call as the directors might have made before the matter was brought within the court's jurisdiction, and is not a judgment against the particular stockholder, so as to be entitled to such full faith and credit, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that in such action defendant is entitled to rely on any defense which he might have to an action upon the contract of subscription.

Plaintiff, however, contends that this is a Minnesota contract, and that under the statute of Minnesota, as interpreted by the supreme court of that state, an assessment for unearned premiums upon nonparticipating policies was legal. The contract by which the insured became a member included, not only the note, but the policy, which contained the following provision: "The insured heretofore named becomes a member of this company, and agrees to pay them the premium annually, during the life of this policy, and, in addition thereto, such sum or sums, in no event to exceed in the aggregate five times the amount of said annual premium, at such time or times, and in such manner, and by such instalments, as the directors of said company shall assess and order, pursuant to its charter and by-laws and the laws of the state of Michigan. It is suggested by defendant's counsel that it is only for assessments for losses and expenses made according to the laws of Michigan that the defendant is made liable by his contract. It is difficult to understand the reference to the laws of the state of Michigan. This was certainly known by both parties to be a Minnesota corporation, and we are aware of no provision of the laws of this state which relates to the assessment authorized by such corporation. We think, therefore, that the contract must be treated as a Minnesota contract. Every corporation necessarily carries its charter wherever it goes; and, while it may be restricted in the use of some of its powers while doing business away from its corporate home, every person who deals with it everywhere, and particularly one who becomes a member of the corporation, is bound to take notice of the provisions which have been made in its charter, and subjects himself to such laws of the government of its situs as affect the powers and obligations of the corporation. See Canada S. R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 587, 27 L. ed. 1024, and Life Assn. of America v. Rundle ("Relfe v. Rundle"), 108 U. S. 225, 26 L. ed. 839.

The statute of Minnesota under which this company was organized authorized the company to engage in business and to receive premium notes, and provides that "every person effecting insurance in any company organized under this act, and the heirs, executors, and assigns of such person, continuing to be so insured, shall thereby become members of such corporation during the period of insurance, and shall be bound to pay for losses and such necessary expenses as may occur in the management of such business, in proportion to the amount of such premium note." Gen. Stat. 1894, § 8261. And in another section it is provided that whenever the capital stock of any company shall amount to the sum of $200,000, of which amount not less than $40,000 shall be actual funds, such company may assume risks on the "all cash" plan, and issue policies against loss or damage by fire or lightning to an amount not exceeding 5 per cent of its capital. This statute has been construed by the supreme court of Minnesota in the case of Es Minneapolis Mut. F. Ins. Co. 49 Minn. 291, in which the court says: "This construction of the statute and of the contracts under consideration leads to the conclusion that the premium notes of the members of the corporation, which constitute its 'contingent fund,' may be resorted to, if necessary, to pay the unearned premiums on policies of simple (not mutual) insurance, whose holders sustain no other relation to the corporation than that of parties who have thus contracted with it. Such notes constitute a part of the 'capital' of the corporation, . . . and comprise a part of the 'capital' required by the act of 1885 to be held by the company as a condition of its right to engage in this kind of insurance. They are to be deemed a part of the fund upon the credit of which such contracts of insurance are entered into." It is to be noted that in Detroit Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, supra, the policy was a policy upon the mutual plan, and the unearned premiums were unearned premiums on mutual policies. We think the statute of Minnesota, as construed by the supreme court of that state, must be deemed to be the law of the contract between the parties to this engagement, and that, under this law, an assessment for unearned premiums upon cash policies is within the contract.

34 L. R. A.

These considerations would dispose of the case were it not that defendant's counsel contends that, even if the court were in error upon this question, the plaintiff failed to make a case. We have examined the points suggested by counsel, and deem it unnecessary to discuss them at length.

We think the construction of the order appointing complainant receiver which counsel makes is too technical. Complainant was appointed receiver of all equitable interests, choses in action, and of all property and assets, whether herein designated or not, belonging to said defendant corporation within the state of Michigan, and of all books, papers, property, documents, of any and every description, belonging to said defendant, and with full power and authority to sue in his own name as such receiver, or in the name of defendant corporation, for all assets, money, or property, and obligations due from residents of the state of Michigan to the defendant.

The suggestion that it was not proved that the foreign insurance company had authority to do business in the state of Michigan is made for the first time in this court, and, we think, should not control the decision.

As to the contention that the premium note was obtained by fraud, this contention is based upon certain papers which were found in the safe of the defendant company by a witness who personally knew nothing of their origin; and there was no evidence to show the manner in which they came into possession of the defendant, nor was their execution or authenticity proven. Under these circumstances, we are certainly not in a position to say that fraud was conclusively proved.

We think the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Grant, J., did not sit. The other Justices concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas PARKER, Jr., Receiver of Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chicago, Appt.,

v.
C. LAMB & SONS.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The principles of comity do not apply to an action by a foreign receiver of a foreign mutual insurance company acting under a decree in the foreign jurisdiction making an assessment on premium notes, even if otherwise applicable, where the notes were taken for insurance on property in the state while the company was doing business within the state in violation of McClain's Code, § 1144, prohibiting foreign insurance companies from doing business without compliance with the conditions therein mentioned.

2. McClain's Code, § 1144, absolutely prohibiting foreign insurance companies from taking risks or transacting insurance business in the state, unless possessed of $300,000 actual paid-up capital, and unless they comply with other conditions named therein, is not unconstitutional.

3. An assessment on premium notes, made by a receiver of a mutual insurance company under a decree of the court, is not an adjudication binding on the courts of another state as against the maker of one of such notes who was not a party to the proceedings resulting in the assessment, and who before the bankruptcy of the company had surrendered his policy and received back his note.

(October 16, 1904.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Clinton County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on premium notes given by defendant to the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chicago upon certain policies of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Myron H. Beach, D. J. Schuyler, and C. W. Greenfield, for appellant:

The plaintiff may maintain the suit, although suing in the capacity of a foreign receiver.

Runk v. St. John, 29 Barb. 585; Sobernheimer v. Wheeler, 45 N. J. Eq. 614; Bidlack v. Mason, 26 N. J. Eq. 230; Comstock v. Frederickson, 51 Minn. 351; Lycorning F. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McLeod, 88 Ohio St. 174; Mowry v. Crocker, 6 Wis. 326; Gilman v. Ketchman, 84 Wis. 60, 23 L. R. A. 52; Falk v. Janes, 49 N. J. Eq. 484; Re Waite, 99 N. Y. 493; Ragby v. Atlantic, M. & O. R. Co., 86 Pa. 291; Mezner v. Bauer, 98 Ind. 427; Woodward v. Brooks, 128 Ill. 223, 3 L. R. A. 702; Toronto General Trust Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 123 N. Y. 37; Bacon v. Horne, 123 Pa. 452, 2 L. R. A. 355; Ayres v. Siebel, 82 Iowa, 348; Parker v. Stoughton Mill Co., 91 Wis. 174.

The plaintiff is entitled to recover judgment for the full amount of the deposit notes.

Ill. Stat. chap. 78 (1 Starr & C. Stat. (Ill.) 1815); Taylor v. Port Jefferson Mill Co., 65 N. Y. S. R. 542.

The decree levying the assessment is conclusive against all members of the company, and cannot be attacked collaterally.

Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Gray, 123 Ill. 630; Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 593; Hawkins v. Glenn, 181 U. S. 819, 33 L. ed. 184; Glenn v. Liggett, 185 U. S. 538, 34 L. ed. 264; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. ed. 220; Smith v. Hopkins, 10 Wash. 77.

Under the Federal Constitution and statutes the decree of the Illinois court levying the assessment is entitled to the same faith and credits in the courts of Iowa that are given the same in the state of Illinois.

Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 3 L. ed. 411; Christmas v. Russell, 73 U. S. 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. ed. 475; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 189, 19 L. ed. 109; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 4, 29 L. ed. 537; Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 27; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 111, 33 L. ed. 541; Holt v. Johnson, 50 Mo. App. 378; Griggs v. Becker, 87 Wis. 818; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264.

The policies are Illinois contracts, and governed by the laws of Illinois.

Lamb v. Bousser, 7 Biss. 315; Adams v. Lindsell, 1 Barn. & Ald. 681; Hamilton v. Lycorning Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Pa. 339; Hunt v. Higman, 70 Iowa, 406; Hallock v. Commercial Ins. Co., 26 N. J. L. 268; Reliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sawyer, 160 Mass. 418.

Statutes abridging the right of contract are void.

Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702; Re Eight Hour Law, 31 Colo. 29; Re House Bill No. 203, Id. 27; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325; Com. v. Potomaska Mills Corp. (Mass.) 28 N. E. 1128; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340.

Section 1144 of the Code of Iowa is void and unconstitutional, in so far as it provides that no foreign insurance company "shall directly or indirectly take risks" in said state of Iowa, without first complying with the laws of said state, with reference to foreign insurance companies doing business in said state.

French v. People, 6 Colo. App. 311; Lamb v. Bousser, 7 Biss. 318, 372, and cases cited; Merrill Ins. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 643; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 647, 39 L. ed. 297.

If the liability of the member does not cease until all losses and expenses for which such member is liable are paid, then the relation between the member and the company does not cease, and is not changed until such liabilities are paid, although the policy may have been canceled.

Detroit Manufacturers Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 101 Mich. 393; Ionia F. & B. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Otto, 96 Mich. 558; Davis v. Sharpe, 2 West. L. Month. 40.

Mr. A. P. Barker, for appellee:

The legal authority of a receiver is coex-

NOTE.—See note, ante, p. 694.

34 L. R. A.

tensive only with the jurisdiction of the court appointing him.

High, Receivers, 2d ed. ¶ 47; Moreau v. Du Bellet (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 508; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. 41 Neb. 406; Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 823, 331, 15 L. ed. 164, 167; Brighman v. Luddington, 13 Blatchf. 237; Ayres v. Siebel, 82 Iowa, 347.

A receiver cannot sue or otherwise exercise his functions in a foreign jurisdiction whenever such acts would interfere with the policy established by law in such foreign state.

Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 1.

It is unquestionably the policy of the laws of this state, as expressed by legislative enactment and construed by this court, to exclude from in any manner, directly or indirectly, taking risks in this state, every foreign insurance company that has not complied with its laws, and to deny them the right to recover upon premium notes given by citizens of this state in payment for insurance written in violation of such law.

McClain's Stat. 1707-1709; Seamans v. Zimmerman, 91 Iowa, 363; Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. (Iowa) 63 N. W. 565.

Appellee does not concede that the order directing the receiver to make the assessment is in the nature of an adjudication, and binding upon it without notice and without day in court.

Biddle, Ins. § 929; High, Receivers, § 329.

Judgment cannot be obtained in the courts of this state upon a note given by a citizen of this state for the premium upon a policy of insurance written upon property in this state by a foreign insurance company that has not complied with its laws so as to be authorized to take risks therein.

Seamans v. Zimmerman, and Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. supra; Stewart v. Northampton Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co. 38 N. J. L. 486; Parrior v. New England Mortg. Secur. Co. 88 Ala. 275; Pierce v. People, 106 Ill. 11, 46 Am. Rep. 693; Ross v. Kimberly & Co. 89 Wis. 545, 27 L. R. A. 556; Seamans v. Temple Co. 105 Mich. 400, 28 L. R. A. 480; Beeser v. Walton, 7 Houst. (Del.) 471.

The appointment of a receiver does not have the effect of changing the contractual relations existing between the original parties.

High, Receivers, 2d ed. ¶¶ 204, 205.

The corporation being the mere creation of local law can have no existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty where created. Having no absolute right of recognition in other states, but depending for such recognition and the enforcement of its contracts upon their assent, it follows as a matter of course that such assent may be granted upon such terms and conditions as those states may think proper to impose.

Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. supra; Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 857; Pierce v. People, 106 Ill. 11, 46 Am. Rep. 693; Reno, Non-Residents, ¶¶ 5, 6; Columbia F. Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33; Biddle, Ins. §§ 85 et seq.

34 L. R. A.

When defendant surrendered its policy and received back its notes, it ceased to be a member of the company.

Hyde v. Lynde, 4 N. Y. 395, 396; Telford v. Church, 66 Mich. 431.

Rothrock, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from the averments of the petition that the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chicago was organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, and that the defendant is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of this state. Applications were made by the defendant for insurance in said company, which applications were accepted, and in part consideration for said insurance the defendant executed and delivered to the said insurance company two premium notes, one for the sum of $750, and the other for $525. These notes were promises to pay the said insurance company such sums thereon as the directors might from time to time order and assess to pay losses and the expenses of said company. The contracts of insurance were made, and the premium notes executed and delivered, on the 11th day of April, 1890, and the insurance was for five years. The policies of insurance remained in force until the 11th day of April, 1890, when they were surrendered to the insurance company, and canceled, and the premium notes were returned to the defendant. On the 12th day of November, 1890, a suit in chancery was instituted in the circuit court of Cook county, Illinois, against the said fire insurance company, and on the 21st day of February, 1891, the plaintiff herein was appointed receiver of said company, and of its property and assets. Afterwards, and in July, 1891, an order was made by said circuit court, by which the receiver was directed to assess upon each of the members of said insurance company 65 per cent of the premium notes, and make demand therefor of the persons liable on said notes, and proceed to collect the same. Said order or decree further provided that, if any member or members of said company failed or refused to pay the amount of the assessment for thirty days after notice and demand, the said receiver should then proceed to collect from such member or members the whole of their premium note or notes. The defendant was notified of the assessment, and of the amount that it was required to pay under said decree on each of its premium notes. Payment was refused, and this action was commenced to recover the whole amount of the premium notes, and judgment was demanded therefor.

We have set out the substance of the claim made in the petition so far as it pertains to what we think are the material facts in the case. One ground of the demurrer was in these words: "Said petition shows upon its face that the defendant is a corporation, organized and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Iowa; that the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Chicago, as receiver of which plaintiff brings this action, was a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the state of Illinois; and it is not further shown therein that said company was possessed of the requisite capital to authorize it to transact business in the state of Iowa, or that said Mutual Fire Insurance Company had in any manner complied with the laws of the state of Iowa, or was entitled to write insurance or transact business in said state." We will not set out other grounds of demurrer, for the reason that we think a proper determination of that part of it above quoted is conclusive of the rights of the parties. It presents the single question whether the plaintiff can maintain the action, or, as stated by appellee's counsel in argument: "Will a foreign receiver of an insurance company, which had never complied with the laws of the state so as to be entitled to transact business herein, be permitted to maintain an action in the courts of this state upon the premium notes executed to such foreign insurance company by a citizen of Iowa for a policy written by it upon property in this state?" It is to be observed that both in the statement of facts and in the demand for judgment this action is founded upon the premium notes. Copies of the notes are not set out in the petition nor exhibited therewith for the alleged reason that the notes are not in the possession of the plaintiff. It appears to us that this court has, in effect, determined the question here presented. In Ayres v. Siebel, 82 Iowa, 847, it was held that a trustee of a foreign corporation will not be permitted to maintain an action in the courts of this state upon a contract between such corporation and a citizen of this state. It was conceded in that case that the same rule applied to a receiver, except that in such case the right to maintain an action has sometimes been recognized as a matter of state comity. And the claim is made that such a rule is applicable to the facts here presented. It is to be conceded that there is not entire harmony in the decisions of courts upon this question. We do not think that under the facts in this case there is any comity which can properly be invoked to sustain the action. In High on Receivers (§ 289) the following is stated to be the true rule: "Upon the question of the territorial extent of a receiver's jurisdiction and powers for the purpose of instituting actions connected with his receivership, the prevailing doctrine, established by the Supreme Court of the United States and sustained by the weight of authority in various states, is that the receiver has no extraterritorial jurisdiction or power of official action, and cannot, as a matter of right, go into a foreign state or jurisdiction and there institute a suit for the recovery of demands due to the person or estate subject to his receivership. His functions and powers, for the purposes of litigation, are held to be limited to the courts of the state within which he was appointed, and the principles of comity between nations and states, which recognize the judicial decisions of one tribunal as conclusive in another, do not apply to such a case and will not warrant a receiver in bringing an action in a foreign court of jurisdiction." Elaborate arguments are presented by the respective counsel in this case, and numerous authorities are cited, which we have examined, and, without citing them or reviewing them, we believe that the rule as above stated is correct in principle, and well sustained by the weight of authority.

2. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the doctrine of comity and respect for the judicial orders and decrees of another state should be applied in the case at bar. It is possible that, if this contract of insurance was one which under the laws of this state might lawfully be made, it would be a proper case in which the courts of this state would entertain and determine such an action. But that question we do not determine. The contract of insurance, so far as the right of the company to insure property in this state is involved, was void. By § 1144 of McClain's Code it was absolutely prohibited from directly or indirectly taking any risks or transacting any business of insurance in this state unless possessed of $200,000 of actually paid-up capital, and complying with other conditions named in said section. It being admitted that there was not even an attempt to comply with the law, the plaintiff is in no position to demand that under any policy of comity he is entitled to maintain the action. In Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 1, it is said that "the more correct definition of the legal rule would be that a receiver cannot sue or otherwise exercise his functions, in a foreign jurisdiction whenever such acts, if sanctioned, would interfere with the policy established by law in such foreign jurisdiction." If the rule contended for by counsel for appellant in this case were to be adopted by this court, it would be in direct conflict with the legislative policy of this state. We have already determined this question in Seamans v. Zimmerman, 91 Iowa, 863, where we held that a foreign insurance company, not having complied with the statute above cited, cannot recover assessments under the policy of insurance issued on property in this state.

8. It is urged in behalf of appellant that the statute above cited is unconstitutional. We have given that question proper examination and attention, and we discover no ground, either upon principle or authority, for sustaining this contention. We do not believe it to be necessary to give further consideration to this point in the case.

4. But it is said that the assessments made by the plaintiff under the decree of the circuit court of Cook county are an adjudication or judgment of that court as against the defendant, and that said adjudication is binding on the courts of this state. We think this contention is not sustained by the facts stated in the petition nor by the decree. The petition, as we have said, is not founded on the decree. The cause of action is plainly stated to be upon the premium notes. It ought to be understood, also, that the amount is not for any fixed and unalterable sum. It is true, it is named as 65 per cent of the premium notes, and for failure to pay for thirty days the receiver was required to collect the whole amount of the notes. That this decree was no adjudication is also plainly shown by the record. Before the insurance company became bankrupt, the notes were delivered up to the defendant, and the policy was surrendered. There is no presumption that there was any fraud in this transaction, and when the contract was thus canceled the defendant was no longer a policy holder in the company, and was not a party to the proceedings in the Illinois court.

The case requires no further consideration, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

George B. NEAL, Appt.,

v.

William H. BLACK et al.

(177 Pa. 82.)

1. An incompetent person executing a deed of trust for the preservation of his property need not fully appreciate all the technical intricacies of the transaction to make the deed binding. It is sufficient if he is not deceived or misled by fear or favor.
2. That a voluntary deed by an incompetent person to protect his property was made under advice of his uncle and the attorney for his guardian will not render it invalid, if they had no adverse interest in the estate, and there is nothing in their relations to him and his estate to make them incompetent advisers.
3. A voluntary deed by an incompetent person for the protection of his estate cannot be revoked as improvident if its general purpose is wise and proper, because it strips him of all his property, is irrevocable, leaves the portion to be expended by him at the discretion of the trustee, makes no provision for future contingencies, and does not require the trustee to give security, permits him to appoint a successor without security, while it gives him unlimited power as to conversion of investments and does not require him to account to anybody.
4. One who makes a voluntary deed for his own benefit cannot revoke his act except subject to the approval of a court having jurisdiction of such matters.

(October 5, 1896.)

APPREAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Allegheny County refusing to set aside a deed of trust. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court below, which was delivered by Slagle, J., and was as follows:

"The bill in this case was filed for the purpose of enforcing a revocation of a voluntary deed of trust made by plaintiff to William H. Black, who, under authority contained in the deed, subsequently appointed Thomas H. Lane as trustee in his stead, who is still acting as trustee. The bill sets forth that plaintiff is the son of James Lawrence Neal and Margaret Neal, both of whom died when he was a child of tender years; that his mother was a daughter of George Black, from whom he inherited a large estate; that Thomas H. Lane was appointed his guardian, and acted as such until plaintiff came of age, on the 26th day of September, 1889; that on the 19th day of October, 1889, plaintiff executed a paper by which he conveyed to William H. Black all his estate in trust, and subsequently, on December 20, 1889, the said Black appointed Thomas H. Lane as trustee in his stead. The deed is an absolute conveyance of all of plaintiff's property to William H. Black, his heirs and assigns, and gives to him the absolute and unqualified power to take charge of the same, to sell at public or private sale, to invest and reinvest, etc., at the will of the trustee, and to appoint a trustee in his stead. It is further provided that: 'Out of the net income of said trust estate, which shall not be subject to my control or engagements, to pay from time to time such sums as he (said trustee) shall deem proper for the liberal and comfortable support and maintenance of myself and any family and establishment I may acquire or have, or should support, for which sums my receipts shall be vouchers. To reinvest and accumulate the remainder, if any, of such net income during my life, and at my death to convey and assign the whole of said estate, with all its accumulations, as I by my last will, or writing in the nature of such last will, may direct and appoint, and, in default of such will or testamentary writing, to such persons as would inherit my estate under the intestate laws of the state of Pennsylvania, in such shares and interests as by such law directed.' The trustee is authorized to retain $500 annually out of the income as compensation. The conveyance is made irrevocable. The bill further alleges as follows: 'Fifth. Your orator further avers: That at the time of executing said paper, Exhibit A, and for a long time prior thereto, he lived at the house of his grandmother, Mrs. Jane Black, and said paper was prepared at the instance of William H. Black, who is his uncle, and who lived at the same home of said Mrs. Jane B. Black, until a few months before the preparation of said paper, and continued to visit at said home frequently. Your orator had no knowledge in relation to said paper, or the contents thereof, until the same was presented to him by said William H. Black for signature, on October 19, 1889. That he executed said paper solely at the solicitation and upon the advice of said William H. Black, and at the time he was entirely inexperienced in business, unacquainted with the extent and value of his estate, or its conditions, the information in relation thereto being in possession of said Lane and Black; and they having concealed the same from him; and in executing said paper he acted on the suggestion and advice of said Black, without any independent advice, and under an entire misapprehension as to the terms and legal effect thereof. Sixth. That said William H. Black and Thomas H. Lane, although requested, have neglected and refused to render an account of said trust. Seventh. That on February 22, 1894, he executed a revocation of said trust, etc. The defendants, in their answer, admit all the allegations of the bill, except those contained in the fifth paragraph, which they deny, and set forth at length the circumstances under which the deed of October 19, 1889, was made, and allege that it was made with full information as to his estate, and knowledge of its purposes, and that he was satisfied with it until after he was secretly married in September, 1893; that they refused to give a statement of his property, because they believed that persons other than plaintiff were endeavoring to obtain control of his property. They deny that the revocation was of any effect, because the deed is in terms irrevocable, and to revoke the same would work great injury to the plaintiff.

NOTE.—For the power to revoke or set aside a voluntary trust or settlement, see note to Ewing v. Jones (Ind.), 15 L. R. A. 75.

34 L. R. A.

'It will be observed that it is not disputed that George B. Neal, at the time of the execution of the deed in question, was competent to make a contract. The plaintiff does not allege that he was incompetent, and in fact claims that he is now fully capable of managing his own affairs, and does not show such marked improvement in his condition as to justify an allegation that he was not then legally competent. Of course, the plaintiff's case depends upon his capacity at that time to make a valid contract. There is no evidence in the case to show want of legal capacity at that time. Plaintiff's bill is based upon circumstances attending the execution of the paper, and the character of the instrument itself. Though no request was made by plaintiff for specific findings of fact or of law, the grounds of the application are very clearly set out in the exhaustive and able argument presented by counsel, in propositions as follows: 'First. There being no power of revocation in this deed, and it having been prepared, and the signature thereto procured, by persons who stood in a confidential relation to Neal, the burden of proof rests on defendants. Second. This burden can only be met by clear and decisive proof. Third. This burden is upon defendants to show, by such clear and decisive proof, these things: (a) That Neal had a true and full knowledge of his estate, its extent and value, and of the income therefrom; (b) that he had independent advice in regard to the act which he was performing; (c) that the terms and provisions of the deed were proper and reasonable; (d) that he had a full, clear, and intelligent understanding of the act he was engaged in, and of the effect and consequences of the deed which he was executing.' The defense is that Neal was informed of the amount and character of his estate; that the control of his estate was put into the hands of a trustee at his own request, and he was fully informed as to the contents and purposes of the deed, and it was made irrevocable at his request; and further that, though then and now competent to make a valid contract, he is of weak intellect, without qualifications for the transaction of business, and incapable of acquiring such qualifications as would make it safe to intrust him with control of his estate.

34 L. R. A.

"The main question in dispute is as to the mental capacity and business ability of George B. Neal, and should be first considered, as it has a bearing upon the other questions of fact and law. The testimony of George B. Neal, and his manner upon the stand, would indicate that he is not a man of full mental vigor or average intelligence, though his testimony was to some extent affected by his defective hearing. He could not tell when his father, mother, and grandfather died. These events happened before he knew anything; but an ordinary person would have inquired, and remembered such important matters. He says he did not know he had a guardian, or had any property, until about two weeks before he came of age. There are not many young men of that age, with a fortune of $100,000, who would have been ignorant of that fact, or who would not have inquired as to the matter. When he undertook to give the amount of moneys paid to him by Mr. Lane in 1893, he became thoroughly confused, and could give no intelligible answer. Dr. Willard was his attending physician from infancy until he was sixteen or seventeen years old. He testified that, in infancy, George was affected by marasmus, and his development was very slow. He advised his grandmother that he did not think it was proper for him to arrive at the age of twenty-one, unless some disposition was made of his affairs, or someone was appointed to look after him. He also was of the opinion that the best thing that could have been done to develop his mental condition was to keep him at home, under a tutor or governess; that there was no use sending him to school, because he could not take an education. Dr. Fleining had attended him at times for four or five years. He says: 'He had no capacity for understanding what I was talking about. In mental condition he was a child, simply. His mental development was incomplete. He could read, and had a personal identity. He was neat and cleanly in his person. That showed that his moral condition was good. But the intelligence was defective and his judgment faulty.' He gave it as his opinion that Neal did not have mental capacity for dealing with a considerable estate. Miss Benson was employed as teacher for eleven years, and remained with him until his marriage, in 1893. She traveled with him extensively, — to Chicago, Denver, and a long trip in Europe. She says: 'His mental development was weak. His memory was very good, but he hadn't any reasoning power whatever, and is of a dependent nature, — is easily persuaded or influenced by others, especially by anyone to whom he may take a fancy. He was not capable of taking care of his property, or of himself either.' M. L. Durst was employed as teacher about 1893. He says: 'Well, George couldn't learn a rule so that he could use it three or four days later. He could go through the examples or exercises under the rules. He could learn to go through those exercises, and to me it seemed very well, and I thought he was learning those rules so he could retain them, and for two months I supposed he was making very good progress; but at that time I began to make some reviews with him, and had occasion to use the rules that he had been drilled in, and found that he couldn't use them. At end of year, do not think any progress was made. He was very well in history. Seemed rather broad and well informed in many things, was fairly good in geography, was fairly good in spelling, and was fairly good in writing.' Samuel Rea, an uncle by marriage, knew George from childhood. Saw him frequently at Mrs. Black's and at his own home. Took George to Europe in 1892. He says of him: 'He was very backward as a boy, and seemed incapable of taking an education such as the average boy is able to take. He has a good disposition, exceedingly kind-hearted, very easily influenced by those whom he cares for, but is totally unable to do any business. In my judgment, he is totally unfit to take care of his estate. If a thing is explained to him, he seems to understand it thoroughly, but it is liable to get away from him.' These witnesses have no connection with this case. William H. Black, Thomas H. Lane, and W. A. Lewis, express similar opinions.

"On part of plaintiff, a number of witnesses were called to testify to the capacity and ability of George Neal. Rev. Dr. Fulton had known him for some time. During last summer and the previous summer had correspondence with him, and in January of 1894, taught him for twenty or twenty-five days. He details the course of study, and says that he made a very marked improvement, and adds: 'With the right kind of education, I am satisfied that he would continue to improve; and while I make that statement, there are several things to be taken into consideration.' He was asked this question: 'Assuming that this young man's estate, as it exists at present, to be invested in securities,—Pennsylvania Railroad stock, and the remainder in school, city, and county bonds, etc.,—I wish you would state what your judgment is as to his ability to take care of that property, invested in that way;' to which he answered, 'I think he could do it.' On cross-examination he said that he had not tested George as to his studies after the lessons ceased; that he did not think that George had an ordinarily developed mind; and explained: 'In the first place, George is one of those men in whom the sutures of the brain become hardened early. In the second place, I think his education has not been sufficient, or of the kind, to develop the mind of any boy.' He further said, 'I think he could transact ordinary business.' He was asked the question, 'Suppose he was given his estate to day, of $200,000, invested in stocks and bonds; do you think he could be trusted to convey that property, and reinvest it safely?' To which he answered: 'No, I don't. I think he can manage that as at present invested. . . . He could take care of it with such advice from counsel or business men that he could secure, but I don't think, without that, he could manage any business complications.' R. G. Gamble, an uncle of Neal's wife. He knew George about eight years. In answer to the same question put to Dr. Fulton says: 'Well, I believe George could take care of money, and I believe he knows when he sees a good investment. I think in time George could be educated, with a little assistance, to manage it himself. Of course, it is very hard for a man that has never had any experience in business of any kind to manage or transact business,—buy or sell safely.' He was asked:

"Q. Do you think George could be safely trusted to invest $15,000 to $20,000?

"A. I don't know about that. That would be hard to tell.

"Q. You don't think he could at present?

"A. Not without assistance, and I don't think any person could."

"He advised George to revoke the deed of trust, and gives a statement of the circumstances: 'I told him it would have to be fixed in some shape. Either he would have to take care of it himself, or have it fixed so he couldn't loose it, and nobody could beat him out of it.' William B. Neal, an uncle, says: 'I consider that George is very careful and cautious in any undertaking, but, owing to his bad education, he would not be able to take care of his affairs without further education and advice. Had him in office from the time he was seventeen or eighteen years old until after he came of age.' W. B. Moyle knew him about eight years. 'Says, He is very cautious in money matters.' In answer to question put to Dr. Fulton, says: 'Well, invested in first-class securities, I suppose, I think, I know he would be capable of taking care of it.' And again: 'Well, I don't think George would be able, perhaps, to increase it to any great extent; but as invested now, he would be able to take care of it.' Reese Neal, an uncle, says: 'He visited our house a great deal, and went with us to Michigan once for two weeks. Bought his own ticket, and looked after his own finances. Always considered him very careful.' In answer to the question: 'If his estate, consisting as it now does, of Pennsylvania Railroad stock and municipal and state bonds, was put into his possession, do you think he would be able to manage that property?' 'A. Yes, sir; I think he could.' In cross examination he said: 'By "managing" I mean that if he had that estate left to him, and if he struck some matter that he didn't understand, he would have sense enough to go and see where it was wrong, if he thought it was wrong.' 'I think he is fully developed mentally. I think he is a little slow in some things, but I think that is partly on account of his hearing. He is a little slow in learning.

"Q. You think it would be safe to give him $200,000, and let him go out and take care of it himself?

"A. Yes; because he would take advice where he didn't understand."

"Dr. Samuel Ayers, an expert physician, made an examination of Neal for the purpose of testifying in this case. He had ten or twelve interviews with him. Says that 'he is possessed of a very fair degree of mental capacity,—a little under the average in some respects, and average in others. In the mathematical faculty he is defective. In some of his faculties—his observation, for instance—he was very good. . . . His judgment was apparently good in various matters, perhaps defective in some directions. His attention was close and acute. His speech was clear and coherent in all matters. Special senses all normal, except hearing. Handwriting particularly good, and composition good. Expression of face natural and normal. Caution and care normal.' 'As to mathematics, he is decidedly under the average, in almost every direction you take him. His reasoning powers are quite good.' 'Has difficulty in making change.' 'I think there has been some defect in his development. This marasmus probably stopped the organic growth in the brain. It was an interruption in the early years, undoubtedly; but he seems to have overcome it in later years largely, particularly during his married life. I have no doubt that he has developed in many of his faculties much more readily than before.' Being asked: 'Take George in the condition in which you found him, and give him the position and control of, say $50,000; do you think that would be a safe thing to do?' He answered: 'Well, yes. I will answer you by yes; that it would be comparatively safe.'

"Q. Do you think, for George's own sake, supposing he was some relation of yours,—say he was the only son of some lost sister of yours,—would you put him in possession of $200,000 worth of property to handle and dispose of?

"A. No. I don't believe I would.

"Q. Why wouldn't you do it, doctor?

"A. Well, I would not do it for this reason: I think probably he could not manage safely such a large sum without he had some experience, and without some assistance too. He might get along with it, probably, with some losses; but I believe he is capable of profiting by experience of that kind, because he is capable of development.

"Q. If invested as it is said to be invested now, in Pennsylvania Railroad stock and municipal and county bonds, would he be able to take care of it?

"A. I think he would, from what I have seen of him.'

Mrs. Neal finds nothing wrong. 'It is just the way they kept him.'

"A fair conclusion from all this testimony is that though George B. Neal, the plaintiff, is able to understand an ordinary proposition, when presented, and competent to make a contract, his intellectual powers are by nature weak, and have not been fully developed. None of the witnesses for plaintiff state unqualifiedly his ability to take charge of, and safely manage, his estate. They differ from the witnesses on part of the defendants as to the amount of his mental power, and the chances for improvement. They all agree at present that he would require assistance. George himself says that he thinks he is able to take care of his estate, but is not capable of doing business. Thinks he has improved a little in the last year or two, and says: 'I attribute that to—since my marriage—that I have learned a little more; have got out among people; by getting out more with people, business men especially. But I will learn a great deal more.' The criticism made by plaintiff's witnesses as to the education of Neil does not seem to be well founded. There is no evidence that his grandmother and uncles, with whom he lived, were not anxious to do everything best calculated to develop his powers. Those with whom he passed his daily life would be better able to judge as to what was best than those who met him casually. He was sent to school, provided with teachers, given very considerable opportunity for travel; and his uncle William B. Neal says that for several years he was taken into his office, with a view of his learning something of business. Dr. Willard, who attended him from infancy, and Dr. Fleming, who attended him when grown, would be able to form a more reliable judgment as to his capacity than a physician called in to make an examination.

"The next question of dispute is as to the making of the deed of trust and the circumstances attending it. Defendants claim that, as the allegations of the bill are denied, they should have been supported by the testimony of two witnesses, and, standing on the testimony of Neal alone, all questions thus raised should be resolved against the plaintiff. The plaintiff contends that the relation of the parties casts the burden upon defendants. The testimony having been produced, we think it should be considered and determined upon its weight. This question may be considered under plaintiff's third proposition, to wit, that it must appear (a) that Neal had a true and full knowledge of his estate, its extent and value, and of the income therefrom; (b) that he had a full, clear, and intelligent understanding of the act he was engaged in, and of the effect and consequences of the deed he was executing; (c) that he had independent advice in regard to the act which he was performing. These propositions may be more strongly stated than the law of the case justifies, but they suggest the questions of fact in dispute. George Neal's account of the transaction is that the deed was signed in his grandmother's house. He says: 'I was sitting in the back parlor, reading a book, and William Black and grandmother came to the door. I first noticed them standing in the door, and I just glanced up, and didn't pay no more attention to them; and my grandmother came into the room and spoke to me, and said that Will would like to see me. So I laid down my book, and went out, and followed him across the hall into the sitting room; and he asked me, he would like me to sign this paper. So he held the paper out,—the deed of trust,—and he read it over to me, but didn't explain any of the parts of it. Then he said: 'Do you want to manage this estate yourself, or do you want somebody appointed to manage it for you?' Well, I thought over it a minute or two, and mentioned Mr. Lane. He said, "You would rather have Mr. Lane appointed?" I said, "Yes, sir;" and he said, "Well, sign this." I signed the paper, and he didn't say anything for a while; and I said, "Will, can I look at the papers?" and he said, "Certainly," and I looked over it. Just glanced down each page, and turned it over, but I couldn't understand anything about it. I never saw such a paper as that before. Then I folded it up again, and handed it over to him. He says, "Do you understand it?" I says, "Yes," but I meant that I had appointed Mr. Lane, and that was all there was of it. Then he asked, "There is some other part of it I can't quite remember," but he showed me a paper of some kind that he called a statement. He held it in his hand, but I could not tell you what was on it. I only heard only a short time before that Mr. Lane was my guardian. Only after I signed this deed of trust, I asked Will, "How much am I worth, Will?" And he said, "Something over $150,000." On cross-examination he said that before this he knew that he had some property, but did not know how much, or who had charge of it; that a couple of weeks before he heard an aunt say that Mr. Lane was his guardian. 'I didn't think any more of it.' He had no recollection of signing any paper in connection with Mr. Lane's account. The only paper he recollected was the deed of trust. Says he acknowledged the deed of trust at the office of W. A. Lewis, but says, 'He didn't tell me anything about the deed of trust,' and denies that he had any talk with Mr. Lewis as to the terms of the deed, or the account of Mr. Lane. 'He read it over to me but that's all. William H. Black read over something, but I don't know what was on it.' William H. Black says that Dr. Willard had advised that some arrangement should be made for the care of Neal's estate when he came of age; that, when George was about to come of age, he obtained a statement showing accurately the condition of George's property up to that time; that he gave the statement to him, and asked him whether he thought that he was capable of managing his property. He replied, in a very pathetic way, that he didn't feel himself competent to take charge. He then expressed a desire that Mr. Lane should continue the management of his property. He professed that he understood the situation, and at his suggestion I undertook to become trustee in the interim, until Mr. Lane had filed his account as guardian and been discharged. I showed it (the statement) to him, particularly the part showing the aggregate of his property. This was the result of a family consultation. Afterwards saw W. A. Lewis, Esq., and after a number of consultations with him the deed of trust was prepared. Mr. Lewis was not Black's attorney, but had represented George Neal's estate. The deed was signed at Lewis's office. Mr. Lewis went over it with Neal, and discussed it with him. The clause making it irrevocable was inserted at Neal's request. As to his understanding of the statement and deed of trust, he says: 'He had mind enough to understand the total amount, and different items composing his estate, but would not know the difference between a bond and a promissory note. He understood the terms of the deed of trust. Whether he understood the full import, I do not know.' W. A. Lewis says he was attorney for Neal's estate, and for his guardian. He did not see Neal in reference to this matter until the time of executing the deed, but states at length his conference with William H. Black, and his instructions to him, and states the interview when the deed was signed as follows: 'I asked Neal whether he understood what his estate consisted of, and whether or not he wanted me to go over the account of Mr. Lane with him, and explain it to him. He said, "No;" that his uncle William H. Black had gone over it with him, and he understood it pretty well, or as well as he hoped to; that he didn't understand figures or money matters very well, and he didn't want to have anything to do with it,—he would only get twisted up, —and he wanted me to have his uncle appointed trustee first, so that Mr. Lane could file his account, then when Mr. Lane would get through with his account, and it would be passed by the court, then Mr. Black would appoint Mr. Lane trustee in his stead. I then asked him whether or not he wanted this deed of trust to be revocable at any time, and advised him that he ought to state in the deed of trust whether he wanted it revocable or irrevocable; that it might be drawn to be revocable after ten years, or after he would become fifty, if he thought he would improve; but he said he didn't expect to, that he had been training with teachers and traveling, and the only thing he could learn was a little history, and for me to put in a clause so that it couldn't be coaxed away at any time. That is the word he used. Then I added the clause in his presence, in the office. I wrote these words: "And I hereby make this conveyance irrevocable." This deed of trust was not out of my office after it was signed, until Mr. Neal had been there and talked it over with me and executed it. I read it over and explained it to him. I think we were pretty near all the afternoon over it,—an hour or an hour and a half any way. There was nothing in this paper he did not understand. He was brought to my office for that purpose. Otherwise I could have sent this paper to be signed by him at his grandmother's. It was explained in all its details, and I thought he well understood it. He afterwards joined with his uncles in having Mr. Lane discharged. That is the paper they sent to Grandmother Black's home.' He says the clause in relation to income was inserted after the paper had been drawn, and after discussion with Neal, which he details. 'As the paper was originally drawn, I think he was to draw all the income if he wanted it. And he thought that was giving him too much range, and it might not be best to have it in that shape.' Samuel Rea says: 'I remember one occasion, we were at the Savoy Hotel, I think, in London. He detailed to me the transfer of his estate, and how well satisfied he was that Mr. Lane or his uncles should have charge of it; that he didn't feel that he could take care of it or understand it.' Miss Benson says: 'About the time he was twenty-one, he came to me and told me that they had told him all about his affairs, and asked him if he wanted to take charge of his money, or have someone else do it, and he said, "Oh, no," he wanted somebody else to do it, and they asked him who, and he said Mr. Lane and his uncle Will. Then it seems that he had some papers at home that he wanted to bring up to me to read. He read them over, he said, and could tell me where his money was, and how it was arranged, what railroad stock he had, and different things about it. He tried to explain to me, but I can't tell you anything he said, because I didn't care. I remember he spoke about railroad stocks. I think he told me the amount of the whole. It was something over $150,000.'

"In view of this testimony, there is no room to doubt that the plaintiff was fully and fairly informed of the condition of his estate, and the terms and conditions of the deed of trust. Whether he fully comprehended them in all the details is not so certain. He was able to understand in a general way the condition of his estate, the purpose to be accomplished, and the mode of effecting it. This is all that should be required. If it were necessary that a person creating such a trust should fully appreciate all the technical intricacies of the transaction, he should not need a trustee, and one who did would not be able to protect himself against his own weakness and incapacity. It is sufficient that he be not deceived, or misled by fear or favor. In this case there is no allegation of any attempt to deceive Neal or mislead him in any way, except such as may be implied from the statement that he was ignorant of the condition of his estate; 'the information in relation thereto being in the possession of said Lane and said Black, and they having concealed the same from him.' This statement is not fully sustained even by Neal's own testimony. He admits that Black told him that his estate amounted to over $150,000, and showed him a statement of it, which he read to him. He is not sustained by any other witness. Black says he obtained a statement from Mr. Lane which he showed to Neal, and explained to him. Lewis says he offered to go over the accounts of Lane with Neal, and explain them to him; but he said that it was not necessary, as his uncle William had done so. And he told Miss Benson that he understood all about his estate, and offered to show of what it consisted. We are therefore of the opinion that there is no reason for setting aside this deed because of ignorance or concealment.

"But it is claimed that Neal did not have proper counsel and advice, and that the deed should be revoked, if for no other reason, because Neal acted 'without any independent advice.' Some of the cases say that this of itself is sufficient ground for setting aside a voluntary deed. What is independent advice? We think an examination of the cases will show that the word is used as a synonym of 'impartial.' One of the definitions of the word is, 'Not subject to bias or influence.' It certainly does not mean that, when a person has the advice of one or more impartial friends, he must seek, or the friend must suggest, application to another. Nor do we think, when the friend is a near relative, who is familiar with the condition of the party as to mental capacity and estate, that it is necessary to call in a stranger to make his advice valid. Neal says he acted solely on the advice of William H. Black. If so, why was he not an independent and competent adviser? It is true that he was made trustee, with an annual salary of $500. But this was a temporary arrangement, to continue until Mr. Lane, the selected trustee, could be properly appointed. Otherwise Black had no personal interest in the deed. All the estate was left to the absolute, final control of Neal. The only interest he could have in the estate would be in case of intestacy. But this he had under the law, and not through the deed. He did not act solely upon his own judgment, but upon the advice of Dr. Willard, and after consultation with other members of the family. In seeking legal advice he did not go to his own attorney, but to Mr. Lewis, who had acted for Neal in appointment of his guardian, and says that he represented Neal's estate, though he acted as attorney for his guardian. Mr. Lane says he knew nothing of the deed until after it was executed. When a young man, soon after coming of age, makes a voluntary deed giving away his estate, or relinquishing a right in favor of another, and especially if he be of weak mind and inexperienced, the transaction should be carefully considered in view of all the circumstances. But in this case we find no evidence that Black and Lewis did not act fairly and honestly for what they regarded the best interest of Neal, and we do not think there was anything in their relations to him or his estate to make them incompetent advisers.

"But it is further claimed that the deed is improvident, and the revocation should therefore be sustained. When a deed is voluntarily executed by a person, it is doubtful whether he can revoke it merely because it is improvident. But as in this case the deed confers no vested right in any third person, but is solely for the protection of the grantor, a court should inquire whether the provisions are inconsistent with such purpose. Under the circumstances of this case, we regard the general purpose of the deed as eminently wise and proper. Neal was a young man possessed of a large estate. He was of weak intellect, but with sufficient ability to recognize his incapacity. He was inexperienced in business, and whether it was because of improper education, as alleged by his witness, or inability to take a proper education, as said by those more intimately associated with him, the fact remained, and even he himself did not expect improvement. It was certainly wise in him to put it into the hands of someone able and willing to take care of it, and upon terms which would prevent waste by mismanagement, and so that it might not be coaxed from him. The trustee selected was a well-known business man of unquestioned integrity, a friend of his grandfather, who had shown his ability by increasing his estate, while guardian, from about $97,000 to about $165,000. Unless something in the special provisions is found to be unreasonable, the deed could not be held to be improvident. We will therefore examine the matters suggested by counsel in their order as stated:

"First. It strips Neal of all his property, without any valid reason therefor.' This is not in accordance with the fact. The deed does not give away any part of his estate, except $500 a year as compensation to the trustee for management. It does give to the trustee the power to control it, for the very good reason that he did not feel able to safely manage it himself.

"Second. It contains no power of revocation.' This is a fact, but it does not of itself render the deed improvident. It was inserted upon full consideration, and at his request, as stated by Mr. Lewis. To have made the deed revocable would have defeated the purpose for which it was made.

"Third. Because it leaves him at the discretion of the trustee as to what portion of the income he shall receive from his own property.' This provision was made after full discussion, and practically at Neal's suggestion. The income was large, and he felt that it might be wasted, and preferred that it, like the rest of his estate, should be protected by the judgment of its trustee. No difficulty has so far arisen. Neal has had all he asked, and presumably all he needed. If the trustee should unreasonably withhold the income, he is under control of the court, and may be compelled to do his duty.

“Fourth. Because it makes no provision for future contingencies or emergencies.” The income of the estate was probably deemed sufficient to provide for all contingencies. It is ample for the liberal support of a family, and the accumulations would probably be sufficient to meet any unusual demands. If not, the entire estate is within the control of the court.

“Fifth. Because it gives unsafe and unwise power to the trustee.” If a man retains control of his property, he has unlimited power over it. If he deems it wise to commit it to another a proper management of it requires that he should confer extensive powers. The specifications under this head are: ‘(a) That the trustee is not required to give security.’ We think an examination of the case will show that it is an exceptional case where a trustee created by a voluntary deed is required to give security. There is no reason why he should be, when he is selected by the grantor, and he alone is interested in the estate. Presumably, he is selected because of his ability and integrity, and for the convenience of the grantor, and it would be unreasonable for the grantor to ask a third person to stand good for the default of his own agent. See Rigler v. Cloud, 14 Pa. 864. (b) The objection that William H. Black has the power to name a new trustee without security has more force. But this alone ought not to strike down the deed. It may seem unwise to give the power to name a new trustee to Black. Neal doubtless thought that, if the occasion arose, Black would act only for his (Neal’s) good, and that his acquaintance with the business world would enable him to make a better selection. He would not be likely to act without consultation with Neal, and if he undertook, improperly, to act contrary to Neal’s wishes, could be restrained. (c) The trustee has unlimited power as to conversion of property and investments.’ We do not think it an unwise thing to authorize the trustee to make investments outside of those expressly designated by law. So far, the investments of the trustee are largely those made by Mr. Black, from whom the estate came. But, as before remarked, a wide discretion must be confided in a trustee in such a case. (d) The trustee is not required to account to anybody.’ Neal can require an account at any time, and, if refused, the trustee can be compelled to make it. It is alleged that an account has been frequently demanded and refused. It was demanded several times within a few days, about the time the bill was filed in this case. Lane told Neal that he would make it out, but that it would require some time. Lewis offered to go with him and go over the books. A statement was made, and handed to Mr. Black, who concluded that at that time it ought not to be furnished. The legislature has conferred upon the courts very extensive powers over trustees and trust estates. It is therefore unnecessary to reserve in the deed creating such a trust rights to the cestui que trust which he may exercise under the supervision of the court, and it would be unwise and improvident to do so when the trust is created to protect him against his own weakness.

“The foregoing has been written in consideration of the facts of the case, and though some of the principles of law, as we understand them, have been stated, we have not referred to the case by which we believe they are established. Those will now be considered.

“At the first blush, it would seem that one who was compos mentis and sui juris, who has made a voluntary deed for his own benefit, and by it granted no vested right to another, should have the power to control his own affairs, and revoke the trust whenever he felt disposed to do so. This does not appear to be the law. When such a trust is created the party constitutes himself a ward of the court, and cannot revoke his act, except subject to the approval of a court having jurisdiction of such subjects. This is apparent from the many cases in which the courts have been asked to ratify such revocations, and the many cases in which they have refused to do so. Among the first cases upon this subject in Pennsylvania is Reese v. Ruth, 13 Serg. & R. 434. The deed was substantially in the terms of the deed in this case. It was an action of assumption, brought before the extensive equity powers now conferred upon our courts by the act of 1836. The court held that the action would lie, but that the jury should have been instructed ‘that the plaintiff had no right to avoid her deed unless fraudulently obtained, and they might at the same time have directed them that she was entitled to what was necessary for present maintenance, under the restriction which I have mentioned.’ One of the cases upon the subject (Reidy v. Small, 154 Pa. 505, 20 L. R. A. 362), is almost identical with the present case, except as to the age of the parties; Reidy being seventy-three years old, and Neal twenty one. Justice Dean, in reversing the decree of the court below, says: ‘We think the execution of this deed, under all the circumstances, was a wise act on part of plaintiff; both he and this trustee have access to the court, who will see to it that the trust is faithfully executed. There is no reason shown why it should be revoked, while there are many why it should be sustained.’ The facts of that case, and the reasoning from them, as stated by Justice Dean, would aptly apply to this case, by substituting ‘natural incapacity’ for ‘drunkenness and fear of insanity.’ It meets nearly every question raised in this case. He very clearly shows that the fact that the deeds contained no clause of revocation did not affect its validity, because such a clause would have defeated the object of the trust. See, to same effect, Ashhurel’s Appeal, 77 Pa. 464, and Ash’s Appeal, 80 Pa. 500. The other reported cases differ from this in the fact that the deeds in dispute gave vested or contingent rights to third parties, but they seem to have been disposed of upon the same principles as the cases cited. In Greenfield’s Estate, 14 Pa. 489, the case seems to have been ruled largely upon Reese v. Ruth, supra. The court says: ‘Settlements like that before us, reserving a present interest in the creator of them, and carrying a future benefit or bounty to other designated parties, are very usual. If fairly made and carried into effect, uninfluenced by fraud or circumvention, they cannot be subsequently impeached, as is shown, among other determinations, by our own case of Reese v. Ruth, 13 Serg. & R. 484.' Page 501. And Judge Gibson refers to the fact that one of her purposes was to protect herself against the importunities of some of her friends. Page 495. In Nace v. Boyer, 30 Pa. 99, it was said that 'nothing but fraud or palpable mistake is ground for rescinding an executed conveyance. . . . But the mere fact that a person is of weak understanding, whether produced by old age, accident, or disease, if there be no fraud or surprise, is not an adequate cause of relief. . . . And the mere fact that a contract is improvident is no ground for setting it aside.' Page 110. 'Advice or even persuasion to make a deed or will in a particular way is not fraudulent. There must be something more, something that amounts to imposition or circumvention.' Page 113. The opinion of Judge Symser considers all these questions very fully and clearly. In this case the court refused to revoke the deed, though it was subsequently declared to be testamentary, and therefore revocable. Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 388, 91 Am. Dec. 159. In Ritter's Appeal, 59 Pa. 9, Ritter being addicted to drink, made a deed of real estate, in trust to pay debts, $60 per annum to Ritter, and balance to his wife. The court says: 'This deed is neither testamentary nor revocable, and it is clearly the interest of all parties that it should be sustained. It was made by the plaintiff with a full knowledge of his own weakness, and we cannot doubt he was the best judge of himself.' Page 13. In Fellows's Appeal, 98 Pa. 470, it was said: 'The title of a trustee under a deed of trust is complete, and irrevocable by the settlor, although the transaction be purely voluntary.' Merriman v. Munson, 184 Pa. 114, was a spendthrift trust. The court below said: 'The proof by these witnesses, as against the plaintiff's own testimony alone, shows that the power of revocation was purposely and knowingly surrendered by the plaintiff, in order to guard against his own inability to control or administer his property.' Page 127, 184 Pa. And the supreme court says: 'To have inserted a clause of revocation in such a trust would have been an act of extreme folly, as it would have rendered it of no value for the protection of his estate.' Page 131, 184 Pa. See also Simon v. Simon, 163 Pa. 292.

'None of the cases in which such deeds have been declared void will be found to be inconsistent with the principles upon which the foregoing cases were decided. They will be found to be ineffective as deeds, because not in accordance with some rule of law, or be voidable because they grant estates, and were procured by undue influence, mistake, or fraud. In Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. 126, and Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 388, 91 Am. Dec. 159, the deeds were held to be testamentary, and therefore revocable. In Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. 279, a lady in contemplation of marriage executed a deed of settlement, in which she provided for payment of the income of her estate to herself for life, and after her death to her children, if any, and, if not, to her brother and sisters. There was no power of revocation. Her husband died, leaving her childless. She had been advised that she could dispose of her property by will, though there was no such provision in the deed. The deed was made in view of marriage, and no other purpose appeared. The court held that there was a mistake of fact, and not merely one of law, against which equity could grant relief as against mere volunteers. The court says: 'It may be admitted also that the mere omission of counsel to advise the insertion of a power to revoke will not alone be a ground in equity to set aside a voluntary conveyance. But the absence of such a power, and the failure of counsel to advise upon it, are circumstances of weight, when joined to other circumstances tending to show that the act was not done with a deliberate will.' The court, however, says: 'There may be reasons for continuing the disability intended by the grantor or settlor which would influence the chancellor to maintain it, as where a settlement is made for self-protection against improvidence, or the urgent importunities of others, which the circumstances show it is difficult for the grantor or settlor to resist.' Page 289. Darlington's Appeal, 86 Pa. 512, 27 Am. Rep. 726, was a case in which a married woman made a voluntary conveyance of all her estate to her husband, and the controversy was between her own child and the children of her husband by a former marriage. It was held that the confidential relation between the husband and wife required affirmative and positive proof that it was her voluntary act, and not induced by undue influences. In Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 528, it was held that the evidence 'tends strongly to show that Mrs. Peiffer signed the deed of trust in ignorance of its legal effect; that she had no intention of depriving herself of all control of her property in the future; and that the brother in whom she confided, misled and deceived her. If Mrs. Peiffer signed the deed under the representation that it could be revoked, then a fraud was practised upon her; if under the advice that she could not insert a power of revocation, she was wrongly advised; she acted under a mistake, partly of law and partly of fact; she was misled by those whose duty it was to inform her. . . . Not only was this deed irrevocable in its terms, but it was improvident.' But the court further says: 'It would be unwise in us to hold that a person may not make an irrevocable gift, nor would the authorities sustain it. There may be instances in which it is to the highest interest of a man to place his estate beyond his control irrevocably. He may do so to protect himself against his own infirmities. . . . The intent to make the gift irrevocable should be clear.' The court thus recognizes the principle of Reese v. Ruth and Reidy v. Small. In Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 611, it appeared that Jacob A. Miskey had made a deed by which he conveyed his entire estate—about $70,000—to his father, reserving for himself the income during his life, making no provision for his wife, and but a slight provision for his son; that Miskey was a drunkard, and largely under the influence of his father, and the deed was prepared by his father, er's attorney. There was no power of revocation, and no testimony in the case showing that this fact was known to him, or was in any manner explained to him; that it did not appear that the deed was read over or explained to him at or before its execution, etc. The court held the principle recognized in all the cases: 'That wherever one person obtains by voluntary donation a large pecuniary benefit from another, the burthen of proving that the transaction is righteous, . . . falls on the person taking the benefit. But this proof is given if it be shown that the donor knew and understood what it was that he was doing. Especially is this the case where the donee stands in a confidential relation to the donor. And that where there is no power of revocation in such a deed, and no reason appears why it should be irrevocable, it is a fact with other circumstances tending to show that it was not executed with proper advice and understanding.' Justice Green very fully cites and considers the authorities upon these questions, and concludes that in no case was there so strong a combination against the validity of the instrument in question as found in that case.

"These cases establish the principles upon which this case should be determined, and it therefore appears to be unnecessary to refer to the many cases decided in the courts of England and of other states, especially as most of them are considered in one or more of the cases above cited, and some of them are inconsistent with the cases decided by our own courts.

"Counsel for defendants have requested the court to find the following facts: 'First. That, when the trust deed was executed, George B. Neal was not, nor is he now, able to manage and control his property; and the purpose of it was to protect his estate, and prevent the same from being squandered or wrested from him by designing persons.' This is found to be true, as stated. 'Second. That it was prepared in pursuance of advice of Neal's physician, and after a family consultation, and with the advice and approval of his grandmother, with whom he had lived, and who had raised him from infancy.' This is found to be true, except that Dr. Willard, who so advised, was not at that time his physician, but had been from infancy, until he was sixteen or seventeen years old. 'Third. That all George B. Neal's estate covered by the trust deed came from his grandfather George Black.' This is found to be true. 'Fourth. That George B. Neal, prior to its preparation, realized that he was not able to manage his estate, and requested that the management and control of the same should be put in the hands of his uncle William H. Black, who should appoint Thomas H. Lane the trustee when Lewis's account as guardian should be confirmed, and that this was done as agreed upon.' This is found to be true. 'Fifth. When the trust deed was executed, Neal knew of what his estate consisted, and the amount of the same, and said deed was executed by him after the fullest explanation of it, without any solicitation from anyone, and with a full knowledge of its provisions, and after he had changed it in two important particulars.' This is found to be substantially true. We would strike out the word 'fullest,' and insert 'very careful.'

'Full knowledge of its provisions' is perhaps too strong an expression. He appears to have had full information of its provisions, and, we believe, an understanding of its general purpose and effect. The testimony does not show any solicitation, though he acted on the advice of William H. Black and Mr. Lewis. 'Sixth. There was no fraud or deceit or misrepresentation on the part of anyone connected with the preparation or execution of said deed, and the deed itself preserved the estate for Neal's own use, and subject to his disposition by will. There was no attempt to control it, except for Neal's own good.' This is found to be true. 'Seventh. Neal's marriage was secret, and unknown to his family. He remained satisfied with the trust deed for over five years, and was induced to begin proceedings for its revocation after his marriage on the advice of one Gamble, an uncle by marriage. The best interests of Neal should be subserved by upholding the deed, and the attempted revocation would put his property in the peril it was the purpose of the trust deed to avoid.' This is found to be true. But the last sentence is a matter of opinion, and not of fact.

"Upon the full consideration of all the evidence in the case, we find, as matters of fact: That the plaintiff, George B. Neal, arrived at the age of twenty-one years on the 26th day of September, 1889. On the 19th day of October, 1889, he executed the deed of trust in dispute. In pursuance of authority contained in said deed, William H. Black appointed Thomas H. Lane as trustee in his stead, and conveyed the property to him, who from that time to the present has performed the duties of the trust. That George B. Neal was satisfied with this arrangement until about the 24th day of February, 1894, when he executed a deed revoking the trust made October 19, 1889. That Thomas H. Lane refused to recognize the validity of this revocation, and this bill was filed to enforce the same. George B. Neal at the time the deed of trust was executed, October 19, 1889, though of weak understanding, and, by reason thereof, wholly inexperienced in business, and of less than ordinary intelligence, was competent to make a valid deed, and capable of understanding the general purpose of such a transaction, and means by which it was to be effected. That Mr. Lane was selected by him to be the trustee, and he was informed why it was necessary or advisable to appoint Mr. Black in the first instance. Before the deed was executed a statement of his property was made out by his guardian, and submitted to him by William H. Black, who informed him of its contents; at least to the extent of the estate. Black consulted with W. A. Lewis, a reputable and competent attorney, and, when the deed was prepared, Neal, with Black, visited Mr. Lewis, who carefully explained the matter to Neal; and after discussion with him the clauses in relation to the disposition of the income, and making the trust irrevocable, were inserted, in accordance with Neal's conclusion as to what was best. Lane had no knowledge of the deed until after its execution. Neal had no advice or counsel from anyone other than William H. Black and W. A. Lewis. William H. Black is the uncle of George B. Neal, and they lived in the house of Mrs. Black together until a few months before the execution of the deed. Black acted upon the advice of Dr. Willard, and after consultation with his mother and other members of the family as to the object of the transaction, but it does not appear that he consulted any other person than Mr. Lewis as to the mode of effecting it. He, however, took no interest under the deed, and was therefore wholly disinterested. Lewis was not Black's attorney, but had acted for Neal in having Lane appointed guardian. Neither Black nor Lewis had any interest to serve, other than that of Neal's; and, so far as appears from the character of the men, we are satisfied that they acted and advised Neal solely for what they regarded his best interests. They were independent and unprejudiced advisers. Thomas H. Lane, the trustee, was a proper selection. He has shown his faithfulness and ability by the successful management of this estate as guardian. In view of the control of the courts over the trustee and the estate, the deed is in no respect improvident; and considering the incapacity and inexperience of Neal, the amount of his estate, and the large income derived from it, it seems to have been eminently wise and prudent. There does not appear to have been any marked improvement in his condition, as to mental power or business capacity, in the six years which have elapsed since the execution of the deed. So that the same conditions which made its execution advisable still exist as reasons against its revocation, and that it is not for the interest of plaintiff that it should be revoked. As a matter of law, we find that the plaintiff has not the power arbitrarily to revoke a deed voluntarily made; that such revocation is subject to the judgment of the court, and should not be ratified unless it appear that the best interests of the plaintiff so require. Under the facts and law of this case, we are of opinion that the deed of October 18, 1889, should not be revoked, and the plaintiff's bill should be dismissed at his costs. A decree will be drawn accordingly.

"We feel disposed to add, as an apology for this lengthy opinion, the words of Justice Green in Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 632: 'It has seemed to us appropriate to dwell with rather more than usual fullness upon our review of the case, because of the unusual character of the questions involved and the relief invoked, the very large amount at stake, and the earnestness, zeal, and ability with which the argument was conducted by the learned counsel on both sides.' And besides, we do not have the benefit of a master's report; and though we are satisfied that the new rule in equity will greatly facilitate business, and be of advantage to parties, counsel, and the courts, it necessitates a fuller reference to testimony and of the cases bearing upon questions of law than was necessary in passing upon exceptions to a master's report."

Messrs. W. B. Rodgers, Joseph Stadtfeld, and J. H. Beal, for appellant:

The burden of proving affirmatively the validity of this deed is on the defendants, because the parties procuring it stood in a confidential relation to the donor, and the deed contains no power of revocation.

84 L. R. A.

Black was Neal's uncle. Black stood in loco parentis.

Lane was Neal's guardian, with all his accounts unsettled, and still in possession of all of his ward's property.

Lewis was Lane's attorney, and in this very matter he was acting on Black's request, and on behalf of Lane. He therefore stood in precisely the same position as Lane and Black. He was acting for them, not for Neal.

Espey v. Lake, 10 Hare, 260; Tate v. Williamson, L. R. 2 Ch. 55.

These facts show a confidential relation.

Dutton v. Thompson, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 278; Williams v. Williams, 68 Md. 871; Huguenin v. Baeley, 2 White & Tudor, Lead. Cas. in Eq. 1156; Darlington's Estate, 147 Pa. 624; Wright v. Smith, 23 N. J. Eq. 106.

Not only did these parties stand in a confidential relation to Neal, but they acquired benefits by this deed.

To Lane:

His compensation in case he should be appointed trustee.

That he would have Black pass upon his account instead of Neal, and be discharged from the guardianship; and thereby relieved from responsibility for Neal's property and his (Lane's) past acts.

To Black the benefits were: The compensation for such time as he might serve.

As one of Neal's heirs at law he would be entitled to a large share of the estate in case Neal died intestate without issue.

These benefits are much greater than in Dutton v. Thompson, supra; Whitridge v. Whitridge, 76 Md. 54; and Williams v. Williams, supra.

The important fact is that Neal was giving up all his property and all power over it, without any valuable consideration to him.

Williams v. Williams, supra.

The fact that the deed contains no power of revocation of itself puts on the defendants the burden of proof.

Coutts v. Acworth, L. R. 8 Eq. 558; Garnsey v. Mundy, 24 N. J. Eq. 243; Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 611; Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. 269.

In order to sustain this deed, they must show, by clear and decisive proof:

Toker v. Toker, 3 DeG. J. & S. 487.

1. That Neal had a true and full knowledge of his estate, its extent and value, and of the income to be derived therefrom.

Taylor v. Taylor, 49 U. S. 8 How. 183, 12 L. ed. 1040.

2. That he had independent advice in regard to the act which he was performing.

3. That his act was uninfluenced and unbiased by the confidence he reposed in Lewis and Black.

4. That the terms and provisions of the deed are reasonable, proper, and provident.

5. That he had a full, clear, and intelligent understanding of the act he was engaged in, and of the effect and consequences of the deed which he was executing.

Neal had never had possession of any of this property, and all of it was in possession or control of the persons who were procuring this deed. This is an important fact.

Will's Appeal, 22 Pa. 332.

The absence of independent professional advice, in the case of a voluntary conveyance, would seem to be decisive in favor of the right of the party executing it to ask that it be set aside.

Mr. Bispham in 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 350, note; Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 4 Giff. 159; Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252.

Black, who was getting possession of this estate as trustee with unlimited powers, was certainly not a "disinterested" and competent adviser.

Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 611; Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551; Prideaux v. Lonsdale, supra; Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. Jr. 287; Williams v. Williams, 68 Md. 871.

The only thing Lewis did, according to his own story, was to tell Neal that he could make the deed revocable after a certain number of years; but he does not pretend to give him any advice or suggestion as to what he should do.

Williams v. Williams, supra; Whitridge v. Whitridge, 76 Md. 54; Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. 269.

When we show the confidential relation existing between these parties, the law at once presumes that he was induced to execute the deed by their influence; and in order to sustain the deed they must overcome this presumption by clear and convincing proof that Neal acted on his own judgment, uninfluenced and unhampered by the confidence he reposed in them.

Archer v. Hudson, supra; Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. Jr. 273; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 178.

Even if he was not able to buy and sell, to invest and reinvest, this he could have done by appointing an agent to transact business for him; and this is exactly what Neal wanted to do according to Black's testimony, and all that Neal thought he had done. This would have accomplished all that was necessary and at the same time have preserved to Neal, what it was so essential that he should have,—the opportunity to acquire discretion and experience in business.

There was no reason why the deed should be made irrevocable.

Taylor v. Taylor, 49 U. S. 8 How. 183, 13 L. ed. 1040; Mackason's Appeal, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517; Johnston v. Harvey, 2 Penr. & W. 82, 21 Am. Dec. 426; Russell's Appeal, supra; Coutts v. Acworth, L. R. 8 Eq. 553; Henshall v. Fereday, 29 L. T. N. S. 46.

There is no provision for future contingencies.

34 L. R. A.

Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 535; Whitridge v. Whitridge, supra.

In Everitt v. Everitt, L. R. 10 Eq. 405, a deed which did not reserve to the grantor a voice in the selection of future trustees, and did not contain a power of revocation (both of which are wanting here) was held improvident.

Wollaston v. Tribe, L. R. 9 Eq. 44.

The effect of the deed of settlement must be brought home to the mind of the party.

Welman v. Welman, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 570; Henshall v. Fereday, 27 L. T. N. S. 743, Affirmed 29 L. T. N. S. 46; Everitt v. Everitt, and Coutts v. Acworth, supra; Simon v. Simon, 163 Pa. 293; Phillipson v. Kerry, 33 Beav. 628; Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. 269; Whitridge v. Whitridge, 76 Md. 54; Williams v. Williams, 68 Md. 871. See also Gibbs v. New York Life Ins. & T. Co. 14 Abb. N. C. 1; Ross v. Conway, 93 Cal. 632; Anderson v. Elsworth, 3 Giff. 154; Buffalow v. Buffalow, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 241; Russell's Appeal, supra; Dutton v. Thompson, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 278; Williams v. Williams, supra.

As a spendthrift trust this deed is clearly bad.

Mackason's Appeal, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517; Ghormley v. Smith, 139 Pa. 534, 11 L. R. A. 563.

The provisions as to a spendthrift trust being stricken down, all that is left is a mere power of attorney—an agency—which is revocable at will, even if it be made irrevocable in terms.

Frederick's Appeal, 53 Pa. 338, 91 Am. Dec. 159; Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 528; Green v. Rick, 121 Pa. 180, 3 L. R. A. 48.

The spendthrift trust in the deed being stricken down as illegal, the whole purpose and object of the deed fail.

Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. 279; Rick's Appeal, supra.

Neura Watson & McCleave for appellees.

Per Curiam:

We find no error in this record that would justify either a reversal or modification of the decree. The learned judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law are substantially correct, and fully warranted the decree dismissing the bill at plaintiff's costs. There appears to be nothing in either of the specifications of error that requires discussion.

The decree is affirmed and appeal dismissed, with costs to be paid by the appellant.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Charles S. DAVIDSON, Appt.,

v.

[Michael E. HANNON et al.

(87 Conn. 312.)

A photographic lens owned and used by a photographer in the prosecution of his business is within a provision of a statute exempting from attachment implements of the debtor's trade.

(Hamersley, J., dissenta.)

(February 21, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Hartford County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover possession of a photographic lens which defendants had attached for debt. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lucius F. Robinson for appellant. Messrs. Perkins & Perkins, for appellees:

The protection extended by this section of the statute is to mechanics and to them only.

Patten v. Smith, 4 Conn. 450, 10 Am. Dec. 166; Atwood v. De Forest, 19 Conn. 513; Seeley v. Guilim, 40 Conn. 106.

The legislature did not intend that this phrase should have a broad application, for the reason that in the statute itself it took great pains to define the exact goods and the amount thereof to be protected, and was careful to mention other kinds of business as entitled to protection, which by a broad construction might have been included under the phrase in question.

Enos v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430; Wallace v. Bartlett, 108 Mass. 52.

A photographer is not a mechanic within the meaning of the statute.

Story v. Walker, 11 Lea, 515, 47 Am. Rep. 805.

Fenn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of replevin to recover property attached. The only question necessary for us to decide upon this appeal is whether the court below erred in holding such property was not exempt from attachment and execution under that clause of Gen. Stat. § 1184, which exempts "implements of the debtor's trade." The property in question is a photographic lens. It belonged to one Peters, for whose debt it was attached. He was a photographer, with a place of business in Hartford. He had mortgaged his photographic apparatus and materials, including this lens, to the plaintiff. This mortgage was duly recorded. The plaintiff never had, before the attachment, the possession of said lens, nor the right to the possession of it, except as such mortgagee. Some time after said mortgage, and before said attachment, said Peters gave up his place of business, and stored his photographic apparatus at his residence in Hartford. He there fitted up a room in his barn for the purpose, and continued up to the time of the attachment to take photographs for friends and neighbors, for pay, when the opportunity offered. A lens similar to the one in question was a useful and necessary implement to Peters in his photographic work.

The statute in question is ancient, though it has been varied somewhat from time to time, both in form and in substance. Several of its provisions have come before this court for consideration, and generally, it may be said, that in the decisions a liberal construction in favor of the debtor has been adopted. A single reference will be sufficient to illustrate this, as shown in cases referring to other clauses than the one now before us. In Hitchcock v. Holmes, 48 Conn. 528, the words, "household furniture necessary for supporting life," were construed. It was said: "No fixed or precise definition can be given to the word 'necessary,' as used in the statute. The facts in each case must control its interpretation. Of course, it was susceptible of being confined within very narrow limits; for we know, as a matter of fact, that many families exist, although they are enabled to use very few of the articles to be found in an ordinary household, and these in their rudest forms. But a proper regard for plain legislative intent requires us to use it in a broader, more liberal, and more humane sense; to pass beyond what is strictly indispensable, and include articles which to the common understanding suggest ideas of comfort and convenience." The cases in this state which more directly relate to the clause of the statute now in question are Patten v. Smith, 4 Conn. 450, 10 Am. Dec. 166; Atwood v. De Forest, 19 Conn. 513; Seeley v. Guilim, 40 Conn. 106; Enos v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430. We will briefly refer to each. In Patten v. Smith, supra, the question was as to the meaning of the word "tools," in the phrase then used in the statute, "necessary apparel, bedding, tools, arms, or implements of his household, necessary for upholding his life." It was held that an apparatus for printing, consisting of a printing press, cases, types, etc., might be tools, within the meaning of that statute. The court said that printing was unquestionably a mechanical employment; that the statute concerned the public good, which had a deep interest in the prosperity of mechanical employments, and should be construed liberally; that, in relation to the natural description of the goods of which an exemption is demanded, the exposition of the law ought to be liberal. In Atwood v. De Forest, supra, the words now under consideration, "implements of the debtor's trade," which had been inserted into the statute in 1821, and have since continued there, were construed. The question in that case was whether the debtor was a mechanic, or a manufacturer; whether the articles claimed to be exempt were tools or machinery. The work carried on was that of making spectacles. It was held that the articles employed were not exempt, not because spectacle-making was not mechanical, not a trade, but because the facts showed that the parties were manufacturers, and "that they were not spectacle-makers, within the meaning of the statute." The court, in defining "trade," said: "By the word 'trade,' as used in this statute, we suppose is meant the business of a mechanic, strictly speaking, as the business of a carpenter, blacksmith, silversmith, printer, or the like, and that it was not intended to include the business of a manufacturer, any more than it was intended to extend to the business of a merchant or farmer." It is evident that the court did not intend, by the use of such language as we have quoted,—especially when used for the purpose and in the connection in which it appears,—to give a strict or narrow meaning to the word "mechanic," but only to show that distinction to which we have referred, and upon which the decision rests. Concerning this the court adds: "If it be said that the distinction between a mechanic and a manufacturer is not as precise as is desirable, and that there is difficulty in determining to which class certain individuals belong, especially in cases where men are engaged in both the business of a mechanic as well as that of a manufacturer, the answer is, the difficulty is not in the distinction itself,—that seems to be precise enough,—but it is in the application of the distinction to particular facts; and that is a difficulty common to the application of most of the rules of law, and in doubtful cases it can only be solved by the finding of a jury." In Sealey v. Guillim, supra, a similar question as to the distinction between a mechanic and a manufacturer, between machinery and tools, arose. In that case it appeared that a debtor carried on the business of bookbinding and manufacturing blank-books; working himself, and employing four hands. Certain of the articles were held to be exempt, and others not. The rule applied is thus stated: "His [the debtor] being a manufacturer does not prevent the statute from operating to exempt the implements of his trade, so far as they are used by him in person. On the other hand, the fact that he is carrying on a trade will not extend the provisions of the statute to articles employed by him as a manufacturer merely." In Enacoe v. Dunn, supra, it was held that the horses and carts of a person engaged in the business of carting coal are not protected from attachment as tools of a debtor's trade. This, it was stated, could not "be said to be the 'business of a mechanic,' either by definitions from the books or by the common understanding and speech of men." Surely this, as it seems to us, is evident enough.

NOTE.—For some other cases of exemptions from execution, see Watson v. Lederer (Colo.) 1 L. R. A. 554, and note; Re McManus's Estate (Cal.) 10 L. R. A. 84 L. R. A.

567; and Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Hunt (Iowa) 12 L. R. A. 478.

84 L. R. A.

The rules adopted—the principles established—by the cases in the construction of this statute are binding upon us at the present time. The fact that the language in question has continued unchanged in the statute for three quarters of a century indicates conclusively that such language, so liberally construed as it has been by the courts, declares the public policy of the state in relation to the matter. If this be doubted, the remedy of those who thus question lies in an appeal to that body which enacted, and has been content to continue, the law. We think that to such avocations, as those of carpenter, blacksmith, silversmith, printer, bookbinder, spectacle-maker, which have been recognized and declared by this court to be trades,—so clearly as not to require the statement of any reason or explanation why,—there is no reason why the avocation of a photographer carried on as it was by Peters, as stated in the finding, should not be added. Certainly he was not a "manufacturer," as that word has been defined by this court. If his business, carried on in any possible way, could be held to be a trade, we think it should be so held, upon the facts before us. He depended, in the conduct of his craft, upon the labor of his hands. It does not appear, nor, taking judicial notice of matters in the realm of common observation and knowledge, are we led to think, that he required for his work either a liberal or an extensive education. In all probability, some, at least, and perhaps all, of the other avocations referred to above as recognized trades, would require more special knowledge, apprenticeship, and training for their successful exercise than this work of photography, as ordinarily carried on, and presumably in this case. We conclude, therefore, that the court below erred in holding the article in question was not exempt.

There is error in the judgment complained of, and it is reversed.

The other Judges concurred, except Hamersley, J., who dissents.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary C. McAFEE, Admr., etc., of James McAfee, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

Frederick W. HUIDEKOPER et al., Receivers of the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company.

(.....D. C. App.....)

1. The act of crossing a car platform from one car to another while the train is in

NOTE.—Negligence of passenger in passing from one car to another.

McAFEE v. HUIDEKOPER follows the rule which has been adopted by the great weight of authority upon the question. There are cases in which the facts show that the attempt to cross the platform was a negligent act, and perhaps with the old style platforms and couplings it might be considered negligence to attempt to pass from one car to another at any time. But with the modern machinery and the smoking car at one end of the train and a dining car perhaps at the other it would hardly seem to be negligence as matter of law to pass through the train, even though they are not vestibuled.

! The general rule.

It is not per se negligence for a person to attempt to pass from one car to another when the train is in motion, so as to bar his estate from recovery in case he is killed by a fall from a platform so defective as to show gross negligence on the part of the carrier. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berg, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1105.

It is not negligence per se for a passenger on a rapidly moving train to pass from one car to another in search of a seat. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Clowes (Va.) 24 S. E. 888.

It is not per se a negligent act for a mother to permit her boy of the age of twelve years to go from one car to another of a moving train for the purpose of finding a seat, which will bar a recovery in case he is injured in attempting to return to her after the train has stopped at a station. Downs v. New York C. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 83.

A person on an excursion train, who is permitted by the conductor to go through the train to sell tickets to persons who have not procured them, is not guilty of negligence in attempting to return to his seat when he is through, although the cars are in motion and he is obliged to pass across a running board on the outside of an open observation car to reach his seat. Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. 53 Mich. 43.

Walking over a train of flat cars while the same are in motion, or even stepping from one of such cars to another while the train is in motion, is not negligence per se. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McCandless, 38 Kan. 366.

Removing a passenger from one car to another of a rapidly moving train is not negligence per se. Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 33 Iowa, 562. The court says that within a very short period there have been such wonderful improvements in the platforms and couplings of passenger coaches as that passengers may with comparative safety pass from one car to the other on the fastest trains of the country while in motion. It cannot be true, therefore, as a matter of fact, that to pass from one car to another while the train is in motion at the usual rate of speed is so necessarily dangerous that it may not be justified under any circumstances.

The question is for the jury whether or not a per-motion is not negligence as matter of law in the absence of any rule of the carrier prohibiting it or any attempt to prevent passengers from so doing.
34 L. R. A.

2. No presumption of negligence can arise from the mere fact that a passenger was injured while attempting to pass from one car to another while the train was in motion.

(May 31, 1906.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of son on an excursion train is negligent in attempting to go into another car for water at a time when the train has almost stopped at a station, and who is thrown between the cars by a sudden jerk of the train caused by an attempt to get it nearer a safe stopping place, by which the coupling pin is broken and the cars separate so that he falls between them. Otochett v. Savannah & T. R. Co. 54 Ga. 687.

It is not as matter of law negligence contributing to injury from an electric shock caused by imperfect insulation, for a passenger to swing round from the step of an electric street car to that of a trailer, when the railroad company has no rule prohibiting it and allows it without objection. Burt v. Douglas County Street R. Co. 83 Wis. 229, 18 L. R. A. 479.

In Willis v. Long Island R. Co. 34 N. Y. 670, affirming 32 Barb. 398, where the plaintiff was injured while standing on the platform when all the seats within the car were full, the court says it is not the duty of passengers to pass from one car to another in search of seats while the car is in rapid motion.

But in Louisiana it is held that it is negligence for a passenger to attempt, without inducement or invitation or necessity, to pass from one car to another when the train is in motion, and if he is thrown from the platform he cannot recover against the carrier. Bemis v. New Orleans City & L. R. Co. 47 La. Ann. 1671.

Passenger assumes incidental risks.

It is not an act of negligence for a passenger to pass from one car to another while in motion, but he assumes the risk incident to such undertaking from ordinary causes. Sickles v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex.) 35 S. W. 493.

A passenger in going from the smoking car back to his place in the passenger car only assumes the ordinary risks incident to such action on his part, and may recover in case he is injured by falling between the cars in consequence of their separating while he is stepping from one to the other by reason of a defective coupling, which the carrier has negligently left in the train. Costikyan v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 58 Hun, 590.

Where a passenger took a wrong train and was told by the conductor that if he took one of the two rear cars he would be returned to his station, and he immediately started for them but was thrown from the platform by a lurch of the train upon meeting a passenger there, the court held that the statement of the conductor did not justify the attempt to make the change of cars while the train was in motion at the risk of the company. In going from one car to another of a rapidly moving train merely for his own convenience the plaintiff took upon himself the risk of all accidents not resulting from any negligence on the part of the defendant. And since the evidence failed to show any negligence on the part of defendant which caused the accident the plaintiff was not permitted to recover. Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co. 146 Mass. 605.

Columbia in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Westel Willoughby for appellant.

Messrs. Leslie Ryan and John P. Shepperd, for appellees:

The burden was on plaintiff to prove that the receivers were operating the train on the morning of September 21, 1892.

Negligence of defendants must be proved in an action like this.

Parrott v. Wells ("The Nitroglycerine Case").

A person does not in going through a train in search of a seat take the risk of a collision with a locomotive engine on another train, so as to prevent his recovery in case the collision occurs and he is injured while on the platform of a car. DeWire v. Boston & M. R. Co. 148 Mass. 343, 2 L. R. A. 163.

Obedience of instructions.

It is not negligence as matter of law for a passenger to follow the directions of an officer of the carrier and pass from one car to another of a train for the purpose of finding a seat while the train is in motion. McIntyre v. New York C. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 287. Affirming 43 Barb. 532.

If the conductor tells a passenger to go forward into another car to find a seat, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to obey so that he cannot recover for injuries received by being jostled off the platform by the brakeman. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Ind. 371, 47 Am. Rep. 149.

It is not contributory negligence per se for a man accustomed to railway travel to attempt to pass from a passenger coach to a baggage car while the train is moving less than 4 miles an hour, if after signal for the station is given the conductor tells him that the train will not have time to stop, and directs him to hasten to the baggage car in order to get certain goods preparatory to getting off the train. Davis v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 69 Miss. 123.

If a passenger on entering a train finds it full, and the conductor announces that another coach has been added in front into which passengers must go, and upon going to the door finds the coach there apparently ready for passengers, he is not guilty of negligence in attempting to step from one platform to the other, so that he cannot recover in case the cars are suddenly jerked apart and he falls between them. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Martin, 111 Ill. 219.

Where plaintiff upon taking defendant's train found all the seats full, whereupon the conductor announced that another car would be added to the train, which was done, and then the conductor called out, "All aboard," whereupon plaintiff attempted to pass from one car to another, and it was dark and the cars had failed to lock so that they had parted some distance after contact, and the plaintiff fell between them and was injured, the court held that the question of negligence and contributory negligence was for the jury. Lent v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 437. Affirming 22 Jones & S. 317.

Vestibuled trains.

Where a passenger in the rear car of a vestibuled train, desiring to go forward into another car in the night, left the door open to guide him on his return, and in attempting to return mistook a light from a window for the light which he supposed 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206; Button v. Frink, 51 Conn. 342, 50 Am. Rep. 24; DelaWare, L. & W. R. Co. v. Napheys, 90 Pa. 135; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 59 Mich. 257.

The estimate of a witness, especially of a nonexpert, of the rate of a moving railway train, is very unsatisfactory proof, and should be received with great caution. If the res gestæ renders it impossible, or even highly improbable, that the estimate can be correct, it should be rejected.

Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357.

The mere fact that the accident occurred does not raise a presumption of negligence.

posed would shine from the door, and in going toward it walked out of the outside door, which had been negligently left open, and was injured, the court held that it was error to sustain a demurrer to the declaration. The court said the defendant was under no obligation to provide vestibuled trains for its passengers, but having done so it was its duty to maintain them in a reasonably safe condition. The presence of such an appliance on the train is a proclamation by the carrier that it has provided passengers a safe means of passing from one car to another and an invitation for them to use it as their convenience or necessity may require. Whether, having provided it, it was negligence to leave it without light, and to leave the outside door open without guard, was a question for the jury. On the other hand, the act of the passenger in leaving the door open to light him on his return was an act of care and not negligence, and the optical illusion of the light from the window, and not his negligence, caused the accident. Bronson v. Oakes, 78 Fed. Rep. 734.

Negligence in fact.

Where the train is going 40 miles an hour, and the platforms are old-fashioned so that the cars are one moment close together and the next moment 2 or 3 feet apart, it is negligence for an inexperienced traveler to attempt of his own motion to pass from one car to another, but if he is directed to do so by the conductor the question of negligence is one for the jury. Cleveland, C. C. & L. R. Co. v. Manson, 30 Ohio St. 451.

A lame passenger who, while the train is standing still, attempts to cross from one car to another for the purpose of finding his seat, is guilty of negligence in stepping on the buffers, so that she cannot recover for the injury in case the train at that moment starts with a jerk and her foot slips between the buffers and is crushed. Snowden v. Boston & M. R. Co. 151 Mass. 220.

In State v. Maine C. R. Co. 81 Me. 84, where the action was for the death of a person found dead on the track, who when last seen was going through a car toward the end of the train, the court says: "We think it some evidence of carelessness on the part of the deceased that he was rambling through the cars on such an occasion, in a dark night when the train was running swiftly, on a road having frequent and sharp curves, unless there be some excuse or justification for it more than mere restlessness or curiosity."

A person on a train who goes to the engine to get water, and is injured by falling between the tender and the coach in attempting to return, is guilty of such negligence that he cannot recover for the injury, although his fall was caused by the sudden putting on of the air brakes, and the fact that a hand brake on the coach, which he relied on to aid his passage was loose and turned in his grasp so that he lost his balance. McDaniel v. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. 90 Ala. 64.

H. P. F.

State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 58 Md. 221; Holbrook v. Ulrica & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 236, 64 Am. Dec. 502; Barnard v. Philadelphia R. Co. 60 Md. 555; Blanchette v. Border City Mfg. Co. 148 Mass. 21; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Stewart, 18 Lea, 482; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494.

The only exception to the rule that no negligence is presumed from the mere fact of accident is, as said by the court in Briggs v. Oliver, 4 Hurlst. & C. 403, where the accident grows out of or arises by reason of some defect or accident to the thing itself, which is shown to be managed by the defendants, or an accident which would not have happened in the ordinary course of human events.

Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurlst. & C. 722; Kearney v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Rose v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co. 20 Blatchf. 411.

No rate of speed is as a matter of law negligence per se.

Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co. 146 Mass. 605; Thompson v. Duncan, 76 Ala. 384; Wallace v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 74 Mo. 594.

Passing from car to car while a train is moving rapidly is negligence per se.

Hutchinson, Carr. 649.

In the discharge of his duty it is the province of the court, either before or after verdict, to decide whether the plaintiff has given evidence sufficient to support or justify a verdict in his favor, not whether on all the evidence the preponderating weight is in his favor; that is for the jury. But, conceding to all the evidence, the greatest probative force to which, according to the law of evidence, it is justly entitled, is it sufficient to justify a verdict?

Pleasants v. Fant, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 116, 22 L. ed. 780; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Tobriner ("Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon's Barr."), 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284; Metropolitan R. Co. v. Snashall, 3 App. D. C. 420.

An intimation, or even direction, to a passenger to occupy a position of danger will not render the railroad company liable for injuries resulting therefrom if the danger was so obvious that a reasonable man would not have obeyed or accepted the invitation.

Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. ed. 506; Hazard v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 1 Biss. 508; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Randolph, 58 Ill. 510, 5 Am. Rep. 60; Southwestern R. Co. v. Singleton, 67 Ga. 307; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Schaeffer, 75 Ala. 136.

Shepard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Tried by the rule laid down in Adams v. Washington & G. R. Co. (D. C. App.) 24 Wash. L. Rep. 364, the judgment appealed from in this case must be reversed for error in the instruction to the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

The appellant's intestate was not riding on the platform of a cable car, as Adams was; but was passing from one car to another on defendants' road in a train propelled by steam. He had purchased his ticket and entered the car with his wife, at his home station in Virginia, on his way to Washington. There was no vacant seat for him in the car in which his wife procured a seat, and he went to the smoking car. There he remained smoking and talking to others until the train approached the "Long Bridge." He got up to leave the smoking car, saying that he would go forward to his wife before reaching the station, as she might otherwise become separated from him in the crowd, which was great. When last seen he was on the platform with one hand holding his hat, and the other probably holding the knob of the car door. According to some of the witnesses, the train was running at a very high rate of speed; others estimating the speed at from 20 miles to 25 miles an hour.

As the intestate reached the platform, the train turned a sharp curve and the lurch of the car threw him therefrom with great violence. His body struck the ground 13 feet from the track, broke through a railing, and stopped rolling at a point 37 feet from the track. He was unconscious when the first witness reached him, and died very soon afterwards. Several passengers familiar with the road testified that the lurching or swaying of the train in turning the curve on that occasion was violent and extraordinary. There were exclamations of surprise and alarm among the passengers in the car when it occurred. Passengers sitting on seats were almost thrown from them, and others who sat on the arms of seats, because there were no others, owing to the crowded condition of the car, were thrown violently across the aisle.

Another witness testified that about six days before the accident he had noticed, in passing over this curve a depression in the track caused as he thought by a "floating tie." He said: "A tie was loose, or two or more ties were loose, and as the train passed over them, it caused the ties to sink and the train and cars to sway at that point." This evidence was admitted without objection at the time, but it is now insisted that it ought not to be considered because its introduction is not warranted by the allegations of negligence in the declaration. Into that point it is unnecessary now to inquire. If the declaration is in fact insufficient, or if there is any doubt on that point, it can and ought to be amended before another trial. Had this objection been made at the trial, the defect of allegation, if it exists, might have been cured in time to prevent injury. As the case was decided upon the equivalent of a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence as a whole, it would be unjust and unreasonable now to deprive the appellant of the benefit of this evidence in the consideration of the case as it stands.

We have heretofore held that merely riding upon the platform of a horse or cable car is not negligence per se. Metropolitan R. Co. v. Snashall, 3 App. D. C. 420, 423; Adams v. Washington & G. R. Co. supra.

Whether riding upon the platform of a car or steam railway would or would not, under any circumstances, amount to negligence in law, is a question that we need not now decide. The intestate was not riding upon the platform of the car. He was in the act of crossing the platform on his way from the smoking car to that in which his wife was seated. His motive is not material. There was no rule of the defendant prohibiting such passing from car to car, and there had been no attempt, by locking the doors or otherwise, to prevent passengers from so doing.

Railway companies have smoking, sleeping, and dining cars attached to their trains for the convenience and accommodation of passengers. Passengers often go, without objection, to the former, and are often invited to go to the latter, whilst the train is in rapid motion. Accidents rarely happen in passing from car to car, though the act may be necessarily attended with more or less risk all the times. Under all the circumstances, we think it would be unreasonable to hold that the passing from one car to another, save under peculiar and exceptional circumstances, would be negligence as a matter of law. The most that can with reason be said is, that the passenger who passes from car to car under ordinary circumstances, when the car is in motion, takes the ordinary risk that may attend the act; and if hurt in so doing, he must show, in order to recover, that his injury resulted from some act of negligence on the part of the defendant.

This is all that is decided in the case, much relied on by the appellee, of Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co. 146 Mass. 605. No presumption of negligence can arise from the mere receipt of injury under such circumstances.

The evidence in respect of the operation of the train by the appellees as receivers of the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company is not as strong as it might have been; but it was sufficient to go to the jury on that point, and the direction to the jury cannot be sustained on that ground.

For the error pointed out, the judgment must be reversed, with costs to the appellant, and a new trial awarded.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

J. L. BROWN

v.

William H. PETTIT et al., Admsrs., etc., of John S. Davis, Deceased, et al., Appts.

(178 Pa. 17.)

The indorsement of a firm name on a note to the firm from one partner, made in his handwriting, and his discount of the note to his own credit at a bank, are sufficient to put the banker upon inquiry and prevent him from being a bona fide holder, if the indorsement was unauthorized.

(October 5, 1896.)

APPEAL by the administrators of John S. Davis, deceased, from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for McKean County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

Webb Evans and John S. Davis were partners in business. Evans borrowed money of plaintiff, a banker, upon a note in the following form:

Four months after date I promise to pay to the order of Davis & Evans $1,250 at the banking house of J. L. Brown, Wilcox, Pa., without defalcation. Value received.

Webb Evans.

He indorsed the note "Davis & Evans" and Joshua Davis stated that the money was for the benefit of the firm, but had the money placed to his individual account. No part of the money was used in the partnership business. Davis was wholly ignorant of the transaction.

Further facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. P. Weston, Bouton & Gallop, and J. M. McClure, for appellants:

The circumstances were such as to invite inquiry, and the appellee having failed to inquire, bad faith on his part is to be implied, and his claim to be a bona fide holder thereby defeated.

Smith v. Harlow, 64 Me. 510; 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, 999; Merritt v. Northern R. Co. 12 Barb. 605; Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417; Hendrie v. Berkowitz, 37 Cal. 113; Wood's Byles, Bills & Notes, 101, note 5; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 5 Conn. 574; Miller v. Consolidation Bank, 48 Pa. 514, 88 Am. Dec. 475; Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown, 28 Pa. 440, 70 Am. Dec. 142; Central Nat. Bank v. Frye, 148 Mass. 498.

Messrs. William Wallace Brown, T. A. Lamb, A. P. Huey, and F. P. Schoonmaker, for appellee:

The plaintiff is a bona fide holder of a negotiable note for value before maturity, and the only thing that can defeat his recovery will be bad faith on his part, and the burden to prove this bad faith is on the defendants. Even though it should be shown that the plaintiff took the note under circumstances which ought to have excited the suspicion of a prudent man, it would not prevent recovery.

Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa. 59, 5 Am. Rep. 402; McSparan v. Neely, 91 Pa. 17; Second Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 165 Pa. 199; Richards v. Monroe, 85 Iowa, 359; Kitchen v. Loudenback, 48 Ohio St. 177; Breckenridge v. Lewis, 84 Me. 349; Farrell v. Lovett, 68 Me. 326, 23 Am. Rep. 59.

Where an individual was a member of two firms, and drew a promissory note to himself, signed it with the name of one firm, and indorsed it with the name of the other firm, it will not present such a case as would compel the plaintiff, a holder for value before maturity, to prove the assent of the partners to such indorsement, or that the proceeds were applied to the benefit of the firm.

Thmsen v. Negley, 25 Pa. 297.

NOTE.—For the effect of circumstances to put a purchaser of negotiable paper upon inquiry, see also National Park Bank v. German-American 84 L. R. A.

Mut. Warehouse & S. Co. (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 678; also Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf (N. Y.) 10 L. R. A. 676, and other cases in note.

The fact that the note and the indorsement are all in the handwriting of the defendant, Webb Evans, is not such an indication of bad faith as appellants seem to think as would make it the duty of the bank discounting it to inquire into his authority for his act.

Ibid.; Miller v. Consolidation Bank, 48 Pa. 514, 88 Am. Dec. 476.

In Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown the court said that the draft was discounted upon the request of Haldeman and the proceeds paid to him is entirely immaterial.

Ex parte Bonbonus, 8 Ves. Jr. 542; Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417.

Where an executor pledges the stock of his estate for a loan which he alleges is for the benefit of his estate, but the proceeds of which are placed by the bank to his individual credit and appropriated by him to his own use, the estate could not recover the stock from the bank.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 442; Goodwin v. American Nat. Bank, 48 Conn. 550.

The form of the note is not such that bad faith is applied upon the part of the plaintiff. Moorehead v. Gilmore, 77 Pa. 118, 18 Am. Rep. 485; Potts v. Taylor, 140 Pa. 601.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the undisputed facts were that Webb Evans was the maker of the note in his own name, made it payable to the order of his firm, Davis & Evans, indorsed the name of the firm on the note, and requested the plaintiff to place the proceeds of the discount to his personal credit on the books of the bank. As between Webb Evans and the firm of Davis & Evans, on the face of the paper, disregarding the forged indorsement of Joshua Davis, the proceeds of the discount should have been placed to the credit of Davis & Evans. That firm, as well as Webb Evans, had an account on the books of the bank, and, in ordinary course, should have had credit for the proceeds. Had Webb Evans indorsed the note in his own name after the indorsement of Davis & Evans, then the face of the paper would have presented an apparent title in Webb Evans, and in its ordinary commercial aspect the paper, with the personal request of Webb Evans to have the proceeds placed to his credit, would not have been out of the usual course. But, with the apparent title to the note being in Davis & Evans, a request by the maker to have the proceeds placed to his individual credit was out of the usual course; and we think, under the authorities, the bank became subject to a duty of inquiry. It seems to us that these facts bring the case within the ruling in Cooper v. McClurkan, 22 Pa. 80, and Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417, and distinguish it from the other cases cited for the appellee. In Cooper v. McClurkan the facts are briefly stated in the opinion thus: "McClurkan & Fleming were partners in trade, and Fleming drew a bill of exchange in the partnership on himself, and negotiated it to the plaintiff; and now, in a suit upon it, McClurkan defends on the ground that it was not a partnership transaction. This appears to be well taken, for the case, without other evidence, stands just as if Fleming had given the indorsement of his partnership on his own note as security for his own debt, which he could not do. 1 Pa. 417." This is precisely what was done by Webb Evans. He gave his own note to his firm for the amount of the note. He then indorsed the firm name on the note, and therefore pledged the liability of the firm for his own debt, and this he could not do. The proper thing for him to do, in ordinary commercial usage, would have been to deposit the note, or its proceeds if discounted, to the credit of the firm. When he did not do that, he departed from the usual course, in requesting the bank to place the proceeds to the credit of his private account, and thereby made a manifest misappropriation of the firm's money to his own use. The responsibility of the bank, in such circumstances, is thus shown in the opinion of Lowrie, J., in the case just cited. He says: "The plaintiff says he is a bona fide holder without notice of the character of the paper. Is he without notice? He is not if the proper inquiries usually made by a prudent man would have led him to the knowledge of the fact that the acceptor or principal debtor had himself drawn the bill, or, in other words, made the contract that is intended to pledge the partnership as security for himself. Common prudence demanded that the authenticity of the signature of the drawers should be ascertained and this led directly to the fact that it was made by Fleming himself, and common sense would indicate that Fleming had no right to bind his partner as his surety. It is urged that, in borrowing money, copartners may give to their negotiable paper what form they please, and that therefore they ought to be liable here notwithstanding the form. The premise is true, but the conclusion needs, for its support, the proof that the copartners did borrow the money. If they did, then Fleming is an accommodation acceptor, and the drawers are bound as the real debtors. Without this proof we must take the apparent transaction to be the true one, and regard Fleming as borrowing money for himself, and attempting to pledge his partner as his surety; that is, we must decide the case according to the evidence." Every word of this is directly applicable to the case at bar, only with increased force, because here the paper was the direct obligation of Webb Evans alone to his firm, and was palpable notice to the bank that it was his private debt to his firm. When he indorsed the firm's name, and asked the banker nevertheless to place the proceeds to his individual credit, it was a direct and immediate application, with the knowledge and consent of the banker, of the firm's money to the personal use of the maker.

24 L. R. A.

Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417, is in the same line. We held there that an indorsement by a partner of his separate accommodation note with the name of his firm is a sufficient indication of the nature of the transaction to make it the duty of the bank which discounts it to inquire into his authority to use the firm name for the occasion, unless there are circumstances from which the authority can be implied. Gibson, Ch. J., stating the facts, said: "Hall drew the note in question in favor of H. Cochran & Co., procured their indorsement of it, indorsed it with the name of his own firm, had it discounted at the Lumberman's Bank, and had the proceeds put to the credit of his separate account. . . . But that Hall had drawn ostensibly for his separate accommodation, sufficiently indicated that his firm's indorsement was also for his separate accommodation, and made it the duty of the bank to inquire into his authority for the act, as it would have been bound to do had he indorsed the name of the firm on the note of a stranger. The bank then, and the present holder, are affected with knowledge that the transaction was a separate one; and we have the naked case of a note indorsed with the name of a firm, in a transaction out of the line of its business; from which the conclusion is unavoidable, that it was discounted on the faith of an indorsement which was void for want of previous authority or subsequent confirmation." The present case is stronger than this, because there was no intervening third party, outside of the firm, who had made a genuine indorsement for the accommodation of the maker. Here the transaction was direct. The partner made his own note to his own firm, and then indorsed the firm name, and, with the knowledge and participation of the bank, took the proceeds to his own use. It was affirmatively testified by the other partner that he knew nothing of the transaction; that the firm got no part of the proceeds, directly or indirectly; and it was not shown that there was any course of dealing by which indorsements of the firm name by Webb Evans on paper such as this was ever sanctioned or approved by the firm. The nature of the transaction directly informed the bank that the firm indorsement was made by Evans for his private use, and that knowledge put them upon inquiry. In the case of Miller v. Consolidation Bank, 48 Pa. 514, 88 Am. Dec. 475, Agnew, J., in commenting on Tanner v. Hall, 1 Pa. 417, and pointing out the difference between the two cases, said: "The case of Tanner v. Hall differs widely from this. There Hall drew his separate note for his own accommodation to the order of another firm who indorsed it. Then he indorsed the name of his own firm, and procured it to be discounted. It was held that the form of the note and the circumstances sufficiently indicated to the bank that the note was for his individual accommodation, and thus put the bank upon notice."

The case of Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown, 28 Pa. 440, 70 Am. Dec. 142, is cited for the appellee with much confidence, and is claimed to rule in this case. But a very slight examination of the facts in that case shows it to be radically different from this. The draft was drawn in the firm name, in favor of Haldeman, who was one of the partners. Ostensibly, therefore, and on the face of the paper, it purported to be the obligation of the firm to one of its own members. Upon such paper the payee was apparently the owner of the paper, and, in regular course of business, would be entitled to have the proceeds of the draft. There was nothing to give notice to the bank that the transaction was out of the usual course, or was, or was intended to be, a fraud upon the firm. It was upon these grounds that the case was ruled. Said Knox, J., in delivering the opinion: "The case depends upon the question whether the bank was bound to inquire as to the authority of Haldeman to draw the draft in the firm name. It is not pretended that the bank had actual notice that the discount was for Haldeman's separate use; but it is alleged that the form of the draft was sufficient to put the bank upon inquiry. The draft was made payable to Peter Haldeman's order. Was this an indication that it was not drawn by the firm in the usual course of its business? Certainly it was not; for although it may not be the ordinary form in which bills are drawn, it is by no means an unusual transaction, when the object of drawing a draft is to raise money for a firm that it should be made payable to the order and indorsed by one of the members of the firm. . . . Where a draft or bill drawn in the name of the firm by one of the partners is offered for discount, the presumption is that drawing the draft was a partnership transaction, even although it was made payable to the order of one of the members of the firm. Actual knowledge that a bill or note purporting to be drawn or made by a firm was given without the consent of some of the partners, is a good defense as to the nonconsenting partners, but the presumption that the paper is what it purports to be, cannot be overthrown upon a mere matter of form in inserting the name of one of the members of a partnership as payee." The case of Ihmsen v. Negley, 25 Pa. 297, is also of the same character, as is fully explained in the opinion in the last case cited. We think the assignments of error are all sustained.

Judgment reversed, and venire de novo awarded.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

REELFOOT LAKE LEVEE DISTRICT et al., Appts.,
v.

C. C. DAWSON, Sheriff, et al.

(.....Tenn.)

1. A tax on any property in specie or by the acre is contrary to Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring all property to be taxed according to its value.

2. A tax on land alone in a certain levee district, but excepting land under water, violates Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring all property, real, personal, or mixed, to be taxed.

3. A special tax on land in a levee district, which is especially benefited by a levee for which the tax is made, is a tax within Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring taxes to be levied on all property, real, personal, and mixed, and levied according to value.

NOTE.—Similar to the above case and against the authorities in some states, is Mauldin v. Greenville (S. C.) 27 L. R. A. 284.

As to the theory of special benefits to sustain assessments, see Re Madera Irrig. Dist. Bonds (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 755, and note; and Oregon & C. R. Co. v. Portland (Or.) 22 L. R. A. 713.
84 L. R. A.

4. The police power of the state does not extend to the levying of special assessments on property benefited by a levee.
5. The legislature cannot delegate to a levee district the legislative power to levy a tax other than under Const. art. 2, authorizing it to delegate such power to counties and incorporated towns, since this impliedly excludes delegation to any other agency.
6. A levee district created by special law is not within a constitutional prohibition against creating corporations by special law.
7. Taxation of property in a levee district for a levee to protect the property is for a public purpose because beneficial to a large community of people and also to the state.

(June 30, 1896.)

APPPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Dyer County dismissing a bill filed to have declared the result of an election which had been held to determine whether or not a certain levee should be constructed and a tax levied to meet the expenses. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. M. Marshall, Harwood & Tyree, and Deason & Rankin, for appellees:

This act has three provisions that are repugnant to the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity of taxation according to value:

1. It provides for the levy of a tax of 10 cents per acre on all the land taxed, indiscriminately, whether the land be worth 30 cents or $50 an acre.

2. It exempts from taxation all the land "now covered by the waters of Reelfoot lake."

3. All the personal property within the boundaries of the levee district is entirely exempt, as no provision is made by said act for the taxation of anything but land.

McBeon v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 849, 24 Am. Rep. 308; Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210; Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 28; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 898; Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; People, Butler v. Saginaw County Suprs. 26 Mich. 29; Jenal v. Green Island Draining Co. 12 Neb. 168.

The act violates art. 2, § 8, of the Constitution of Tennessee in undertaking to create a corporation by special act.

State v. Wilson, 12 Lea, 247; Keesee v. Civil Dist. Bd. of Edu. 6 Coldw. 127; School Dist. No. 56 v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 108 U. S. 707, 28 L. ed. 601; Board of Directors For Levying Wabash River v. Houston, 71 Ill. 818; Cypress Pond Draining Co. v. Hooper, 2 Met. (Ky.) 850; Schultes v. Eberly, 82 Ala. 242.

The act violates art. 7, §§ 1 et seq., of the Constitution of Tennessee in that it creates tax assessors and tax collectors and other officers without an election of the voters or the people.

Pope v. Phifer, 3 Heisk. 699; State v. Ross, 7 Yerg. 75; People, Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; People, Hubbard v. Springwell's Twp. Board, 25 Mich. 153; People, Park Comrs., v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 224, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Wilcox v. Paddock, and Schultes v. Eberly, supra; Keany v. Bricker, 60 Pa. 16; Cypress Pond Draining Co. v. Hooper, supra; Harward 24 L. R. A.

v. St. Clair & M. Levee & D. Co. 51 Ill. 130; Hessler v. Drainage Comrs. 53 Ill. 111.

The act violates art. 2, § 29, of the Tennessee Constitution in delegating the taxing power to other than a municipal corporation or a county.

Marr v. Enloe, 1 Yerg. 452; Waterhouse v. Cleveland Public Schools, 8 Heisk. 857; Lisecombs v. Dean, 1 Lea, 550; Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 550; Kersee v. Civil Dist. Bd. of Edu. 6 Coldw. 130; Pope v. Phifer, supra.

Messrs. M. A. Lowe and Leech & Savage, for appellees:

This statute is not a delegation of the taxing power. The body incorporated by this statute has for its purpose to accomplish a public use and purpose.

Turlock Irrig. Dist. v. Williams, 76 Cal. 360.

Such corporations are quasi corporations which are political in their character and are agencies for exercising the powers and duties of local government.

State, Baltzell v. Stewart, 74 Wis. 620, 6 L. R. A. 394; Carson v. St. Francis Levee Dist. 59 Ark. 513; State v. Armstrong, 3 Sneed, 634; Morrison v. Shelton, 1 Head, 24.

The power to make laws has been surrendered by the people and vested in the legislature, so that no law can be made by or emanate from them; but this does not prove that it would be an infringement of the Constitution for their representatives to call for and defer to their opinion on the subject of a new law fully matured by them in all its parts before it shall go into effect.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct. 1 Sneed, 675, 62 Am. Dec. 424.

This statute is an exercise of the police power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 783; Carson v. St. Francis Levee Dist. supra; Donnelly v. Decker, 58 Wis. 461, 46 Am. Rep. 637; O'Reiley v. Kankakee Valley Draining Co. 82 Ind. 169; Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 611, 29 L. ed. 230; Tide-Water Co. v. Coaler, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634; State, Baltzell v. Stewart, and Turlock Irrig. Dist. v. Williams, supra; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569.

Taxation in the sense of art. 2, §§ 28 and 29, of our state Constitution means the exactions by the state government paid by the citizens to the state as a state, and for its support and exactions paid by the citizens to the county and municipal corporations as such for their purposes as municipalities and counties. It means revenue for the purposes of government. The assessment form of taxation has as its foundation special benefit to the property of the citizen.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 37 L. ed. 132; Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L. R. A. 330; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 613; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242; St. Joseph, Gibson v. Owen, 110 Mo. 445; St. Joseph, Gibson v. Furrell, 106 Mo. 437; Broad Street, 165 Pa. 475; Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 89 Va. 196; People, Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Louisiana, Southern Bank v. Pillsbury, 105 U. S. 290, 26 L. ed. 1094; Mo-Rear v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 850, 24 Am. Rep. 308.

The judgment of the legislature expressed in the method of taxation shown in the statute cannot be questioned by the courts.

Reclamation Dist. No. 108 v. Hagar, 66 Cal. 54; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355, 31 L. ed. 767; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 623; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 705, 28 L. ed. 571.

The court will not interfere "unless it appear there is an absence of power, or that the particular method prescribed for the assessment of the peculiar benefits to the abutting property is so plainly inequitable as to offend some constitutional principle.

St. Joseph, Gibson, v. Owen, St. Joseph, Gibson, v. Farrell, Raleigh v. Peace, and Norfolk v. Chamberlain, supra.

The bottom of the lake and the land outside the levee are excepted from taxation under § 21 of the act. This is in keeping with the foundation of a special or assessment tax,—that it is an equivalent for a benefit conferred.

Cypress Pond Draining Co. v. Hooper, 2 Met. (Ky.) 850, cited in note to Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 604.

Caldwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In June, 1895, the legislature of the state, while in extraordinary session, by special act, created the Reelfoot Lake levee district, comprising certain territory in the counties of Lake, Obion, Dyer, and Lauderdale, "known as a part of Reelfoot Lake Basin of overflowed lands," and appointed two citizens of each of those counties as "a board of directors" therefor, to serve until the 1st Monday in March, 1898, and until the appointment and qualification of their successors; the said board to have power to "sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have continual succession," for the purpose, and with the power and duty, of erecting and maintaining a levee sufficient to shield and protect the territory mentioned from recurring overflows by the waters of the Mississippi river. Acts 1895 (Ex. Sess.) chap. 1, §§ 1-4. The 5th section of the act provides for the organization of the board; for an estimate by it of the amount of land within the district subject to overflow, of the length and height of the levee required for its protection, and of the probable cost of the same; and for a submission of the question of the necessary taxation to a vote of the people of the district. And the 6th section is as follows: "That for the purposes of building and maintaining the levee aforesaid, and for carrying into effect the objects and purposes of this act, the board of levee directors shall have the power, and it is hereby made their duty, to assess and levy a contribution tax, not exceeding 10 cents per acre, and 2 per cent valuation tax on all the land embraced within the said boundary of said levee district herein named; provided that the board of directors, through their president and secretary, shall notify the sheriffs of Dyer, Lake, Lauderdale, and Obion counties to open and hold an election at the various voting places in the parts of the four (4) counties embraced within the area and bounded and described in the 1st section of this act; and it is hereby made the duty of the said sheriffs aforesaid, upon receiving such notice from the board of directors hereby created by this act, to open and hold said election in the usual manner prescribed by law for popular elections, after giving not less than ten days' public notice at five (5) different public places in the overflowed district, of each county named, and at the time and places named by them; all the leading and qualified electors according to law shall be entitled to vote at such election, and at such election the proposition shall be written or printed on the tickets so voted, 'For assessment,' or 'No assessment,' and the said sheriffs shall make returns of the said election to the secretary of the levee board, and also to the secretary of state, Nashville, Tennessee, and if it appears that three fourths of those voting are in favor of the assessment, it shall then be the duty of said board of directors to levy said tax for that year, and annually thereafter, so long as it shall be found necessary to accomplish the objects of this act." Section 7 requires the board of directors to elect four citizens of the district—one from each county—to act as a board of tax assessors for the district; and § 8 requires the board of directors to elect from the citizens of the district four tax collectors, one in and for the included portion of each county. The 20th section empowers the board of directors to issue and sell long-term, 6 per cent bonds, from time to time, not to exceed $700,000 in all, "to raise funds to carry out the purposes" of the act; and the 21st section is as follows: "That for the purpose of providing for the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by § 20, annually, and to provide a sinking fund for their ultimate redemption, it is hereby enacted that a tax per acre on all the lands embraced within the boundary described in § 1 of this act (except the area now covered by standing water of Reelfoot lake, and the lands outside of the levee), sufficient in total amount to pay the interest on the bonds issued, shall be assessed and collected annually; provided, the said tax shall not exceed 10 cents per acre; and provided further, that an assessment on the valuation of the lands, not exceeding two (2) per cent, shall be assessed annually, and collected as provided for in §§ 6, 7, and 8 of this act, and the same shall be paid over to the treasurer of said board, giving priority to the bonds of first date."

On the 14th day of November, 1895, the Reelfoot lake levee district, by and through its board of directors, and jointly with certain other persons, landowners of Lake county, filed the present bill in the chancery court of Dyer county against the sheriff of the latter county and other citizens thereof, some of them being election officers and others landowners and taxpayers in that part of Dyer county within the levee district. Complainants alleged, among other things, and in substance, that the board of directors provided for by the act was promptly organized, and that it entered upon its duties as therein directed; that it made all requisite estimates for construction and taxation, and thereupon submitted to the vote of the people of the district, in the manner prescribed in the 6th section, their recommendation of a present annual tax of 10 cents on the acre, and of 2 per cent on the value, of all taxable lands within the levee district; that an election was held throughout the district, upon this recommendation, on the 10th day of September, 1895, and resulted, as shown by the returns sent to the secretary of the board, in a total of 732 votes "For assessment," and 632 votes for "No assessment," that 497 of the votes for "No assessment" were fraudulently cast in Dyer county by persons known not to be legally qualified to vote in that election; that, counting such fraudulent and illegal ballots, the proposed taxation was defeated, and, rejecting them, it was approved. And upon these allegations complainants prayed the court to purge the returns from specified precincts in that county, and eliminate therefrom the alleged illegal and fraudulent ballots, so that the true result might be declared, and its legitimate advantages enjoyed by the people of the levee district. The defendants, by demurrer, disputed the jurisdiction of the court, and also impeached the act in question, as being in violation of the state Constitution in several particulars. Chancellor Cooper, hearing the cause upon these pleadings, sustained the demurrer so far as it assailed the act for violation of the revenue provisions of the Constitution, but overruled it as to other questions. The act was adjudged unconstitutional, and the bill dismissed. Complainants have appealed, and the debate of learned counsel before this court, though embracing the whole demurrer, has been addressed chiefly to the grounds sustained by the chancellor; one side denying, and the other affirming, the correctness of the decree in respect thereto.

The power of taxation is an incident of sovereignty,—a prerogative, coeval with the government itself, and indispensable to its perpetuity. It is essentially a legislative power, and as such, in the general appointment of governmental powers, falls to the legislative department, under § 3, art. 2, of the Constitution which vests "the legislative authority" of the state in the "general assembly." Marr v. Enloe, 1 Yerg. 454; Keece v. Civil Dist. Bd. of Edu. 6 Coldw. 180; Waterhouse v. Cleveland Public Schools, 8 Heisk. 359; Memphis v. Union & P. Bank, 91 Tenn. 550; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 4, 41; Burroughs, Taxn. § 6; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 18. In respect to taxation, therefore, as to all other subjects of legislation, the general assembly has full power to pass any law not in conflict with the delegated powers of the Federal government, or with the restrictions of the state Constitution; and he who would show the unconstitutionality of the tax legislation, as of other legislation, must be able to put his finger on the provision of the Constitution, Federal or state, violated thereby. Bell v. Bank of Nashville, Peck (Tenn.) 269; Hopie v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. 8, 47 Am. Dec. 597; Demoville v. Davidson County, 87 Tenn. 220; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants, 89 Tenn. 511, 12 L. R. A. 70. Confessedly, the act before us does not violate any provision of the Federal Constitution. The restrictions of the state Constitution on the subject of taxation are found in §§ 28 and 29 of art. 2 of the Constitution of 1870. Such parts of those sections as it is desirable now to quote are in the following language, namely:

"Sec. 28. All property, real, personal, or mixed, shall be taxed, but the legislature may except such as may be held by the state, by counties, cities, or towns, and used exclusively for public or corporation purposes, and such as may be held and used for purposes purely religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational, and shall except $1,000 worth of personal property in the hands of each taxpayer, and the direct product of the soil in the hands of the producer or his immediate vendee. All property shall be taxed according to its value, that value to be ascertained in such manner as the legislature shall direct, so that the taxes shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. No one species of property from which a tax may be collected shall be taxed higher than any other species of property of the same value.

"Sec. 29. The general assembly shall have power to authorize the several counties and incorporated towns in this state, to impose taxes for county and corporate purposes respectively, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law; and all property shall be taxed according to its value upon the principles established in regard to state taxation.

The language of both sections is plain and positive. Its meaning cannot be mistaken, nor its force evaded. Both sections are mandatory in at least two points that are urged against the present act. Section 28 imperatively requires (1) that all property, of whatever kind, except that mentioned for conditional and unconditional exemption, shall be taxed; and (2) that all such taxable property shall be taxed according to its value. Section 29, though not repeating the first sentence of § 28, makes the same imperative requirements; so that whether a given tax law falls under the one section or the other, or under both of them, those requirements are equally applicable and mandatory. In every instance the requirement that all property (except that mentioned for exemption) shall be taxed, prohibits the legislature from making additional exemptions. Nashville & K. R. Co. v. Wilson County, 59 Tenn. 608; Memphis v. Memphis City Bank, 91 Tenn. 588. And likewise the requirement that all such property shall be taxed according to its value prohibits the legislature from laying a tax on any property in specie, or by the acre. Under the Constitution of 1796, lands were taxed by the 100 acres; but the Constitution of 1834, like that of 1870, contained the provision that "all property shall be taxed according to its value." This means that every property tax shall be graduated by the value of the property on which it is laid. Jenkins v. Ewin, 8 Heisk. 478; Chattanooga v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 7 Lea, 561; South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow, 37 Tenn. 406, 2 L. R. A. 853. The 6th section of the act before us utterly ignores the first-named requirement, in that it expressly limits taxes therein provided for to land alone, and thereby exempts all property,—that without as well as that within the exceptions mentioned in the fundamental law; and it also ignores the second-named requirement, in that it provides for taxation mainly by the acre, regardless of value, and not exclusively according to value. Section 31 of the act ignores both of those requirements in the same manner, and the first one additionally, in that it expressly exempts from all taxation "the area now covered by standing water of Reelfoot lake;" that area being of some value, however small, and not being otherwise exempt.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that §§ 6 and 21 of the act violate the Constitution in the particulars mentioned, if the taxation contemplated by those sections is within and subject to the aforesaid limitations of the organic law. Complainants deny that it is within or subject to those limitations, and seek to sustain that denial and to vindicate the act by the contention that the burden intended to be imposed upon the citizen is a special assessment for the benefit of his land, and not a tax for the support of the state, or any county or municipality therein, and, consequently, that those limitations are inapplicable in this case. The distinction thus urged has been frequently considered by the courts. Judge Cooley, after referring to some of the cases on both sides of the question, says: "The fact very clearly appears that, while there is not such a concurrence of judicial opinion as would be desirable, the overwhelming weight of authority is in favor of the position that all such provisions for equality and uniformity in taxation, and for taxation by value, have no application to these special assessments. . . . It is safe to assume, as a result of the cases, that the constitutional provisions refer solely to state taxation, or, when they go further, to the general taxation for state, county, and municipal purposes; and though assessments are laid under the taxing power, and are in a certain sense taxes, yet that they are a peculiar class of taxes, and not within the meaning of that term as it is usually employed in our Constitutions and statutes. They may therefore be laid on property specially benefited, notwithstanding such constitutional restrictions as have been mentioned." Cooley, Taxn. pp. 684, 686. It could serve no valuable purpose for us at this time to review, or even cite, the numerous adjudged cases on this vexed question. Our examination of them justifies full concurrence with Judge Cooley in the statement that the great weight of authority, for one reason and another, favors the distinction insisted upon by the complainants in this case. Nevertheless, it must be confessed that the adjudications found to be in the minority are not without support in sound reasoning. The great divergence in judicial decisions is due in part to a substantial difference in constitutional provisions, and in part to unlike interpretations put upon similar provisions. This court considered the question elaborately in 1872, and ranged itself with those courts holding what is now the minority view. It thought and held that the distinction then asserted, and now contended for,—being a distinction between local assessments and taxes,—was not allowable in this state, and therefore that local assessments according to lot frontage, and not according to value, were "absolutely void," because in conflict with §§ 28 and 29 of art. 2 of the Constitution, which requires that all taxes shall be equal and uniform, according to value. McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 849, 24 Am. Rep. 308. That construction was approved in the case of Nashville v. Berry (1877)

2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 26, and in that of State v. Butler (1883) 11 Lea, 419, and has in no instance been departed from. We have been able to find no decision of the court, prior or subsequent, in conflict with that construction. In 1845 it was decided in the case of Franklin v. Maberry, 6 Humph. 369, 44 Am. Dec. 315, that the legislature might lawfully authorize the passage of a municipal ordinance requiring lotowners to construct suitable sidewalks along the streets in front of their property at their own expense, and, in case of default, to pay to the corporation the cost of having the same done for them, although the burdens imposed thereby were not equal and uniform as to value, and were not intended to be so; but the ordinance involved in that case was sustained as a legitimate police regulation, and not as a piece of tax legislation. Referring to the ordinance, Judge Green, speaking for the court, said: "We do not think that this law levies a tax. A tax is a sum which is required to be paid by the citizens annually for revenue for public purposes. But this ordinance levies no sum of money to be paid by the citizens. It requires a duty to be performed for the well-being and comfort of the citizens of the town. It is in the nature of a nuisance to be removed. . . . The ordinance in question is therefore not unconstitutional on the ground of being an unequal tax." Id. 872. That ruling was followed in Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180; in Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan, 369; and in Nashville v. Berry, 2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 26. The last-named case, which was decided in 1877, refers to and approves the case of McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 849, 24 Am. Rep. 308, decided five years earlier; and this 9 Heisk. case approves the 6 Humph. and 1 Swan cases, supra; saying, however, that they should not be extended.

Coming back to the language of our Constitution, which, after all, must be controlling, we can entertain no other opinion than that the limitations of § 28 of art. 2 apply equally and alike to every kind of taxes that the legislature has the power to levy, whether they be levied for the support of the state government, as such, in the strict sense, or more especially for the benefit of particular governmental agencies or instrumentalities duly ordained for the accomplishment of authorized local ends. They apply to all taxes in which the state has either a direct or indirect interest; and, if an exaction be made of a citizen for an object in which the state is entirely without an interest, that exaction is not taxation, whatever it may be called. Such an exaction cannot be justified by the assertion that it flows from an exercise of the taxing power of the government. To come within that power, the demand upon the citizen must be made for a public purpose; and, in order that a purpose be public, it must include some advantage to the state in the aggregate, or in some one of its counties, incorporated towns, or other authorized governmental agencies or instrumentalities. If the purpose be exclusively private, then it is totally foreign to the taxing power. "It is the first requisite of lawful taxation that the purpose for which it is laid shall be a public purpose." Cooley, Taxn. p. 55. Every legitimate function of the taxing power of the government is embraced in the word "taxation," and all legitimate taxation is embraced in that provision of the Constitution. Likewise, every exaction without that provision is without that power. "Tax" and "taxes," in their most comprehensive sense, and without qualification, are the words employed by the framers of the Constitution. These words, in their usual and general sense, include every burden that may be lawfully laid upon the citizen by virtue of the taxing power; and they must be so interpreted, in the absence of anything showing them to have been used with a different meaning. Constitutions must receive the same interpretation in this respect as other written instruments and laws. Judge Story, speaking on this subject, said: "In the first place, then, every word employed in the Constitution is to be expounded in its plain, obvious, and common sense, unless the context furnishes some ground to control, qualify, or enlarge it. Constitutions are not designed for metaphysical or logical subtleties, for niceties of expression, for critical propriety, for elaborate shades of meaning, or for the exercise of philosophical acuteness or judicial research. They are instruments of a practical nature, founded on the common business of human life, adapted to common wants designed for common use, and fitted for common understandings. The people make them, the people adopt them, the people must be supposed to read them with the help of common sense, and cannot be presumed to admit in them any recondite meaning or any extraordinary gloss." Story, Const. § 461. No words of exception or exclusion, as to the purpose of any tax, are to be found in our Constitution. Words of exception and exclusion are used, but they relate alone to the property that may be and that shall be exempt from taxation altogether. The requirement that all property, except that exempt, shall be taxed, embraces every tax that may be legitimately levied; and the requirement that all taxable property shall be taxed according to its value likewise embraces every legitimate tax. These requirements apply in every case, whether the tax be general or special. In like manner, the direction that certain specified property shall be exempt from taxation, and that certain other property may be exempt in the discretion of the legislature, refers alike to each and every tax. If it be true that special assessments, as contradistinguished from general taxes, are not within the aforesaid requirements of equality and uniformity of taxation, and of taxation by value, it must be equally true that they are not within the direction as to exemption; and in the latter event they may include the whole of the taxpayer's personality at full value not deducting $1,000 therefrom, nor excluding the direct product of the soil, and they may also include all property held for public, religious, charitable, scientific, literary, and educational purposes; and that, too, in the face of the direction that the first two items shall be, and the others may be and are, universally, exempted from general taxation. Special assessments are entirely within or entirely without the provisions of § 28 of art. 2 of the Constitution. If the former, then they are subject to the same requirements as general taxes; and, if the latter, then they are not subject to any of those requirements, and may rightfully be laid on property exempted from general taxes, such as the taxpayer's first $1,000 worth of personality, the direct product of the soil in the hands of the producer or his immediate vendee, churches, schoolhouses, town-halls, court-houses, asylums, and even the statehouse itself, when within the territory contemplated. It is no answer to the latter suggestion to say that special assessments should be confined to the property especially benefited; for, if they be not subject to those provisions, there is nothing to prevent the inclusion of all property, that exempt as well as that not exempt from other taxation. It is not believed that the framers of the Constitution intended to restrict one kind of taxes and not the other kind, or that they intended to discriminate in favor of special assessments, and against general taxation; nor is it believed that they constructed an instrument susceptible of such interpretation. They included all taxes, and excluded none. Construing § 28, art. 2, of the Constitution, in a case involving a claim of exemption from taxation, this court recently said: "This provision comprehends the whole domain of taxation, and, in explicit terms, prescribes the maximum of exemptions, beyond which the legislature may not go. It declares what property may be and what shall be exempted from taxation, and directs that all the rest shall be taxed. By that mandatory direction the legislature is prohibited from making any other exemptions from taxation upon any ground or consideration whatever, and if it attempt to do so, the effort is unavailing and void for want of legislative power." Memphis v. Memphis City Bank, 91 Tenn. 588. It was truly said in that case that the particular section of the organic law under consideration there and here "comprehends the whole domain of taxation." The next section (29), however, expressly empowers the general assembly "to authorize the several counties and incorporated towns in this state to impose taxes for county and corporation purposes respectively." The latter section relates alone to taxes laid for county and municipal purposes, and covers the whole domain of county and municipal taxation, so far as the same shall be delegated. Waterhouse v. Cleveland Pub. Schools, 8 Heisk. 857, 9 Baxt. 898; Shelby County v. Tennessee Centennial Exposition Co. 96 Tenn.—, 88 L. R. A. 717. And under it, as under § 28, the requirements with respect to equality and uniformity of taxation, and as to taxation according to value, must be observed (Taylor v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 368), and all proper exemptions made, each county and each town acting for itself, and not being in any degree constrained or controlled by what any other county or town may have done or may do. Taxes laid primarily for the state must be laid on all nonexempt property according to value, so as to make them equal and uniform throughout the state; and taxes laid primarily for county, municipal, or other authorized local purposes must be laid on all nonexempt property according to value, so as to make them equal and uniform throughout the more restricted territory to be especially benefited thereby. It is perfectly manifest that the present act does not fall within § 29, because the Reelfoot lake levee district is in no sense either a county or an incorporated town. All taxes that are leviable at all, except those authorized to be levied by counties and incorporated towns, respectively, must undoubtedly be levied by the legislature; and all taxes levied by the legislature must as certainly be levied with reference to the restrictions of § 28. It follows, therefore, that, if a levy of taxes for the benefit of the Reelfoot lake levee district be permissible at all, it must be made by the legislature, and subject to those restrictions. Whether taxes for such an object be allowable in any case will be considered hereafter.

34 L. R. A.

Complainants contend in the next place that, if the act be not sustainable under the taxing power, it can be and should be sustained under the police power of the state. This latter power, like the former one, is an attribute of sovereignty; and it may rightfully have expression in the form of legislation, whenever needful for the promotion of public health, or the preservation of public safety, order, or wellbeing. Rules and regulations established in the proper exercise of this power often require the payment of money for certain specified objects, and thereby in some measure partake of the nature of tax laws, though in primary purpose entirely distinct from them. "The distinction between a demand of money under the police power, and one made under the power to tax, is not so much one of form as of substance. The proceedings may be the same in the two cases, though the purpose is essentially different. The one is made for regulation and the other for revenue. If, therefore, the purpose is evident in any particular instance, there can be no difficulty in classifying the case, and referring it to the proper power. . . . Only those cases, where regulation is the primary purpose, can be specially referred to the police power." Cooley, Taxn. pp. 586, 587. Obviously, the burden intended to be laid on the property of the citizen by the act under consideration is not primarily for regulation; but, on the contrary, revenue is the primary and greatly preponderating purpose, if not, indeed, the exclusive purpose, in the legislative mind. The paramount and controlling idea disclosed in every part of the act is to raise a fund with which to reclaim from frequent inundation a large body (some 300,000 acres) of land in the Mississippi valley, and thereby enhance its value and the wealth of its owners. Strictly speaking, it is without an element or feature of regulation. The health of the people in the locality might be somewhat improved, and even life itself might be saved accordingly, by the construction of the contemplated levee, and the consequent prevention of periodical overflows; but those are the most remote of the benefits to be anticipated from such a work, and were, likely not thought of by the members of the general assembly. Without further enlarging upon the subject, we hold unhesitatingly, that this legislation is in no sense referable to the police power of the state, and that it cannot be justified thereunder. It does not fall within the reason of Franklin v. Maberry, 6 Humph. 369, 44 Am. Dec. 315; Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 180; Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan, 369; and Nashville v. Berry, 2 Tenn. Legal Rep. 26,—before mentioned, but rather within that of McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 349, 24 Am. Rep. 308, and State v. Butler, 11 Lea, 419,—before mentioned. The former cases ruled that the municipal ordinances therein considered were in the nature of regulations for the removal and prevention of nuisances along the sidewalks, and were therefore within the police power of the state; and the latter cases ruled that the special assessments there involved were for municipal purposes, in the general sense, and therefore within the taxing power.

The act is unconstitutional for the further reason that the legislature attempts thereby and therein to delegate a portion of the taxing power to the Reelfoot lake levee district, without express authorization so to do. It has already been seen that the power of taxation is essentially legislative, and, that being so, it fell to the legislative branch of the government, in the organic division of governmental power. Such being the case, that branch, and that branch alone, is authorized to levy taxes in the first instance, and it can delegate its power to do so only to the extent expressly stated in the 29th section of art. 2 of the fundamental law; that is, to the extent of authorizing counties and incorporated towns to levy taxes for county and corporation purposes, respectively. No department of the government can resign or abdicate any of its distinctive and essential powers to another department, and much less to a mere subdivision or inferior agency, unless expressly authorized by the organic law itself. State v. Armstrong, 3 Sneed, 654. "It is a general rule of constitutional law that a sovereign power conferred by the people upon any one branch or department of the government is not to be delegated by that branch or department to any other. This is a principle which pervades our whole political system and, when properly understood, admits of no exception. And it is applicable with peculiar force to the case of taxation." Cooley, Taxn. p. 61; Waterhouse v. Cleveland Public Schools, 8 Heisk. 859. The mere apportionment of sovereign powers among the three co-ordinate branches of the state government, without more, imposed upon each of those branches the affirmative duty of exercising its own peculiar powers for itself, and prohibited the delegation of any of those powers, except in cases expressly permitted. Such was the interpretation of the Constitution of 1796, under which an act authorizing county courts to levy taxes for county purposes, and also another act authorizing a navigation tax in a collection of designated river counties, were adjudged to be unconstitutional and void because that instrument did not in terms empower the legislature to confer such authority upon county courts. Marr v. Entoe, 1 Yerg. 452. That case was decided at the close of the year 1830, and must have been well known to the delegates composing the convention that framed the Constitution of 1884. That convention had the power to abrogate the rule of construction announced and applied in that case totally, or to subject it to partial modifications. It chose the latter, and authorized the legislature to delegate the power of taxation to the counties and incorporated towns. This was done by the 29th section of the second article of the Constitution, then framed and subsequently adopted. The convention did not mean to go further. The implication is irresistible that the expression of the authority to delegate the power to the counties and towns is an absolute exclusion of authority to delegate the power to any other agency. It is impossible to doubt that the convention designated the counties and incorporated towns, and authorized the power to be conferred on them, for the reason that without such designation the power of taxation would be restricted to the legislature only. Keeves v. Civil Dist. Bd. of Edu. 6 Coldw. 181. That provision of the Constitution of 1834 was copied literally into the Constitution of 1870, without any further modification; and it must be presumed to have been so copied with the understanding and intent that the whole of the taxing power should remain in the legislature, except that part expressly authorized to be delegated. Waterhouse v. Cleveland Public Schools, 8 Heisk. 859; McBean v. Chandler, 9 Heisk. 372, 24 Am. Rep. 308. The particular feature of the act that is most objectionable as a delegation of the taxing power is that in which the levee district is authorized to decide for itself what rate of taxation, if any, shall be laid annually, only the maximum rate being prescribed. The legislature, before passing the law, should have determined at least three things: (1) that the purpose in view was a proper purpose for taxation; (2) the annual rate required for the present; and (3) the rule under which it should be levied. These matters are within the legislative function, and cannot be delegated, in the absence of express authority of the fundamental law. Such questions may be left to counties and incorporated towns, in respect of their own taxes, and within proper limitations; but that is so because the general assembly is expressly empowered to grant them that authority. No other agency or instrumentality of the government can be given such power. Had the legislature adequate power to create by special law such an agency or instrumentality as that set forth in the act before us? We have been able to discover no good and valid reason why it had not. The intended creature was clearly not a private corporation, and consequently could not have been within the prohibition (Const. art. 11, § 8) that "no corporation shall be created by special law." State v. Wilson, 12 Lea. 246; Ballentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea. 633; Williams v. Nashville, 89 Tenn. 490. Nor, indeed, was it to be a corporation at all. It could have been but an inferior agency or instrumentality of the state, in the nature of a taxing district, designed to reclaim and perpetually protect about 300,000 acres of land in the northwestern corner of the state,—rich and of great value, but for the periodical overflows to which it is subjected by the high waters of the Mississippi river. The accomplishment of such an object would greatly benefit the numerous owners of the soil, and thereby enhance the resources of the state and enlarge her wealth and population. The owners, who would have to bear the burden of reclamation and continued protection, would naturally and justly receive the greatest and most direct benefit. Nevertheless, the state would be benefited in the important respects just mentioned. Her general revenues would be increased, not by reason of her receipt of any part of the taxes to be raised under the special act, but because the taxable value of the lands reclaimed and protected would be increased, and the general taxes thereon correspondingly enlarged. The exaction made of the citizens of the district for such an object would be of a public nature, and therefore within the taxing power. It would be for a public purpose in a twofold sense: "First, because beneficial to a large community of people within the district; and, secondly, because beneficial to the state in the particulars already indicated. The taxes to be raised by and for such an agency or instrumentality, however, would be subject to the same requirements as are taxes levied for state, county, and municipal purposes, under §§ 28 and 29 of art. 2 of the Constitution. The creation of levee districts has been adjudged to be within the legislative power in Arkansas (Carson v. St. Francis Levee Dist. 59 Ark. 513), in Louisiana (New Orleans Draining Co. Case, 11 La. Ann. 338), in Mississippi (Daily v. Sloop, 47 Miss. 367), in Missouri (Egyptian Levee Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, 73 Am. Dec. 276), in Wisconsin (Donnelly v. Decker, 58 Wis. 461, 46 Am. Rep. 637), and in other states; and the creation of irrigation districts has been held to be within that power in California (Hagar v. Yolo County Supers. 47 Cal. 223, and Turlock Irrig. Dist. v. Williams, 76 Cal. 860), and perhaps in other states. It is said by Judge Cooley that "taxing districts may be as numerous as the purposes for which taxes are levied." Cooley, Taxn. 151. It is not every act with unconstitutional provisions that must fail in toto. If, notwithstanding and withstanding such provisions, there be left enough for a complete law, capable of enforcement, and fairly answering the object of its passage, the courts will reject only the void parts, and enforce the residue. Cooley, Const. Lim. 215, 216; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 30 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 247, 23 L. R. A. 796, 32 S. W. 5; Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed 318; Florida C. R. Co. v. Schutte, 103 U. S. 118, 26 L. ed. 327; Tillman v. Coker, 9 Bart. 429. We regret that the act before us is not susceptible of such division and enforcement. Taking out the taxing feature, and the act is completely emasculated. A levee district without a levee, or the means of constructing one, is a creature without force or power to exist.

Since the bill of complainants must inevitably fail for reasons already stated, it is entirely unnecessary to determine, or even consider, the question of jurisdiction.

Affirm the decree and dismiss the bill.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Peter REUTER, Appt.,
v.

Catherine A. LAWE, Exrx., etc., of George W. Lawe, Deceased, Resp.

(.....Wis.....)

An equitable estoppel will preclude the public from claiming as a public park land so designated on a recorded plat, where it makes no claim to the land except by failing to assess it for taxes for many years, and then the owner files a new plat on which the land is described as his own property, after which he continues in possession as he always has done, takes down the old fence and makes a new one, expends money in other improvements upon it, pays taxes for a series of years upon it, and builds a sidewalk along one side by order of the city authorities, and there was an express adoption of his new plat about seven years after it was filed by an act incorporating the city.

(November 4, 1896.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Outagamie County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for breach of covenant of title in a deed of certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:-

On the 31st day of October, 1851, George W. Lawe was the owner in fee of certain lands situated in the city of Kaukauna, Outagamie county, Wisconsin, including the premises in question. On that day he caused to be made a plat of said lands, subdividing the same into lots and blocks, and on the 31st day of October, thereafter, caused such plat to be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of such county, for the purpose of establishing a legal town plat of the premises, pursuant to the provisions of chap. 41, Rev. Stat. 1849. On such plat the premises in dispute, except lots 5 and 14, are designated as "Public Square." Immediately after the plat was recorded, Lawe commenced selling lots, describing the same according to such plat, and it was, for all purposes, recognized by him and all persons claiming under him, and by the public as well, as a valid town plat, up to the time of the commencement of this action. On the 29th day of May, 1878, the title to the premises in dispute being in Lawe, except as affected by such plat, he joined with Meade and Black in making and placing on record a new plat covering the same and other lands adjoining. Such new plat was named "Lawe, Black, & Meade's Addition to Kaukauna." The making and recording of such new plat purported to be for the purpose of subdividing into lots and blocks the premises therein described, and making a legal plat thereof under the laws of the state of Wisconsin respecting the subject. On such new plat, what was designated on the plat of 1851 as "Public Park," with a strip on the northwest side thereof 60 feet wide, in all making a tract 800 feet by 240 feet, was designated as "Lawe's Park." Such park, together with 240 feet by 120 feet on the northwesterly side thereof, subdivided into eight lots each 120 feet by 60 feet, was designated as "Block 21." From the time of the recording of the plat of 1851 till the 15th day of July, 1890, Lawe continued in the actual possession of the premises, the same being actually inclosed and used by him throughout substantially the whole period. The public, during such period, asserted no claim thereto, except in so far as the fact that, from the platting of 1851 till that of 1878, the premises were not assessed for taxes, may be held as a recognition of the existence of public rights therein. After such second platting, down to, and inclusive of, the year 1890, the premises were assessed for taxation and taxed as Lawe's property, and the taxes were paid each year by him, except for the year 1878, till he sold the property in 1890, as hereinafter stated. The city of Kaukauna was incorporated by chap. 11, Laws 1885, by which the aforesaid plats were expressly adopted, and provision was made for an official renumbering of lots by said city, and a re-platting and re-mapping of the premises covered by such plats. Thereafter, pursuant to such power, such proceedings were taken by or under the direction of the common council of said city that on the 1st day of May, 1890, an official plat of the premises was recorded, by which what had theretofore been known as "Lawe's Park" was subdivided into lots numbered 1 to 18 inclusive, of block 21. In 1895, soon after the organization of the city of Kaukauna under its charter, by order of the common council of such city, Lawe constructed a sidewalk along one side of such park. During the spring and summer of 1890, prior to the making of the deed hereinafter mentioned, Lawe incurred some expense in taking out stumps and otherwise improving the premises. On the 15th day of July, 1890, by warranty deed with full covenants, he conveyed the property to plaintiff. On the 17th day of July thereafter, by order of the common council of said city, such premises were stricken from the assessment roll for the year 1890, for the reason that the same had been purchased for school purposes. A purchase for such purposes does not definitely appear. We are left to infer that in some way the conveyance to plaintiff was for the benefit of the corporation for such purposes. In the month of October, thereafter, the city of Kaukauna, by its duly authorized officers, claimed the premises as a public park by virtue of a dedication thereof by the plat of 1851, and took actual possession of the same

NOTE.—As somewhat akin to the subject of the above case, see note to Meyer v. Graham (Neb.) 18 L. R. A. 146, as to the rights acquired against the public by adverse possession of a highway or city street.

For a denial of the doctrine of equitable estoppel to prevent the public from asserting its rights 34 L. R. A.

against an obstruction in a street, see Webb v. Demopolis (Ala.) 21 L. R. A. 62.

For the loss by the public of its right to a highway by mere nonuser or otherwise than by official action, see note to Maire v. Kruse (Wis.) 28 L. R. A. 440.

under such claim, and so continued up to the commencement of this action. This action was brought for breach of the covenants of title upon the ground that the claim of the city to the premises as a public park was valid, and that Lawe was not the owner thereof at the time he conveyed the same to the plaintiff. The trial court found that, at the time of the making of such deed, Lawe was the owner and seised in fee of the premises in dispute, and that plaintiff was such owner and was so seised under the aforesaid deed at the time of the commencement of this action, free from any claim of the city of Kaukauna, and ordered judgment accordingly, dismissing the complaint. Exceptions were taken to raise the questions discussed and referred to in the opinion. Judgment was rendered in accordance with the aforesaid order, and plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Humphrey Pierce, for appellant:

The town of Kaukauna plat of 1861 is a valid statutory dedication, and vested the title to the land marked "Public Square" thereon in the public for the public use; it substantially complies with the provisions of the statute in respect to plats.

Rev. Stat. 1849, chap. 41, § 5; Ely v. Bates, 5 Wis. 467; Sanborn v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 18 Wis. 20; Williams v. Smith, 22 Wis. 598; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Williams v. Milwaukee Industrial Exposition Assn. 79 Wis. 524; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 628, note 2.

Where a plat is in doubt it is to be resolved against the donor and in favor of the public.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 111.

The rule of construction in plats is the same as in grants to effectuate intent of donor.

San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170.

A mere mistake in the plat cannot affect the validity of the statutory conveyance.

Burbach v. Schweinler, 56 Wis. 890; Ely v. Bates, 5 Wis. 467.

Formalities in a plat of statutory dedication to public use are regarded the same as in an ordinary deed of conveyance.

State v. Schwein, 65 Wis. 214; Emmons v. Milwaukee, 32 Wis. 434; Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 155, 60 Am. Dec. 407.

A deed is sufficient if it is possible to identify the land from the description; and the deed will be sustained if possible, and arbitrary rules will be disregarded.

Devlin, Deeds, § 1012, citing Scheider v. Kachler, 49 Wis. 291; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 89; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 22, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Jarstadt v. Morgan, 48 Wis. 249.

It was not necessary that the plat be accepted.

Rev. Stat. 1849, chap. 41, § 5; Anno. Rev. Stat. § 2268; Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 414; Williams v. Smith, 22 Wis. 594; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 1, 97 Am. Dec. 696; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 175; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 87; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 628.

Acceptance of a portion of a plat is constructive acceptance of the whole, and acceptance of streets on a plat or map is acceptance also of the public square.

84 L. R. A.

Derby v. Alling, 40 Conn. 435; Police Jury v. Foulhouse, 30 La. Ann. 64; Jersey City v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 12 N. J. Eq. 562; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 117; Regan v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52; Rhodes v. Brightwood (Ind.) 43 N. E. 942; Meier v. Portland C. R. Co. 16 Or. 500, 1 L. R. A. 856; Carter v. Portland, 4 Or. 389; Angell & D. Highways, 3d ed. § 149.

When a person maps off his land into town lots and streets, and offers his lots for sale by reference to the map, there is no mistaking his intention.

Grogan v. Hayward, 4 Fed. Rep. 161; Hicklin v. McClear, 18 Or. 126; Gregory v. Lincoln (Neb.) 14 N. W. 423; Giffen v. Olathe, 44 Kan. 848; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 628, 638, note 3; Godfrey v. Alton, 12 Ill. 80, 52 Am. Dec. 476; Alvord v. Ashley, 17 Ill. 363; Belleville v. Stookey, 28 Ill. 441; Waugh v. Leech, 28 Ill. 438; Field v. Carr, 59 Ill. 198; Fulton v. Mehrenfeld, 8 Ohio St. 440; Baker v. Johnston, 21 Mich. 319; Banks v. Ogden, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 57, 17 L. ed. 818; Donohoo v. Murray, 63 Wis. 100; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. Y. 346; Heitz v. St. Louis, 110 Mo. 618; Maywood v. Maywood, 118 Ill. 61; Rices v. Dudley, 3 Jones, Eq. 126, 67 Am. Dec. 231; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Dedication, p. 406, note 3, and cases cited, p. 407, note 3, and cases cited; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 90; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. ed. 187; United States v. Hodson, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 395, 19 L. ed. 937; Jarstadt v. Morgan, 48 Wis. 245; Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 282; Irvine v. Dixon, 50 U. S. 9 How. 31, 13 L. ed. 34.

If there be public squares or places represented on the map, the same rule applies to them, and dedication thereof may be established in the same manner.

San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 175; Wartown v. Coven, 4 Paize, 510; Cincinnati v. White, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 452; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title, Dedication, p. 416, note 3, and cases cited; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 644, 645; Lennig v. Ocean City Assn. 41 N. J. Eq. 606, 56 Am. Rep. 16; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 406.

Where the dedication is express, evidenced by a recorded plat, the intent as expressed in such plat cannot be contradicted by parol.

Rhodes v. Brightwood (Ind.) 43 N. E. 942; Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749.

In case private rights accrue by reason of the dedication there can be no revocation.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 632; Rhodes v. Brightwood, supra.

Mere nonuser of a public square until required by the public, however long continued, cannot operate as an abandonment, and all in possession will be presumed to hold in subordination to paramount rights of the public.

Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 393; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 39; Shaw v. Ottumwa, 67 Iowa, 39; Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 1, 97 Am. Dec. 696; Derby v. Alling, 40 Conn. 410; Meier v. Portland C. R. Co. 16 Or. 500, 1 L. R. A. 856; Henshaw v. Hunting, 1 Gray, 210.

No title could be acquired by Lawe under such claim of adverse possession.

Livermore v. Maquoketa, 35 Iowa, 858; Bur- ans v. Van Zant, 7 Barb. 91; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437; Grogan v. Hayward, 4 Fed. Rep. 161; Re Olean, 135 N. Y. 341, 17 L. R. A. 640.

The continued occupation of land by one who has conveyed to another is presumed to be in subordination to the title of the grantor.

Schwalback v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69 Wis. 292; Schwalback v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 73 Wis. 139; State v. Castle, 44 Wis. 678; Childs v. Nelson, 69 Wis. 125; Dill Mun. Corp., 4th ed. §§ 667-675; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 665-669; Simplot v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 16 Fed. Rep. 350; Brooks v. Furrell, 4 Fed. Rep. 161; Kopf v. Utter, 101 Pa. 27; Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart 488; Rung v. Shoneberger, 2 Watts, 23, 26 Am. Dec. 95; Burbank v. Hay, 65 N. Y. 71; Driggs v. Phillips, 103 N. Y. 77; St. Vincent Female Orphan Asylum v. Troy, 76 N. Y. 114, 32 Am. Rep. 286; Walker v. Caywood, 31 N. Y. 51; San Francisco Bd. of Edu. v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209; Cross v. Morristown, 18 N. J. Eq. 805; Jersey City v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 561; Archer v. Salinas, 93 Cal. 51, 16 L. R. A. 145; Logan County Supers. v. Lincoln, 81 Ill. 156; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Ross, 47 Ind. 25; Thibodeaux v. Maggioli, 4 La. Ann. 78; Ingram v. Police Jury, 20 La. Ann. 226; Louisiana Ice Mfg. Co. v. New Orleans, 48 La. Ann. 217; Coleman v. Thurmond, 56 Tex. 519; Vicksburg v. Marshall, 59 Miss. 563; Philadelphie v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Pa. 258; Rochdale Canal Co. v. Radcliffe, 18 Q. B. 287; Memphis v. Lenore, 6 Coldw. 412; Rhodes v. Brightwood (Ind.), 43 N. E. 942.

Defendant's acts in his alleged adverse possession being a public nuisance no such possession could ripen into title.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 668; Meiners v. Frederick Miller Brewing Co., 78 Wis. 866, 10 L. R. A. 586.

The fact that the property was assessed and taxes thereon paid by Lawe does not affect the rights of the public therein; and especially is this true under all the circumstances appearing in the case.

Lenon v. Hayden, 18 Wis. 159; Rhodes v. Brightwood, supra; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170; Re Commissioners of Public Parks, 6 N. Y. Supp. 779; Ellsworth v. Grand Rapids, 27 Mich. 250; Getchell v. Benedict, 57 Iowa, 121; Gilman v. Milwaukee, 55 Wis. 328; Angell & D. Highways, § 821; St. Louis v. Gorman, 29 Mo. 593, 77 Am. Dec. 586; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157; Prather v. Lexington, 13 B. Mon. 559, 56 Am. Dec. 585; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. 392, 62 Am. Dec. 120.

Mr. David S. Ordway, for respondent:

Making a plat of land by the proprietor showing lots, blocks, and streets evidently for the use of those who shall come to occupy the property, and their subsequent sale in such subdivisions according to the plat, is one of the clearest ways of declaring an intention to dedicate, and has been held to conclude the owner so far as the rights of subsequent purchasers are concerned.

Winnetka v. Prouty, 107 Ill. 225; Grandville v. Jenison, 84 Mich. 55; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title, Dedication, p. 406.
84 L. R. A.

But he is not concluded as to the public unless the dedication is accepted by the public.

People v. Jones, 6 Mich. 176; Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401; Lee v. Lake, 14 Mich. 12, 90 Am. Dec. 220; Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 Mich. 173.

And such acceptance must be within a reasonable time.

Wayne County v. Miller, 31 Mich. 447; Field v. Manchester, 32 Mich. 281; Cass County Supers. v. Banks, 44 Mich. 468; People v. Beaubien, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 271.

When the legislature has provided the manner in which such transfer should be accomplished, a compliance with the requirements prescribed is just as essential in order that the original proprietor may be divested of title as the execution of a deed of conveyance would be in the transfer of real estate from one person to another on a purchase.

Gardiner v. Tisdale, 2 Wis. 185, 60 Am. Dec. 407; People v. Beaubien, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 256; Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 86 Mich. 122; People v. Jones, 6 Mich. 184; Emmons v. Milwaukee, 33 Wis. 435.

Whether this plat was valid or not in order to a complete dedication it must have been accepted by the public before actual dedication.

Williams v. Milwaukee Industrial Exposition Asso., 79 Wis. 528; Winnetka v. Prouty, 107 Ill. 218; Littler v. Lincoln, 106 Ill. 353.

Until acceptance by the municipality, although the owner is estopped to deny the dedication, whenever private rights intervene the act of the owner in platting, etc., is in the nature of a mere offer to the municipality.

Chicago v. Gosselin, 4 Ill. App. 573; Wayne County v. Miller, 31 Mich. 447; Field v. Manchester, 32 Mich. 279; Buskirk v. Strickland, 47 Mich. 389; Oswego v. Oswego Canal Co., 6 N. Y. 264; Underwood v. Stuyvesant, 19 Johns. 186, 10 Am. Dec. 215; State v. Carver, 5 Strobb. L. 217; Russell v. New York C. R. Co., 26 Barb. 630; Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 124 Ill. 235; Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 579.

The city as representing the public is concluded from now opening the park for public use after what has transpired.

Paine Lumber Co. v. Oakbrook, 89 Wis. 449; Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 530; Cochran v. Toher, 14 Minn. 385; Derusia v. Winnetka & St. P. R. Co., 18 Minn. 133; Johnson v. Burlington (Iowa), 63 N. W. 694.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Assuming, as appellants contend, that the recording of the plat of 1851 and the subsequent ratification of it by Lawe and the public, under Rev. Stat. 1849, chap. 41, § 5, operated to make a valid town plat and to vest the title to the premises in dispute in the public, notwithstanding noncompliance with statutory requirements, and without regard to any act of acceptance on the part of the public, yet we hold that the doctrine of equitable estoppel in pais applies to the case, and effectually bars the public from setting up any claim thereto. That rules this case, and the other questions raised need not be considered.

It is well settled that, though land be dedicated to the public use by a private owner, so as to vest the title in the donee for such use, until, in the judgment of the trustees, the premises are needed for such use, mere nonuser for any period of time will not operate as an abandonment of the property, so as to revest the title thereto in the donor. Reilly v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 398; Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 818. The title being once vested in the public, the corporation in which it is situated, and upon which devolves the duty to administer the trust, has a broad discretionary power respecting the time when the public interests require the actual enjoyment of the property, as intended by the donor. It can allow such donor, in the meantime, for some purposes at least, to use the property as his own. Neither nonuser by the public, nor such actual use by the donor, standing alone, however long continued, will affect the status of the public right. Nowhere is this principle more thoroughly intrenched than in the jurisprudence of this state. We may go further and say that if the title be once vested in the public under a dedication by a private owner, with or without acceptance by the donee, as circumstances may require, and the property is thereafter erroneously assessed and taxes collected thereon of the donor, that will not of itself, necessarily, affect the rights of the public. That is sustained by numerous well-considered cases cited by appellant's counsel. Rhodes v. Brightwood (Ind.) 43 N. E. 942; San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170; Ellsworth v. Grand Rapids, 27 Mich. 250; Getchell v. Benedict, 57 Iowa, 121.

But notwithstanding what has preceded, it is not an open question in this court, that the conduct of a municipal corporation may be such that a change of its position will cause such injustice to those who have relied upon such conduct as to warrant the court in preventing such change by an application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel in pais. This subject was so exhaustively discussed in Paine Lumber Co. v. Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 449, opinion by Mr. Justice Pinney, that it is needless to go over the matter again at this time. It was there in effect held that, though a public corporation cannot alienate public streets and places, and mere laches on its part cannot defeat the public rights thereto, cases may arise where private rights have grown up so as to be in equity paramount to the public rights, and where the prevention of injustice requires the assertion of the doctrine of equitable estoppel in pais for the protection of such private rights.

The groundwork of the doctrine is that it would be a fraud in a party to assert what his previous course had denied, when on the faith of such denial others have acted. To prevent the injustice a change of position by such party would cause to such others, under such circumstances, where there is no adequate legal remedy, the doctrine of equitable estoppel comes in and does the work. That the equitable rule is applied as freely against the public, as against private persons, is not maintained, but that the courts may administer justice by its aid, even where that results in controlling the conduct of municipal corporations, when the facts are such in the judgment of the court as to demand it to prevent manifest injustice and wrong to private persons, is firmly established. A large number of cases are cited in Paine Lumber Co. v. Oshkosh, supra, where this principle is maintained, to which may be added State, Mylrea, v. Janesville Water Power Co. 92 Wis. 496, 83 L. R. A. 891, recently decided by this court; also Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 878; Simplot v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 16 Fed. Rep. 360; and Oroker v. Collins, 87 S. C. 387.

The plat of 1878, by which what was formerly known as "Public Park," with a small addition, was platted as Lawe's park; the tearing down of the rail fence about that time, and the construction of a new fence in its place, must be considered, we think, a distinct assertion of a private ownership of the property inconsistent with any public right thereto, and the commencement of possession adverse to the public. The taxing of the property thereafter as private property is a strong circumstance favoring such private ownership and abandonment, to be considered with all the other circumstances in determining whether Lawe was justified in treating it as so abandoned and incurring expense in taking care of and improving the same as discharged of any public right thereto. In Simplot v. Dubuque, 49 Iowa, 690, the court held that where lands are granted to a city for public use, and are thereafter occupied by the donor adversely for a long period of time and taxed to him, under the doctrine of equitable estoppel such city cannot subsequently deny the right of such occupant thereto.

In Getchell v. Benedict, supra, a distinction is made between cases where the lands taxed are adversely occupied and where not. We do not go so far as to approve the doctrine of Simplot v. Dubuque, supra, that the mere circumstances of adverse possession for a considerable length of time and taxation to adverse occupant and payment of such taxes by him, are sufficient to create an estoppel against the municipality. They are evidently important circumstances to be considered with the other facts in the case. The adoption of the second plat by the act incorporating the city of Kaukauna in 1885; the requirement made by such city of Lawe to build a sidewalk along the side of the park; the construction of such sidewalk; the payment of taxes assessed annually on the property for a long period of years, and the improvement of the property at considerable expense, relying upon the long-continued recognition of private ownership by the municipality in which all persons interested, so far as appears, acquiesced, with all the other facts and circumstances, show satisfactorily that, if a change of position on the part of the public be not allowed, such injustice and wrong will result as to warrant the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel in pais to prevent such injustice. That, we assume, is the view the trial court took of the case, which answered the alleged breach of the covenants of title in the deed from Lawe to plaintiff, and sustains the findings and judgment appealed from.

Judgment affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Nathan CUSHING

v.

T. Morris PEROT, Appl.

(175 Pa. 66.)

1. Judgment against a stockholder of a corporation, and execution levied on his real estate for an amount that exhausts his liability in the state where the corporation was created, are a bar to an action in another state on his liability as a stockholder.
2. It will be presumed, in the absence of any decision to the contrary in a sister state, that the contractual liability of a stockholder in that state goes to a receiver as assets for the payment of corporate debts.
3. A stockholder's liability, which is contractual under the statute, becomes a part of the assets which pass to a receiver for the payment of corporate debts.

(April 18, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce defendant's liability as a stockholder in an insolvent corporation. Reversed.

Perot subscribed to fifty shares of the par value of $100 each of the capital stock of the Western Farm Mortgage Trust Company, a corporation created and doing business in Kansas. The corporation became insolvent. Plaintiff was its creditor. The Constitution and laws of Kansas required the individual stockholders to be personally liable for its debts to the amount equal to the stock held by him. Plaintiff recovered judgment against the corporation, which remaining unsatisfied, he instituted this suit to enforce defendant's liability under the statutory provisions of the state of Kansas. Defendant resisted the claim on the ground that he was a citizen of Pennsylvania upon whom the laws of Kansas were not binding; that he was a creditor of the corporation to the amount equal to the stock liability, and he claimed a right to set-off of his claim against his indebtedness; that suit had been brought against him on his stock liability in Kansas and judgment entered and execution for the amount issued on real estate owned by him located there.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Albert S. Letchworth and William C. Hannis, for appellant:

The Kansas statute should not be enforced in this state, because: (a) It is penal in its character; (b) to enforce it in this state is a matter of comity, not of right, and it would work a hardship on a citizen of this state who has already paid more than his share; (c) justice cannot be done between the creditors and stockholders in this proceeding.

Dreisbach v. Price, 183 Pa. 560; Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea. 40; Derrickson v. Smith, 27 N. J. L. 166; Moies v. Sprague, 9 R. I. 541; Sturges v. Burton, 8 Ohio St. 215, 72 Am. Dec. 582; Gridley v. Barnes, 103 Ill. 211; Sayles v. Brown, 40 Fed. Rep. 8; Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 205; Rice v. Merrimack Hosiery Co. 56 N. H. 127; May v. Black, 77 Wis. 107; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 208, 13 L. R. A. 56; Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472; Hoyt v. Bunker, 50 Kan. 574; Leucks v. Tredway, 45 Mo. App. 507; Universal F. Ins. Co. v. Tabor, 18 Colo. 531; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 588; Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 86 L. ed. 838; Stutz v. Handley, 41 Fed. Rep. 531; Curran v. Bradner, S. & Co. 27 Ill. App. 582; Libbey v. Tobey, 83 Me.

NOTE.—Right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of the state of incorporation.

I. In action by corporation or its representative.

II. In action by creditor of corporation.

a. Remedy according to law of forum.

b. For unpaid subscriptions to stock.

1. In general.

2. By creditor's bill.

c. For statutory liability after stock is fully paid for.

1. In general.

2. Nature of the liability.

3. Liability absolute or distinct from statutory remedy.

4. Constitutional liability.

5. Exclusiveness of statutory remedy provided in state of incorporation.

6. Conditions prescribed by statutes in state of incorporation.

7. Action at law.

8. Suit in equity.

d. Remedies in Federal courts.

1. In general.

2. In equity.

3. At law.

III. Contribution between stockholders of foreign corporations.

There are two distinct kinds of liability of stockholders in foreign corporations which there may be an attempt to enforce at their residence or elsewhere outside of the state of incorporation. One is the liability for unpaid subscriptions to stock, which is clearly a contractual liability, and as to the right to enforce which there can be no question, provided there can be found a proper remedy. Suits to enforce this may be brought by the corporation itself or by its creditors. The other kind of liability is that statutory liability which continues after the stockholder has fully paid for his stock, and which is in the nature of a guaranty or indemnity to the creditors of the corporation against its failure to pay its obligations. This liability is contractual in so far as the statute which creates it may be presumed to have been in the mind of the subscriber and to have become a part of his contract. Yet it is not assumed by an express agreement of the stockholder, and in fact the latter never expects when he becomes a stockholder that this liability will ever arise. It is always contingent on the insolvency or at least the default of the corporation in meeting its own obligations.

As to the right to enforce this statutory liability of stockholders the authorities are in an extremely unsatisfactory condition. Most of them hold that the liability is to be regarded as contractual, and a majority of the cases hold that it can be enforced in courts outside of the state which created the liability when the proper remedy is sought and the necessary conditions complied with; but there are 397; Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. 505; Citizens & M. Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Gillespie, 115 Pa. 564.

The defendant had a right to set off in this action his claim as a creditor of the corporation to an amount equal to his liability as a stockholder on its guaranty of the mortgages purchased by the defendant from the corporation and which proved to be worthless.

Globe Pub. Co. v. State Bank, 41 Neb. 175, 27 L. R. A. 854; Abbey v. Long, 44 Kan. 688; Coquard v. Prendergast, 35 Mo. App. 243; Wheeler v. Miller, 90 N. Y. 353; Mathez v. Neidig, 73 N. Y. 100; Agate v. Sands, 73 N. Y. 620; Jerman v. Benton, 79 Mo. 148; Weber v. Leighton, 8 Mo. App. 502; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. B'il, 12 Mo. App. 148; Boyd v. Hall, 56 Ga. 563; Richards v. Kinsley, 12 N. Y. S. R. 125; Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 72.

The defendant had a right in this action to plead in bar that another creditor of the corporation had proceeded against his property by attachment in Kansas, had obtained judgment against him for about $5,000, and had levied upon his real estate in Kansas for said judgment, and that this judgment exhausted any possible liability he may have incurred.

Wells v. Robb, 43 Kan. 201; Bittner v. Lee, 25 Mo. App. 559; Hoyt v. Bunker, 50 Kan. 574; Richards v. Brice, 22 N. Y. S. R. 289; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56.

A creditor of an insolvent corporation cannot maintain an action in his own behalf to recover for unpaid stock held by a stockholder while the affairs of the corporation are in the hands of a receiver.

Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Mfg. & C. Co. 48 Minn. 349; Capital City Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Roggs, 172 Pa. 91.

Mr. A. W. Horton, for appellee:

The Kansas statute should be enforced in this state.

Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 195; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 57 Fed. Rep. 279; Tuttle v. National Bank of The Republic, 161 Ill. 497, post, 750; McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754; Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank, 66 Fed.

Rep. 512, 24 U. S. App. 607, post, 742; Flash v. Conn, 16 Fla. 423, 26 Am. Rep. 721; Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 842; Sackett's Harbour Bank v. Blake, 3 Rich. Eq. 225; First Nat. Bank v. Gustin Minera Consol. Min. Co. 42 Minn. 327, 6 L. R. A. 676; Hodgson v. Cheever, 8 Mo. App. 318; Paine v. Stewart, 33 Conn. 516; St. Louis Sav. Asso. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun. 45; Lourey v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Ex parte Van Hipper, 20 Wend. 614; Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. 505; Aldrich v. Anchor Coal & D. Co. 24 Or. 32; Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea, 40; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 80; Ochiltree v. Iowa R. Contracting Co. 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 249, 22 L. ed. 546; Howell v. Mangelsdorf, 33 Kan. 194; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415.

The defendant cannot set off his claim against the corporation in this action.

Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 381; Long v. Penn Ins. Co. 6 Pa. 421; Hiltier v. Allegheny County Mut. Ins. Co. 3 Pa. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 656; Abbey v. Long, 44 Kan. 688.

The defendant cannot shield himself from liability by alleging that judgment has been rendered against him for about $5,000, and a levy made upon his real estate in Kansas.

Wells v. Robb, 43 Kan. 201; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 424; Cole v. Butler, 43 Me. 401.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The affidavit sets up three grounds of defense: First, that defendant is a citizen and resident of Pennsylvania, and is not bound by the laws of Kansas under which the liability is claimed to arise; secondly, that he is a creditor of the Western Farm-Mortgage Trust Company, as well as a stockholder, and, presumably, that he claims a right of set-off against the liability, if it exists; and, thirdly, that suit has already been brought and judgment obtained against him in Kansas on his liability as a stockholder, and execution has been levied on his real estate there. The second defense is not averred with sufficient precision to be available to prevent judgment, even if it were a few cases which go nearly, if not quite, to the extent of refusing altogether to enforce such liability which was created in another state. Even where the courts do not altogether deny any remedy of this sort, it remains to a considerable extent uncertain what the proper remedy may be and the conditions of its allowance.

The general doctrine is that a contract of subscription to the stock of a foreign corporation is governed by the law of the state which creates the corporation. This is settled in numerous cases, a few of which are Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643; Seymour v. Sturges, 26 N. Y. 134; Molson's Bank v. Boardman, 47 Hun, 136; Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 12 Gray, 244, 71 Am. Dec. 753; Farwell v. Wadsworth, 35 Ill. App. 469; Payson v. Withers, 5 Biss. 269; Hodgson v. Cheever, 5 Mo. App. 318; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414.

In some cases persons claiming to be stockholders of a foreign corporation are sued as individuals on the theory that their incorporation is not valid. As to these see note to Cone Export & C. Co. v. Poole (S. C.) 24 L. R. A. on page 291.

Remedies against nonresident stockholders sought in the state where the corporation exists 34 L. R. A.

are not considered here, and the general question as to the mode of enforcing the liability of stockholders is not here entered upon any further than to inquire how far these remedies can be had against stockholders outside of the state of incorporation.

L. In action by corporation or its representatives.

The mere fact that a corporation was created in another state is not a defense to an action on a subscription to stock. Tabler v. Anglo-American Asso. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 815; Merrimac Min. Co. v. Levy, 54 Pa. 227, 33 Am. Dec. 697; Lycorning F. Ins. Co. v. Langley, 63 Md. 198.

The right of a corporation to recover in another jurisdiction the amount of calls made upon its stock is said, in Mandel v. Swan Land & C. Co. 154 Ill. 177, 27 L. R. A. 313, not to depend upon any principle of comity but upon the right to enforce a contract validly entered into.

An action of contract to recover assessments on stock, brought by a foreign corporation when the subscriber has expressly agreed to pay for it, is sustained in Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 12 Gray, 244, 71 Am. Dec. 753, although an implied liability good in substance, which is not entirely clear on the authorities. The third defense, though it is not averred with the precision, as to dates, amounts, etc., which it should have, nevertheless sets up a substantial bar to plaintiff's suit. A levy in execution is presumed to be satisfaction, and the affidavit avers that the levy on his real estate in Kansas was for an amount that exhausted his liability there. This would be a good defense, even in Kansas, for the Constitution of that state limits the individual liability of stockholders to "an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder;" and it is expressly said in Houell v. Mangiesdorf, 38 Kan. 184, that the defendant "may also set up as a defense that he is discharged, by having already paid the amount of his individual liability to other creditors of the corporation." On this point the defendant was entitled to go to a jury, and it was error to enter judgment against him.

The first point, though averred with the generality and looseness that pervade the whole affidavit, raises questions of great nicety; involving general principles of jurisprudence, the comity between states, and the conflict of laws with regard to both rights and remedies. The difficulty of these questions is shown by the conflicting views in a large number of courts of the last resort. The plaintiff asks us to enforce against a citizen of Pennsylvania a liability created solely by the local statutes of Kansas, and to enforce it in the form prescribed by those statutes, although that form is repugnant, not only to our own established mode of procedure in analogous cases, but also to strong considerations of convenience and natural justice. The first question that arises is the nature of the liability created by the statute. If it is penal, the authorities are all agreed that it will not be enforced outside of the jurisdiction of the state imposing it. If, however, it is contractual, or, in the phrase preferred by some writers, statutory only, the authorities differ widely whether it should be enforced at all, and, if enforced, whether in the form directed by the statute, or in that of the lex fori. In regard to the Kansas statute under consideration, my individual opinion is that, by the weight both of reason and authority, the liability created by it is contractual, and should be enforced by any court having jurisdiction of the parties. And I understand our own case of Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. 505, to tend towards that view. But, for reasons to be given presently, we are not required to enter into this discussion. The cases have been collected and cited in the argument, and the whole subject will be found ably treated in 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Stockholders, pp. 867, 890-894. As to the mode of enforcement, the decisions of the supreme court of Kansas seem to have settled that the statute contemplates a separate action at law against each stockholder. Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415; Houell v. First Nat. Bank, 52 Kan. 133. The courts of some other states however,—notably, of Massachusetts,—have refused to sustain such actions, on the ground that the relations of the creditors, and of the stockholders among themselves, cannot be properly determined in that way. Certainly, by far the most convenient and just method is by bill in equity, to which all the stockholders can be made parties, and their rights settled. This is the established mode of procedure in Pennsylvania in analogous cases. The special fact, however, that makes it unnecessary in the present case to determine the ultimate rights of the plaintiff, or the mode of their enforcement, appears in the statement, where it is set forth that a receiver for the corporation was appointed before this suit was begun. If the defendant's liability, under the statute, to the creditors of the corporation in which he is a stockholder, is contractual,—and it is only in that aspect that it will be enforced at all outside of Kansas,—then it was, like any other claim, an asset for the payment of the corporate debts, and as such the right to sue on it passed to the receiver. This is the general rule, so far as we are aware, and is so manifestly in accordance with justice, as well as convenience, that, in the absence of an express decision of the supreme court of Kansas to the contrary, we to pay a subscription to stock is not recognized in Massachusetts.

A public local act providing that it should be lawful to sue for calls in any of the Queen's courts in Dublin was held to give a right to such remedy only in the Irish courts, and that an action could not be maintained against a stockholder in an English court. Dundaik Western R. Co. v. Tapster, 1 Q. B. 667. Lord Denman, Ch. J., said in this case: "The right and the remedy are both created by the legislature, and the company is bound to pursue the remedy provided by it."

But this case "had been somewhat doubted," said Willes, J., in St. Pancras v. Batterbury, 2 C. B. N. S. on page 455, 26 L. J. C. P. N. S. 243, 3 Jur. N. S. 1106.

And where a Canadian corporation sued to collect calls from a stockholder, in Welland R. Co. v. Blake, 6 Hurlst. & N. 410, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, 3 L. T. N. S. 678, 9 Week. Rep. 383, 7 Jur. N. S. 373, it seems to have been taken as a matter of course that such an action could be maintained.

So, an action in the name of the company against a shareholder of an English company, based on an order under the English companies acts of 1862, making a call on shareholders and directing a payment to one of two final liquidators, was brought 34 L. R. A.

in Canada, and the declaration sustained on demurrer in Barnes's Bkg. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 U. C. Q. B. 256. But afterwards the declaration was amended so as to charge the defendant as a past member of the company, and to this a demurrer was allowed in 40 U. C. Q. B. 435, on the ground that the liability of a past member was created by statute and "can only be enforced in the special manner which the statute directs." An appeal from this decision was allowed in 3 Ont. App. Rep. 371, holding that the declaration was good, but an appeal taken in turn from this decision was allowed by the supreme court of Canada February 2, 1890. This decision of the supreme court does not seem to be reported, but the conclusions are given in Cassell's Digest of the Supreme Court of Canada reports. The decision held that the declaration did not show any liability of the defendant as a past member of the company, but it seems to have been based more particularly on the failure to allege everything required by statute to fix the limited liability, and does not seem to constitute a direct decision on the right to bring such an action, since it says that, assuming that the action will lie, it is necessary to make further allegations.

The right of a receiver of a corporation to sue must presume that such is the law in that state. No such decision has been brought to our notice. In Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415, it does appear that the corporation had made an assignment for the benefit of creditors; but the court took no notice of this fact, probably considering it unnecessary to do so, as the case was reversed solely on the points raised in the pleadings, as clearly appears by the reference in the opinion to the absence of a judgment against the corporation, which would seem to be a fatal objection, but which the court merely referred to by saying that it had not been discussed, and would not be decided. It is true that Mr. Cook, in his treatise on Stock and Stockholders, says, broadly, that the right to sue on the statute "is not to be numbered among the assets of the corporation. . . . A receiver has no power to enforce such a liability." § 218. But Mr. High, in his standard work on Receivers, says, more cautiously: "The authorities are not wholly reconcilable as to the right of a receiver of a corporation to maintain an action in behalf of its creditors, to recover of shareholders an individual liability, imposed by charter or statute upon shareholders for the protection of creditors." § 317a. The cases relied upon by Cook in support of his text are from Illinois and New York. The former appear to go to the extent claimed as it is said in Arenz v. Weir, 89 Ill. 25, that "this insurance company having passed to a receiver diminishes in no degree the liability of a stockholder to a creditor of the company. The creditor stands on an independent platform, above that of the receiver, having no concern with the corporation, and the stockholder is bound, under the law, to answer to him. The stockholder is not under the control or in the power of the receiver, but holds a fund, so to speak, out of which the creditors of the company may be paid." I do not find that this doctrine has been changed by that court, but it is apparent that it rests on the particular wording of the statute involved, and not on general principles for in Wincock v. Turpin, 96 Ill. 135, three judges of the seven dissented on this point, and in Munger v. Jacobson, 99 Ill. 349, a similar liability was enforced in a bill by the receiver. The case of Jacobson v. Allen, 20 Blatchf. 525, 12 Fed. Rep. 454, was by the receiver of an Illinois corporation, and the decision was based on Arenz v. Weir, supra. The New York cases cited by Cook look the same way, but are less positive than those in Illinois, and it is equally clear that they rest on the special phraseology of the statutes. Billings v. Robinson, 94 N. Y. 415, was a suit by a receiver, and decided on the ground that the corporation had released the defendant before this suit was brought. The court said: "The receiver, who is plaintiff, is not shown to represent any creditor having any equities against Robinson [defendant]. . . . So far as the case shows, . . . the receiver represents in this action only the corporation which assented to the substitution of Marshall's liability for that of Robinson." And that in New York a receiver can recover, unless prevented by the language of the particular statute, appears to follow from the cases of Story v. Furman, 25 N. Y. 214, and Atty. Gen. v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 272. In fact, in no case that I have seen are the inconveniences of separate actions by the creditors, and the advantages of one suit by a receiver in behalf of all, more forcibly set forth than by Folger, J., in Pfohl v. Simpson, 74 N. Y. 187. In Patterson v. Stewart, 41 Minn. 84, under an act making the directors of a corporation ordering or assenting to a violation of any of its provisions in another state to recover of a stockholder an assessment made at the home of the corporation is sustained in Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 342, distinguishing such a case from cases against officers of corporations made liable for neglect of duty.

The right of the receiver of a foreign corporation to collect an unpaid subscription to its stock is sustained in Dayton v. Borst, 31 N. Y. 436, without showing that any statute of the state in which he was appointed authorized such proceeding.

So, in Pugh v. Hurtt, 52 How. Pr. 22, it was held that a receiver appointed in another state may be allowed by comity to bring suit against a resident to enforce his liability as stockholder in an insolvent corporation.

A receiver of a foreign corporation was allowed to recover on a bill in chancery against an executrix of a deceased stockholder in the case of Mann v. Cooke, 20 Conn. 178. In this case the shares had been surrendered by the subscriber to the company after its insolvency, and besides this he had paid 50 per cent of his subscription, which by his agreement was all that the company required of him.

The statute of limitations of the state in which a corporation was domiciled governs an action in another state by a receiver of the company to enforce the liability of a stockholder under the statute of the former state. Andrews v. Bacon, 38 Fed. Rep. 777.

Assessments on members of a foreign benefit society which had become insolvent were collected 34 L. R. A.

In Baldwin v. Rosmer, 101 Mich. 119, 25 L. R. A. 739, by an ancillary receiver.

An action brought in the District of Columbia to recover an assessment upon stock under an order of a Virginia court was unsuccessful in Glenn v. Marbury, 145 U. S. 489, 38 L. ed. 790, but the jurisdiction was not questioned.

So, an action against a stockholder of a foreign corporation to recover the amount of an assessment made under decree of a court in another state is sustained also in Morris v. Glenn, 37 Ala. 623; also in Sayre v. Glenn, Id. 631.

As to conclusiveness of such assessments in another state as res judicata, see note to Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co. in which are numerous cases of such suits.

An affidavit of defense by a person sued as stockholder by a foreign corporation stating that notice of assessments for which he is sued was not published in the newspapers as required by the statutes of the state of incorporation is insufficient, where a copy of the statutes referred to is not annexed and the court has no means of knowing, except by the mere opinion of the deponent, what provisions of such statutes may be mandatory and what may be merely directory. Speller Electric Time Co. v. Geiger, 147 Pa. 390.

An affidavit of defense by a person sued as stockholder by a foreign corporation, to the effect that the corporation was created in another state and that it has attempted to carry on business in the state of the forum without having complied with the statutory requirements, was held insufficient in jointly and severally liable for all corporate debts subsequently contracted, it was held that the appointment of a receiver did not prevent an action by a single creditor against a director; but the decision was put upon the special provisions of the statutes (whose "chaotic condition" is referred to in the opinion by Mitchell, J.), and particularly on the fact that the liability was unlimited, and "what one creditor may collect will not reduce the amount which another may recover." And in Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. Langdon, 44 Minn. 87, the same learned judge intimates that, as this point was not the principal one in that case, it may have to be reconsidered; and it was held that the statutory right to recover from stockholders capital which had been unlawfully refunded to them as dividends, without provision for the corporate debts, was an asset which vested in the receiver for the benefit of all the creditors. The case was put upon the broad ground of the receiver's rights and powers. "Everything becomes assets in his hands which were assets as to creditors, as well as what was assets as to the corporation."

These are all the cases we have been able to find on the subject, and in the absence of a controlling weight of authority, and, as already said, especially in the absence of an express decision of the supreme court of Kansas, we are not willing to depart from the settled general rule. The objections to doing so appear to us unanswerable. A receiver represents, not only the corporation, but all its creditors; and, as to the latter, it is his duty to secure all the assets available for their payment. For this purpose he succeeds to their rights, and has all the powers to enforce such rights that the creditors before his appointment had in their own behalf, even though such powers be beyond those which he has as the representative of the corporation alone. As each creditor may sue, the right is equal in all, and common to all; and hence the receiver, who represents all alike, is the proper party to assert the common right and pursue the common remedy for the common benefit. We do not, of course, refer to pending suits already begun by creditors before the appointment of the receiver. As to them his power to interfere may be doubted. But as to others he is clearly the proper party. If any creditor or class of creditors have preferred claims, or, as argued here, special claims against special liabilities, that does not deprive the receiver of the right, or relieve him from the duty, to gather them all into his hands for proper distribution. In this manner the rights of all will be protected, and justice be done in a single proceeding, in which everyone will get what is his due, no one will be called upon to pay more than his fair proportion, and the expense, delay, inconvenience, and inevitable occasional injustice of separate actions by different creditors, against different stockholders, with their attendant legion of resulting actions for contribution, will be avoided. This is so consonant with convenience and natural justice, as well as with our own settled procedure in analogous cases, that we will not be easily moved to depart from it. We hold, therefore, that the right to sue, if there is any, is in the receiver, and that plaintiff cannot maintain the present action. The ultimate questions—whether the courts of this state will enforce the statutory liability under the law of Kansas at all, and, if so, whether against separate stockholders, or only in the form established by our own practice in similar cases—we leave to be decided when they arise.

Judgment reversed.

Signa Iron Co. v. Vandervort, 164 Pa. 572, because it did not show that defendant did not purchase his stock of a stockholder in the state of incorporation.

It was held in Payson v. Withers, 5 Bls. 269, that a subscription to a foreign corporation is not within the provisions of a state statute requiring a foreign company or its agents to conform to certain conditions before the company could carry on business in the state, so as to constitute a failure to comply with such conditions a defense to a suit against the stockholder by an assignee in bankruptcy appointed by a Federal court in another state.

The right of a foreign insurance company to recover premiums or assessments in a state in which it is not entitled to do business because it has failed to comply with the statutes is considered in notes to Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. (Ind.) 20 L. R. A. on p. 407, and Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian P. Nav. Co. (Wash.) 24 L. R. A. on page 318. See also Seamans v. Temple Co. (Mich.) 28 L. R. A. 420. But these decisions are based on the ground that the courts will not aid a transaction which is at variance with the statutes or policy of the state, and do not turn on the right to enforce remedies created by the laws of other states.

II. In action by creditor of corporation.

a. Remedy according to law of forum.

If any remedy can be had against stockholders of foreign corporations it is well established that the procedure in such cases as in others must be according to the law of the forum.

In reference to a statute of another state making ing stockholders of corporations liable individually for its debts without prescribing the mode of enforcing the liability, it is said, in Drinkwater v. Portland Marine R. Co. 18 Me. 36: "Whether the courts of other states are bound to notice and give effect to this remedial provision, may be questionable. But if they are, the course of proceedings must be regulated by the law of the state where the remedy is sought to be pursued. This must necessarily be governed by the lex fori."

So, it is said in MARSHALL v. SHERMAN that if under any circumstances an action against stockholders of a foreign corporation could be maintained "it must be in such a form and by such modes of procedure as like liabilities created under our own statutes are enforced against our own citizens. There is no reason why the plaintiff should be permitted to enforce his debt in this jurisdiction against a citizen of this state in a form of action different from that which a creditor of a domestic corporation may prosecute against a domestic stockholder."

Again, in Leucke v. Tredway, 45 Mo. App. 507, it is said that what the remedy against stockholders of a foreign corporation would be in the state in which it was created is not important in determining the form of remedy to be followed in the state where the stockholders reside, but the remedy to be followed will be determined by the law of the forum.

The same rule is declared also in First Nat Bank v. Gustin Minerva Consol. Min. Co. 42 Minn. 387, 6 L. R. A. 676; Lowry v. Tuman, 46 N. Y. 119; RUSSELL v. PACIFIC R. CO.

A joinder of stockholders of a foreign corpora-

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

J. Foster RHODES, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES NATIONAL BANK.

(24 U. S. App. 607.)

1. A general finding of fact in a case tried by a United States court without the intervention of a jury cannot be reviewed by an appellate court.
2. The decision of the highest court of a state upon the proper construction to be given to the constitutional and statutory provisions of that state are binding in Federal courts.
3. The Kansas statute providing remedies by execution or action to enforce the personal liability of stockholders which the state Constitution declares shall be secured, being construed by the state courts to create a personal liability against the stockholders severally in the nature of a contract obligation, the enforcement of such liability by action at law is not confined to the courts of that state, but may be had in a Federal court sitting in another state where a stockholder resides, when it has jurisdiction of the parties.

(February 23, 1896.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the alleged liability of defendant as a stockholder in an insolvent corporation for corporate debts. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Woods and Jenkins, Circuit Judges, and Bunn, District Judge.

Mr. Anson B. Jenks for plaintiff in error.

Mr. W. W. Guthrie, with Mr. E. A. Otis, for defendant in error:

The finding of the court below being a general finding in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, the only questions which this court can consider are those which arose during the progress of the trial below, to which exceptions were duly preserved by the record;

tion as defendants in an action against the company for a debt is held to be proper in Minnesota in order to reach the amounts remaining due and unpaid on their stock so far as necessary to satisfy the judgment against the corporation. This is by virtue of the provisions of Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 34, §§ 9, 10, 11, which provide such a remedy in case of corporations generally. First Nat. Bank v. Gustin Minerva Consol. Min. Co. supra.

An attachment of the private property of the stockholders of a foreign corporation before judgment was held unwarranted in Drinkwater v. Portland Marine R. Co. supra, because it was said the court found no such authority in any statute.

b. For unpaid subscriptions to stock.

1. In general.

The mere fact of incorporation in another state does not defeat an action by a foreign corporation on a subscription to stock. Tablier v. Anglo-American Assn. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 815.

An attempt to compel the holder of stock in a foreign corporation issued to a person as a gratuity without any promise on his part to pay for it 34 L. R. A.

and all questions both of law and fact are absolutely concluded by it, except so far as questions of law only are saved by exceptions which the party has taken to the rulings of the court on the trial of the cause.

Norris v. Jackson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 125, 19 L. ed. 608; Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. v. Miller ("Miller v. Life Ins. Co."), 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 285, 20 L. ed. 398; Dirst v. Morris, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 484, 20 L. ed. 722; Cooper v. Omokundro, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 65, 23 L. ed. 47; British Queen Min. Co. v. Baker Silver Min. Co. 130 U. S. 222, 35 L. ed. 147; Martinton v. Fairbanks, 112 U. S. 870, 28 L. ed. 862; Lloyd v. McWilliams, 187 U. S. 576, 34 L. ed. 788.

The liability of a shareholder in a Kansas corporation is firmly established by the Constitution and laws of that state.

The effect of a provision in the Constitution and laws of a sister state must be determined by the construction given to it by the supreme court of that state.

Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. ed. 544.

While it may perhaps be true that the supreme court of Kansas has not decided in terms that said constitutional provision is self-executing, it has fully recognized, and in effect held, that stockholders of corporations under the Constitution and foregoing statutes of that state are individually liable to creditors of such corporation to an amount equal to the stock owned by each of them.

Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 478; Hentig v. James, 22 Kan. 826; Valley Bank & Sav. Inst. v. Ladies' Cong. Sewing Soc. 38 Kan. 428; Hewell v. Manglesdorf, 38 Kan. 194; Wells v. Robb, 43 Kan. 201; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415.

The remedy given by statute to the creditor of a Kansas corporation under the last clause of § 32 of the statute in question, upon which this action is brought, is not local in its character nor confined to the state which enacted the law, but is general in its nature, arising upon contract, and may be enforced by a direct suit in favor of any creditor against any proved fruitless in Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 37, 60 Am. Rep. 459, on the ground that no liability existed.

In Massachusetts, where a mere subscription for stock in a corporation without any express agreement to pay for it is held not to create any personal liability, the court refused to enforce against stockholders in a foreign corporation an implied liability to pay for the stock, although such implied liability may exist under the laws of the state of incorporation. The court says: "It does not seem advisable that we should seek to enforce a liability thus differing from any which would have been incurred if the defendants had subscribed for shares of stock in a corporation formed in this state." New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349.

The court further says that such a law varies so much from that which ordinarily obtains in regard to similar liabilities, and also in the enforcement of contracts, that it will be left to local administration. Ibid.

But the right of a judgment creditor of a foreign corporation against a stockholder rests in contract merely, and is not created by statute, and therefore shareholder, in any jurisdiction where such shareholder can be found and served with process.

Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966; Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 25, 25 L. ed. 294; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439.

Bunn, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of assumpsit, brought by the United States National Bank, a Kansas corporation, against J. Foster Rhodes, a citizen of Illinois, to enforce a stock liability under the Constitution and laws of Kansas upon stockholders of insolvent corporations created under the laws of that state. The declaration charges that a corporation known as the United States Building Company was incorporated on the 21st of December, 1886, under and pursuant to the provisions of chapter 28 of the General Statutes of the state of Kansas of 1868 (Comp. Laws 1885, Dassler's ed.), and afterwards became indebted to the defendant in error (the plaintiff below) in the sum of $22,000, on which a judgment was recovered in the state court for the proper district in Kansas on December 9, 1890; that execution was issued upon said judgment, and returned unsatisfied; that Rhodes was a stockholder in the building company to the extent of seventy-five shares, of the par value of $100 each, amounting in all to $7,500; that the building company is insolvent, and has no property or means of paying its debts, except the stock liability of its stockholders; and claims judgment for the amount of $7,500. The declaration also contains the usual common counts in assumpsit. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and also specially that the plaintiff was itself a stockholder in the building company, and liable with the other stockholders for its debts; and that he, the defendant, was not a stockholder, and so not responsible for its debts. A general replication was put in to the several pleas, a jury trial waived, the cause tried by the court, and a general finding of facts upon all the issues in the case, and a judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed. A general exception only was taken to the finding of the court. There was no special finding, and no request to find specially upon the facts, and no exception taken by the defendant that no special finding was made. There was a bill of exceptions signed in the case and made a part of the record containing the evidence, but it is clear that this court cannot review the facts, but must take the finding of facts made by the court, general as it is, for the facts upon which to apply the law. The court has, moreover, had some difficulty in reaching the main question of law argued by counsel and relied upon by the plaintiff in error as to the liability of the defendant in an action at law brought outside the limits of the state of Kansas under the Constitution and laws of that state, relating to the subject of the personal liability of stockholders in such a case, because of the state of the record as before set forth, the exceptions taken on trial, and the assignments of error not being properly framed for the purpose. Without looking into the evidence, it is difficult to see how the court can say that the judgment is based upon any particular count or cause of action in the declaration, upon the first count setting forth defendant's liability as a stockholder, or upon one or other of the common counts. The finding is general, and covers all the issues in the case. A finding by the court takes the place of a verdict of a jury, and a general exception to such finding is of no more avail than a general exception to a verdict. See Rev. Stat. § 649, which provides that "issues of fact in civil cases in any circuit court may be tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury. . . . The finding of the court upon the facts, which may be either general or special, shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury."

And § 700 provides that "when an issue of facts in any civil cause in a circuit court is tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury, according to § 649, the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial of the cause, if excepted to at the time, and duly presented by a bill of exceptions, may be reviewed by the supreme court upon a writ of error or upon appeal; and when the finding is special, the review may extend to the deter-it is held to be a right which is enforceable everywhere. Leouke v. Tredway, 45 Mo. App. 507.

Even in Massachusetts the courts will enforce an express promise of a stockholder in a foreign corporation, and it is held that a provision in a statute of another state in which a corporation was created, that if a member fails to pay any assessment upon a deposit note in a mutual insurance company he may be compelled to pay the whole note, and that any balance that may remain after paying the losses and expenses shall be returned to him, does not constitute a penal statute, but the liability may be enforced in the state where he resides. Jones v. Sisson, 6 Gray, 288.

2. By creditors' bill.

A creditors' bill by a judgment creditor of a foreign corporation against stockholders to reach what is due on their stock subscriptions is held in Missouri to be a proper remedy. Leouke v. Tredway, 45 Mo. App. 507; Shickle v. Watts, 94 Mo. 410. In the latter case the court, after holding that such was the proper remedy, added that the defendant had failed to plead that there was a remedy at law.

84 L. R. A.

A suit in equity to reach unpaid subscriptions of alleged stockholders of a foreign corporation who had made an alleged colorable transfer of their stock without having first obtained any judgment against them or against the corporation in the state although a judgment had been obtained against the corporation in the state of its domicile, is held not to be sustainable in Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196.

But Young v. Farwell, 139 Ill. 328, goes still further and holds that even after judgment against the corporation has been obtained in the state where the stockholders reside, a creditors' bill against stockholders of a foreign corporation cannot be sustained, to reach unpaid stock subscriptions, but the creditors must first seek a remedy in the state of incorporation, and there have an authoritative determination of the respective relations of creditors and stockholders toward the corporation and toward each other, after which, if it shall be necessary, their rights may be enforced in the courts of the state where the stockholders reside.

To similar effect as to actions to enforce statutory liability, see TITTLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC.

mination of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment."

This statute was first given a construction by the Supreme Court in Norris v. Jackson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 125, 19 L. ed. 603, where the court in an opinion by Mr. Justice Miller says: "The first thing to be observed in the enactment made by the 4th section of the act of the 3d of March, 1865, allowing parties to submit issues of fact in civil cases to be tried and determined by the court, is that it provides for two kinds of findings in regard to the facts, to wit, general and special. This is in perfect analogy to the findings by a jury, for which the court is in such cases substituted by the consent of the parties. In other words, the court finds a general verdict on all the issues for plaintiff or defendant, or it finds a special verdict. This special finding has often been considered and described by this court. It is not a mere report of the evidence, but a statement of the ultimate facts on which the law of the case must determine the rights of the parties; a finding of the propositions of fact which the evidence establishes, and not the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest. The next thing to be observed is, that whether the finding be general or special, it shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury; that is to say, it is conclusive as to the facts so found. In the case of a general verdict, which includes, or may include, as it generally does, mixed questions of law and fact, it concludes both, except so far as they may be saved by some exception which the party has taken to the ruling of the court on the law. In the case of a special verdict the question is presented as it would be if tried by a jury, whether the facts thus found require a judgment for plaintiff or defendant; and this being matter of law, the ruling of the court on it can be reviewed in this court on that record. If there was such special verdict here, we could examine its sufficiency to sustain the judgment. But there is none. The bill of exceptions, while professing to detail all the evidence, is no special finding of facts. The judgment of the court, then, must be affirmed unless the bill of exceptions presents some erroneous ruling of the court in the progress of the trial."

This construction has always been adhered to in subsequent cases in the same court. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. v. Miller ("Miller v. Life Ins. Co."), 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 285, 20 L. ed. 393; Dorst v. Morris, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 434, 20 L. ed. 722; Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Folsom, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 237, 21 L. ed. 827; Cooper v. Omohundro, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 65, 22 L. ed. 47; British Queen Min. Co. v. Baker Sitter Min. Co., 139 U. S. 222, 35 L. ed. 147.

In Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. v. Miller ("Miller v. Life Ins. Co.") the court says: "The finding of the court, if general, cannot be reviewed in this court by bill of exceptions or in any other manner."

In Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Folsom, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 237, 21 L. ed. 827, the court says: "Where the finding is general the parties are concluded by the determination of the court, except in cases where exceptions are taken to the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial. . . . Where a case is tried by the court without a jury, the bill of exceptions brings up nothing for revision except what it would have done had there been a jury trial."

In Cooper v. Omohundro, the court reaffirms the former rulings, and says: "Where issues of fact are submitted to the circuit court and the finding is general, nothing is open to review, . . . except the rulings of the circuit court in the progress of the trial, and that the phrase 'rulings of the court in the progress of the trial,' does not include the general finding of the circuit court, nor the conclusions of the circuit court embodied in such general findings."

In Martinton v. Fairbanks, 112 U. S. 670, 28 L. ed. 862, the cases are reviewed, and the same doctrine again asserted. The court says: "The proposition that the general finding of the court in this case is open to review is in direct opposition to the rulings of the court in the cases cited. The plaintiff in error seeks to make the question whether the evidence set out in the bill of exceptions justified the finding by the court for the plaintiff of the issue of fact raised by the pleadings. This is in defiance of the decision of this court that it cannot be done, an attempt upon a general finding to bring up the whole testimony for review by a bill of exceptions. The theory of the plain-

The right of creditors of a foreign corporation to proceed by way of garnishment and attachment to reach the unpaid stock subscriptions of resident stockholders is asserted in Turner Bros. v. Alabama Min. & Mfg. Co. 25 Ill. App. 144, as a ground of denying the remedy of a creditors' bill, without judgment against the corporation in the state, although service on the corporation could not be had because it never did any business or had any office or agent in the state, and had now ceased to do any or to have any office, officer, agent, employee, stockholders, or debtors, or any books, papers, or property of any kind in the state in which it was created. This case is not mentioned in Young v. Farwell, supra.

A suit against subscribers to the capital stock of a foreign corporation to reach any sums which they would be liable to pay in the state of the incorporation was expressly authorized by N. Y. Laws 1845, chap. 234, p. 256, after judgment against the corporation and the return of an execution against it unsatisfied in whole or in part. Seymour v. Sturgess, 26 N. Y. 124; McDonough v. Phelps, 15 How. Pr. 372, 34 L. R. A.

But it was held that the right to sue under this statute was conditioned on the existence of a right of action in the state of incorporation against the defendants without joining additional parties. So it must appear that a forfeiture of the stock is not the only remedy against stockholders in the state of incorporation. McDonough v. Phelps, supra.

The New York Act of 1845, chap. 234, providing a remedy against stockholders of foreign corporations, was perhaps limited to the recovery of unpaid stock subscriptions, although the language is not entirely free from uncertainty on this point. By its terms the remedy was "to compel the payment of any sum or sums of money not paid in or remaining due upon each share of the capital stock," although a later clause said the plaintiff might recover any sums which such defendant "could be liable to pay in any event in the state or government where such corporation is located." Construing the clauses together, it seems to be limited to the recovery of stock subscriptions. But this statute was repealed by N. Y. Act of 1877, chap. 417, § 1, § 119.

An action against a single stockholder of a fortiff in error seems to be that the general finding in this case, like a general verdict, includes questions of both law and fact, and that, by excepting to the general finding, he excepts to such conclusions of law as the general finding implies. But § 649, Rev. Stat., provides that the finding of the court, whether general or special, shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury. A general verdict of a jury concludes mixed questions of law and fact, except so far as they may be saved by some exception which the party has taken to the ruling of the court upon a question of law. . . . But the plaintiff in error has taken no such exception. By excepting to the general finding of the court it is in the same position as if it had submitted its case to the jury, and, without any exceptions taken during the course of the trial, had upon the return of the general verdict for the plaintiff, embodied in a bill of exceptions all the evidence, and then excepted to the verdict because the evidence did not support it."

We have on several occasions followed these rulings of the supreme court, and declared the like doctrine. Jenks v. Stapp, 9 U. S. App. 34, 3 C. C. A. 244, 52 Fed. Rep. 641; Farwell v. Sturges, 9 U. S. App. 405, 6 C. C. A. 118, 56 Fed. Rep. 782; Skinner v. Franklin Co. 9 U. S. App. 676, 6 C. C. A. 118, 56 Fed. Rep. 783.

The situation of the plaintiff in error in the case now before the court is accurately described by the above language of the supreme court. He has embodied the evidence to support the allegations of his pleas in a bill of exceptions, and excepts to the finding of the court because the evidence does not support such finding. The court, by the general finding, for instance, has found that the plaintiff in error (defendant below) was the owner of stock in the United States Building Company, as is alleged in the declaration, and that the plaintiff bank was not the owner of stock in that company. This the plaintiff in error seeks to dispute, but the question is foreclosed by the finding. The plaintiff is in almost, if not quite, as bad a situation in regard to the conclusion of law implied in the finding to the effect that upon the facts alleged in the declaration, and found by the court, there was a personal liability at law on the part of the defendant to the plaintiff on account of his ownership of stock in the insolvent corporation, which might be enforced by action in the United States circuit court sitting in Illinois, there being no exception or assignment of error upon which the question properly arises. But, as this question, by common consent, has been argued by counsel, and submitted to the judgment of this court, the court having jurisdiction of the case, we shall not decline to consider it. It is not a difficult question under the authorities.

The Constitution of Kansas provides that "dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder, and such other means as shall be provided by law; but such individual liabilities shall not apply to railway corporations nor corporations for religious or charitable purposes." Pursuant to this constitutional provision, the legislature, by § 32 of chapter 28 of the General Statutes of the state of Kansas of 1888 (Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, ¶ 1192), provided as follows:

"If any execution shall have been issued against the property or effects of a corporation, except a railway or religious or charitable corporation, and there can be found no property whereon to levy such execution, then execution may be issued against any of the shareholders to an extent equal in amount to the amount of stock by him or her owned together with any amount unpaid thereon; but no execution shall issue against any stockholder except upon an order of the court in which such action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after reasonable notice in writing to the person or persons sought to be charged, and upon such motion such court may order execution to issue accordingly; or the plaintiff in the execution may proceed by action to charge the stockholders with the amount of his judgment."

There have been several decisions by the supreme court in Kansas giving construction to these provisions, which are binding upon this court. It is contended by the plaintiff in error corporation who has not paid in full for stock under a statute of another state requiring him to pay such share of the balance as may be required to satisfy the debts of the company cannot be maintained by a judgment creditor, since the remedy against him must be in equity bringing in other stockholders, when they are in a like predicament with him. Griffith v. Mangam, 73 N. Y. 611.

But the right of a judgment creditor of a foreign corporation after the return of an execution unsatisfied to sue a stockholder indebted to the corporation for unpaid subscription to stock is sustained, at least when there is no demurrer for defect of parties, in Persch v. Simmons, 3 N. Y. Supp. 783, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, which in general terms authorizes an action by a judgment creditor to compel a discovery of any thing in action or other property belonging to the judgment debtor, or any money, thing in action, or other property due to him after the return of an execution unsatisfied. The court says: "Such an action is expressly authorized by § 1871 of the Code, and is sustained by the decision of the commission of appeals in Bartlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y. 583." But it 34 L. R. A.

should be said that the case of Bartlett v. Drew was substantially different, since it was based on the fact that the defendant had received the proceeds of property of the corporation which had been sold, and not upon his liability to pay any unpaid balance of his subscription to stock as in the present case.

The case of Persch v. Simmons, supra, attempts to distinguish Griffith v. Mangam, supra, on the ground that in that case the statute of New Jersey required each stockholder to pay for the satisfaction of creditors only the sum necessary to complete the amount of his shares as fixed by the charter, or such proportion of that sum as shall be required to satisfy the debts; but it does not show what the statute may be which governs the corporation in the later case, but it states that the corporation is shown by the return of the execution to have no property within the state that can be levied upon and that consequently the plaintiff is without remedy unless he can maintain the action against the stockholder.

A bill in equity by a creditor of a corporation to reach unpaid stock subscriptions was denied in error that they create no liability whatever, but that the statute merely provides a remedy which cannot be enforced outside of that state, or if there be any liability, it can only be enforced in equity. This contention cannot be maintained if regard is to be paid either to the decisions of the supreme court of Kansas or to the ruling of the United States Supreme Court under similar enactments of other states. The effect of the decisions in Kansas is that the statute creates and enforces a personal liability upon every stockholder to an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him, that such liability is several and not joint, that it exists in favor of each creditor of the corporation severally against each shareholder, and that the obligation is by contract in the nature of a guaranty, and may be enforced by action in any tribunal where proper service can be had. The matter came before the court in Hentig v. James, 22 Kan. 326. In that case the court says: "Under this statute the judgment creditor of the corporation has two modes of procedure against a stockholder upon the return of his execution against the corporation nulla bona. He may obtain by motion, after reasonable notice, the issuance of an execution from the court in which the action is brought against the stockholder; or he may proceed by action to charge the stockholders with the amount of his judgment. The former is a summary proceeding; the latter is a more formal one." The court, on page 329, uses the following language: "The concluding provision of said § 82 plainly prescribes that if the creditor wishes to make the stockholder a judgment debtor with all that term implies, he may proceed by action, and charge the stockholder with the amount of his judgment against the corporation."

Afterwards, in Howell v. Mangelsdorf, 33 Kan. 194, after quoting the above statutory provision, the court says: "It will be observed that two remedies for enforcing the individual liability of stockholders are prescribed in the statute above quoted. In the one case the judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation may proceed by a summary action on a motion in the court where the judgment was rendered against the corporation; in the other by an ordinary action, to be instituted wherever personal jurisdiction of the stockholders can be acquired. Before the summary proceeding by motion can be maintained, notice to the stockholder must be given, in order that he may appear, and make such defense as can be made, and as is necessary to protect his interest. . . . His liability to the creditors of the corporation is in the nature of a guaranty; the action or proceeding to enforce the same does not accrue until the execution upon the judgment against the principal is returned unsatisfied. We think that the proceeding against the stockholder, whatever remedy may be employed, is an independent one."

And in Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415, the court holds that "the liability of stockholders to the creditors of a corporation is several and not joint, and each must be sued separately," and that judgment against several shareholders in one proceeding must be reversed. In this case the court further says: "The nature of this liability is peculiar. It seems to have been created for the exclusive benefit of corporate creditors. The liability rests upon the stockholders of a corporation to respond to the creditors for an amount equal to the stock held by each, and it has been held that the action to enforce this liability can only be maintained by the creditors themselves in their own right and for their own benefit. Cook, Stock & Stockholders, ¶ 216."

And in Howell v. Mangelsdorf, above quoted, which was a proceeding for a summary remedy under the statute without action brought the court says, on page 199, 33 Kan. : "This ruling does not deprive a creditor of an insolvent corporation of a remedy against the stockholder residing in another state and upon whom service cannot be obtained here. While the liability is statutory, it is one which arises upon the contract of subscription to the capital stock of the corporation, and an action to enforce the same is transitory, and may be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in the state where personal service can be made upon the stockholder. Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 871, 27 L. ed. 966; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; McDonough v. Phelps, 15

Bank of Virginia v. Adams, 1 Pars. Sol. Eq. Cas. 534, although plaintiff alleged that he could not get judgment at law in the state of incorporation because there was no person there on whom service could be made. The court said that if the court of Virginia in which the corporation existed should appoint a receiver to collect assets he could undoubtedly sue all the defaulting stockholders in Pennsylvania and recover the unpaid instalments the same as the company could have done.

But a creditor of an insolvent foreign corporation is allowed in Minnesota to maintain against the stockholders of whom the court has jurisdiction an action in the nature of a creditor's bill to obtain payment of his claim against such corporation from the unpaid balances of subscriptions to its capital stock. The remedy provided by §§ 2800-2802, Gen. Stat. 1894, in case of domestic corporations, is held inapplicable to the foreign corporations. Rule v. Omega Stove & G. Co. (Minn.), 67 N. W. 60.

Judgment against the corporation and a return of execution unsatisfied within the state must be had before a creditor's bill can be maintained against stockholders to reach their unpaid stock 34 L. R. A.

subscriptions, unless it is shown that it was impossible to comply with this condition. Ibid.

Allegations that a foreign corporation has ceased to do business and has disposed of all its assets and has no property, and that the plaintiff has obtained a judgment against it in the state of incorporation and had an execution against it returned unsatisfied, are sufficient to show that it is practically impossible to obtain a personal judgment against the corporation within the state. Ibid.

A provision in the charter of a corporation granted by a foreign government to the effect that a stockholder shall not be liable personally until a valid judgment has been obtained against the corporation and an execution thereon returned unsatisfied is held to create a condition precedent to a suit in Massachusetts against a stockholder of such foreign company to reach unpaid subscriptions to stock even when by dissolution of the corporation it was impossible to obtain a judgment against it. E. Remington & Sons v. Samana Bay Co. 140 Mass. 494.

Also, in Turner Bros. v. Alabama Min. & Mfg. Co. supra, a domestic judgment and unsatisfied execu-

How. Pr. 372; Seymour v. Sturges, 26 N. Y. 134."

As this is a question of the proper construction to be given to a constitutional and statutory provision of a state, the decisions of the highest court of that state are binding upon this court. Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. ed. 544. But, if still higher authority were necessary, it will not be found wanting. A similar statute of the state of New York was before the United States Supreme Court in Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, in a suit brought against a stockholder of a New York corporation in the United States circuit court for the northern district of Florida, where the supreme court held that "the liability created by a provision in a general act of the state of New York for the formation of corporations, that all the stockholders of every company incorporated under it shall be severally individually liable to creditors of the company until the whole amount of the capital stock shall be paid in and certified, is a contract and not a penalty; and can be enforced by an action sounding in contract against a stockholder found in another state."

It was declared also that, the courts of New York having held that a liability of a stockholder to creditors arising under one of its general statutes for forming corporations was a contract, when the attempt was made to enforce it in New York, the supreme court would follow that interpretation in a suit to enforce such a liability in another state, and that the liability may be enforced by an action at law, without resort to a court of equity. This case is an authority upon the case at bar, and answers all the contentions made upon the question of liability except such as are founded upon the evidence, which this court cannot review. A case similar to the one at bar arose, and was heard on demurrer by the United States circuit court for the southern district of California, in 1893, under the same provisions of the Kansas statute and Constitution, and the same ruling was made, the court following the decisions of the supreme court of Kansas. Bank of North America v. Rindge, 57 Fed. Rep. 279.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Edward W. RUSSELL

v.
PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al.,
Repts.

S. B. COBB et al., Interveners, Appts.

(113 Cal. 258.)

The courts of another state cannot enforce the stockholders' liability for unpaid subscriptions provided by the Illinois act of 1871-72, p. 299, § 8, as that is not a general-contract liability but is to be enforced by the remedy corresponding to garnishment provided in that section.

tion thereon exhausting the remedy at law is declared to be a prerequisite to a creditor's bill to reach indebtedness on a subscription for stock to a foreign corporation.

Judgment and unsatisfied execution in another state in an action against a corporation is held insufficient in Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 338, to comply with the condition precedent under the New York act of 1848 before bringing action against the stockholder, but this was the case of a domestic corporation.

In Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384, it was held that a creditor of a New Jersey corporation who sought to reach money that the stockholders had received must first exhaust his remedies against the property of the corporation.

a. For statutory liability after stock is fully paid for.

1. In general.

The general doctrine as stated in RUSSELL v. PACIFIC R. Co. is said to be well established to the following effect: "Where a statute creates a right and prescribes a remedy for its enforcement, that 34 L. R. A.

(June 8, 1895.)

APPEAL by interveners from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County and from an order refusing a new trial in a proceeding instituted to enforce the individual liability of stockholders for debts of the defendant corporation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. Walker, W. P. Gardiner, and Allen, Cowrey, & Miller for Russell.

Messrs. S. C. Hubbell and T. Z. Blake-man for interveners.

Messrs. Chapman & Hendrick, J. D. Bicknell, and Bicknell & Trask for respondents.

remedy is exclusive. Where a liability is created which is not penal, and no remedy is prescribed, the liability may be enforced wherever the person is found. The procedure will, however, be entirely governed by the law of the forum. If the law creating the liability provides for a particular mode of enforcing it, the mode limits the liability." These particular statements are more fully considered under the other subdivisions.

But the only practical mode of dealing with a corporation and its members when seeking to charge the latter upon their statute liability is said, in Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233, to be to proceed in the manner prescribed by the statute creating such liability and in the local jurisdiction where the corporation was established and carried on its business and by whose local statutes alone the liability exists.

These two cases indicate the existing conflict in the decisions as to remedies against stockholders of foreign corporations which is more fully developed in succeeding paragraphs.

The opinion of the court in MARSHALL v. SHEP-MAN says: "The courts of Massachusetts have uni-

Temple, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brings this action as a judgment creditor of the Pacific Railway Company, in his own behalf and for other creditors of the corporate defendant and of the Los Angeles Cable-Railway Company, for the appointment of a receiver, for the sale of its property, and that the sum due from stockholders of the Pacific Railway Company on their stock, so far as necessary, may be called in. Numerous stockholders resident in California are made defendants. A complaint in intervention was filed in behalf of numerous persons who claim to be creditors of the Pacific Railway Company in various amounts. These creditors have no joint or common interests whatever, but claim the right to thus join under the provisions of a statute of the state of Illinois, which was proved at the trial. February 10, 1891, Charles H. Morse in the superior court of Cook county, Illinois, recovered a judgment against the Pacific Railway Company for a sum of money, and caused an execution to be issued on said judgment, which was afterwards returned nulla bona. Afterwards, upon the averment of the insolvency of the corporation, said Morse caused a receiver to be appointed for said corporation, by the said Illinois court. On the 20th day of January, 1891, plaintiff recovered a judgment in the superior court of Los Angeles county against the Pacific Railway Company for the sum of $1,058. 48, and thereafter commenced this action, and has procured a receiver to be appointed to impound the assets of the Pacific Railway Company. It is averred, and practically found, that the corporation is utterly insolvent. Judgment was entered for the defendants, and the interveners, having made a fruitless application for a new trial, now appeal both from the order refusing a new trial and from the judgment.

One reason urged by the respondents why the appeal should not be sustained is that, as they contend, an action of this character cannot be maintained in this state; that is to say, it is a special remedy given by the statute of Illinois, and can be enforced nowhere else. The law of the state of Illinois, as found by the court, is as follows: By the 8th section of the act under which the Pacific Railway was incorporated it was provided that "each stockholder shall be liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent of the amount that may be unpaid upon the stock held by him, to be collected in the manner herein provided. No assignor of stocks shall be released from any such indebtedness by reason of any assignment of his stock, but shall remain liable therefor jointly with the assignee until the said stock be fully paid. Whenever any action is brought to recover against the corporation, it shall be competent to proceed against any one or more stockholders at the same time to the extent of the balance unpaid by such stockholders upon the stock owned by them respectively, whether called in or not, as in cases of garnishment. Every assignee or transferee of stock shall be liable to the company for the amount unpaid thereon to the extent and in the same manner as if he had been the original subscriber." Laws 1871-72, p. 299. By § 25 of the same statute it is further provided that under certain circumstances a creditor who has obtained a judgment against the corporation, and whose execution has been returned nulla bona, may bring suits by joining the corporation against the persons who were stockholders at the time or in any way liable for the debts of the corporation, to compel each stockholder to pay his pro rata share of such debts, or liabilities to the extent of the unpaid portion of the stock after exhausting the assets of the corporation. Further, it authorized courts of equity, on good cause shown, to dissolve the corporation, and close up the corporate business, and to appoint a receiver, who shall in all cases be a resident of the state of Illinois. Counsel for appellants admit that the proceedings provided for in the 25th section can be taken only in the state of Illinois. It is a special remedy, providing for contribution among the stockholders, and a possible dissolution of the corporation and a winding up of its business. They contend, however, that the 8th section merely creates a liability, which is in the nature of a contract liability, and which is enforceable wherever the stockholder can be found. The general rule upon this subject is very well established. Where a statute creates a right and prescribes a remedy for its enformly refused to entertain actions of this character, either upon the ground that to enforce the foreign law would be injurious to its own citizens, or that complete justice could not be administered in its courts under its special and peculiar provisions;" citing Erickson v. Nesmith, supra; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349; Poet v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 66; and Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 66. Respecting these cases it says: "The arguments of the court in these cases upon which the conclusion was based deserve the highest respect."

But the New York case is clearly distinguishable from some at least of these Massachusetts cases which are characterized by Judge Thompson in his Commentaries on Law of Corporations, vol. 3, § 3037, as based upon "a seemingly narrow and tribal judicial policy." Of the Massachusetts doctrine Judge Thompson further remarks in § 3069: "This doctrine which screens her citizens from the liability imposed upon the coadventurers in such corporations who happen to be residents of other states is grossly unjust, and it is none the less unjust because it is declared in a series of decisions of a court of great learning and reputation and attempted to be bolstered up by legal theories and reasons." He adds that "under it, all that a stockholder of a failing foreign corporation will have to do to escape his liability will be to move with his property into Massachusetts; and Massachusetts will thus become the White Friars of dishonest stockholders."

But the latest Massachusetts decision on the subject sustains the right of action to enforce the liability of Kansas stockholders on demurrer to a declaration which averred, in substance, that the Kansas statute as interpreted by the supreme court of that state made the stockholder's liability contractual arising upon his subscription, and that he thereby guaranteed payment to the creditors of an amount equal to the par value of his stock, which should be payable to the judgment creditors of the corporation who first pursued their remedy under the statute, and that an action to enforce said liability is transitory and may be brought in any forcement, that remedy is exclusive. Where a liability is created which is not penal, and no remedy is prescribed, the liability may be enforced wherever the person is found. The procedure will, however, be entirely governed by the law of the forum. If the law creating the liability provides for a particular mode of enforcing it, the mode limits the liability. If it be a contract, the parties here contracted with the understanding that they can be held liable in no other way. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franchlyn, 120 U. S. 747, 80 L. ed. 825. And such a liability cannot be enforced in another state. Young v. Harrell, 139 Ill. 326; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 18 L. R. A. 56; Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472; Jeanup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643; Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233. By the 8th section of the Illinois statute, above quoted, a special remedy is provided, and, not only so, but plainly it was intended that it should be the only remedy. By the first clause, apparently, an absolute liability is imposed upon the stockholder for the debts of the corporation to the extent of the amount unpaid upon his stock. If this were all, the liability would be primary, and could be enforced without suing the corporation, and without reference to its solency. In fact nowhere in this section is it made of any consequence whether the corporation is solvent or insolvent, or whether or not it has assets which could be reached by ordinary writ. The next clause, however, expressly limits the collection of the debt to the mode prescribed, which is by garnishment. And this may be done whether the amount unpaid has been called in or not. Whether this can be done after the assets have been impounded by the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of liquidation will depend upon the laws of Illinois. It is said that it has been there held that it can be done by what is called "equitable garnishment." It would not be so here. The unpaid subscription would, with other assets, pass to the receiver, to be collected and disbursed under the direction of the court. The Illinois remedy cannot be imported here.

I think the question has been passed upon by the courts of Illinois in Pease v. Underwriters Union, 1 Ill. App. 287, which was a proceeding under the 8th section. The court said: "It will be seen that by the terms of this statute a new remedy is provided for the creditors of corporations by providing that 'whenever any action is brought to recover any indebtedness against the corporation, it shall be competent to proceed against any one or more stockholders at the same time, . . . as in case of garnishment.' There has been some discussion between counsel in the case as to the proper form of procedure by the use, Miller, to avail himself of the benefit of this new remedy. There has been no judicial construction of this statute that we are aware of, and we are left to determine just what the mode of proceeding contemplated by the legislature was. We think the language employed in the statute is unambiguous, and, fairly interpreted, means that a creditor of a corporation may bring suit in any of the usual forms of action for any indebtedness due to him from such corporation, and, upon suing out summons, may, by virtue of this statute, sue out at the same time a garnishee summons, directed to any of the stockholders of such corporation whose subscription to the capital stock thereof is wholly or in part unpaid; and by the service of such garnishee summons upon such stockholder prevent his further payment of such stock to the corporation, but hold the same in abeyance, to await the result of the trial of the original cause; and when a recovery is had (if at all) the garnishee may be then compelled to respond to such judgment creditor instead of paying his said indebtedness to the corporation. This is briefly and substantially the proceeding which we think the statute authorizes at the instance of a creditor of a corporation." This language is unambiguous, and shows the construction given to the statute by the courts of Illinois. Independently of this ruling we should have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the Illinois statute does not create a liability which can be enforced here. The interveners, therefore, have no standing as litigants in the case, and the order and judgment are affirmed.

We concur: Harrison, J.; Garoutte, J.; Van Fleet, J.; McFarland, J.; Henshaw, J.

court of general jurisdiction in the state where personal service can be made upon the stockholders. The Massachusetts court accordingly holds that it has jurisdiction to enforce the liability like other debts, if the law of Kansas is accurately stated in the declaration. In deciding the demurrer the court could only look at the averments of the declaration, and could not take judicial notice of the Kansas statutes or of their interpretation by the courts of that state. Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 106 Mass. 414. This decision, it will be seen, places the Massachusetts court squarely in favor of the right to enforce a stockholder's liability under the statutes of another state when that liability is to be regarded as contractual and enforceable in a transitory action without being limited by provisions for a special remedy. It materially limits the general language of Erickson v. Nesmith, supra, although it does not refer to that case.

The fact that a foreign corporation is in the hands of receivers does not prevent a creditor from maintaining an action against its stockholders if the statute makes the latter directly liable to the creditors. Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis supra.

Assuming that such a remedy may be had under the statute of another state, it must appear, in order to state a cause of action against a stockholder under it in favor of a creditor of the corporation, that the corporation was formed subsequent to the adoption of the statute, or that the stockholders were at the time of its passage liable under some former statute, if the statute on which the action is based is limited to cases of this kind. Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 8.

The termination of the existence of the corporation in another state was set up in one case as a defense. Thus, an affidavit of defense by a stockholder of a Kansas corporation, which avers that before the indebtedness of the corporation for which he is sued it had ceased to be a corporation in Kansas or under its laws, was held insufficient in Sykes v. Anderson, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 329. The court does not decide in this case that the fact, if established, of the termination of the corporate existence under the Kansas charter would not have been

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Sidney TUTTLE, Appt.,
v.
NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, of St. Louis.

(161 Ill. 497.)

1. The provision of Kan. Const. art. 12, § 2, that dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder, and such "other means as shall be provided by law," is not self-executing.
2. The courts of one state will adopt its own methods of construction of a constitutional provision of another state, where the courts of the latter state have not construed it.
3. A special remedy against stockholders of a corporation, provided by the laws of the state where the corporation is domiciled, will not, on the ground of comity, be enforced in the courts of another state which has a different and inconsistent method of procedure, where it will result in injustice to the citizens of the latter state.
4. The courts of a state of the domicile of an insolvent corporation must, by an appropriate proceeding, determine the relation of the corporation and its creditors and stockholders and the proportionate share of the corporate indebtedness to be borne by each solvent stockholder before relief can be had against a stockholder in the courts of another state.

(Baker, Magruder, and Cartwright, JJ., dissent.)

(March 30, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the liability of defendant as a stockholder in a Kansas corporation which had become insolvent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

material, but holds that the affidavit does not show how or by what means it ceased to be a Kansas corporation or from what source or sources information of this fact was obtained, and that the deponent does not make the averment of his own knowledge, or even allege his own belief therein.

An action in case to enforce liability of stockholders in a foreign corporation was not sustained in Bond v. Appleton, 8 Mass. 472, 5 Am. Dec. 111, but this was on the ground that there was no liability established.

2. Nature of the liability.

Many of the cases have turned on the question whether the statutory liability of stockholders in corporations of other states was to be considered as contractual or penal, and in most of them the liability has been held to be in the nature of a contractual rather than of a penal liability. But it will be seen that the case of MARSHALL v. SHERMAN, while holding that the liability is contractual, refused to regard that as a sufficient reason for enforcing it.

In a suit against a stockholder of a foreign corporation, it is said, in Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119: "A personal liability of stockholders for the debts of a corporation, in virtue of the charter, is not in 34 L. R. A.

Mr. A. E. De Mange, for appellant:

Special remedies having been provided for the enforcement of the individual liability of stockholders created by the laws of Kansas, those special remedies alone can be pursued to enforce that liability.

Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 479; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 80 L. ed. 825; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 56; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 219; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184; Young v. Farrell, 189 Ill. 326; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56.

The remedy in such cases as this, if any there be, must be sought in equity, and not at law by a single creditor alone for his own benefit.

Low v. Buchanan, 94 Ill. 76; Harper v. Union Mfg. Co. 100 Ill. 225; Rounds v. McCormick, 114 Ill. 252; Queenan v. Palmer, 117 Ill. 626; Richardson v. Akin, 87 Ill. 138; Eames v. Doris, 102 Ill. 850; Robertson v. Noeninger, 20 Ill. App. 227.

Messrs. Kerrick, Lucas, & Spencer, for appellee:

The supreme court of Kansas is the final and only arbiter as to the true meaning and proper interpretation of the Constitution and the statutes of Kansas.

Elmendorf v. Taylor, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 152, 6 L. ed. 289; Shelby v. Guy, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 367, 6 L. ed. 496; Christy v. Pridgeon, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 322; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 267, 24 L. ed. 157; Chase v. Curtis, 118 U. S. 452, 28 L. ed. 1038; Jean v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643; Boyt v. Thompson, 3 Sandf. 421; Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas, 138 U. S. 233, 34 L. ed. 341; St. Louis San. Asso. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun, 45; Lane v. Watson, 51 N. J. L. 186; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 243, note 1; Howe v. Welch, 14 Daly, 80.

the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, and does not exist solely as a liability imposed by statute."

That a stockholder's liability for his proportion of the debts of the corporation is contractual, is also decided in Dennis v. Los Angeles County Super. Ct. 91 Cal. 548, where the question arose in respect to a justice's jurisdiction.

On the ground that the liability of a shareholder arose out of his contract, it was held, in Manville v. Edgar, 8 Mo. App. 324, that an action would lie against the estate of a deceased stockholder in a foreign corporation, although the debt accrued after his death.

The double liability of stockholders under the Kansas statutes is held to be contractual and not penal, and therefore such liability can be enforced against stockholders in other states. Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 195.

The statutory liability of a stockholder is said in Howell v. Mangiesdorf, 33 Kan. 194, to arise upon a contract of subscription to the stock, and an action to enforce the same is declared to be transitory so that it can be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in the state where personal service can be made upon the stockholder. This case, however, was not a case of an action against stockholders in a foreign corporation, but the above declaration

When a person becomes a stockholder in a corporation organized under the laws of a foreign state he contracts with reference to the laws of that state, and his liability as a stockholder is to be determined with reference to the laws of that state.

Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 871, 27 L. ed. 966; Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 265; Howell v. Mangleford, 83 Kan. 194; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 416; Perry v. Turner, 55 Mo. 418; Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. 505; Shafer v. Moriarty, 46 Ind. 9; Hill v. Beach, 12 N. J. Eq. 81; Crease v. Babcock, 10 Met. 525; Seymour v. Sturgess, 26 N. Y. 134; Payson v. Withers, 5 Biss. 269; Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Merchants Ins. & T. Co. 11 Humph. 38; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; First Nat. Bank v. Guatin Minerva Consol. Min. Co. 42 Minn. 827, 6 L. R. A. 676; Pettibone v. McGraw, 6 Mich. 441; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 874, 902.

In the absence of legislation to the contrary the proper way of enforcing such liability is by an action at law.

Corwith v. Culver, 69 Ill. 502; Fuller v. Ledden, 87 Ill. 310; McCarthy v. Lavasche, 89 Ill. 270, 31 Am. Rep. 88; Hull v. Burtis, 90 Ill. 218; Eames v. Doris, 102 Ill. 350; Buchanan v. Meisser, 105 Ill. 638; Thompson v. Meisser, 108 Ill. 359; Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316; Root v. Sinnock, 120 Ill. 350, 60 Am. Rep. 558; Schalucky v. Field, 124 Ill. 620; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 416.

A refusal to grant a remedy in a case of this kind would not be a refusal to enforce a foreign law, but simply denial of justice.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 875.

Stockholders with respect to their personal liability under such a provision are in effect partners and are liable to the creditors of the corporation to an amount equal to the amount of stock held by them respectively.

Fuller v. Ledden, Thompson v. Meisser, and Schalucky v. Field, supra.

The Kansas statute is no more than declaration of the common law.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 227; Beach, Priv. Corp. § 141; Morawetz, Priv. Corp.

§ 314; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 418; Story, Eq. Jur. 494; Davies v. Humphreys, 6 Mees. & W. 167; Dering v. Earl Winchelsea, 1 Cox., Ch. Cas. 821; Craythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. Jr. 169; Craig v. Ankeney, 4 Gill, 225; Byers v. Alcorn, 6 Ill. App. 44; Stoo v. Pool, 15 Ill. 47.

Such an action as this was a proper common-law remedy.

Corwith v. Culver, 69 Ill. 502; Fuller v. Ledden, 87 Ill. 310; McCarthy v. Lavasche, 89 Ill. 270, 31 Am. Rep. 88; Hull v. Burtis, 90 Ill. 218; Eames v. Davis, 102 Ill. 350; Buchanan v. Meisser, 105 Ill. 638; Thompson v. Meisser, 108 Ill. 359; Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316; Root v. Sinnock, 120 Ill. 350, 60 Am. Rep. 558; Schalucky v. Field, 124 Ill. 620; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 895; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 221; Flash v. Conn, 109 J. S. 380, 27 L. ed. 970.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The National Bank of the Republic of St. Louis, Missouri, appellee, recovered a judgment against Sidney Tuttle, appellant, by reason of his being a stockholder in the Edwards County Bank of Kansas, which became insolvent owing appellee.

Section 2 of article 12 of the Constitution of the state of Kansas provides: "Dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder, and such other means as shall be provided by law; but said individual liability shall not apply to railroad corporations, nor corporations for religious and charitable purposes."

A right of action against a stockholder of a corporation ordinarily exists only by virtue of some statutory enactment. It did not exist at common law. It is of importance to determine, at the threshold of this case, whether this provision of the Constitution of the state of Kansas is self-executing. When it was declared by that instrument that "dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of stockholders to an additional was made in explaining a decision denying jurisdiction of the state court to award execution against the property of a nonresident stockholder who has not been served with notice within the state.

The individual liability of stockholders under the Constitution of Ohio, and a statute providing that they shall be liable to an amount equal to their stock subscribed in addition to said stock, for the purpose of securing the creditors of the company, constitutes a contract, express or implied, to pay, not only for the stock owned or subscribed, but so much in addition as would be necessary for the purpose of securing the creditors of the company, and this contract can be enforced in any state if the defendants are amenable to the process of the court. Aultman's Appeal, 98 Pa. 505.

So, the liability of stockholders under the Ohio Constitution and statutes, providing that they shall be liable, in addition to their stock in an amount equal to the stock, to the creditors of the corporation to secure the payment of its debts and liabilities, was held, in Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184, to arise out of the implied promise of the stockholders, and not to be in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture.

34 L. R. A.

A complaint by a creditor of a foreign corporation against a stockholder, alleging that defendant is such stockholder, and that under the laws of the state of incorporation he is liable, without averring that such law was in force at the time that the debt was contracted, and without showing that the liability is founded on a contract and not on a special provision in the nature of a penalty, is held to be insufficient to create a cause of action. Winter v. Baker, 50 Barb. 422, S. C. Patterson v. Baker, 34 How. Pr. 180.

The stockholders' liability to be enforced in Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. Rep. 342, was under a statute making all stockholders liable to an amount equal to their stock until the whole of the capital stock is paid in and a certificate thereof filed. This statute is held not to be penal. It did not appear whether the actual default was in the shareholders for nonpayment of capital, or in the officers who had not certified the payment.

So, where the failure to file such a certificate was averred, as the ground of liability without (as it seems) averring nonpayment by the shareholders, it was held that the individual liability of stockholders provided for by the New York act of 1848 making them liable until the whole amount of cap-amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder, and such other means as shall be provided by law." it is apparent legislation was contemplated as necessary to provide a means of enforcing the liability and determining the manner by which "such other means as shall be provided by law" should be made effectual as securing dues from corporations. That provision seemed to impose on the legislature the duty of securing dues from corporations, but limited the power and discretion of that body as to the extent to which it could make stockholders liable. It is only in exceptional cases that constitutional provisions enforce themselves. Usually they must be supplemented by legislation, to become operative. The intention of the instrument must ordinarily prevail, and in its ascertainment we must look at the consequences of a particular construction. Constitutional provisions, like statutes and private instruments, must be construed, if possible, so as to give effect and some force to each of their provisions. By legal intentment each and every clause has been inserted for some purpose which, when rightly understood, may have some practical result. There may, in construction, be transposition of sections, paragraphs, and sentences, the words may be restricted or enlarged; but it is unauthorized to take a part of a paragraph or section and construe that without reference to another part of the same paragraph or sentence. Where it is apparent that a particular provision of the organic law shall go into immediate effect without ancillary legislation, and this can be determined by giving full force and effect to all its clauses relating to the same subject, and the language is free from ambiguity, then it becomes the imperative duty of judicial tribunals to declare it self-executing; and where the provision is unambiguous, and the purpose of the provision would be frustrated unless it be given immediate effect, it will be held self-executing.

In determining the purpose of this provision of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, it is obvious the central idea and purpose were the protection of creditors or corporations other, than railroads, or those designated as religious or charitable corporations. To secure this, a liability was declared against stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by such stockholders, "and such other means as shall be provided by law." If this provision is to be treated and construed as self-operating, then the clause, "and such other means as may be provided by law," must be rejected as meaningless and held without force or effect. The creditor must be confined to the security of the individual liability of stockholders to an amount equal to the stock owned by such stockholders. In the attempt to give construction to this clause of the Constitution of the state of Kansas in the absence of legislation, we are confronted with a serious difficulty and much ambiguity. What stockholders are liable for dues to corporations? When are they liable? Is it the holder of the stock at the time the indebtedness is created, or at the time the indebtedness became due, or at the time suit is instituted to recover the dues owing by the corporation? All these questions arise in each case, and will not down without an answer. The instrument itself gives no light to determine these questions. Different tribunals of that state would doubtless be in a maze of doubt on attempting to answer the questions, and doubtless would reach different conclusions. To treat the provision as self-operating would do violence to two leading principles of construction: by rejecting a clause of the instrument and giving it no force and effect; and holding an ambiguous clause self-executing when that clause is of the most doubtful construction. It is apparent from a consideration of the provision itself, legislation was contemplated as necessary to carry it into effect and enable the remedy to be applied and give the intended security to the creditor, and the clause cannot be treated or construed as self-operative. May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101; Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; Morley v. Thayer, 8 Fed. Rep. 737; Fuss v. Spaunhorst, ital stock was paid in and a certificate to that effect filed is not in the nature of a penalty, but is founded upon a contract between the stockholders and the creditors of the company, and may be enforced in any court sitting beyond the limits of the state, if it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties. Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966. To the same effect, see Flash v. Conn, 15 Fla. 428, 28 Am. Rep. 721.

But a liability of stockholders of a foreign corporation which results from the failure of officers to make and file a certificate of the fact that the stock is fully paid, where it appears that such payment had in fact been made, is treated in Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea, 40, as a forfeiture or penalty which cannot be enforced in another state.

So, in Bayles v. Brown, 40 Fed. Rep. 8, stockholders' liability under a state statute making them jointly and severally liable for all debts and contracts of the company until the whole amount of capital stock has been paid in and a certificate thereof filed, is held to be contractual; but the liability of stockholders under another provision of the statute making them jointly and severally liable for debts in case they fail to file an annual certificate is held to be penal, and therefore not enforceable in a suit against foreign stockholders in a Federal court sitting in another state.

In regard to the liability of stockholders in Kansas corporations, it is said by Mitchell, J., in CUSHING v. PEROT, in writing the opinion of the court: "My individual opinion is that, by the weight both of reason and authority, the liability created by it is contractual, and should be enforced by any court having jurisdiction of the parties." But he adds that for reasons mentioned the court is not required to enter into the discussion of that question.

While it is expressly declared that the cause of action is not for a penalty, it is said in MARSHALL v. SHERMAN, in refusing to sustain an action at law in New York against stockholders of a Kansas corporation, that the action belongs to a class of cases in which there is no obligation, under any well-recognized principle of the law of comity, to enforce a claim founded upon such a statute.

In assumption for money loaned, where defendants plead nonassumpsit and a special plea that the loan was to a corporation of another state in which they were stockholders, a replication attempting to hold them individually liable as stockholders under the laws of the state of incorporation because the full amount of stock had not been paid for, a certifi-

67 Mo. 256; French v. Teaschemaker, 24 Cal. 518; Larrabee v. Baldwin, 85 Cal. 156; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, post, 757.

In the case last cited the identical provision of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, and the legislation thereunder, were before that court for consideration, and the provision of the Constitution was held not self-operating, and it was also held the special remedies provided by the legislature of the state of Kansas could not be applied in another jurisdiction, but when resort was had to the courts of another state, the remedy there provided and the practice and procedure of its courts must be resorted to. That case is directly in point on the question presented in this record. We are referred to no case in which the provision has been held self-executing by the highest court in that state, and in the absence of such decision by such court any other method of interpretation would do violence to recognized rules of construction adopted by this court. Where the courts of that state have not construed the provisions of their Constitution, when the question is presented to us we have the right to adopt our own methods of construction.

The legislature of the state of Kansas has not adopted any statute declaratory of the question as to the extent of the security of dues from corporations, and as to the time a stockholder's liability attaches with reference to the time of contracting the indebtedness,—whether the time is when the debt became due, or when suit is brought by the creditor. The legislature of that state, by such legislation as has been enacted, has only attempted to declare the remedy, and has adopted two statutory provisions, the first of which is as follows: "If any corporation created under any statute of the state of Kansas, except railroad and charitable or religious corporations, be dissolved leaving debts unpaid, suits may be brought against any person or persons who were stockholders at the time of such dissolution, without joining the corporation in such suit, and if judgment be rendered and execution satisfied, the defendant or defendants may sue all who were stockholders at the time of the dissolution for the recovery of the portion of such debt for which they were liable, and the execution upon the judgment shall direct the collection to be made from the property of such stockholders, respectively; and if any number of the stockholders, defendants in the case, shall not have property enough to satisfy his or their portion of the execution, then the amount of the deficiency shall be divided equally among all the remaining stockholders and collections made accordingly, deducting from the amount a sum in proportion to the amount owned by the plaintiff at the time the corporation dissolved." And the other of said statutes reads thus: "If any execution shall have been issued against the property or effects of a corporation, except a railway or a religious or charitable corporation, and there cannot be found any property whereon to levy such execution, then execution may be issued against any of the stockholders, to an extent equal in amount to the amount of stock by him or her owned, together with any amount unpaid thereon; but no execution shall issue against any stockholder except upon an order of the court in which the action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after reasonable notice in writing to the person or persons sought to be charged; and upon such motion such court may order execution to issue accordingly, or the plaintiff in the execution may proceed by action to charge the stockholders with the amount of his judgment."

In determining the construction of these provisions of the statute of the state of Kansas, and considering the remedies provided, and bearing in mind there is neither a constitutional nor statutory liability effectively declared in that state, we must construe these statutes, with reference to the remedy, in the light of such rules and upon such principles as the courts of this state apply in the construction of such enactments. The remedy provided by the 2d clause of the 1st section quoted, and cate of the fact filed was held bad as an entire departure from the declaration, and in reaching this conclusion it is said that the personal liability of stockholders is a creature of statute. Salt Lake City Nat. Bank v. Hendrickson, 40 N. J. L. 52.

The liability of stockholders of a corporation for debts due to laborers, servants, etc., under a provision of the statutes of New York in which the corporation was formed, seems to be regarded as penal, so that it cannot be enforced in Massachusetts against stockholders of a New York corporation, although it is carrying on business in Massachusetts, but the remedy is treated as a part of the statute system of another state incapable of execution alieno foro. Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157.

But a declaration against stockholders of a foreign corporation averring that their liability is contractual under the statutes which govern it is held good against demurrer in Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414.

Cases as to the statutory liability of the officers of a corporation for its debts when they sign and record a false certificate of the amount of its capital stock, such as Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, Reversing 70 Md. 191, 2 L. R. A. 779, are clearly distinguishable from those relating to stockholders, and it is not the intent to include them here.

3. Liability absolute or distinct from statutory remedy.

It has been laid down as a general rule on the subject that if the legislature creating a foreign corporation has declared that stockholders shall be individually liable, and pointed out no mode in which that liability may be made available, such liability may be enforced in another state. RUSSELL v. PACIFIC R. CO.; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119.

There is no case which directly denies this rule, while its correctness is assumed or implied in nearly all the cases on this subject, yet it may be doubted whether on this point the case of Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119, is not impliedly overruled, without mentioning it, by MARSHALL v. SHERMAN. As to this, see further, infra.

A complaint alleging that defendants are stockholders in a corporation created by another state under the laws of which they are individually responsible for its debts to the amount of their stock was held sufficient on demurrer in Perkins v. Church, 31 Barb. 84, to make them liable to the plaintiff as a creditor of the corporation without by the 2d section of the above-quoted legislation, is a remedy unknown to the common law, and it is a remedy existing only by force of the statute of the state of Kansas. The principle is uniformly recognized that the relation of a stockholder to the corporation is determined by the laws of the state of the creation of the corporate body, and where the law of the domicile of the corporation creates a special remedy that remedy cannot be enforced except within the jurisdiction of the domicile of the artificial body. Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233; Morgan v. Neville, 74 Pa. 52; Waldron v. Ritchings, 3 Daly, 288; Siegel v. Robinson, 56 Pa. 19, 98 Am. Dec. 775; Ludlow v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. 95; Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 208, 13 L. R. A. 56; Marshall v. Sherman, supra.

In this case the right to recover rests on the statute of the state of Kansas alone, as the constitutional provision is not self-enforceable, and the liability is only attempted to be made resultant from legislation providing a special remedy and by the construction placed on that legislation by the courts of that state. The statutes of the state of Kansas have no force and effect in another state, and the enforcement of a remedy in this action in this state depends upon our express or tacit assent, which is usually expressed as the comity between states. The extent to which this principle of comity may proceed is subject to qualifications and restrictions which, in almost all cases, are to be determined by the particular sovereignty. A remedy special to a particular foreign state is not, by any principle of comity, enforceable here, and must be applied within the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation. Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472; Young v. Farwell, 139 Ill. 326; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119.

Under the entire provisions of the statutes quoted, it becomes of material importance to inquire whether the proposed remedy therein provided is enforceable here. This presents a question of much interest and importance. It is of the highest moment that full faith and credit be given by each state to the judicial proceedings of sister states. This may be done without giving extraterritorial effect to the legislation of sister states. Each state determines its method of procedure in its courts, and their jurisdictions. In this there is neither injustice nor hostility to a sister state. But it would be hostile to every principle of sovereignty to be compelled to import into this state the peculiar remedies and various special methods of procedure invented by the legislation of the various states. This principle has been generally recognized. Young v. Farwell, supra; Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196; May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 Va. 184; Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; Peck v. Miller, 39 Mich. 594; Barrick v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 181; Smith v. Huckabee, 58 Ala. 191; Terry v. Little, 101 U.

any allegation that the corporation was insolvent or that the remedies against it had been exhausted. The theory of this decision seems to be that the complaint alleged an unlimited and unconditional liability of the stockholders to the amount of their stock for any debts of the corporation.

A provision of an Illinois statute that stockholders of a bank shall be individually responsible for an amount equal to the amount of stock held by them respectively whenever default shall be made in the payment of any debt or liability contracted by the corporation, and that such liability shall continue until three months after an assignment on publication of notice thereof, is held to create a liability which can be enforced against a Missouri stockholder by an action in Missouri. Hodgson v. Cheever, 8 Mo. App. 318.

The Minnesota statute making stockholders of a bank liable for its debts while they are stockholders, and for one year thereafter to double the amount of their stock, was enforced in Connecticut in the case of Paine v. Stewart, 38 Conn. 518, on the ground that the liability is independent and absolute, and does not wait for the insolvency of the company before it accrues, although the statute further provides that the stockholders' property cannot be levied upon while corporate property can be found with which to satisfy the claim.

Liability of a stockholder in a California corporation under the laws of that state being personal and individual for such proportion of the debts of the corporation as his stock bears to the whole subscribed capital stock and enforceable by any creditor in a several action, it is held that such liability may be enforced against a stockholder in Oregon on the ground that his liability is primary and original and in no way dependent or contingent upon a recovery against the corporation and enforceable in an ordinary action at law. Aldrich v. Anchor Coal & D. Co. 24 Or. 22.
84 L. R. A.

The right to recover against stockholders of a foreign corporation for debts due to laborers for services under a provision of the statute of incorporation making them liable for such debts is regarded as a liability which can be enforced in another state, in Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea. 40; but the statute governing the case is there construed to require a prior judgment and return of execution unsatisfied.

In a suit against stockholders of a foreign corporation organized to carry on business in the place where the suit was brought an allegation on information and belief that stockholders by the laws of the state of incorporation were liable for all debts due from the company to its laborers was held insufficient in a suit by a laborer, where there was nothing to show what kind of a remedy was provided in the state of incorporation. The court said: "I do not think comity requires us, in the exercise of a judicial discretion, to give effect to the foreign statutes here. Being without information as to the remedy afforded in Ohio, it might happen that we should afford a remedy here which is denied to persons in that jurisdiction." Rice v. Merrimack Hosiery Co. 56 N. H. 129.

As to a claim that the liability was entirely unknown to the common law, and therefore no action would lie outside of the state in which it was created, the court refused to make a decision. Ibid.

The Massachusetts court, in Halsey v. McLean, 15 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157, refused to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders in a New York corporation to one who had worked for it as a quarry superintendent, on the ground, among others, that liability of stockholders to laborers for the corporation could be enforced only in New York. This case therefore seems not to recognize the general doctrine on which most of the above cases are based, but the decision was based also on other grounds, such as the failure to bring an action

S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, 146 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 1070.

This proceeding in our courts is, in brief, an application to the courts of this state for a recognition of a special remedy provided by the statutes of another state, on the ground of comity, which would be in contradiction of methods of procedure and practice adopted under our judicial remedies in such cases, and would work an injustice toward our own citizens. The Kansas statute gives a creditor of a corporation certain remedies against a stockholder, and gives such stockholder certain rights against other stockholders for contributions, etc. By the first clause of the quoted statute it at first blush seems to recognize that an action at law against an individual stockholder may be had without the jurisdiction of the courts of Kansas. It does not, in the same action, secure the rights of the creditor, the corporation, and the stockholder. It recognizes the right of the stockholder to bring in other stockholders for contribution in the same proceeding, and is therefore a special remedy.

The important question to be here determined is, whether the courts of this state will, in any form, take jurisdiction of a question arising as to the respective relations of creditors and stockholders of a corporation of another state, where a special remedy is provided by statute, before there is a determination by the courts of such state of the just proportion of the corporate indebtedness to be borne by solvent stockholders of such corporation. No decree of the courts of this state could result in taking an account and dissolving a corporation of another state. It is for the courts of that state to enter a decree stating the account, winding up the affairs of the corporation, and determining the relation of the stockholders, creditors, and corporation to each other. When that question has been determined by the courts of that state, then, if it becomes necessary, the creditors, stockholders, and the corporation, or its representative, may, as against stockholders who are domiciled here, appeal to the courts of this state, and have, as against such domiciled stockholders, adequate relief. Young v. Farwell, supra, and cases cited; Fowler v. Lamson, supra.

It only, then, becomes necessary to determine whether such determination has been had by the courts of Kansas. This plaintiff had become a creditor of the Edwards County Bank, in which the defendant was a stockholder, which bank was dissolved and a receiver appointed therefor. The plaintiff brought suit against the bank and receiver and recovered a judgment, on which execution was issued and was returned no property found. This suit was then instituted. Here the relations to each other of the various creditors, stockholders, and corporation had not been determined. Yet the supreme court of that state has held, under the foregoing statutes a stockholder is individually liable to creditors of the corporation to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by him. Hentig v. James, 22 Kan. 326; Howell v. Mangelsdorf, 38 Kan. 194; Valley Bank & Sav. Inst. v. Ladies' Cong. Sewing Soc. 28 Kan. 428; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes against the corporation within the time required by New York statutes.

4. Constitutional Liability.

The question whether or not the provision of the Kansas Constitution declaring that "dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders and an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder and such other means as shall be provided by law" is self-executing, has been considered in a number of cases. In Flower v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472, the court said the decisions of the supreme court of Kansas must be first looked to, and their ruling would be adopted if they had made any upon the subject, and afterwards said: "While it is, perhaps, true that the supreme court of Kansas has not decided, in terms, that such constitutional provision is self-executing, it is fully recognized, and in effect held, that stockholders of corporations organized under the Constitution and foregoing statutes of that state are individually liable to creditors of such corporations to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each of them."

But that the Kansas Constitution is not self-executing in this matter is directly decided in TUTTLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, and MARSHALL v. SHERMAN.

The provision of the Ohio Constitution that "dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the stockholders and other means as may be prescribed by law, but in all cases each stockholder shall be liable over and above the stock by him or her owned, and any amount unpaid thereon, to a further sum, at least equal in amount to such stock," is not self-executing so as to create a right of action in another state against a stockholder in an Ohio corporation. Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 8.

34 L. R. A.

A plaintiff basing his action against a stockholder in a foreign corporation upon a statutory liability by allegations in his complaint is bound thereby, and cannot claim that the Constitution of the state creates such liability. Ibid.

A provision of the Michigan Constitution that "the stockholders of all corporations and joint-stock associations shall be individually liable for all labor performed for such corporation or association," being held by the courts of that state to create a collateral and not a primary liability which cannot be enforced without the aid of statutes, will not create a right of action in another state against a stockholder of a Michigan corporation. May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101.

5. Exclusiveness of statutory remedy provided in state of incorporation.

It is quite generally agreed that when a charter makes stockholders liable only to an amount equal to their stock upon prescribed conditions and by specific process the remedy of the creditor must be sought according to the terms and by the means provided by the charter, and it is necessarily confined to the state of incorporation, and cannot be enforced by a foreign tribunal. Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119.

"The statutory remedy is, of course, not available in this state," said the court in Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429, in speaking of the Missouri statute, which provides for execution against a stockholder after judgment and unsatisfied execution against the corporation.

Under a charter which declares that no one but citizens of a state shall own stock, and prescribes the conditions of their liability, with a mode of enforcing it by execution upon a judgment against the corporation, and a provision to secure equity between the stockholders, with a ratable contribu-

Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415. Each of these cases, however, was with reference to the special remedies provided by that state. Such special remedies for the enforcement of the liability thereunder can only be resorted to within the jurisdiction of that state, and can have no effect here. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 80 L. ed. 825; Fowler v. Lamson, supra.

Under § 14, chapter 83, of the laws of Kansas relating to insurance companies, this constitutional provision was attempted to be enacted into a statute, and in Grund v. Tucker, 5 Kan. 70, the supreme court of that state substantially held, with reference to that provision, that where a statute confers a right and prescribes a remedy, that remedy only can be pursued; and further held the stockholder was primarily liable, and if he ought to have contribution he may bring the other stockholders before the court in the same proceeding. The very statement of this proposition is sufficient to show such remedy could not be applied, under the practice in this state, in an action at law. This suit at law cannot be maintained in the courts of this state under the facts appearing in the record.

The judgments of the Appellate Court for the Third District, and of the Circuit Court of McLean County, must each be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Baker, J., dissenting:

I am unable to concur in this decision. I think the judgments of the circuit and appellate courts should be affirmed. The provision in the Constitution of the state of Kansas, that "dues from a corporation shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder," as interpreted by the legislature and by the supreme court of that state, is self-executing, and that interpretation should be adopted and followed. While the liability is statutory, it is one which arises upon the contract of subscription, and an action to enforce it is transitory. The liability is not to the corporation, nor to the creditors of the corporation as a class, but to each individual creditor as security for "dues from the corporation." It is not a joint liability of the stockholders, but a several liability of each stockholder. The rule is, that a liability arising out of contract, though created by a Constitution or statute, and such Constitution or statute providing no remedy, may be enforced by an appropriate common-law action in any court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties. The liability, though secondary to that of the corporation and in the nature of a guaranty, is at the same time an original and independent liability, that exists as between the stockholder in his individual capacity and the creditor in his individual capacity, and that is created by the contract of subscription. It is not a right or equity that must be worked out through the corporation itself, and therefore this case is not governed by the decisions in Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196; Young v. Farrell, 139 Ill. 326, and other like cases. The view I have taken is supported by Howell v. Mangelsdorf, 33 Kan.

tion from all, a stockholder of that state cannot be sued in another state by an independent action, since he would not be liable to an independent action in his own state where the corporation exists. Lowry v. Inman, supra.

As the stockholders' liability for unpaid subscriptions provided by Ill. act of 1871-72, p. 299, § 8, is held not to be a general contract liability, but is to be enforced by the remedy corresponding to garnishment provided in that statute, it is held in RUSSELL v. PACIFIC R. Co. that it cannot be enforced in another state.

A remedy provided by a statute of a state in which a corporation is created consisting of a joint action against all the holders or owners of the stock of the corporation for the benefit of all the creditors and against all persons liable as stockholders (Ohio Rev. Stat. § 8260) precludes an independent action in that state against one stockholder alone, and therefore such an action cannot be maintained against one stockholder of the corporation in another state. Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 8.

So it is held in Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co., 25 W. Va. 184, that Ohio Rev. Stat. § 8260, giving a joint action against stockholders and the corporation for the benefit of all the creditors, and against all persons liable as stockholders, provides the exclusive remedy, and that this could be enforced only in Ohio. Consequently, it is held that a bill in equity to determine the extent of the individual liability of stockholders of an Ohio corporation could not be sustained in the courts of West Virginia.

A bill to enforce a stockholder's liability under the Constitution and statutes of Missouri was brought in the circuit court of the United States in Massachusetts in the case of Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. Rep. 737, and was dismissed. But the dismissal was on the ground that the Missouri statute provided a particular remedy which was at law, and therefore that a suit in equity could not lie. The court held that the remedy provided by statute was exclusive. See further, infra, II. 14, as to remedies in Federal courts.

The right of an individual creditor of an insolvent corporation to sue any stockholder for the amount of the par value of his stock, given by 1 Wag. Stat. (Mo.) chap. 37, art. 1, § 22, which provides a remedy in equity for the stockholder to secure contribution and indemnity from other stockholders, may be enforced against a stockholder in another state, since the Missouri courts have construed the statute as giving a right to sue a stockholder by suit in the nature of an action at common law. But it was conceded in this case that the remedy under § 18 of the same statute, by execution against stockholders on a judgment against the corporation, could not be enforced outside of the state. St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, 61 Hun, 45.

A remedy against stockholders of a corporation, provided by the Michigan statutes by suit against the stockholders and corporation jointly, but providing that no levy upon the property of stockholders shall be made until the property of the corporation has been exhausted, with a further provision that personal actions against corporations must be brought in a certain county, is exclusive of all other remedies, and cannot be enforced in another state. May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101.

The remedies provided by Kansas statutes against stockholders, which are, first, by way of execution against stockholders on judgments against the corporation after execution against it returned unsatisfied, and second, a suit against any of the stockholders without joining the corporation, with a provision giving the stockholder

194; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 99; Pol-lard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376; Flash v. Conn. 109 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 966; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 489; Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 25 L. ed. 544; Wincock v. Tur-pin, 96 Ill. 183; Schalucky v. Field, 124 Ill. 617; Schertz v. First Nat. Bank, 47 Ill. App. 124, and numerous other authorities.

I am authorized by Justices Magruder and Cartwright to say that they concur in the views I have expressed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Edward MARSHALL, Rept.,

v.

George R. SHERMAN, Appt.

(148 N. Y. 2.)

1. A constitutional provision that debts from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders and such other means as shall be provided by law is not self-executing.
2. The statutory liability of stockholders in foreign corporations cannot be enforced except at the domicile of the corporation when the law of the domicile provides the remedy.
3. Particular provisions of a statute providing for the individual liability of stockholders in a foreign corporation will not be detached and given effect outside of the domicile of the corporation, if it would be impossible to enforce all the provisions of the statute there, and its whole scope indicates that it was intended to be enforced only where passed.

4. The statutory liability of a stockholder in an insolvent bank is not primary and contractual so as to be enforceable in any jurisdiction where the stockholder may be found.

5. If, under any circumstances, an action to enforce a statutory liability against a stockholder of a foreign corporation could be enforced outside of the state of its creation, it must be by such modes of procedure as like liabilities created by the state where the suit is brought are enforced against its citizens.

(December 19, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a judgment of a sued a special remedy against other stockholders, are considered in Fowler v. Lamson, 148 Ill. 472, in which it is held that these special remedies having been provided they alone can be pursued to enforce the stockholders' liability.

This decision is followed in TUTTLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, in which it is said that the Kansas statute recognizes the right of the stockholder who is sued to bring in other stockholders for contribution in the same proceeding and is therefore a special remedy.

It is said in TUTTLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC that the proper proceeding in such case is for the courts of the state in which a corporation existed to state an account, wind up its affairs, and determine the relation of the stockholders, creditor, and corporation to each other before attempting to enforce the liability of stockholders in other states, and said that when that had been done, "if it becomes necessary, or its representative, may, as against stockholders who are domiciled here, appeal to the courts of this state, and have, as against such domiciled stockholders, adequate relief."

So, a resident of another state was not allowed to maintain an action in Massachusetts against a resident of a third state to establish the latter's liability as a stockholder for a debt of a foreign corporation which had no place of business in the state, but was organized under the laws of Kansas, which provide for a special and limited liability on the part of a stockholder when no judicial proceedings have been had in Kansas to establish the liability of the stockholder. Bank of North America v. Bindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 966. The court limits the decision to the facts of that particular case, but calls attention to the difficulty of enforcing a liability of this nature in other states than that where the corporation is established in such a way as to secure substantial justice.

So, an action at law will not lie if the remedy prescribed in the state of incorporation is by suit in equity. Erickson v. Nesmith, 15 Gray, 221; Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864.

6. Conditions prescribed by statutes in state of incorporation.

The conditions of stockholder's liability prescribed by the statutes of a state which creates a corporation are properly regarded as essential, and the liability arises only when those conditions are met. So any prescribed conditions of the remedy in that state are usually regarded as conditions precedent to an enforcement of the remedy in any jurisdiction.

Thus, failure to bring action against the corporation within the time required by the statutes of the state in which it is created in order to give a remedy against the stockholders will be fatal to an action against such stockholders in another state, even if the courts of the latter state would otherwise assume jurisdiction to administer the remedy conferred by a statute of another state, as comity would not require nor justice permit that it should be administered there in a case in which by plaintiff's own neglect his remedy had ceased to exist in the state of incorporation. Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 483, 90 Am. Dec. 157.

A provision in the statutes of a state in which a corporation is organized that stockholders cannot be held personally liable while there is corporate property which can be found to satisfy corporate debts, and that a judgment against the corporation and execution thereon must precede recovery against the stockholder, will make it necessary to exhaust the remedies against the corporation before suit can be brought against the stockholder

Special Term for Clinton County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to enforce defendant's alleged statutory liability for the debts of a corporation of which he was a stockholder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McLaughlin & Rowe, for appellant:

The defendant is liable, if at all, solely by reason of the provisions of the Constitution and the statutes of the state of Kansas set forth in the complaint.

Our courts do not take judicial notice of the Constitution or statutes of another state.

Salt Lake City Nat. Bank v. Hendrickson, 40 N. J. L. 52; Seymour v. Sturges, 26 N. Y. 184; Deberiois v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 877, 50 Am. Rep. 688; Pagan v. Strong, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 438; Throop v. Hatch, 3 Abb. Pr. 23.

The statute which imposes upon the stockholders of a corporation a personal liability for the corporate debts must be strictly construed.

Chase v. Lord, 77 N. Y. 1; Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 16.

The provision of the Constitution of the state of Kansas set out in the complaint does not create any liability against the defendant.

Until this provision of the Constitution is supplemented by a statute, it is inoperative.

Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. Rep. 787; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184; Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; French v. Techemaker, 24 Cal. 518; Fuss v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 256; May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101; Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 8.

This action cannot be maintained in the courts of this state because the remedy afforded by the statutes pleaded is purely statutory, and can be availed of only within the state of Kansas.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 8d ed. chap. 12; Barnes v. Wheaton, supra; Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 208, 18 L. R. A. 56; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Christensen v. Ene, 106 N. Y. 103, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Fourth Nat Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; May v. Black, Morley v. Thayer, and Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. supra; Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196; Pollard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 526, 23 L. ed. 878; Erickson v. NeSmith, 4 Allen, 283; Mann v. Pentz, 3 N. Y. 415; Griffith v. Mangam, 78 N. Y. 611.

The action cannot be maintained because there is manifest defect of parties defendant. The presence of all of the stockholders of the Miltonvale State Bank are necessary in order to bring the case within the requirements of the statutes pleaded.

The action cannot be maintained because there is no allegation in the complaint that judgment has been obtained and execution issued against the Miltonvale State Bank in this state, or that the receiver has not sufficient property to pay the claim in full.

Walser v. Seigman, 13 Fed. Rep. 415; National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, 146 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 1070; Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 342; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 223; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 812, 10 L. ed. 177.

in another state. Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643.

So, a provision of a Michigan statute that no suit shall be brought against any stockholder for any debt of the company until judgment against the corporation and execution thereon unsatisfied in whole or in part makes the recovery of such judgment and the issue of such execution in the state of Michigan a condition precedent to any action against the stockholder in another state. Viele v. Wells, 9 Abb. N. C. 277.

Yet proof of a judgment and unsatisfied execution against a foreign corporation is held, in Palme v. Stewart, 33 Conn. 516, to be unnecessary to precede an action against stockholders where it appears that the corporation had become insolvent and gone into the hands of a receiver, although the statute of the state of its incorporation provides that stockholders' property cannot be levied upon as long as corporate property can be found to satisfy the claim.

7. Action at law.

It has been often held that an action at law will lie to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders of a corporation created by the laws of another state if that is a general and absolute liability enforceable in an ordinary action at law in the state of incorporation. St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun, 45; Lowry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Perkins v. Church, 31 Barb. 84; Hodgson v. Cheever, 8 Mo. App. 318; Paine v. Stewart, 33 Conn. 516; Aldrich v. Anchor Coal & D. Co. 24 Or. 82; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414.

An action at law is declared to be the proper remedy for enforcing the liability of a Missouri stockholder in a Kansas corporation to its creditors. Bagley v. Tyler, 43 Mo. App. 195. But in this case it is said that the facts were set out so as to constitute a good petition, whether in law or equity, and the case was tried, by consent of parties, by a judge who was at all events the proper tribunal to settle the controversy.

But it is decided in TUTTLE v. NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC, that an action at law cannot be maintained in Illinois against a stockholder of a Kansas corporation.

The same is held in New York as to actions at law against stockholders of Kansas corporations in that state. MARSHALL v. SHERMAN.

In denying the right to maintain an action at law against stockholders of a Kansas corporation in New York state, it is said in MARSHALL v. SHERMAN: "The stockholders of this Kansas bank are not equitably liable for any greater sum than may be necessary to discharge the debts after the corporate property has been applied. All of them that are solvent should contribute in proportion to the amount of their holdings of stock. We are not informed by the complaint how many stockholders there are, or even the amount of capital stock. Nor are we informed whether any of the stockholders are insolvent. It is quite evident, therefore, that the equitable proportion of the corporate debts which this defendant should pay cannot be ascertained or determined in this action."

There does not seem to be any material difference between the Missouri statute, the liability under which is enforced in St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, supra, and the Kansas statute, the liability under which is held not to be enforceable in MARSHALL v. SHERMAN. While it may be too much to say that the latter case impliedly overrules the former, as well as Lowry v. Inman, and Perkins v. Church, supra, without mentioning that fact, such seems to be the result.

When the laws of the state of incorporation provided that the remedy against a stockholder in such An action at law cannot be maintained by a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation organized under the statutes of Kansas against a single stockholder to recover the personal liability therein provided.

Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; Pollard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376; Hornor v. Henning, 98 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879; Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 520, 27 L. ed. 266; Stone v. Chisolm, 113 U. S. 302, 28 L. ed. 991; Griffith v. Mangam, 73 N. Y. 611; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Mann v. Pentz, 3 N. Y. 416; Third Nat. Bank v. Gregory, N. Y. L. J. Dec. 8, 1890; Morgan v. New York & A. R. Co. 10 Paige, 290, 40 Am. Dec. 244; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56; Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184; Coleman v. White, 14 Wis. 701, 80 Am. Dec. 797; Smith v. Huckabee, 53 Ala. 191; Friend v. Powers, 93 Ala. 114; Barrick v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 181; Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 548; National German-American Bank v. St. Anthony Park N. R. E. Improv. Co. 61 Minn. 359; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 222; Thompson, Corp. §§ 8431, 8432.

Messrs. Caldwell & Ellis and Frank N. Hagar, with Messrs. Riley & Cantwell, for respondent:

This action, being a legal action, must be brought against a single stockholder, and the courts of Kansas have so held.

Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44

Kan. 415; Valley Bank & Sav. Inst. v. Ladies' Cong. Sewing Soc. 28 Kan. 423; Hentig v. James, 23 Kan. 326; Howell v. Manglesdorf, 33 Kan. 194; Weeks v. Love, 50 N. Y. 568; Wheeler v. Millar, 90 N. Y. 353; Mathes v. Neidig, 73 N. Y. 100; Farnsworth v. Wood, 91 N. Y. 308; Mason v. New York Silk Mfg. Co. 27 Hun, 807; Billings v. Trask, 30 Hun, 814; Gibbs v. Davis, 27 Fla. 581; Aldrich v. Anchor Coal & D. Co. 24 Or. 32; Perry v. Turner, 55 Mo. 418; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 8d ed. § 211.

Judgment against the Miltonvale State Bank in this state is not necessary.

Walton v. Coe, 110 N. Y. 109; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 219; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 888; Shellington v. Howland, 53 N. Y. 371; Hardman v. Sage, 124 N. Y. 35; Hirshfield v. Bopp, 145 N. Y. 84; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 887; Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 842.

In no respect is a judgment against the corporation necessary, either in Kansas or elsewhere.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 888; National Park Bank v. Remsen, 23 Jones & S. 144.

The statutes as to the stockholder's liability, set forth in the complaint upon which this action is based, have, as to the defendant's liability in similar suits, been uniformly sustained by the supreme and highest court of the state of Kansas.

Valley Bank & Sav. Inst. v. Ladies' Cong. Sewing Soc. 28 Kan. 423; Hentig v. James, 23 Kan. 326; Howell v. Manglesdorf, 33 Kan. 194; Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 415.

case shall be by bill in chancery and not otherwise an action at law to enforce the personal liability of a stockholder of a foreign corporation for its debt cannot be maintained because the remedy prescribed by the law of the state of incorporation is exclusive. As to this see supra, II. c. 5.

As to actions at law in Federal courts to enforce liabilities of this kind see infra, II. d. 8. It will be seen that the Federal court sitting in New York sustains an action such as that which the New York court of appeals refused to sustain.

8. Suit in equity.

The right of the creditor of a foreign corporation to sue in equity to reach unpaid stock subscriptions has been considered in a preceding division (supra, II. b).

As to a bill to reach the stockholder's statutory liability and not his debt to the corporation for stock, the decisions are not very numerous.

It is expressly decided in Massachusetts that a bill in equity cannot be maintained to enforce against stockholders in that state a statutory liability for the debt of a foreign corporation which is not a party and which has no assets in the state, although in the state in which the corporation was created the statutes provided for a bill in equity to enforce the liability of stockholders. Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233.

Stockholders of a bank incorporated in another state under a statute which makes them liable for bills or notes issued by it in proportion to the amount of their stock were sued in Johnston v. South Western Railroad Bank, 3 Strobb. Eq. 263, in equity, and the complainant failed because he was held not to be a bill holder. It seems to have been assumed that the remedy was a proper one if the complainant had been entitled to recover as a bill holder.

34 L. R. A.

A bill in equity against a South Carolina stockholder of a New York corporation who by the laws of New York was liable for the amount of stock held for debts of the company was maintained in Sackett's Harbor Bank v. Blake, 3 Rich. Eq. 225, where it was averred that the only other stockholders known to the complainant had already paid the full amount for which they were liable. But in this case the stockholder was a married woman and her estate was in the hands of trustees under a marriage settlement which could only be reached by proceedings in equity.

Jurisdiction is assumed as a matter of course in a proceeding in the nature of a creditors' bill by a judgment creditor of a corporation against its directors and stockholders to charge them in proportion to the amount of their stock with payment of the judgment, where property of the corporation consisting of vessels had been transferred to the defendants by an alleged sale without any payment to the corporation. The court said: "The action is in the nature of a creditors' bill to reach the property of the corporation, which is in the possession of the defendants, and liable for its debts." Hastings v. Drew, 76 N. Y. 9. This case is distinguished in Griffith v. Mangam, 73 N. Y. 611, from actions against stockholders as such on the ground that it seeks to enforce a liability which exists at common law and is not created by statute.

Almost identical with the case of Hastings v. Drew, supra, is that of Bartlett v. Drew, 67 N. Y. 587, in which the president of a foreign corporation against which an unsatisfied judgment existed was sued on the ground that he had received more than the amount of the judgment as the proceeds of steamboats belonging to the company which had been sold, and there was no property of the corporation in the state that could be taken on execution. The court said: "Defendant, Drew, is found

The construction placed upon the statutes of another state by the courts of that state is as a general rule controlling, and will be followed by the courts of this state.

St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun, 45; Molson's Bank v. Boardman, 47 Hun, 186; Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643.

The Constitution is enforceable as is a statute, and "differs from a statute in its paramount force in cases of conflict." It is generally construed the same as statutes.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, p. 711, notes 1 and 2, cases cited.

Only such provisions of the Constitution as simply empower the legislature, or which from their nature require some further act to make them definite, or prescribe a legislative remedy, are not self-executing.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 870; Willis v. Mabon, 48 Minn. 140, 16 L. R. A. 281 (1892); Dodge v. Minnesota P. State Roofing Co. 16 Minn. 378; Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; State, Clapp, v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 218, 8 L. R. A. 510; Mohr v. Minnesota Elevator Co. 40 Minn. 343; Arthur v. Willis, 44 Minn. 409; Densmore v. Shepard, 46 Minn. 54; State, Roberts, v. Weston, 4 Neb. 216; Thomas v. Owens, 4 Md. 189; Reynolds v. Taylor, 48 Ala. 420; Miller v. Marx, 55 Ala. 332; People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612.

Section 44 alone, without any constitutional provision at all, seems to be a sufficient basis for this action.

St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun, 45; Gibbs v. Davis, 27 Fla. 531.

This being an action at law and not in equity, rulings exclusive to cases in equity do not apply.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 892.

The Kansas statutes are enforceable in this state so as to maintain the present action.

Seymour v. Stuges, 26 N. Y. 134; Ex parte Van Riper, 20 Wend. 614; Drinkwater v. Portland Marine R. Co. 18 Me. 35; Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966; Windham President Inst. for Sav. v. Sprague, 43 Vt. 502; Pollard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376; Groce v. Hilt, 36 Me. 22; Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 36 Am. Rep. 643; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 220, 223, 353; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 376; Hodgson v. Cheever, 8 Mo. App. 818; Bagley v. Tyler, 48 Mo. App. 195; St. Louis Sav. Assn. v. O'Brien, 51 Hun, 45; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 103, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Lowry v. Luman, 46 N. Y. 119; Corning v. McCullough, 1 N. Y. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 287; Hathorn v. Calef, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 10, 17 L. ed. 776.

The statutes of Kansas do not provide a special and exclusive remedy.

Howell v. Mangledorf, 33 Kan. 199; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184.

The creditor has nothing whatever to do with the rights of the stockholders as between themselves.

Abbey v. W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. 44 Kan. 419.

That part of § 44 of the Kansas corporation act which relates to the right of stockholders.

to be in possession of assets of the dissolved or insolvent corporation more than sufficient to pay the plaintiff her demand, and the law requires that he should pay it."

But until he has exhausted his remedies at law against the corporation a mere creditor at large of a foreign corporation is denied the right to proceed against its stockholders, although the corporation has divided its property and capital among the stockholders, closed its operations, and gone out of existence by the expiration of its charter. Andrew v. Vanderbilt, 37 Hun, 483.

Where the principal stockholder of a foreign corporation which had become insolvent and had been dissolved by the court of the state in which it was organized was charged with having fraudulently abstracted the assets of the corporation, and it was alleged that the plaintiff had obtained a judgment and was the only creditor of the corporation, the court entertained an action by the creditor against such stockholder on the ground that the creditor had a lien on the assets for the payment of his debt. Tinkham v. Borst, 31 Barb. 407.

A bill charging fraud and misapplication of the assets of a foreign corporation seeking a discovery and account was maintained against the stockholders of the corporation as well as its directors and the corporation itself, in Bank of St. Marys v. St. John, 25 Ala. 566.

A bill in equity by the sole creditor of a corporation was sustained in Aultman's Appeal, 96 Pa. 506, against the corporation and its stockholders, where it was alleged that the property of the corporation had all been sold, and that the defendants constituted all the stockholders and resided within the jurisdiction and had been served with process, so that the court had a full grasp of the whole case.

In Woods v. Wicks, 7 Lea, 40, a bill in equity was entertained but without questioning the propriety of the remedy in equity to enforce statutory liability of stockholders.

A bill in equity to discover the names of the stockholders of a foreign corporation and the number of shares held by them was held, in Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86, to be maintainable in Massachusetts on the ground that all the officers reside in Massachusetts and have the books of the corporation there, so that the information cannot be obtained in the state of incorporation.

It will be seen that most of the cases in which a remedy in equity has been sustained involved something more than a mere statutory liability, as where the stockholders had received assets of the corporation.

Some cases deny the remedy in equity because of a different remedy at the domicile of the corporation.

Thus, a suit in equity against stockholders of a foreign corporation for a labor debt of the corporation will not lie where, by the laws of the place of incorporation, the only remedy against stockholders is under a statute providing for an action of assumpsit to be brought jointly against stockholders and corporation in a specified county of the state, and providing that execution shall not issue against stockholders until the property of the corporation has been exhausted. The fact that the corporation is insolvent and its property sold can make no difference with this result where the statute makes no such exception. May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101.

So, the attempt to enforce a judgment against a foreign corporation obtained at the domicile of non-resident stockholders by a suit in equity against them was unsuccessful in Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472, in which case it is said to be well settled that who are sued and judgment recovered against them and execution satisfied to sue and recover from their fellow stockholders, does not conflict in any way with the rights or remedies of sureties or guarantors against their co-sureties or co-guarantors for contribution.

Brandt, Suretyship, § 252; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 229; Beach, Priv. Corp. § 141; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 814; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 418; Judson v. Rossie Galena Co. 9 Paige, 603, 38 Am. Dec. 569.

It cannot be the law that because the statute of Kansas gives a stockholder a right to sue a fellow stockholder a creditor cannot go into another state to enforce the statutory liability against a stockholder.

Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 204; Knowlton v. Ackley, 8 Cush. 97; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 83; McDonough v. Phelps, 15 How. Pr. 872; Ex parte Van Riper, 20 Wend. 614; Tuttle v. National Bank of The Republic, 48 Ill. App. 481.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by a creditor of the Miltonvale State Bank, a corporation organized under the laws of Kansas for banking purposes, against the defendant, a stockholder, residing in this state. The questions in the case arise upon the defendant's demurrer as to the sufficiency of the complaint and the necessary parties to the action. The complaint avers that the bank was incorporated under the laws of Kansas on or about the 8th of July, 1886; that it continued to transact a banking business in that state until the 12th of July, 1891, when proceedings were instituted against it in the district court of the county of that state where it was located, which resulted in the appointment of a receiver to wind up its affairs, and that it has not since that date transacted any business, before the commencement of this action was dissolved, leaving debts unpaid; that since the 7th day of October, 1889, the defendant has been the owner of thirty shares of the capital stock of the bank, the par value of which is stated to be $3,000; that at the time of the appointment of the receiver the bank was indebted to the plaintiff, as a depositor, in the sum of $191.84. It is then stated that the plaintiff is the owner, by assignment or transfer, of the claims of fifteen other depositors to whom the bank was indebted at the time of the appointment of the receiver in various small sums, upon which, together with the claim held by the plaintiff in his own right, judgment was recovered in the courts of Kansas for the sum of $1,804 damages and $19.15 costs on the 5th of September, 1891; that the plaintiff caused execution to be issued upon this judgment against the property of the bank, which was returned unsatisfied; that the corporation is insolvent; and that $880.41 has since been paid to the plaintiff on this judgment by the receiver. Judgment against the defendant as a stockholder is demanded for the balance unpaid, with interest from the date of the rendition of the judgment. The complaint sets forth certain provisions of the Constitution of the state of Kansas, and the statutes of that state, which, it is claimed, impose a legal liaas special remedies had been provided by the laws of the state in which the corporation was created for the enforcement of the individual statutory liability of stockholders, they alone could be pursued to enforce that liability.

So, in Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184, the remedy prescribed by Ohio statutes was held to exclude a bill in equity to enforce the liability of stockholders in West Virginia.

As to remedies in Federal courts, see infra, II. d, 2.

d. Remedies in Federal courts.

1. In general.

Suits are entertained in Federal courts at the residence of stockholders to enforce their liability as stockholders of corporations in other states. Glenn v. Marbury, 145 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 790; Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 265; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, 145 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 1070, Affirming 42 Fed. Rep. 749; Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 25, 25 L. ed. 294; Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; Payson v. Withers, 5 Bias. 299; Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. Rep. 737; Walsen v. Seligman, 13 Fed. Rep. 415; Holmes v. Sherwood, 16 Fed. Rep. 725; Glenn v. Springs, 26 Fed. Rep. 494; Sayles v. Brown, 40 Fed. Rep. 8; Stuts v. Handley, 41 Fed. Rep. 531; Globe Rolling-Mill Co. v. Ballou, 42 Fed. Rep. 749; Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. Rep. 841; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 57 Fed. Rep. 279; McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754; RHODES v. UNITED STATES NAT. BANK.

A Federal court cannot be considered a foreign court in the state in which it is sitting, and therefore the right to enforce a statutory liability of stockholders in a corporation by suit in a Federal court in the state in which the corporation exists, when there are grounds of jurisdiction, such as diverse citizenship of parties, can hardly be questioned. Such suits have been maintained in numerous cases without questioning the jurisdiction, as in Hatch v. Burroughs, 1 Woods, 439.

Assessments made by a Federal court in bankruptcy on stockholders of a corporation for the unpaid balance of their subscriptions are enforced in the Federal court in Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. ed. 220; Upton v. Hansbrough, 3 Bias. 423.

There are probably other similar cases in addition to those here cited which have been entertained in Federal courts as a matter of course without any contention against the jurisdiction.

An action under an order or judgment of a state court awarding execution against a nonresident stockholder under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 736, upon a judgment against the corporation was brought in a Federal court in Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. ed. 338, but no question as to the jurisdiction of the court was raised, and the failure of the action was due to lack of personal service on the defendant.

It was assumed, rather than decided, in Morley v. Thayer, 3 Fed. Rep. 737, that a Federal court in another state could enforce the same remedies, and only the same remedies, as the court of the state of incorporation.

2. In equity.

A creditors' bill by a judgment creditor of a foreign corporation after an execution unsatisfied against the corporation was held maintainable in the circuit court of the United States in New York against stockholders of an Ohio corporation to enforce their statutory liability, as the Ohio statute provided such a remedy in a case of that kind. Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. Rep. 841.

See also Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, in next division, infra.

bility upon the defendant in the courts of this state for the payment of the money still due upon the judgment. The provision of the Constitution of that state which is the foundation of the alleged liability reads as follows: "Dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of the stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by such stockholders, and such other means as shall be provided by law; but such individual liability shall not apply to railroad corporations nor corporations for religious and charitable purposes." Article 12, § 3.

The statutes for the enforcement of this liability enacted by that state and set forth in the complaint are embraced in two sections of the law with respect to the liability of stockholders in corporations. They are as follows:

"Sec. 44. If any corporation created under this, or any general statute of this state, except railway or charitable or religious corporations, be dissolved, leaving debts unpaid, suit may be brought against any person or persons who were stockholders at the time of such dissolution, without joining the corporation in such suit; and if judgment be rendered and execution satisfied, the defendant or defendants may sue all who were stockholders at the time of the dissolution, for the recovery of the portion of such debt for which they were liable, and the execution upon the judgment shall direct the collection to be made from property of each stockholder respectively; and if any number of stockholders (defendants in the case) shall not have property enough to satisfy his or their portion of the execution, then the amount of the deficiency shall be divided equally among all the remaining stockholders, and collections made accordingly, deducting from the amount a sum in proportion to the amount of stock owned by the plaintiff at the time the company was dissolved."

The other enactment is § 32, and is set forth in the complaint as follows: "Execution against stockholder; Action.—That if any execution shall have been issued against the property or effects of a corporation, except a railway, or a religious or charitable corporation, and there cannot be found any property whereon to levy such execution, then execution may be issued against any of the stockholders, to an extent equal in amount to the amount of stock by him or her owned, together with any amount unpaid thereon; but no execution shall issue against any stockholder, except upon an order brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after reasonable notice in writing to the person or persons sought to be charged, and upon such motion such court may order execution to issue accordingly, or the plaintiff in the execution may proceed by action to charge the stockholders with the amount of his judgment."

A temporary injunction in favor of a stockholder against an action at law in a Federal court was granted by that court in Sumner v. Marcy, 3 Woodb. & M. 106, where the action at law was based on a judgment rendered against the corporation in another state on an invalid cause of action without actual notice to the corporation, though its president made an appearance, but the defense was abandoned.

A bill by creditors and stockholders of a corporation organized under the laws of certain states when brought in a Federal court in another state to enforce the liability of holders of unpaid stock was dismissed, in Waiser v. Seligman, 18 Fed. Rep. 418, on the ground that the remedy at law had not been exhausted, but the right to maintain the bill in case the legal remedy had been exhausted is not expressly passed upon.

In National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, 146 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 1070, Affirming 42 Fed. Rep. 749, and Globe Rolling-Mill Co. v. Ballou, 42 Fed. Rep. 749, bills in equity in the nature of a creditor's bill brought in a Federal court against stockholders of a corporation to reach an unpaid balance due on stock are held not to be sustainable on the basis of judgments and unsatisfied executions in other states without any judgment against the corporation in the state where the bill is filed or any showing that it is impossible to obtain one.

A bill in equity against stockholders of a foreign corporation to reach unpaid balances on stock was upheld in Holmes v. Sherwood, 16 Fed. Rep. 725, by the Federal court in Iowa when brought by judgment creditors, although no assessment in Illinois, which was the state of incorporation, was shown. The court said: "If there are other stockholders not within the jurisdiction, or not made parties defendants herein, these defendants must look to them for contribution; and it is not necessary that all such stockholders be made defendants."

3. At law.

An independent action at law brought against a stockholder of a foreign corporation in a circuit court of the United States to enforce a statutory liability cannot be maintained when the laws of the state of the incorporation provide no remedies against stockholders except a bill in equity or an action upon a judgment against the corporation. The liability can be enforced only in the mode prescribed by the statutes of that state. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825.
34 L. R. A.

An action at law by one or more creditors to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders in a foreign corporation to double the amount of their shares on behalf of the plaintiffs alone was held not sustainable in Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864, on the ground that the suit must be in equity by or for all the creditors since the peculiar terms of the statute in effect provided for a proportionate liability of stockholders, and must therefore be enforced in equity by or for all the creditors.

An action of debt against a stockholder in a foreign corporation, brought in a circuit court of the United States to enforce a charter liability for debts of the corporation, was entertained in Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 25, 25 L. ed. 294, where the stockholders' liability was created by the charter of the corporation and a judgment against it had been taken in the state where it was domiciled, and the state courts held the liability to be enforceable in such a case by separate action brought by the creditor.

An action at law against a stockholder of a foreign corporation to recover an unpaid balance upon his stock subscription brought in a Federal court was dismissed in Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 255, on the ground that in the state of incorporation the remedy was by bill in equity. The court also seems to consider that as a matter of correct practice generally the remedy should be in equity.

But an action at law brought in the Federal court in California by a creditor of a Kansas corporation against a stockholder to enforce his liability under the Kansas statute was held to be

The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the grounds, among others, that it appears upon its face that there is a defect of parties defendant, in that all the stockholders of the bank were not made defendants; and, second, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The complaint contains no allegation as to the meaning or effect of these statutes, or of the provision of the Constitution quoted, under the adjudications of the courts of Kansas, nor any allegation that any judgment has been obtained against the defendant in the courts of that state upon his liability as a stockholder, under these provisions of the local law. We are therefore obliged to construe them ourselves, with the aid of such rules and upon such principles as the courts of this state apply in the construction of such enactments here. A right of action against the stockholders of a corporation does not exist at common law, and ordinarily exists only by virtue of some statutory enactment. In this case the right of action is founded upon the Constitution and statutes of another state. We think it quite clear that the provision of the Constitution referred to is not self-executing, and of itself creates no liability whatever. The language used plainly contemplates that legislation was necessary in order to make it effectual. It was intended simply to confer authority upon the legislature of that state to legislate upon the subject, and perhaps it imposed upon that body the duty of securing the debts of corporations by imposing upon the stockholders an individual liability, and by such other means as in its discretion it should deem proper, always limiting such power and discretion by the provision that each stockholder should be made liable to an amount equal to the stock held by him. The legislature did enact such statutes, and it is these enactments, and not the Constitution itself, which is sought to be enforced in this action. Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; Morley v. Thayer, 8 Fed. Rep. 737; May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101; Fuss v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 256; French v. Teeschemaker, 24 Cal. 518. The question is thus presented whether a right of action unknown to the common law, and existing only by force of the statutes of another state, can be enforced in the courts of this state, or outside of the local jurisdiction where the corporation is domiciled. The defendant's relation to the corporation is governed by the laws of the state of its creation, and the general rule is that the statutory liability of stockholders in foreign corporations cannot be enforced except at the domicile of the corporation when the law of the domicile provides the remedy. In Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233, the court said: "There seems to be no practicable mode of dealing with such corporation and its members, when seeking to charge the latter upon their statute liability, but to proceed in the manner prescribed by the statute creating such liability, and in the local jurisdiction where the corporation was established and carries on its business, and by whose local statutes alone the responsibility exists." We think that a proper remedy in Bank of North America v. Rindge, 57 Fed. Rep. 279, although the complaint was held bad on demurrer for a technical objection but leave given to amend it. The court said: "The Kansas statute upon which the suit is based, as construed by the supreme court of that state, provides two remedies for enforcing the individual liability of stockholders, one of which is by an ordinary action at law, to be instituted wherever personal jurisdiction of them can be acquired. That remedy is pursued in the present action, and is therefore a proper remedy."

This case is followed in RHODES v. UNITED STATES NAT. BANK by the United States circuit court of appeals holding that as the Kansas statute is construed by the Kansas courts to create a personal liability against the stockholders severally in the nature of a contract obligation, the enforcement thereof by an action at law is not confined to the courts of that state but may be had in a Federal court sitting in another state at the residence of a stockholder when it has jurisdiction of the parties.

So, an action of debt against a foreign stockholder of a Kansas corporation brought in a Federal court in New Hampshire is held to be a proper remedy to enforce his individual liability created by the Kansas Constitution and statutes, and a Kansas judgment against the corporation. McVicker v. Jones, 70 Fed. Rep. 754.

Other stockholders within the jurisdiction need not be joined in an action against a foreign stockholder of a Kansas corporation brought in a Federal court. Ibid.

Notwithstanding the fact that the decisions in New York and in several other states had refused to sustain actions at law by a creditor of a Kansas corporation against stockholders in another state, the circuit court of the United States sitting in New York in National Bank v. Whitman, 76 Fed. Rep. 607, subsequent to the decision in MARSHALL 31 L. R. A.

v. SHERMAN, sustained such an action against a New York stockholder of a Kansas corporation, and says: "It is said that the jurisdiction of this court is concurrent, and so only coextensive, with that of the courts of New York, and that this court here should not take cognizance of cases that those courts would not. The declining of jurisdiction by those courts cannot, however, take from this court that which properly belongs to it; and the decision of what belongs to this, at least, must ultimately be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. The decisions of that court must be followed here, as understood." The court in this case considers that the Kansas court has construed the Kansas statute as authorizing transitory action instead of a merely local remedy.

III. Contribution between stockholders of foreign corporations.

The right of contribution from foreign stockholders by stockholders who have been compelled to pay debts of the corporation at their domicile by the issue of execution against them allowed by the local law is maintainable upon common principles of equity. The fact that the liability under the statutes of the state in which the corporation existed could not be enforced in other states does not preclude such a suit for contribution by stockholders who have been compelled to pay. Allen v. Fairbanks, 45 Fed. Rep. 445.

The amount which a foreign stockholder must pay by way of contribution to domestic stockholders who have paid at their domicile obligations of the company on execution against them is in proportion to the amount of his stock, if it does not appear that any of the stockholders are unable to pay. Ibid.

A bill by the stockholders who have paid such obligations for contribution is not multifarious because their claims are distinct. Ibid.

R. A. R.

when the statutes set forth in the complaint are carefully read, it is apparent from their language that they provide for a special and peculiar remedy against the stockholders of a corporation created under the laws of that state. From their whole structure and scope it is apparent that they were intended to operate and be enforced only within that jurisdiction. It is quite clear that as to some of their provisions, at least, it would be impossible to enforce them in this state; and they should be construed as enactments in pari materia, and as a whole. If it appears that they cannot, as a whole scheme, be given full effect in this state we ought not to detach some particular provision from the general context, with a view of ascertaining whether that is or is not enforceable beyond the local jurisdiction. But, without reference to the special and peculiar provisions of these statutes, we think that the general current of authority is to the effect that such enactments are to be enforced only within the jurisdiction of the sovereignty where they exist. Some of the authorities will be referred to hereafter.

The judgment of the learned court below seems to have proceeded principally upon the ground that the liability of the defendant as a stockholder of the insolvent bank in another state is primary and contractual. It is quite doubtful, at least, whether any such relation exists between the stockholders of the corporation and its creditors after the capital stock has been paid in, and the organization of the corporation completed, so as to give it legal capacity to make contracts and incur obligations for itself. The statutes of this state, as construed by judicial decisions, seem to recognize that relation only in cases of liability before the capital stock is paid in. Up to that time the liability of stockholders has been likened to that of partners engaged in a joint enterprise, which, however, disappears upon the perfection of the corporate organization. We have had occasion recently to examine that question in the case of National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, and we adhere to the views there expressed with reference to this question, as well as other questions there decided, and which seem to be involved in this case. It is true that the liability sought to be enforced in that case differed in its nature from that involved in the case at bar, since it was not an action to enforce a stockholder's liability, but that of trustees, for disregard of an express statute. The liability in that case was penal in its nature. Here it is not, and yet it cannot be said that it arises upon contract in the general sense, as it would not exist but for the terms of the statute. The voluntary purchase of the stock by defendant would not of itself create any liability. Jessup v. Carnegie, 80 N. Y. 441, 38 Am. Rep. 643. The complaint does not disclose any other contractual relations between the plaintiff and the defendant. The debt which the plaintiff is seeking to enforce is not the debt of the defendant, but that of the bank. The only liability that, in law, is imposed upon the defendant to pay this debt, or any part of it, is created by the statutes of the state where the corporation is domiciled. The principle adopted, generally, by the more recent cases in this state, is that such a liability is not strictly based upon contract, but is created by statute. It is not primary, but secondary, and conditional upon the failure of the corporation itself, which owes the debt, to pay it. A liability is imposed by statute upon the defendant to pay the corporate debts to a limited extent, under certain circumstances and upon certain conditions. It is not a general liability, but special, and conditioned upon the failure of the corporation itself to pay. This peculiar liability has been held by our courts to place the stockholders of the corporation in the relation of sureties or guarantors of the corporate debts; and the obligation is limited, in the first place, by the defendant's holdings in the corporation, and, in the second place, by the deficiency existing after the application of all the property of the corporation to the payment of its debts. It does not appear from the statements of the complaint that the corporate property which passed into the hands of the receiver has yet been marshaled or appropriated for the benefit of creditors. It does appear that a part of it has, but as to how much, if any, still remains in the hands of the receiver applicable to the discharge of the obligations held by creditors, the complaint is silent. True, there is the allegation that the corporation is insolvent, and has not sufficient property to discharge its debts. But, until all the property of the corporation in the hands of the receiver has been appropriated to that purpose, it cannot be known what the deficiency is which the stockholders are required to make up. If the defendant should pay the plaintiff's debt in this action, for aught that appears, someone may still be entitled to a dividend from the receiver on account of it; and until it has been definitely ascertained by some proceeding, legal or equitable, either in the courts of the state where the corporation was domiciled or here, what the deficiency is, it is impossible to say with any degree of accuracy how much the defendant ought to pay. The relations of the defendant as a stockholder of the corporation are fixed and governed by the laws of the state in which the corporation is domiciled and under which it was created. If those laws created a liability against the defendant upon certain conditions and under certain circumstances, they also provided a special and peculiar remedy; and the general trend of authority is to the effect that the remedy thus provided must be followed, and the proceedings for its enforcement must be within the local jurisdiction and by the judicial department of the sovereignty which enacted the law and created the corporation; and this would be so whether the liability is penal in its nature or arises from the implied obligation of defendant by the purchase of stock.

But if, under any circumstances, the action could be maintained in this jurisdiction, it must be in such a form and by such modes of procedure as like liabilities created under our own statutes are enforced against our own citizens. There is no reason why the plaintiff should be permitted to enforce his debt in this jurisdiction against a citizen of this state in a form of action different from that which a creditor of a domestic corporation may prosecute against a domestic stockholder. It is quite well established that in a case like this an action at law

By a single creditor against a single stockholder for the recovery of a specific sum of money cannot be maintained in our courts, under our statutes declaring the liability of stockholders. In such cases the liability must be enforced in equity in a suit brought by or in behalf of all the creditors against all the stockholders, wherein the amount of the liability and all the equities can be ascertained and adjusted. The stockholders of this Kansas bank are not equitably liable for any greater sum than may be necessary to discharge the debts after the corporate property has been applied. All of them that are solvent should contribute in proportion to the amount of their holdings of stock. We are not informed by the complaint how many stockholders there are, or even the amount of the capital stock. Nor are we informed whether any of the stockholders are insolvent. It is quite evident, therefore, that no equitable proportion of the corporate debts which this defendant should pay cannot be ascertained or determined in this action. The liability of the stockholders is a fund to which all the creditors are entitled to resort after the corporate property has been applied upon the debts. If this action can be maintained, it is quite apparent that one creditor may collect his debt in full, and another creditor may not be paid anything except what he is able to collect from the corporation. The statutes upon which this action is based provide, among other things, that when judgment is obtained against a stockholder, and it is satisfied by collection or payment, he may, in turn, maintain an action against all the other stockholders, who are such at the time of dissolution, for the recovery of the portion of the debt for which they were liable; and, if any stockholder thus sued shall not have property enough to satisfy his portion of the claim, the deficiency shall be divided equally among the remaining stockholders, and collected accordingly. It is quite apparent that the purpose of the law cannot be carried out, except by a proceeding in equity for an accounting, to which all the stockholders are made parties. If the plaintiff can maintain this action, and collect his debt from the defendant, how can the defendant proceed against his fellow stockholders to reimburse himself for that part of the debt which they should have paid? It would be manifestly unjust and unfair to compel him to pay this claim, and turn him over to another action, perhaps in another state or in many states, in order to obtain the contribution which the law evidently contemplates. All these questions should be settled in one proceeding or in one action, and that at the domicile of the corporation. The statute contemplates that each stockholder shall pay his just proportion of any sum that may be required to discharge the outstanding obligations of the corporation. The form of the action should be one, therefore, adapted to the protection of all. A suit at law by one creditor to recover for himself alone is entirely inconsistent with any idea of contribution. The liability is not to any individual creditor, but for contribution to the fund out of which all creditors are to be paid alike. Hence, the appropriate remedy is by suit in equity to enforce the contribution, and not by one creditor alone to appropriate to his own use that which belongs to others equally with himself. National Bank v. Dillingham, supra; Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; Flornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 879. It is impossible to conceal from ourselves that such are the scope and real purpose of the action, and hence we are asked to enforce a remedy under a foreign law where it is perfectly apparent that complete justice cannot be done, and where it is plain that an equitable result can be accomplished only by the courts of the jurisdiction where the corporation was created.

The case has thus far been considered with reference to the discovery of some practical method of applying in this jurisdiction the peculiar local remedy for the enforcement of the statutory liability, created by the law of the domicile. There is still another aspect of the question which deserves attention, and it must be viewed in the light of notorious facts, which, though not appearing in the record, are matters of current history and common knowledge, to which we cannot shut our eyes. Within recent years numerous business enterprises have been promoted in some of the Western states, the money for the prosecution of which has been to a large extent borrowed here, either in the form of direct loans upon some kind of security, or by inducing many of our citizens to purchase stock in corporations organized for the purpose under local laws. Much of these investments, amounting to a vast sum in the aggregate, has been lost. This result is in some degree to be attributed to financial depression, and the consequent derangement of business, but in a much greater degree to the gross mismanagement and dishonesty of the managers and promoters. The funds thus procured have been used largely in furtherance of local and private interests, and in disregard of every prudent safeguard for the protection of the investors, and sometimes in defiance of every principle of common honesty. In some cases, when the managers well knew they were hopelessly involved, they continued to transact business, borrowing recklessly, and pledging the assets in their possession or under their control. When the crash came, these assets were sold by the pledgees, and, of course, sacrificed in many cases, leaving large deficiencies, which honest and prudent management could have converted into a surplus. A careful investigation of some of the disastrous failures of loan, investment, trust, land, and mortgage companies, as well as banks and other corporations, will reveal this condition of things. It will not be difficult for speculators to purchase large claims against these defunct corporations at a very low price, if they can be readily enforced here against stockholders who have made and lost investments in the stock. These considerations are not, of course, pertinent in a case where a party is seeking to enforce a clear legal right, whatever may have been the circumstances of its origin, but they serve to stimulate a careful inquiry as to the principles and reasons upon which the courts of this state are required to aid in the enforcement of claims of this character.

In the case at bar the plaintiff's right of action has no other legal or moral basis than the flat of a legislature of another state. It is a principle of universal application, recognized in all civilized states, that the statutes of another state have, ex proprio vigore, no force or effect in another. The enforcement in our courts of some positive law or regulation of another state depends upon our own express or tacit consent. The consent is given only by virtue of the adoption of the doctrine of comity as part of our municipal law. That doctrine has many limitations and qualifications, and generally each sovereignty has the right to determine for itself their true scope and extent. The courts of this state are open to all suitors to enforce rights of action, transitory in their nature, recognized by the common law, or founded in natural justice, and when no law of the forum or any principle of public policy interferes. There is, however, a large class of foreign laws and statutes which, under the doctrine of comity, have no force in this jurisdiction. It belongs exclusively to each sovereignty to determine for itself whether it can enforce a foreign law without at the same time, neglecting the duty that it owes to its own citizens or subjects. It has been held, and is a principle universally recognized, that the revenue laws of one country have no force in another. The exemption laws and laws relating to married women, as well as the local statute of frauds and statutes authorizing distress and sale for nonpayment of rent, are not recognized in another jurisdiction under the principles of comity. Morgan v. Neville, 74 Pa. 52; Waldron v. Ritchings, 3 Daly, 288; Siegel v. Robinson, 56 Pa. 19, 93 Am. Dec. 775; Kelly v. Davenport, 1 Browne (Pa.) 231; Ross v. Wigg, 34 Hun, 192; Ludlow v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. 95; Skinner v. Tinker, 34 Barb. 383. It is well understood, also, that the statutes of one state giving a right of action to recover a penalty have no force in another. Huntington v. Aittrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1128. So, also, rights of action arising under foreign bankrupt, insolvent, or assignment laws are not recognized here when prejudicial to the interests of our own citizens. Warner v. Jaffray, 96 N. Y. 248, 48 Am. Rep. 616; Re Waite, 99 N. Y. 433; Barth v. Backus, 140 N. Y. 230, 23 L. R. A. 47; Douglass v. Phenix Ins. Co. 188 N. Y. 209, 20 L. R. A. 118. There is another class of cases where the right to enforce the foreign statute is conditioned upon the existence of a law substantially similar here. Wooden v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 10, 13 L. R. A. 458. Statutes giving a right of action for negligence resulting in death belong to that class. Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465. There are many other classes of foreign statutes affecting public and private interests which courts have uniformly held can have no extraterritorial force or effect. From the general trend of judicial decisions in this country, and the consensus of authority on the question, it may be safely asserted that rights of action such as are set forth in the complaint in this action are not enforceable in another jurisdiction upon any obligations of comity. It has been held that an action by a New York creditor of a corporation organized under the manufacturing act of this state against a New Jersey trustee in the courts of that state, for neglect to file the annual report, could not be maintained. The opinions of the several members of the court in that case contain a clear and interesting discussion of the law applicable to the question. Derrickson v. Smith, 27 N. J. L. 166. The courts of Massachusetts have uniformly refused to entertain actions of this character, either upon the ground that to enforce the foreign law would be injurious to its own citizens, or that complete justice could not be administered in its courts under its special and peculiar provisions. Erickson v. Nesmith, supra; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 849; Post v. Toledo, C. & St. L. R. Co. 144 Mass. 341, 59 Am. Rep. 86; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56. The arguments of the court in these cases upon which the conclusion was based deserve the highest respect, and it is worthy of notice that, in the case last cited, the statute sought to be enforced was the identical one now under consideration in the case at bar.

The highest court of Illinois has also refused to enforce this same statute and provision of the Kansas Constitution, on the ground that the remedy was special, and must be pursued in the state where the corporation exists. Fowler v. Lamson, 146 Ill. 472. In another case (Young v. Farwell, 139 Ill. 326) it held that it could not enforce by action at law a statute of Oregon for the collection of unpaid subscriptions, for the reason that a complete settlement of the controversy required a bill in equity, where all the parties interested were before the court, so that complete justice could be meted out to all, and conflicting rights and equities finally adjusted. Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196; Id. 106 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 265. By the Constitution and laws of Michigan, stockholders of corporations of that state are individually liable for certain debts to be enforced by action of assumpsit; and the highest court of Wisconsin has held that the remedy was exclusive; that the corporation itself was a necessary party; and that the liability could be enforced only in the courts of Michigan. May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101. It has been also held, after exhaustive consideration, that a creditor of an Ohio corporation could not enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder in the courts of West Virginia. Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184. There are numerous other decisions in the state and Federal courts that hold, in effect, either that such a liability cannot be enforced at all beyond the local jurisdiction, or that such an action must be in equity after all remedies against the corporation have been exhausted, and that, too, in the state where the stockholder is sought to be charged; or, at least, the bill must show upon its face by proper allegations that such a proceeding was impossible or that all the corporate assets have been applied to the payment of the claims of creditors. Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, 146 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 1070; Pollard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 520, 23 L. ed. 378; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; Peck v. Miller, 39 Mich. 594; Barrick v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 181; Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; Smith v. Huckabee, 53 Ala. 191. The decisions of our own courts are also to the effect that special remedies provided by foreign laws to enforce the liability of stockholders in foreign corporations must be applied by the courts of the state in the local jurisdiction, and where the corporation is domiciled. Lovry v. Inman, 46 N. Y. 119; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Barnes v. Wheaton, 80 Hun, 8. The statutes in these cases were, it is true, different in some respects from that now under consideration; but when these cases are read with some of our more recent decisions as to the mode of enforcing the liability of stockholders in our own corporations, it becomes at once apparent that they apply to the statute in question. National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 608.

The objection to this action does not rest upon the principle that the plaintiff is seeking to enforce a statute for the recovery of a penalty, since the liability is not penal in any international sense, but arises upon the statute as an implied obligation which the defendant assumed when he purchased his stock. Cochran v. Wiechers, 119 N. Y. 899, 7 L. R. A. 553; Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 864. The case involves questions which open a broad field for investigation. It would take much time and labor to explore it thoroughly. It would, perhaps, be impossible to state the principle upon which the decision should rest without apparently coming in conflict with some of the numerous cases on the subject at some point. The great weight of authority, as will be seen, is against the right to maintain such an action. Sometimes the decision is put upon one ground, and sometimes upon another, but it is to be noticed that the party seeking to enforce such a statute in a foreign jurisdiction has been quite uniformly defeated. The statute in question, while creating a certain liability on the part of a stockholder to a creditor of a corporation, at the same time gives to the former certain rights as against his fellow stockholders for contribution. It should be administered in such a way as to secure the rights of all in the same action. This is the interpretation which we have given to our own statutes enacted for a similar purpose. It is clear that this cannot be done in this action, since the theory of the plaintiff is that the defendant is liable in successive actions at law by creditors, suing separately, until he has paid a sum equal to his stock, and then he must resort to some other jurisdiction for contribution. This would be most unjust and oppressive, and it is safe to say that no well-considered case can be found that sanctions such a principle.

While this is not an action for a penalty yet we think that it belongs to a class of cases in which there is no obligation, under any well-recognized principle of the law of comity, to enforce a claim founded upon such a statute. Moreover, the right asserted and the remedy provided are of such a nature that they cannot be given any practical effect here without injustice to our own citizens. We are virtually asked to ignore our own rules of construction and methods of procedure in order to compel the defendant to pay to foreign creditors a sum equal to his holdings of stock, without any power to inquire into the necessity for it by an accounting or to secure to him any recourse against others equally liable. When the courts of this state are asked to administer the statutes of Kansas, and we can see that the case is surrounded with such complications and the circumstances are such that it cannot be done without injustice to our own citizens, or that it will be impossible to do full and complete justice to all the parties in interest, it is reasonable and just to decline to administer them at all.

The judgment of the General and Special Terms should be reversed, with costs in all courts, and the demurrer sustained, with leave to the plaintiff to amend the complaint on payment of costs.

All concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURGH, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO,
& ST. LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.
George REDDING.

(140 Ind. 101.)

1. Trainmen are not guilty of wilful or wanton neglect of duty in failing to stop a freight train running on a sharp upgrade at a speed of 8 miles an hour, to remove a boy eight years and five months old, who in violation of the statutes as well as of the orders of the engineer caught hold of and hung to one of the cars in the moving train,—especially where it does not appear that the train could be safely stopped at that place.

2. A longhand manuscript of alleged evidence cannot be regarded as a bill of exceptions on appeal.

(February 27, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Delaware County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burchenal & Rupe for appellant.

Messrs. J. M. Morris and Brown & Brown for appellee.

NOTE.—For cases somewhat akin to the above, see Pianz v. Boston & A.R. Co. (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 835; Farber v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 20 L. R. A. 350; 34 L. R. A.

Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 22 L. R. A. 72; and Houston, C. A. & N. R. Co. v. Bolling (Ark.) 27 L. R. A. 190.

Howard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From the special verdict in this case it appears that on the 25th day of September, 1891, the appellant company ran a train of cars, in a southeasterly direction, through the city of New Castle, the train consisting of a locomotive engine, tender, twenty-seven loaded box cars, and a caboose. It was a through freight, passing through the town between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and without making any stop at the depot. The appellee was at the time eight years and five months old, and lived in the town, with his father and mother. The father was on this day engaged at work as a carpenter at a point several miles distant from the town. The boy had been at school during the day, and returned home after dismissal of school, about half-past 3 o'clock. About 4 o'clock, his mother, who was engaged at her trade as seamstress, permitted him to go out and ride upon a wagon for a distance of a square and a half, with directions to then return home. Instead of returning as directed, appellee wandered on for some squares, until he crossed to the south side of the railroad track, where he stood as said freight train came along. As the engine approached and passed the place where appellee stood, the engineer noticed him, and said to him, "Go away from there." The special verdict then continues: "That the plaintiff, George Redding, then went to a point about 20 feet east of the east side of Byer street, on the south side of the track; and, as the fourth or fifth car of said train to the rear of the engine passed him, he seized hold of an iron attached on the side near the end of said car, and drew himself up, and rested his right knee on an iron loop or half ring attached to the sill of the car, and his left foot on the lid of the grease box of the truck, in which position he rode on said car a distance of 300 feet. At the time the plaintiff so seized hold of said car the said train was running at a speed of 8 miles an hour and on a sharp up grade. That at the time the plaintiff so seized hold and hung upon said car the fireman of said freight train, James R. Muckridge, was standing within 3 feet and in touching distance of the engineer, and saw plaintiff get upon said car and saw him hanging thereon, and ride thereon to the place where he fell off, and could easily have called the attention of the engineer to the situation and condition of the plaintiff. And during the time that the plaintiff was so upon said car, the said Muckridge made backward and forward motions with his right arm and hand toward and at the plaintiff, which frightened and caused the plaintiff to jump off the car, and whilst the car was so in motion as aforesaid; and in alighting the plaintiff fell under said car, with his left leg across the rail of said railroad, and the car wheels passed over it, and so crushed and mutilated it as to leave it hanging together with the shreds of flesh and the sinews. That amputation was made necessary, and soon thereafter, on said day, had. That said train could have been easily stopped within a distance of four or five car lengths before reaching the point of the accident, after the plaintiff was seen upon said train by said Muckridge. That the average length of the cars of said train was 33 or 34 feet. That as soon as said Muckridge saw the accident he made the remark to the engineer, standing at his side, 'We have got him,' or 'We have killed him.' That no effort was made to stop or check the speed of said train whilst the plaintiff was so hanging upon said car. That at the time the plaintiff got upon said car he did not fully realize or appreciate the danger or peril of his act."

We do not think that this verdict finds facts sufficient to entitle appellee to judgment. It first appears that he was a trespasser upon appellant's train; not a technical trespasser simply, but a trespasser in direct violation of the order of the engineer, who saw him standing near the moving train, and said to him in warning, "Go away from there." He was also on the train in disobedience to his mother's command, since she told him to return home after his ride upon the wagon. His climbing upon a moving car was, moreover, a misdemeanor under the statutes of the state. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 2290 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2169). This is not like the case of Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sears, 11 Ind. App. 654, where a boy nearly eight years of age, playing upon the street, slipped, and without fault on his part was accidentally thrown upon the track, where he was run over, and his legs taken off by a passing train. The only question for decision in the case at bar, taking into consideration the tender years of the appellee, and the fact that he did not realize or appreciate the danger and peril of his act, is whether the appellant was or was not guilty of wilful or wanton neglect of duty in not stopping the train and removing the boy, when his danger was discovered. In Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen, 49 Ohio St. 230, 16 L. R. A. 674, a passenger fell off the rear of one train, and lay stunned upon the track, when a train following in an hour afterwards ran over and killed him. The employees of the first train, though informed that the man had fallen off, refused to stop the train, and take him up, or give notice to the crew of the following train so that they might not injure him; and for such wilful and inexcusable neglect of duty and disregard of the dictates of our common humanity the company was rightly held answerable in damages. In the case before us, however, it does not appear from the facts found that the boy was necessarily in danger. He had climbed upon the train, apparently at the same place provided for the use of employees in mounting the cars; and to the fireman, who saw him there, it may not have seemed so dangerous a situation as in fact it was. The fireman and the engineer, both of whom apparently knew of the presence of the boy clinging to the box car, may have thought that, as he had got there while the train was in motion, he might hold on there in safety, or that he might jump off with even greater ease and safety than he had jumped on. At least it does not seem clearly a case of criminal carelessness on the part of the train employees to have continued the train in motion on the "sharp up grade" on which it was then moving. It was not a suitable place to stop a loaded freight train. Besides, it may have been dangerous to do so. The verdict shows that the train could have been stopped in a few car lengths, but it does not find that this might safely be done. A passenger train—as in the Ohio case which we have cited—might be closely following this freight, and, for all that appears, up this same steep grade. If that were so, the stopping of the freight train might be attended with great danger to passengers and to the crews of both trains. In addition, it is not clear that the stopping of the train might not have jerked the boy off even more quickly than he jumped off himself. It is found in the verdict that the forward and backward motion of the fireman's arm frightened the appellee, so that he jumped off. This, we think, must be regarded as a mere conclusion. Appellee was not frightened by the warning of the engineer, when told to keep away from the moving train. His mounting the train seems, at least, as dangerous an act as was the dismounting. The action in the last case may have been due quite as much to the boy's own consciousness of wrongdoing as to any fear caused by the motions of the fireman's arm. The motions, besides, may have been by way of caution quite as much as threat. They may have meant "hold on tight" quite as well as "jump off." Appellee, notwithstanding his tender years, was unquestionably quick, active, and unusually daring. The trainmen, accustomed themselves to take such risks as the boy was taking, may have honestly believed him to be in no great danger. He was a wrongdoer, and it is not clear that they were guilty of wilfully injuring him. If the facts are correctly found by the jury, we do not think the company is liable. See Plans v. Boston & A. R. Co. 157 Mass. 377, 17 L. R. A. 835.

Both appellant and appellee refer to the evidence in discussing the verdict, but the evidence is not in the record. The clerk does not show that a bill of exceptions containing the evidence was ever filed in his office. It is perhaps shown that a longhand manuscript of alleged evidence was filed in the clerk's office. But the longhand manuscript is not a bill of exceptions. It should, after filing in the clerk's office, be embodied in a bill of exceptions; and this bill of exceptions, with the longhand manuscript so embodied therein, should, after having been presented to and signed by the judge, within the time given, be filed in the clerk's office. All this, besides, should appear from the record, and over the certificate and seal of the clerk. We need not, perhaps, presume that a court stenographer knows how to make up a bill of exceptions. It is not his duty to do this. He is sworn simply to take down and transcribe the evidence, rulings, etc. However this may be, it is the duty of the appellant to bring a correct record to this court; and our decisions cannot be made up from an examination of papers which form no part of the record. We are of opinion that in this case justice may more certainly be attained by granting a new trial than in any other way.

The judgment is therefore reversed, with instructions to grant a new trial.

Monks, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

34 L. R. A.

Catherine DANTZER et al., Appts.,

INDIANAPOLIS UNION RAILWAY COMPANY

141 Ind. 604.)

1. A constitutional right to a remedy for injury to property does not include the right to recover for an injury not different in kind but only in degree from that suffered by the community in general from the vacation of a remote part of a street, though it causes depreciation in the value of property, but leaves ample means of access thereto.
2. Depreciation in the value of property by the added inconvenience of access thereto consequent on the vacation of a part of a street at a point some distance therefrom is an injury not different in kind, but only in degree, from that suffered by the community in general, and will not sustain a right of action for damages.
3. Whether a legal injury is pleaded by alleging the vacation of a part of a street at some distance from one's property is a question of law for the court, and not a question for the jury.

(McCabe, J., dissents.)

(December 21, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful interference with a street which was one of the means of access to plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Claypool & Claypool, W. A. Ketcham, Duncan & Smith, and A. Seidensticker for appellants.

Messrs. Baker & Daniels and F. Winter for appellee.

Hackney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Formerly, the appellee's station for the reception and discharge of passengers for all of the railways entering the city of Indianapolis was bounded on the north by Louisiana street, on the east by Meridian street, on the south by McNabb street, and on the west by Illinois street. McNabb street extended but to the intersections of Meridian and Illinois streets. One square south of McNabb street, and parallel with that street, was and is South street, extending east and west, and connecting with numerous streets of said city running north and south. Between McNabb and South streets, about midway, and on the west side of Illinois street, were, and ever since have been, the lots of the appellants, upon which was erected and maintained a public hotel. At that time Illinois street extended for miles north and south of appellants' property, which abutted upon it, and was free to public travel upon its surface, excepting as the appellee's railway tracks crossed the same. Beneath the surface of said Illinois street, and under said railway tracks, had been constructed and used a tunnel for public travel between Georgia street (the second street north of said station) and said South street. These conditions existing in June, 1886, the common council of said city vacated that part of Illinois street beginning 50 feet south of the north line of Louisiana street (the first street north of said station), and extending south for the distance of 210 feet, and also vacated a portion of McNabb street, that is to say, a strip 35 feet in width off of the north side of said street. Soon after so vacating said streets, the appellee tore down its station house and built anew, extending its car sheds and buildings over that part of Illinois street so vacated, and inclosing that part of said street, and guarding the former north line of McNabb street, with iron fences, and along the vacated portion of McNabb street, to within 1 foot of the center of said street, it constructed a grade above the old grade of the street, and placed thereon two railway tracks. The north line of the appellants' property is 96 feet south of any of the obstructions as added to Illinois street, and the south line thereof is 156 feet from any of such obstructions. The walls guarding the southern entrance to said tunnel occupy such part of Illinois street that on the west thereof there is a street bed of 19 feet to the sidewalk curb, on the east there is a street bed of 19 feet to the sidewalk curb, and on the north there is a street bed of 28 feet between the coping and the center line of McNabb street, thus leaving a passageway around the sides and ends of said tunnel. Since so closing Illinois street, the premises of appellants can be reached from the southern part of the city by the same streets and courses that formerly existed, and from the northern part of the city by the ways which existed formerly, excepting by the surface of Illinois street over said distance of 210 feet so vacated, and excepting that part of McNabb street so vacated. The appellant's property and the block in which it is situated are accessible from points on Illinois street north of the union station through said tunnel, or by cross streets, to Meridian street, thence south on Meridian street to McNabb street or South street, and thence west to Illinois street, south of the vacated portion thereof. The changes occasioned by vacating the streets named have required persons who might desire to reach the property of the appellants from North Illinois street, or in passing from said property to North Illinois street, to travel the more inconvenient route through the tunnel, or the more circuitous route by the way of Meridian and McNabb or South streets, and in traveling McNabb street to be limited to the south sidewalk, or to the street bed narrowed to 25 feet. The appellants, making these altered conditions the basis of their claim for damages, sued the appellee in the circuit court, and alleged a depreciation of the value of their property and property rights in the sum of $30,000, and that in the proceedings for said vacation no damages had been assessed or tendered. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the several paragraphs of complaint, and that ruling is here assigned as error.

NOTE.—As to damages to abutting owner by vacation of highway, see note to People, Hart, v. Marin County (Cal.) 25 L. R. A. 682; also Chicago v. Burcky (Ill.) 29 L. R. A. 569.

Under the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of Indiana (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 57; Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4 L. R. A.

§ 57), which guarantees that "every man for injury done him in his . . . property . . . shall have remedy by due course of law," and under the common law, the appellants insist upon a right of recovery. Though the obstructions complained of are remote from the lines of their property and do not encroach upon the street immediately in front of their property, and while they have ways of ingress and egress to and from their building and lots to and from the same directions formerly existing, it is contended that the appellants, by virtue of their ownership of said property, have a property right in the streets at the points of obstruction; that the right to use the streets for access to their building and lots is a property right not confined to the immediate front of their lots, and not dependent upon an ownership of the fee in the street in front of, or remote from, their lots; and that any destruction or impairment of that right is an injury for which they have a remedy. The appellee concedes that under said constitutional guaranty, and under the common law, even in the absence of that guaranty, there is a remedy for an injury to one's property. It is conceded, also, that the appellants held, in addition to their property in the soil of their lots, a property right in the street,—that is to say, the appendant right of access, or easement of access, in front of their lots; but it is maintained that under the facts in this case no legal injury exists, no property right of the appellants has been invaded, and, if any injury has been suffered it is damnum absque injuria. At least two cases in this state have defined the extent of that appendant property right of access. In Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38, it is said: "These decisions establish the principle that besides the right of way which the public has of passage over a street in a town or city, there is a private right which passes to the purchaser of a lot upon the street, and as appurtenant to it, which he holds by implied covenant that the street in front of his lot shall forever be kept open to its full width." In the case of Tate v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 7 Ind. 479, the court quotes the above passage from the case of Haynes v. Thomas, and says, in application of the principle to the facts of the case, that "the person, whether natural or artificial, causing the obstruction, is liable to the owners of the adjoining lots for the injury. It is thus carefully limited to those owning lots fronting on the street at the point of obstruction. That is the case made in the record. Such owners only seem to sustain special injury." These cases, and probably others in this state, hold that this property right cannot be taken or obstructed, even with legislative sanction. We think we may safely assert, however, that the obstruction of the easement of access need not always be upon the immediate front of the lot whose owner is affected, but that if the obstruction, though remote, renders access to such lot impossible, or impairs it in a substantial manner, at the point where it abuts upon the street, the property right of the lot-owner is invaded and he may recover. To illustrate this proposition, if a street were fully obstructed on either side of one's lot, so that the lines of the lot could not be reached, access would be denied to the lotowner, though the street in front of his lot had upon it no obstructions. The property rights of the lot-owner, as against the public, are coterminous with the lines of his lot, but that property right may be obstructed, and its uses defeated, by cutting off ingress and egress to and from such lines from points upon the street beyond such lines. In such case there should be, and is, a remedy. This conclusion is held in the case of Pennsylvania Co. v. Stanley, 10 Ind. App. 421, where the remote obstruction of an alley created a cul de sac which it was necessary to enter to gain access to the plaintiff's abutting lot, but from which there was no exit. The holding of the case cited finds support from the rule as to the character of interest of the lotowner in the street, as stated in Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 542, 59 Am. Rep. 225. And see Buhl v. First Street Union Depot Co. 98 Mich. 596-606, 28 L. R. A. 393. Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 161 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749, is cited by appellants as enlarging the property rights of a lotowner in the street beyond that stated by us, and as carrying it throughout the length of the street. In that case it was held that where one dedicates a street as part of an addition to a city, and sells a lot with reference to such street, his grantee takes, by implied grant, such an interest in the street so dedicated as that said grantor could not vacate the street, and thereby defeat that implied grant. No question is there made as to the rights of the public in such street, nor as to municipal control as against such grantee. The importance of a distinction between the two cases is manifested when we suggest that the appellants could not be reasonably held to possess property rights in Illinois street 3 miles north of the union station, the obstruction of which would entitle them to damages; nor could it be said that they might defeat, at that distant point, the construction of a viaduct, a tunnel, or an elevated railway, as an impairment of this easement. There is, however, this limitation upon every right of action of this class: that the plaintiff must suffer an injury different in kind, and not simply in degree, from that suffered by the community in general. Decker v. Evansville, S. & N. R. Co. 138 Ind. 493; Fossion v. Landry, 123 Ind. 136; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 543, 59 Am. Rep. 225; Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Bissell, 108 Ind. 118; Sohn v. Cambern, 106 Ind. 302; Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 153; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stanley, supra. This rule, with a definition of the phrase "community in general," was recently stated by this court in the case of Decker v. Evansville, S. & N. R. Co. supra, as follows: "Whether the owner of a lot abutting upon a street may maintain a common-law action, where a structure in the street imposes no new burden on the soil owned by him, depends upon whether or not the occupation of the street with such structure results in damage to his property peculiar and different in kind from that which is suffered by the community in general. . . . The community in general does not mean those who use the street, and yet reside at such a distance from the railroad, if such be the obstruction of which complaint is made, as to suffer none of the annoyances incident to its construction and operation, but it means those who reside in the immediate vicinity of the railroad, and are subject to the inconveniences incident to such a structure. The location and operation of a railroad upon a public highway may occasion incidental inconvenience to an abutting landowner, but until it cuts off or materially interrupts his means of access to his property, or imposes some additional burden on his soil, his injury is the same in kind as the community in general. Injuries which result from the careful construction and operation of a railroad on the land of another are common to all those whose lands are in close proximity to such road, and for such injuries there can be no recovery in the absence of a statute entitling the owner to maintain such action. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 63, 31 Am. Rep. 306; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 879, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, supra." The same statement of the rule and the same definition were given by the late Judge Mitchell of this court, in Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Eberle, supra. The reason of the rule was stated in Fossion v. Landry, supra, by a quotation from Blackstone's Commentaries (book 3, p. 219), to the effect that only private ways have private remedies, while public ways are the subjects of indictment only, and that special injury not suffered in common with the public must appear before private remedy may be employed.

The inquiry arises upon the facts and rules of law as stated, Did the appellants sustain an injury substantially impairing or destroying access to their lots and building from the remote obstructions of Illinois and McNabb streets? If this inquiry were confined to McNabb street, and if the property of the appellants were upon the south side of that street, the decisions in this state would require us to answer this inquiry in the negative. Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Bissell, Indiana, B. & N. R. Co. v. Eberle, and Decker v. Evansville, S. & N. R. Co. supra. In the Eberle Case the facts were as above supposed, and after a full consideration of the question and of many authorities it was held that in the location and proper operation of a railroad upon that side of the highway remote from the plaintiff's lots there was no material interruption of the plaintiff's means of access; that "his injury and damage, while different in degree, are the same in kind as are those of the community at large;" and it is said: "All that is found is that the obstruction forces the travel over the highway nearer his lot, and makes access thereto more difficult and inconvenient. That, however, does not show that the erection of the embankment presents any substantial interference with his right of access over the highway as it was previously enjoyed and used, nor does it show any inconvenience of a kind different from that to which the community at large is subjected. The highway may be more difficult and inconvenient of passage at that point by all who use it, precisely as it is inconvenient as a means of access to the plaintiff's lot. That the plaintiff, on account of the proximity of his residence, and because he uses the highway more frequently, may suffer inconvenience greater in degree than others, may be conceded. . . . Mere inconvenience or disadvantage, so long as the obstruction complained of does not in some substantial degree impair or deprive the plaintiff of the usual and ordinary means of access to his property, cannot give a right of action. Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Powell v. Bunger, 91 Ind. 64; Lenning v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146." In Terre Haute & L. E. Co. v. Bissell, supra, a case like that above supposed with reference to McNabb street, it was said: "In the absence of any showing that the tracks of appellant's railroad were located, constructed, and used on and over that part of First street of which appellee claimed to be the owner in fee, the grievances whereof he complained, caused or occasioned by the occupation and use of First street for railroad purposes, were such incidental injuries merely as he sustained in common with the public, and not different in degree or character from those sustained by the public generally. For such injuries appellee cannot maintain an action against the appellant. McCowan v. Whitesides, 81 Ind. 235; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Matlock v. Hawkins, 92 Ind. 225; Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 153." It will be observed that in the cases cited the rule was extended, not only to the maintenance of an obstruction, but also to the not unlawful operation of a railway, while in the present case there is no allegation of improper operation of the railways; and the rule applies to the appellants with additional force when it is remembered that their lots and building do not abut upon McNabb street, and they are only affected by an inconvenience in traveling to and from their premises, an inconvenience suffered alike by all of the community.

By the cases cited, the rule that added inconvenience from such obstructions in the street upon the side of the center line of the street remote from the property, and not upon the property owner's fee, is damnum absque injuria, has become so firmly settled in this state that only legislative action can disturb it. It is therefore unnecessary to inquire as to the rule in other states or in England, as we are asked to do. The rules so found, in the absence of direct authority upon the question, would lead with unerring certainty to a decision of the remaining question, namely, the effect of the obstruction upon Illinois street. The easements of access, of light, and of air are all confined to the street in front of the lot, and, when it is ascertained that a remote obstruction does not affect these, there is no injury, in a legal sense, any more than in the cases above stated, of obstructions in front of the lot; and when it is established that a mere inconvenience of access, or a more circuitous route of access, does not constitute legal injury, no right of action exists. But we need not stop with the application of our own cases, since the direct question has been decided against the contention of the appellants in numerous cases from other states, involving like obstructions and like injury, and where all of the contentions made in this case were denied. Buhl v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 98 Mich. 34 L. R. A.

596, 23 L. R. A. 392; Stanwood v. Malden, 137 Mass. 17, 16 L. R. A. 591; McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. 470; East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 119 Ill. 200, 59 Am. Rep. 795; Parker v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 146 Ill. 158; Glasgow v. S. Louis, 107 Mo. 198; Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254; Whitsett v. Union Depot & R. Co. 10 Colo. 218; Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265, 6 Am. Rep. 839; Polack v. San Francisco Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 490; Gerhard v. Seokong River Bridge Comrs. 15 R. I. 534; Kings County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 101 N. Y. 411; Coster v. Albany, 48 N. Y. 899; Barr v. Okaloosa, 45 Iowa, 275; Heller v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Kan. 625. The last of these decisions is by Mr. Justice Brewer, and is perfectly clear in maintaining the proposition that one whose access is not cut off, and whose property rights in the immediate front of his lot are not invaded, and who suffers only from the loss of convenience of access, which of itself may turn the tide of travel from his premises, and occasion loss of business and depreciation in value of property, sustains damage of the same kind, but in greater degree, than that sustained by the public generally. We have not endeavored to collect all of the cases holding this view, but have included, as will be observed, the decisions of many states. We concede that the holding of some of the courts of this country are not in harmony with this, the great weight of authority; and it would seem that the English rule, urged by appellants' learned counsel, cannot be reconciled with the current of authority in this country, but that rule has met with frequent criticism in the cases we have cited, and is in some justified under acts of Parliament. However, we are constrained to hold with the best American authority, even if the conflict with the English rule were sharply drawn and free from distinction.

There is in this country a line of holdings which is sometimes thought to conflict with what we have said to be the current of authority, namely, those cases which include the holding of liability for obstructions by elevated railways. These, however, should be distinguished as not having relation to access, but to the easement of light or air, and as encroaching upon the immediate lot front. All of the cases we have cited to the question now under consideration involved the vacation of one or more of several avenues of access, and left other avenues which required a more circuitous course in reaching the property of the plaintiff. In several of the cases, provisions of the state Constitutions and statutes reserving damages for the taking of or injury to property were considered as not allowing damages where the injury was of the character suffered by the community in general. In some of the cases it was urged, as it has been in this case, that if, instead of vacating the street, the proceeding had been to establish a street, the appellants would have been subject to assessment for benefits therefrom, and for that reason they would be entitled to damages. It was held not to affect the question. Buhl v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., Stanwood v. Malden, and East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, supra; State, Kean, v. Elizabeth, 54 N. J. L. 463; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn.

102 Ill. 379. 40 Am. Rep. 598. In the case of State, Kean, v. Elizabeth, supra, it was said in this connection: "It is assumed by counsel for prosecutrix that, because the prosecutrix was assessed for a benefit resulting from the opening of this street peculiar to herself, that she got a vested right in the continued existence of the street, of which she could not be stripped without compensation. But this, I think, is more plausible than substantial. While the right she got may have been of peculiar benefit to her property, yet it was a right which she shared with the public. The privilege of using the street was shared by each member of the community. It may not have been of the same value to each member of the community but the right to use the street was in each citizen the same. It was exclusively a public right, put under the control of the representatives of the public. It was subject to alteration or abolition when, in the judgment of those to whom the public interests were confided, those interests demanded such action. The assessments of benefits is presumed to be based upon the recognized power of the state and its agencies to modify or destroy the improvement."

It has been suggested by counsel for the appellants that the question as to whether there has been an injury is one for the jury under proper instructions. The question has, with but few, if any, exceptions, arisen upon demurrer to the petition, as it does in this case. A statement of the facts submitted, and tested by the rules of pleading and principles of law, which otherwise would be given as charges to the jury, constitute the case, and call for judicial determination as a question of law. As to whether one whose access was not cut off by the vacation of a part of a street may recover has been expressly held to be a question of law. East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, and Stanwood v. Malden, supra. It should be conceded, of course, that, if legal injury is pleaded, the degree of that injury, in ascertaining the amount of recovery, may be submitted to the jury, but as to whether a legal injury is pleaded is a question of law for the court. In the absence of authority from other states, there could be no escape from the conclusion that our court has gone so far in the direction we have shown as to deny a recovery by the appellants. They have ample means of access to their property, and the vacations complained of do not affect the access to their lot front, but are remote from it. If they have suffered in the depreciation of the value of their property by the inconvenience of the public travel to reach it, or of the appellants to reach other parts of the city, that inconvenience is suffered alike by all who may desire to go to the appellants' property, or from that property to other parts of the city. It is therefore an injury suffered in common by the appellants and the public in general, though the degree of appellants' injury may be, and probably is, the greater.

We conclude that the circuit court did not err in sustaining the appellee's demurrer to the complaint, and the judgment is affirmed.

Howard, J., concurring:

I am of opinion that the owner of real estate abutting upon a street or highway should be allowed such damages as he suffers for obstruction to the freedom of his access to his property, whether such obstruction is located immediately in front of his premises or not, and whether he is the owner of the fee in the street or not. I think, notwithstanding the decisions to the contrary, that such property owner suffers injury by such obstruction which is different in kind, as well as in degree, from that which is suffered by the general public. There can be no doubt, however, that the overwhelming weight of authority, at least in this state, is in favor of confining the award for such damages to those who are deprived, in whole or in part, of access to that section of the highway immediately abutting upon or in front of their own real estate. While, therefore, in this case, it is not a matter of doubt that appellants have suffered great damages on account of the obstruction complained of, yet, following the authorities, their damages constitute an injury which must be borne without compensation.

McCabe, J., dissenting:

I concur in the opinion as to McNabb street, but I do not concur as to the obstruction of Illinois street.

Rehearing denied June 14, 1895.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Elihu E. JACKSON et al., Appts.,

v.

Sally JACKSON.

(82 Md. 17.)

1. A marriage valid in the state in which it is contracted will be recognized as valid in another state if it does not contravene

NOTE.—For conflict of laws as to validity of marriage, see also Pennegar v. State (Tenn.) 2 L. R. A. 703; State v. Tutty (C. C. S. D. Ga.) 7 L. R. A. 50; and Com. v. Graham (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 578.

As to proof of foreign laws, see State v. Behrman (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 440.

31 L. R. A.

the declared policy of the positive law of the latter, although it may have been made without the form or ceremony required in the latter state.

2. A lawyer of another state who declares that he is familiar with the law there may be allowed to prove such law as to the requisites of a valid marriage.

3. It cannot be assumed on appeal that answers of witnesses were prejudicial when they did not appear on the record.

4. A witness cannot testify to the general reputation of a woman for chastity while living with an alleged husband from whom she has since separated, in order to repudiate a presumption of marriage.

5. A divided reputation in the community as to the marriage of persons cannot be proved.

(November 15, 1895.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Wicomico County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to establish plaintiff's right to administration upon the estate of R. Watson Jackson, deceased, as his only child. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. James E. Ellegood and John R. Pattison, for appellant:

The recognition of the laws of another state, in the administration of justice in this, is not a right stricti juris. It depends entirely upon comity, and in extending it courts are always careful that the statutes of their own state are not infringed to the injury of their own citizens.

Wilson v. Carson, 12 Md. 75; Story, Confli. L. 3d ed. § 106; Gardner v. Lewis, 7 Gill, 391.

The doctrine lex loci contractus is subject to the limitation of many exceptions, and also to the general principle that it must not be contra bonos mores, nor contrary to the settled policy and laws of the state, or to the best interest of the citizens of the state where they are to be enforced.

Story, Confli. L. §§ 87, 97, 98; Doe, Birtwhistle, v. Vardill, 5 Barn. & C. 488, 9 Bligh, N. R. 51; Munro v. Saunders, 6 Bligh, N. R. 468; Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 198.

The decisions in some of the states are so very loose as to admit the validity of a foreign marriage contracted in express violation of a divorce granted with a prohibition of marriage and also those in violation of an express statute.

Von Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505; Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 159, 8 Am. Dec. 131.

But this is not the law of Maryland and some other states.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Divorce, p. 941; Elliott v. Elliott, 38 Md. 868; Kinney v. Com. 30 Gratt. 868, 32 Am. Rep. 690; State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 688.

In these cases the court holds that the form of entering into the contract of marriage is to be regulated by the lex loci contractus, but the essentials are to be regulated by the law of the country in which the parties are domiciled, or in which the matrimonial residence is.

Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 192; 8 Walt, Act. & Def. p. 634, § 11.

The policy and law of Maryland from its foundation as a state is that a marriage contract in the words of the present tense is not a marriage, and that cohabitation following such a contract is illicit.

Denison v. Denison, 85 Md. 861; Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 98.

The statute of Pennsylvania, declares that "all marriages shall be solemnized by taking each other for husband and wife before twelve sufficient witnesses," and the "certificate of the marriage registered."

Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Binn. 407; Com. v. Stump, 53 Pa. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 198.

Such a contract of marriage could only be valid, if at all, in Maryland, as to such rights as inhere in, and are vested by, the contract itself, but not as to such rights and capacities as are incidental only to the contract.

34 L. R. A.

Decouche v. Savetier, 8 Johns. Ch. 180, 8 Am. Dec. 478; Burge, Colonial & Foreign Laws, 111; Wrightman, Law of Marriage & Legitimacy; Somerville v. Lord Somerville, 5 Ves. Jr. 754; Story, Confli. L. chap. 12.

The plaintiff undertook to prove a formal marriage with "religious ceremony" at Chester. Having undertaken to prove this, she could not prove nor submit to the jury to find that there might have been a marriage at some other time and place, or a marriage per verba presentis, of which there was absolutely no proof.

Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 297; Blackburn v. Crawford, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 175, 18 L. ed. 186; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 590, § 13.

While, where the fact of the foreign marriage is proved, and the law not proved, it is sometimes presumed to be in conformance with the foreign law, yet there are cases which hold "that the special requirements of such law must be shown to have been complied with." 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, § 14, p. 531; Catherwood v. Caslon, 18 Mees. & W. 261; Smith v. Smith, 1 Tex. 621, 46 Am. Dec. 121; Reg. v. Smith, 14 U. C. Q. B. 565.

The affirmative or positive reputation to sustain a marriage is different from that which rebuts the presumption. There can be no such presumption except on a reputation that is general and not divided, for "a divided reputation amounts to no evidence."

Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 297; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 199.

There may be such a negative reputation, that is, there may be such general consensus of opinion of no marriage, as to make that general.

Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 629, 92 Am. Dec. 713.

But there is a middle or debatable ground between these two extremes, and if the opinion or reputation in the community be so divided as that the reputation is not general in a positive sense, then the general reputation fails and becomes no evidence.

White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 7 L. R. A. 804.

Messrs. E. Stanley Toadvin, George W. Bell, and Alonso L. Miles, for appellee:

Evidence of a "reputation of a reputation" is inadmissible.

Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 108.

The declarations of the deceased parents are admissible to prove marriage.

Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176.

Marriage may be proved by general reputation.

Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 92 Am. Dec. 713; Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 97; Wilson v. Merryman, 48 Md. 380.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is now before us for the second time. The first appeal is reported in 80 Md. 176. The legal principles applicable to the controversy were then laid down, and, upon a reversal of the judgment, the cause was remanded for a new trial. A new trial was had, resulting in the same verdict and judgment that were recorded on the first trial, and the same parties have again appealed who were the appellants on the former occasion. There was but a single issue involved, and that was whether the appellee is the legitimate daughter of Richard Watson Jackson, who died intestate some years ago. In passing on this issue, two juries in different counties have found by their verdicts that she is. The record now before us contains twelve bills of exception, but it will not be necessary to review them separately, because they form several distinct groups, presenting but few questions which require any discussion.

The alleged marriage of the appellee's mother and father, if it took place, as has been twice found by separate juries, took place in the state of Pennsylvania. The evidence relied on to establish this marriage was general reputation, cohabitation, and acknowledgment. The admissibility and sufficiency of such evidence to prove a marriage were fully considered on the former appeal, and we need not repeat here what was so recently decided there. There was no effort to prove as a distinct fact that the marriage had been performed with any religious ceremony. It is true that one of the witnesses, in giving the declarations of the parties, stated that they (the mother and father of the appellee) upon one occasion said they had been married by a minister of the gospel; but it must be borne in mind that the appellee, who was seeking to prove her legitimacy, did not set up a marriage of her parents at a particular place, by a particular form or ceremony. Had she done this, and failed, she would not have been at liberty to rely on general repute to establish the alleged marriage. Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251. Assuming there was no religious ceremony proved, or attempted to be proved, as there was not, it has been insisted with great zeal and earnestness that, even if the marriage found by the verdict of the jury to have been contracted and consummated in Pennsylvania were valid by the laws of that state, yet the legitimacy of the appellee, who was born in Pennsylvania, where her parents then lived, must be determined, not by the laws of that state, but by the laws of Maryland; and that if, therefore, the marriage were, by reason of the failure to show there had been some religious ceremony, one that would not, on that account, have been valid under the statutes of Maryland, the issue of such a marriage would in Maryland be illegitimate, even though the marriage of which that issue was the fruit were conceded to be perfectly valid in the state where it was contracted and consummated, and the case of Doe, Birtwhistle, v. Vardill, 5 Barn. & C. 488, was much pressed upon us to support that view. But that case, and others founded on the same settled principle, are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. It is a maxim as old as the common law that hæres legitimus est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. A marriage, if valid where solemnized, is, in general, valid everywhere, and, of necessity, the offspring of that marriage would be treated as legitimate, wherever the marriage itself would be regarded as valid. But a local statute which makes an illegitimate child, or a child born out of wedlock, legitimate upon certain prescribed conditions, such as the subsequent marriage of the parents, and the recognition of the child as theirs, can have no extraterritorial operation, and therefore cannot give to such child in another jurisdiction an inheritable status not accorded to it by the law of the latter jurisdiction. By the law of England, a child born out of wedlock was a bastard. By the law of Scotland, the subsequent marriage of the father and the mother, and their recognition of the child as theirs, legitimated the child. But that statute could not operate upon real estate in England, where the law gave to such a marriage no effect as legitimating prior born children. The same principle was decided in Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, and Smith v. Derr, 84 Pa. 126, 75 Am. Dec. 641. We have said that in general a marriage valid where performed is valid everywhere. To this broad rule there are, however, exceptions. "These exceptions or modifications of the general rule may be classified as follows: First, marriages which are deemed contrary to the law of nature, as generally recognized in Christian countries; second, marriages which the local law-making power has declared shall not be allowed any validity. . . . To the first class belong those which involve polygamy and incest; and in the sense in which the term 'incest' is used are embraced only such marriages as are incestuous according to the generally accepted opinion of Christendom, which relates only to persons in direct line of consanguinity, and brothers and sisters. Thesecond class, i. e., those prohibited in terms by the statute, presents difficulties that are not always easy of solution, and have led to conflicting decisions. This class may be subdivided into two classes: First, where the statutory prohibition relates to form, ceremony, and qualification, it is held that compliance with the law of the place of marriage is sufficient, and its validity will be recognized, not only in other states generally, but in the state of the domicile of the parties, even where they have left their own state to marry elsewhere, for the purpose of avoiding the laws of their domicile. Instead of being called a subdivision of the second class of exceptions, it would be more accurate to say that it is an exception to the exception, and falls within the operation of the general rule first announced, of 'valid where performed, valid everywhere.' To the second subdivision of the second class of exceptions belong cases which, prohibited by statute, may or may not embody distinctive state policy, as affecting the morals or good order of society." Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, s. c., with copious notes, 2 L. R. A. 703; State v. Tutty, 41 Fed. Rep. 758, 7 L. R. A. 50; Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 198; Com. v. Graham, 157 Mass. 78, 16 L. R. A. 578. It is obvious, then, as there is no statute in Maryland declaring that a marriage of whose existence there is no other proof than general reputation shall be void, and as, at most, the statutory provisions relative to the methods of solemnizing marriages in Maryland relate to form and ceremony only,—the courts of this state will recognize the Pennsylvania marriage as valid, if that marriage is valid by and under the laws of the latter commonwealth, and does not contravene the declared policy of our own positive law. We are not to be understood as speaking of marriages tolerated elsewhere, but denounced by our own positive state policy as affecting the morals or good order of society. Such marriages, however regarded elsewhere, would not be treated as valid here. For instance, the statutes of Maryland peremptorily forbid the marriage of a white person and a negro, and declare all such marriages forever void. It is therefore the declared policy of this state to prohibit such marriages. Though these marriages may be valid elsewhere, they will be absolutely void here, so long as the statutory inhibition remains unchanged. But the question before us does not belong to such a category. At most, all that is asserted against the validity of the alleged marriage of the appellee's parents has reference to form or ceremony, and these, as we have seen, do not fall within any of the exceptions to the general rule that a marriage valid where performed is valid everywhere. These views, merely supplementing what we said in 80 Md., sufficiently answer the objection to, and the criticisms upon, the instructions granted by the court below at the instance of the appellee; and, without going into a further examination of these instructions, we content ourselves with saying there was no error committed in giving them.

The rejected prayers of the appellants were properly refused. The whole law of the case was fully, fairly, and clearly put before the jury in the instructions given at the instance of both parties. The hypothesis assumed in the appellants' second prayer, that the intercourse between the appellee's mother and father was illicit in the beginning, was not supported by a particle of evidence, and it would have been error to allow vague conjectures to be indulged in by the jury on that subject. The third prayer was faulty in submitting to the jury to find that the appellee undertook to prove that a marriage took place between her father and mother at Chester, Pennsylvania. The record does not show that she set up any such marriage. As already mentioned, there was some allusion by a witness to a statement made by the parents of the appellee as to the place where they were married; but the appellee never attempted to assert that a marriage was actually solemnized at Chester. These observations dispose of all the questions raised by the twelfth exception.

This brings us to the eleven exceptions involving the rulings of the court on questions of evidence. The first exception was taken to the ruling of the court allowing a witness to prove the law of Pennsylvania as to the requisites of a valid marriage in that state in the years 1872 and 1873. The witness was a lawyer of that state, and had deposed that he was familiar with the law there. We think, under repeated adjudications, he was competent to give evidence. Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176. With reference to the second, third, and sixth exceptions it is only necessary to say that the answers of the witnesses are not set forth in the record, and we are therefore unable to decide whether, even if the questions were conceded to be inadmissible, any injury was done to the appellants. Where the answers are not given, it cannot be assumed that they were prejudicial to the appellant. If not prejudicial, they could cause no injury, and, unless injury and error both appear, there is no ground for reversal. The question objected to in the fourth exception was not competent. It appeared that, after the father and mother of the appellee had lived together several years, and after the birth of the appellee, they separated. In the fourth exception a witness was asked whether he knew the general reputation of the appellee's mother, after the separation, for chastity while she and Jackson were living together. While evidence of her general reputation for chastity before the alleged marriage, and during the period she lived with Jackson as his reputed wife, was admissible to rebut the presumption of marriage (Jackson v. Jackson, supra), it was manifestly irrelevant to adduce evidence of such a reputation after the parties had separated, and had ceased to live together. As offered, it would have been allowing evidence of a reputation that she had had a reputation for the want of chastity at some antecedent time. It was not evidence of a general reputation for unchasteness, but evidence of a reputation that she had had such a reputation. It was consequently not evidence of a reputation at all. For the same reason, there was no error in the ruling complained of in the eighth exception. The fifth exception was abandoned. The objection urged to the evidence set forth in the seventh and ninth exceptions goes to the value, and not to the admissibility, of the evidence. If admissible, as it was, its value was for the jury. The tenth and eleventh exceptions present the only question remaining to be considered. In the tenth a witness was asked: "Do you know of any reputation in the community of Salisbury on the subject of their marriage at the time they were living together? If yes, was that a general reputation, or a divided reputation?" In the eleventh the question objected to was: "Was there or not a divided reputation in the community of Salisbury as to the subject of their being married, while they lived together as man and wife?" Both of these questions were excluded. A reputation, to be a provable reputation at all, must be a general reputation. It may be either one of two opposites; for instance, either good or bad. It cannot be intermediate,—that is, partly one, and partly the other; for that would not be general, and there would then be no general reputation either way. If it is generally good or generally bad, or, as applicable to the case at bar, if a man and woman are generally reputed to be married, or if the converse is generally asserted, a general reputation, one way or the other, exists; and of a general reputation, and none other, the law allows evidence to be given. But, if it be not general, then, obviously, it does not exist as a fact, and evidence cannot be received to show a partial, limited, or qualified reputation. When the courts employ the term "divided reputation," it is not meant that an individual can have such a thing as two opposite general reputations at the same time. A condition of that sort is an impossibility. A reputation cannot be general if it is not general, and no reputation of a marriage but a general reputation is competent evidence to establish marriage. General reputation, whether affirmative or negative, is a fact to be proved,

Like any other fact within the knowledge of witnesses, by the witnesses who knew it. If it exists at all, it exists as a fact. That which goes to make it up is hearsay, but that which the hearsay does make up is a fact. Now, when parties are generally reputed to be man and wife, the general reputation thus asserted is a fact. If the witness called to establish that fact does not know that such a general reputation prevails in the community, he does not know the party's general reputation on that subject, and of course he can give no evidence of it. Necessarily, the method to disprove such an asserted fact must be by witnesses equally competent to speak; and hence, unless the witness knows, or can say, that the particular person has no general reputation on that particular subject, he cannot testify that no general reputation exists. A divided reputation, which is but the result of conflicting evidence as to a general reputation, is not a distinct, substantive, provable fact, for it is a mere deduction from proved facts. The existence of a diversity of opinion is one of the means by which a witness may know there is no general reputation, but this means of knowledge, apart from the fact that there is or is not a general reputation, and as a totally independent circumstance, is not the thing to be proved.

Hence to ask the witness whether there is a divided reputation is to ask him, not whether he knows a provable fact,—a general reputation, one way or the other,—but merely what is one source of knowledge, without reference to whether he possesses the knowledge itself. He may testify, if he can, that the parties were generally reputed not to be married, or, having equal means of knowing that they had a general reputation as other witnesses who have testified that the parties did have such a general reputation, he has never heard it discussed or spoken of. In the one instance he would testify to a fact, just as the witnesses who deposed in the opposite way; in the other instance, he would depose to facts which, if believed by the jury, would tend to discredit the evidence to establish a general reputation; but in neither instance could he be permitted to say that there was a divided reputation, for that is nothing more than the result of the witness's conclusion from his own comparison of conflicting opinions. There was therefore no error committed by the rulings in these exceptions. Finding no error in any of the rulings excepted to, they will be affirmed.

Rulings affirmed, with costs in this court, and cause remanded.

Rehearing denied.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE, ex rel. H. W. CHILDS, Attorney General, et al.,

v.

John COPELAND.

(...Minn.....)

- *1. Held, a certain local option law granting charter powers to all the cities of a certain class, to take effect in each city only upon the adoption of the same by such city, contravenes §§ 33 and 34 of article 4 of the Constitution, prohibiting special legislation as to cities, and requiring all laws as to the same to be uniform in their operation throughout the state.
2. Held, further, a special law relating to cities cannot be partially repealed by a special law, and the same result cannot be accomplished by a local option law which has merely the same effect.
3. Held, accordingly, that chapter 228, Laws 1895, is unconstitutional.
4. The distinction noted between such a local option law, granting such charter powers, and a local option law granting power to adopt a mere by-law or ordinance, the provisions of which are prescribed by the legislature.

(November 25, 1895.)

PETITION for a writ of quo warranto to determine by what authority respondent claimed to hold the office of commissioner of public works. Writ of ouster issued.

*Headnotes by CANTY, J.

NOTE.—As to the power of the legislature to make a statute contingent on approval by vote of the people, see note to Re Municipal Suffrage to Women (Mass.) 23 L. R. A. 113.

34 L. R. A.

Messrs. H. W. CHILDS, Attorney General, and Eller, How, & Butler for relators.

Messrs. Walter L. Chapin and T. R. Palmer, for respondent.

Section 146 of chapter 228, ex proprio vigore, unqualifiedly repeals all general laws relating to the subject-matter of the act, as to all cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants.

Chapter 228, Laws 1895, stands alone as the only general law so far as its subject-matter extends, which is applicable to cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants.

It makes cities of that size a class by themselves for the purpose of the legislation embraced by the act. The formation of such a class is uniformly sustained as constitutional.

McCormick v. West Duluth, 47 Minn. 273; Re Norton, 61 Minn. 542; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 981; State v. Clayton, 58 N. J. L. 277; Mortland v. State, Christian, 52 N. J. L. 521; State v. Warner, v. Hoagland, 51 N. J. L. 67; Re Sewer Assessment for Pussau, 54 N. J. L. 158; Re Haynes, Id. 6; State, Atty. Gen., v. Miller, 100 Mo. 439; State. Maggard, v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606; Edmunds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L. R. A. 735; State, Oblinger, v. Spaulde, 37 Minn. 322; State, Atty. Gen., v. Wall, 47 Ohio St. 499; State, Atty. Gen., v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L. R. A. 729; State, Courthouse & City Hall Comrs., v. Cooley, 56 Minn. 540; Tuttle v. Polk, 92 Iowa, 433; Hunzinger v. State, 39 Neb. 635.

It is competent for the legislature to make the enforcement of a law relative to municipal affairs dependent on the will of the municipality.

State, Tuley, v. Simons, 32 Minn. 548; State, Hahn, v. Young, 29 Minn. 551; Anderson v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182;

State, Merrick, v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 38 Minn. 235; State, Tracy, v. Cooley (Minn.) 68 N. W. 66; State v. Cooke, 24 Minn. 247, 31 Am. Rep. 344; Johnson v. Martin, 75 Tex. 38; State v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149; Orange County Law Library Trustees v. Orange County Supers. 99 Cal. 571; Haney v. Bartow County Comrs. 91 Ga. 770; Reading v. Savage, 124 Pa. 328.

A law is general and valid, notwithstanding it is not mandatory, on cities preserving their charters or special laws, but allows those cities to retain their local charter laws until they choose to come under the general law.

Road in Cheltenham Twp. 140 Pa. 136; Com., Klugh, v. Lyter, 162 Pa. 50; Evans v. Phillips, 117 Pa. 226; Com. v. Reynolds, 137 Pa. 389.

The question is not, Does the fact that the law may be put into effect only in part of the cities of the class affect the right to refer the adoption of the law, generally considered? but, Does the result of such reference, otherwise rightful in itself, make the law special and obnoxious to the constitutional amendment of 1892?

It does not have that effect.

Reading v. Savage, 124 Pa. 328; Re Cleveland, 53 N. J. L. 188, 7 L. R. A. 431; State, Maggard, v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606; Haney v. Bartow County Comrs. 91 Ga. 770.

If the law is such that applying to all cities of a class it puts it within the power of such cities to come under uniform regulations as to the subject-matter in hand, it tends to uniformity, and is general in the constitutional sense. Such a construction leaves cities free to act under prior special legislation as to any particular matter, until they see fit to come within the general provisions of the new law.

Evans v. Phillips, 117 Pa. 226; Vacation of Henry Street, 123 Pa. 346; Com. v. Reynolds, 137 Pa. 389; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716.

Canty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Chapter 228, Laws 1895, is an act general in form, entitled "An Act to Provide for Departments of Public Works, and the Making of Public Improvements in Cities of Over 100,000 Inhabitants." It provides that such department shall consist of three branches: (1) An engineering department; (2) a commissioner of public works; and (3) a board of park commissioners. It provides that the head of the engineering department, or city engineer, shall be appointed by the mayor on the 2d Tuesday in June each even-numbered year, shall hold his office for two years, and shall appoint his assistants and the other employees under him. § 2. It also provides that the commissioner of public works shall be appointed by the mayor on the same Tuesday, and shall hold his office for two years. § 3. This commissioner is to have charge of all improvements which the city council may order. Under the provisions of the statute, he is a standing arbitrator or referee, to award all damages in condemnation proceedings instituted by him for the city and to assess a special tax on property specially benefited to pay such damages. The act provides for the condemnation of property for many different city uses, and provides the mode of procedure. It also provides for the collection of all taxes assessed for benefits which may become delinquent, by proceedings in the district court. §§ 4-183. It is also provided that the board of park commissioners shall consist of four members, to be appointed by the mayor, and whose term of office shall be four years, one to be appointed each year. This board is to have charge of the parks and parkways of the city, and the improvements thereon. §§ 115-145. Section 146 provides: "This act shall be enforced in any city whenever the common council of any such city embraced within its provisions shall adopt the same by a majority vote of all the members; . . . and all acts and parts of acts in any charter or special law relating to said city shall be thereby, as to said city, repealed in so far as the same relate to the subject-matter of this act. . . . All general acts and parts of acts relating to the subject-matter of this act, so far as they apply to any city affected by this act, are hereby repealed." The only two cities in this state having over 100,000 inhabitants have been operating under charters consisting of various special laws enacted before the amendments to the Constitution prohibiting special legislation were adopted. The city of St. Paul has for many years had a board of public works, provided for by some of these special laws, which board consisted of five members, whose duties were somewhat similar to those imposed upon the commissioner of public works by said chapter 228, Laws 1895. On July 27, 1895, the common council of St. Paul adopted this act, in the manner provided by § 146 thereof. The mayor appointed the respondent commissioner of public works under the act. But the members of the old board of public works (being all of the relators herein, except the attorney general) refused to surrender their offices. A writ of quo warranto was issued herein out of this court, to determine by what warrant the respondent claims the office of commissioner aforesaid.

It is claimed by relators that said chapter 228 is a special law, and contravenes the constitutional amendment of 1891 (§§ 33 and 34, art. 4), and is unconstitutional, for the reason that it applies only to such cities as adopt it, and may be adopted by some cities of the class, and not by others, and therefore may not be of uniform operation throughout the state, as required by said amendment. In order that the decision in this case may be fully understood, it is necessary to examine somewhat carefully the question of the constitutionality of local option laws. It is generally held that a law cannot be passed to take effect if the voters of the whole state so decide, and that such a law cannot be upheld on the theory that it is a law passed to take effect upon a condition. The passing of such a law is merely an attempt to delegate legislative power. Cooley, Const. Law, *120-124. See also State, Hahn, v. Young, 29 Minn. 552. But, except where it is held to be prohibited by constitutional provisions prohibiting special legislation, it is generally held that, where municipalities have a special or peculiar interest in the law, it may be passed to take effect in such a municipality when accepted by some authoritative body representing the municipality. Cooley, Const. Law, *118-120.

Said constitutional amendment of 1891 provides:

"Sec. 33. . . . The legislature shall pass no local or special law regulating the affairs of or incorporating, erecting, or changing the lines of any county, city, . . . : provided, however, that the inhibitions of local or special laws in this section shall not be construed to prevent the passage of general laws on any of the subjects enumerated. The legislature may repeal any existing special or local law, but shall not amend, extend, or modify any of the same.

"Sec. 34. The legislature shall provide general laws for the transaction of any business that may be prohibited by § 1 of this amendment, and all such laws shall be uniform in their operation throughout the state."

Under these constitutional provisions, is a local option law which gives to each of a class of cities the right to accept or reject certain charter powers constitutional? Is such a general local option law one having a uniform operation throughout the state? How can a law which goes into effect in one city, and does not go into effect in another city of the same class, have a uniform operation throughout the state? It seems to us that the legislature cannot bring about diverse charter powers in different cities by enacting any such local option law which may result in giving different cities different charter powers, unless the same result can be accomplished by a direct, unconditional law. The mere possibility that all the cities of the class may adopt the law will not save it. It must appear at the time the law is passed that it will have a uniform operation throughout the state; that is, that it will take effect in all cities of the class, and that the class is a proper one. The uniform operation of the law cannot be left to any future contingency.

Let us now consider the nature of local option legislation with reference to this constitutional amendment. There is a vast difference between delegating to some local body the power to adopt a charter and the power to adopt by-laws or ordinances. Suppose, for instance, that a law, general in form, was passed as the charter of the cities of a certain class; that this law created some local body in each city, and gave it generally a large number of designated powers (such as are usually given to such cities by their charters), and authorized this local body to exercise these powers as it saw fit, to designate such other officers as it saw fit, and to define their powers and manner of election or appointment, but provided nothing more in detail. Such a charter, even for the class of larger cities, might be written on four or five pages. But would such a nebulous, skeleton charter be constitutional? Would it not be likely to result in a greater diversity of local laws, be less uniform in its operation, and far less a limitation on the local authorities, than a law, or three or four laws, general in form, which provided three or four different kinds of charters, and left it to each local body to adopt which it saw fit? Yet it is universally conceded that the latter method of providing charters or charter powers is a most palpable evasion of the constitutional provisions prohibiting special legislation. Then, if the latter method of providing city charters is unconstitutional, surely the former method must be. Certainly, the legislature delegates less to the local body when all the provisions of the charter or local law are prescribed, and the local body has only the power to accept or reject it, than when the whole subject is delegated generally to the local body. Then it is clear that, while the general power to adopt ordinances or by-laws may be delegated to such a local body, no general power to adopt a charter or charter provisions can be so delegated. It also follows that if the legislature can, by a general law, delegate to the local body the general power to adopt by-laws or ordinances on a particular subject, it may, by general law, limit that power by prescribing the provisions which the by-law shall contain, leaving to the local body merely the power to accept or reject the by-law. Then, whether or not it is constitutional to delegate, by a general local option law, the power to adopt or reject a prescribed charter or charter provision, it is clearly constitutional to delegate in this manner the power to adopt or reject a prescribed by-law or ordinance.

It is a well-established principle that the Constitution will be interpreted with reference to the laws and customs prevailing at the time of its adoption, and the distinction between what is a delegation of power to adopt a charter or charter provisions, and what is a delegation of power to adopt a by-law or ordinance, must be determined largely by ascertaining what had usually been the custom in this state up to and at the time this constitutional amendment was adopted. Undoubtedly, the line of this distinction is somewhat ill-defined. But, if there is a doubt as to the constitutionality of a law, that doubt must be resolved in favor of its constitutionality. Therefore, if, by reference to the practice heretofore prevailing, it is doubtful whether the delegation of power is one to adopt charter provisions, or one to adopt mere by-laws or ordinances, that doubt must be resolved in favor of holding the law delegating such power constitutional. There is another distinction to be considered, and that is the distinction between what the legislature can practically do and what it cannot. The main reason for the existence of ordinances and by-laws has always been that they regulated local subjects and matters of detail which the legislature could not directly or properly regulate by the passage of permanent laws, either general or special. This old principle must be applied to new instances which will continually arise under the constitutional amendments prohibiting special legislation. The regulation of such matters may always be delegated in general terms to local bodies, and it necessarily follows that more limited powers may be thus delegated by the passage of local option laws for the regulation of these matters. These are distinctions which have sometimes been overlooked in the decisions of those states having similar constitutional provisions. Let us notice some of these provisions, and the decisions under them.

The Constitution of New Jersey provides that "the legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws regulating the internal affairs of towns [held to include cities] and counties." Amend. art. 4, § 7, ¶ 11. It is held by the courts of that state that those restrictions were not intended to secure uniformity in the operation of laws, and that local option laws, otherwise general in form, giving to municipalities the right to accept or reject the provisions of the law, are constitutional. State, Paul, v. Gloucester County Circuit Ct. Judge, 50 N. J. L. 585, 1 L. R. A. 86; State, Warner, v. Hoagland, 51 N. J. L. 62, 72; Re Cleveland, 52 N. J. L. 188, 7 L. R. A. 431. The Constitution of Pennsylvania provides that "the general assembly shall not pass any local or special law . . . regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships." Article 8, § 7. Under this provision, it is held unconstitutional to delegate to municipalities the right to accept or reject such a local option law. Scranton School Dist's Appeal, 113 Pa. 176; Frost v. Cherry, 122 Pa. 417; Com. v. Denworth, 145 Pa. 172. Neither the Constitution of Pennsylvania nor of New Jersey expressly requires that the law shall have a uniform operation throughout the state, but the Pennsylvania court regards the prohibition of special legislation as equivalent to a requirement of uniformity, while the New Jersey court does not. The Constitution of Florida provides: "The legislature shall not pass special or local laws in any of the following cases, . . . regulating county, township, and municipal business; regulating the election of county, township, and municipal officers." Article 3, § 20. "In all cases enumerated in the preceding section, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state." Article 3, § 21. "The legislature shall establish a uniform system of county, township, and municipal government." Article 3, § 24. Under these provisions, the supreme court of that state has held repeatedly that a general local option law for the organization of cities is not a law of uniform operation throughout the state, and therefore unconstitutional. McConihe v. State, McMurray, 17 Fla. 288; State, Haley, v. Stark, 18 Fla. 255; Ex parte Wells, 21 Fla. 280. The Constitutions of Iowa and Indiana each prohibit special legislation as to certain matters, and provide that all laws relating to these matters "shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state." Iowa Const. art. 3, § 30; Ind. Const. art. 4, § 119. In Maize v. State, 4 Ind. 342, it was held that, by reason of such constitutional provisions, a local option law which, by its terms, went into effect, and prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquor, in such townships as adopted it, is unconstitutional. This decision was approved in Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 228, 227. The supreme court of Iowa held likewise, under their constitutional prohibitions, in Geebrick v. State, 5 Iowa, 492. In Dalby v. Wolf, 14 Iowa, 228, the court sustained a law authorizing the people of the several counties to decide, by a majority vote, to restrain hogs and sheep from running at large. The court distinguishes the case from that in 5 Iowa, on the ground that "they [the voters] only determine whether a certain thing shall be done under the law, and not whether the law shall take effect," as was provided by the law held invalid in 5 Iowa. From what has been said, it will appear that there is but little in the distinction.

The position of the Indiana and Iowa courts, that a law which can only take effect in each municipality on being adopted by the same contravenes these constitutional provisions, is, in our opinion, undoubtedly correct as applied to a proper matter. But we are of the opinion that the prohibition or licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors is not such a matter. These constitutional provisions do not require the legislature to do what is impracticable, what they have never been able to do,—to effectively regulate the liquor traffic without regard to locality or local sentiment. Experience has demonstrated that prohibition can only be enforced where there is a strong public sentiment behind it, and there is a great difference between the amount of this sentiment in different localities in the same state. Again, this sentiment changes from time to time in the same locality. Then the legislature have a right to say that the question of license or prohibition in each locality is not a matter for them to decide, or a matter to be settled by any statute fixing absolutely or permanently the status in this respect of the whole state or of the different localities. In the case of Frost v. Cherry, 122 Pa. 417, the court held a local option fence law, to take effect in each county when adopted by the voters of that county, unconstitutional, as special legislation. It seems to us that the same reason of impracticability applies to a fence law as to a license or prohibition law. It is often utterly impracticable for the legislature to enact an expedient unconditional fence law. Whether the farms should be fenced, and the stock allowed to run at large, in any particular locality, depends wholly on the very complex local conditions, which determine what is for the best interests of the majority of the people of the locality, and is a question which each locality should usually be allowed to settle for itself.

The distinction is between what is properly legislation and what is properly and necessarily a local by-law. That it is not a delegation of legislative power to grant to some designated body powers which the legislature cannot themselves practically or efficiently exercise is laid down in State, Minneapolis, v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 248, 251; and in Anderson v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 194, 195. This distinction between what the legislature can do and what they cannot exists in the nature of things, and has not been eradicated by the constitutional provisions prohibiting special legislation, and requiring legislation of uniform operation. It seems to us that several of the courts above mentioned have been misled by ignoring this, and failing to consider that legislation containing a local option provision may in fact be merely a grant of power to each local body to adopt or reject a prescribed by-law, and that, by prescribing the contents of the by-law, the legislature have really granted less power to each local body than if they granted the power to pass any by-law the local body saw fit concerning the particular subject-matter.

Let us now proceed to apply these principles to the case at bar. The most of the powers provided for by said chapter 228, Laws 1895, are distinctively charter powers; that is, they pertain to matters which are almost invariably regulated by city charters, and not by the by-laws passed under such charters. Then, the legislature cannot do indirectly what they cannot do directly; and this act is not constitutional unless the diverse results which may be brought about by the adoption of the act by one city, and the rejection of it by another, can be brought about by direct, unconditional legislation. There are two cities in the state having more than 100,000 inhabitants. Can the legislature, by a direct act, provide that said chapter 228 shall apply to the one city, but not to the other? The part of § 146 above quoted provides that, when the act is adopted by any city, "all acts and parts of acts in any charter or special law relating to said city shall be thereby repealed as to said city, so far as the same relate to the subject-matter of this act." Will not the adoption of this act by one city, and not by the other, have the effect of a partial repeal of a special law by a special law? Clearly, such a special law, partially repealing such a special law, is unconstitutional. It will be readily seen by anyone familiar with the charter law of the two cities in question that the adoption of chapter 228 by either city will, if the law is valid, repeal a part of each of several of the special acts which make up the charter of that city, leaving the other part of each special law to stand, and leaving all of the special laws of the other city on the same subject wholly unaffected. The legislature may, by a general, unconditional law, expressly repeal all special laws so far as inconsistent with it, though this may have the effect of leaving the other part of one or more special laws in force and unrepealed. State, Baker, v. Sullivan, 63 Minn. 288. A general law is also constitutional which does not, by implication or otherwise, repeal the special laws in conflict with it. Re Opening Linwood Place (Minn.) 67 N. W. 77. The reason of this is that, although the constitutional amendment requires the general law to be uniform in its operation, the amendment does not, as this court construes it, require this uniformity to be brought about immediately. Every step taken must be in the direction of a general law of uniform operation, but the legislature need not at once, or at any one time, take all the steps necessary to bring about this result. Again, the amendment provides that "the legislature may repeal an existing special law, but shall not amend, extend, or modify the same." This allows a special law to be totally repealed by a special law, and, as held in the Sullivan Case, it allows the partial repeal or modification by a general law of all special laws so far as inconsistent with it. Such a general law is not special legislation at all. But, as before stated, this constitutional provision does not permit a special law to be partly repealed or modified by a special law. Then, the legislature cannot, by a direct, unconditional special law (either included in a general law or enacted alone) repeal the parts of the special laws pertaining to St. Paul, attempted to be repealed by the enactment of chapter 228 and the adoption of the same by the council of that city. As before stated, if the legislature cannot do this directly, by unconditional legislation, they cannot do it indirectly, by legislation containing such a local option provision. Then is our conclusion that chapter 228, aforesaid, is unconstitutional and void; and therefore the claim of respondent, that he holds an official position under it, cannot be sustained.

*Let a writ of certiorari issue.*

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Annie MITCHELL, Respt.,

v.

ROCHESTER RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appt.

(151 N. Y. 107.)

1. No recovery can be had for a miscarriage resulting from fright caused by the negligence of another.
2. Miscarriage resulting from fright caused by the negligence of another is not the proximate result of the negligence.

(December 1, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming an order of the Monroe County Circuit setting aside a nonsuit and granting a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bacon, Briggs, Beckley, & Bissell, for appellant:

To make out a cause of action it must be established, not only that a defendant was guilty of a negligent act, but that the injury was produced by a cause which might naturally and reasonably be expected to follow from the negligent act. Negligence is the proximate cause of an injury, within the legal meaning of that term, when the injury is one which is the natural and probable result of the negligence, and one that ought, naturally, to have been foreseen.

Boswell, Civil Liability, 184, 185; Whart. Neg. Causal Connection, §§ 78-155; Tutwin v.

NOTE.—For fright as a basis of a cause of action, see note to Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 603.

34 L. R. A.

As to damages for miscarriage, see Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. (Mich.) 32 L. R. A. 143, and note.

Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154; Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 158, 52 Am. Rep. 12.

Where the only injury which a person sustains by reason of the negligence of another is a severe fright, an action will not lie for damages on account of such negligence.

Lehman v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 Hun, 355; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666; Victorian Railway Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 303; Rock v. Denis, M. L. R. 4 Super. Ct. 356; Johnson v. Wells, F. & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90; Mayne, Damages, Wood's Notes, pp. 70, 74; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451.

The rule in regard to damages occasioned by fright or mental suffering seems to have been universally confined to those cases where there was an actual physical injury as the result of negligence, and then the pain, the mental suffering, and the fright may be taken into consideration in estimating the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff, but in all these cases the foundation of the action has been the physical injury itself, which was the direct result of the defendant's negligence.

Warren v. Boston & M. R. Co. 168 Mass. 484.

The fact that plaintiff had stopped the car and was about to become a passenger did not make her a passenger.

Platt v. Forty Second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 2 Hun, 124; Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 820, 16 L. R. A. 490; Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. 65 Conn. 201, 29 L. R. A. 297.

The tendency of the courts in some of the western and southern states to extend the rule of liability in actions against corporations, and to introduce a myriad of new actions having their origin in the so-called law of negligence, is well illustrated by a class of cases beginning with SoRelle v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805, overruled in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 563, 46 Am. Rep. 278, and the overruling case itself overruled by subsequent cases in the same court.

This doctrine is expressly repudiated in a large number of cases which have arisen in the Federal courts.

Chase v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 554, 10 L. R. A. 484; Wilcox v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 264, 17 L. R. A. 804, 8 U. S. App. 118; Tyler v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 54 Fed. Rep. 634; Kester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 603; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood, 57 Fed. Rep. 471, 21 L. R. A. 706, 13 U. S. App. 817.

The doctrine of the Texas cases is also repudiated in the following cases:

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 18 L. R. A. 859; Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 88 Ga. 763, 17 L. R. A. 430; Connell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 116 Mo. 84, 20 L. R. A. 172; Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 116 Mo. 617; Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 58 Minn. 252, 25 L. R. A. 406. See also Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607.

Mr. Norris Bull, for respondent:

Negligence consists in: (1) a legal duty to use care; (2) a breach of that duty; (3) the absence of distinct intention to produce the precise damage, if any, which actually follows.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 5.

With this negligence, in order to sustain a civil action there must concur: (1) damage to the plaintiff; (2) a natural and continuous sequence uninterruptedly connecting the breach of duty with the damage, as cause and effect.

Where an injury to a passenger occurs through a defect in the construction, or working, or management of the vehicle, or anything pertaining to the services which the carrier ought to control, a presumption of negligence arises from the happening of the accident, and upon such proof the burden will devolve upon the defendant to exonerate himself by showing the existence of causes beyond his control, unless evidence thereof appears as part of plaintiff's own case.

Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. 32 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Cahalin v. Cochran, 1 N. Y. S. R. 588; Palmer v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 120 N. Y. 170; Rigdon v. Allegany Lumber Co. 87 N. Y. S. R. 514; Kreuzer v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 88 N. Y. S. R. 461; Hobbrook v. Utica & S. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 236, 64 Am. Dec. 502; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 536, 75 Am. Dec. 258.

The plaintiff was a passenger upon defendant's railroad.

Grimes v. Pennsylvania Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 73; Gordon v. Grand Street & N. R. Co. 40 Barb. 546; Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. supra; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 488; Brien v. Bennett, 8 Car. & P. 724; Platt v. Forty-Second Street & G. S. F. R. Co. 2 Hun, 124; Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 820, 16 L. R. A. 490.

The negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury.

Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 364, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Ryan v. New York C. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 210, 91 Am. Dec. 49; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666; Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Martin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 62 Hun, 181; Pollett v. Long, 56 N. Y. 201; Gibney v. State, 187 N. Y. 1, 19 L. R. A. 365.

The consensus of opinion would seem to be that no recovery can be had for mere fright.

Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 303; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451; Hurley v. Berg, 1 Stark. 98; Victorian Railway Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. supra.

On the other hand, Hale v. Bonner, 52 Tex. 93, 14 L. R. A. 336, holds that damages may be recovered for mental anxiety.

But none of these cases are in point, inasmuch as in none of them does it appear that any other injury except mere fright was caused.

No case can be found where fright accompanied by physical injury is not the subject of recovery. The line between these two classes of cases is clearly and sharply drawn, and the rule of law contended for by the respondent is well settled by the following cases:

Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 7 L. R. A. 618; Barbee v. Reese, 60 Miss. 906; Struts v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 147; Illinois C. R. Co.

v. Latimer, 133 Ill. 163; Oliver v. La Valle, 36 Wis. 592; Pitpatrick v. Great Western R. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 645; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L. R. A. 203.

The fact that damages may be awarded for physical injury, although caused through the agency of mental disturbance set in operation by defendant's negligence, is analogous to the rule in the law of divorce, to the effect that even where "cruelty" as defined by statute is held necessarily to imply physical injury, impaired health being a physical injury is sufficient, though caused solely through the agency of mental suffering set in operation by the misconduct of the defendant.

Powelson v. Powelson, 22 Cal. 858; Kelly v. Kelly, 1 West. Coast Rep. 143; Bethune v. Bethune [1891] P. 205.

It is argued by the appellant that it should not be held responsible for an act which would not bring injurious results upon a woman in an ordinary condition. The fallacy of this reasoning is apparent. To a woman in an ordinary condition it would be damnum absque injuria. But the negligence of the defendant would exist just as much. It would simply be its good fortune to have occasioned no damage thereby.

Pollock v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 39 N. Y. S. R. 568, Affirmed 133 N. Y. 624, and 60 Hun, 584.

The law may award damages for physical injury to the person, although it was caused through the agency of mental disturbance set in operation by defendant's negligence.

Report of this case in 80 Abb. N. C. 362, 371, note.

Martin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case are few, and may be briefly stated. On the 1st day of April, 1891, the plaintiff was standing upon a crosswalk on Main street in the city of Rochester, awaiting an opportunity to board one of the defendant's cars which had stopped upon the street at that place. While standing there, and just as she was about to step upon the car, a horse car of the defendant came down the street. As the team attached to the car drew near, it turned to the right and came so close to the plaintiff that she stood between the horses' heads when they were stopped. She testified that from fright and excitement caused by the approach and proximity of the team she became unconscious, and also that the result was a miscarriage, and consequent illness. Medical testimony was given to the effect that the mental shock which she then received was sufficient to produce that result. Assuming that the evidence tended to show that the defendant's servant was negligent in the management of the car and horses, and that the plaintiff was free from contributory negligence, the single question presented is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover for the defendant's negligence which occasioned her fright and alarm, and resulted in the injuries already mentioned. While the authorities are not harmonious upon this question, we think the most reliable and better considered cases, as well as public policy, fully justify us in holding that the plaintiff cannot recover for injuries occasioned by fright, as there was no immediate personal injury. Lehman v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 Hun, 355; Victorian Railway Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666. The learned counsel for the respondent in his brief very properly stated that "the consensus of opinion would seem to be that no recovery can be had for mere fright," as will be readily seen by an examination of the following additional authorities. Haile v. Texas & P. R. Co. 60 Fed. Rep. 557, 23 L. R. A. 774; Joch v. Dankwardt, 85 Ill. 331; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood, 6 C. C. A. 482, 57 Fed. Rep. 471, 21 L. R. A. 706; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90; Allsop v. Allsop, 5 Hurlst. & N. 534; Johnson v. Wells, P. & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 303. If it be admitted that no recovery can be had for fright occasioned by the negligence of another, it is somewhat difficult to understand how a defendant would be liable for its consequences. Assuming that fright cannot form the basis of an action, it is obvious that no recovery can be had for injuries resulting therefrom. That the result may be nervous disease, blindness, insanity, or even a miscarriage, in no way changes the principle. These results merely show the degree of fright, or the extent of the damages. The right of action must still depend upon the question whether a recovery may be had for fright. If it can, then an action may be maintained, however slight the injury. If not, then there can be no recovery, no matter how grave or serious the consequences. Therefore the logical result of the respondent's concession would seem to be, not only that no recovery can be had for mere fright, but also that none can be had for injuries which are the direct consequences of it. If the right of recovery in this class of cases should be once established, it would naturally result in a flood of litigation in cases where the injury complained of may be easily feigned without detection, and where the damages must rest upon mere conjecture or speculation. The difficulty which often exists in cases of alleged physical injury, in determining whether they exist, and, if so, whether they were caused by the negligent act of the defendant, would not only be greatly increased, but a wide field would be opened for fictitious or speculative claims. To establish such a doctrine would be contrary to principles of public policy. Moreover, it cannot be properly said that the plaintiff's miscarriage was the proximate result of the defendant's negligence. Proximate damages are such as are the ordinary and natural results of the negligence charged, and those that are usual, and may, therefore, be expected. It is quite obvious that the plaintiff's injuries do not fall within the rule as to proximate damages. The injuries to the plaintiff were plainly the result of an accidental or unusual combination of circumstances, which could not have been reasonably anticipated, and over which the defendant had no control, and hence her damages were too remote to justify a recovery in this action. These considerations lead to the conclusion that no recovery can be had for injuries sustained by fright occasioned by the negligence of another, where there is no immediate personal injury.

The orders of the General and Special Terms should be reversed, and the order of the Trial Term granting a nonsuit, affirmed, with costs.

All concur except Haight, J., not sitting, and Vann, J., not voting.
Ordered accordingly.

NEVADA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Nevada

v.

C. H. ZICHFELD, App't,

(.....Nev.....)

1. A marriage by contract between parties competent to enter into that relation with each other is valid, under the act of November 23, 1861, making provisions as to licenses and the persons by whom marriages may be celebrated, but containing no express clause of nullity as to marriages otherwise contracted.

2. An invalid contract to dissolve a marriage between husband and wife is not admissible in his favor to show his good faith in contracting a later marriage, when charged with bigamy, under a statute which does not require any other criminal intent than is involved in entering into the prohibited marriage.

3. A man may be guilty of bigamy although he believes his former marriage is annulled, where a statute describes the offense as marrying again while a former husband or wife is living, without any specific provision as to criminal intent.

(November 19, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court of Washoe County convicting him of bigamy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messa. Curlier & Curlier, for appellant:

Under our law no person other than a minister of any religious society or congregation, within this state, who has obtained a license for that purpose, or any judge of the district court in his district, or justice of the peace in his county, is authorized to join persons together as husband and wife.

Nev. Gen. Stat. §§ 478, 481, 486.

The legislature of the state of Nevada did not intend to recognize what is known as common-law marriages.

Nev. Gen. Stat. 474, § 5.

The provision of the statute making the exception that all marriages shall be deemed to be valid although the ceremony is performed by a person not authorized to perform it, and prescribing how marriages shall be solemnized, precludes the contracting of the relationship in any other manner than as provided. The legislature, having made a provision specially legalizing marriages in certain excepted cases, must be held to have contemplated all others not entered into according to the manner provided for by the statute, and not within the exception, as void.

Beckerlin v. Beckerlin, 29 W. Va. 782; Com. v. Munson, 127 Mass. 466, 84 Am. Rep. 411; Norcross v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 425; Dunbarton v. Franklin, 19 N. H. 257; Re McLaughlin's Estate, 4 Wash. 570, 16 L. R. A. 699; Follansbee v. Wilbur, 14 Wash. 242; Stans v. Bailey, 9 Wash. 115.

The contract of separation was admissible for the purpose of showing that there was no intent on the part of the defendant to commit a crime.

State v. Gardner, 5 Nev. 377, and authorities therein cited.

Messrs. F. H. Norcross, District Attorney, and Robert M. Beatty, Attorney General, for the State.

Boniffield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was convicted in the district court of the second judicial district in and for Washoe county of the crime of bigamy, and appeals from the judgment of the court and an order denying his motion for new trial. The following facts are not disputed: In the year 1898, in said county, the appellant was married to Sophia Koser, by written contract, without the services of any of the persons authorized by the statute to join persons in marriage, or to solemnize marriages. Subsequently, and in 1895, the parties separated by mutual consent, and the appellant, while he was so married to Sophia Koser, and knowing that said Sophia was still alive, was formally married to Lauretta Bosford, by J. J. Linn, a justice of the peace of Washoe county.

There is no contention as to the sufficiency of said first marriage to constitute a valid marriage at the common law; but counsel for appellant contend that our statute concerning marriages has superseded the common law, and that all marriages not entered into in conformity to the provisions of the statute are null and void. It is well settled that under the common law the marriage relation may be formed by words of present assent (per verba de presentis), and without the interposition of any person lawfully authorized to solemnize marriages, or to join persons in marriage. The first act passed by our territorial legislature was an act entitled "An Act Adopting the Common Law." At the same session of the legislature, it passed the act relating to marriages, of which the following is § 1: "That marriage, so far as its validity in law is concerned, is a civil contract to which the consent of the parties capable in law of contracting is essential." (November 28, 1861.) Although this act contains provisions requiring a license, directing how and by whom marriages may be celebrated, or by whom persons may be joined in marriage, and prescribing other regulations in reference thereto, the statute contains no express clause of nullity, making void marriages contracted by mutual consent per verba de presentii, except a prior license is obtained, or solemnization had, in accordance with its provisions.

NOTE.—For intent as an element of crime, see note to People v. Flack (N. Y.) 11 L. R. A. 807. See also Fanning v. Chace (R. L.) 13 L. R. A. 124.

34 L. R. A.

Authorities: The Supreme Court of the United States in Meister v. Moore, 96 U. S. 76, 24 L. ed. 826 (opinion by Justice Strong), in construing the Michigan statute, which is substantially the same as ours, said: "It [the instruction] certainly withdrew from the consideration of the jury all evidence, if any there was, of informal marriage by contract per verba de presentii. That such a contract constitutes a marriage at common law there can be no doubt, in view of the adjudications made in this country from its earliest settlement to the present day. Marriage is everywhere regarded as a civil contract. Statutes in many of the states, it is true, regulate the mode of entering into the contract, but they do not confer the right. Hence they are not within the principle that where a statute creates a right, and provides a remedy for its enforcement, the remedy is exclusive. No doubt a statute may take away a common-law right; but there is always a presumption that the legislature has no such intention, unless it be plainly expressed. A statute may declare that no marriages shall be valid unless they are solemnized in a prescribed manner; but such an enactment is a very different thing from a law requiring all marriages to be entered into in the presence of a magistrate or a clergyman, or that it be preceded by license, or publication of banns, or be attested by witnesses. Such formal provisions may be construed as merely directory, instead of being treated as destructive of a common-law right to form the marriage relation by words of present assent. And such, we think, has been the rule generally adopted in construing statutes regulating marriage. Whatever directions they may give respecting its formation or solemnization, courts have usually held a marriage good at common law to be good notwithstanding the statutes, unless they contain express words of nullity. In many of the states, enactments exist very similar to the Michigan statute; but their object has manifestly been, not to declare what shall be requisite to the validity of a marriage, but to provide a legitimate mode of solemnizing it. They speak of the celebration of its rite, rather than of its validity, and they address themselves principally to the functionaries they authorize to perform the ceremony. In most cases the leading purpose is to secure a registration of marriages, and evidence by which marriages may be proved; for example, by certificate of a clergyman or magistrate, or by exemplification of the registry. In a small number of the states, it must be admitted, such statutes have been construed as denying validity to marriages not formed according to the statutory directions. . . .

As before remarked, the statutes are held merely directory, because marriage is a thing of common right, because it is the policy of the state to encourage it, and because, as has sometimes been said, any other construction would compel holding illegitimate the offspring of many parents conscious of no violation of law. The Michigan statute differs in no essential particular from those of other states which have generally been so construed. It does not declare marriages void which have not been entered into in the presence of a minister or magistrate. It does not deny validity to marriages which are good at common law. The most that can be said of it is that it contains implications of an intention that all marriages, except some particularly mentioned, should be celebrated in the manner prescribed. The 6th section declares how they may be solemnized. The 7th describes what shall be required of justices of the peace and ministers of the gospel before they shall solemnize any marriage. The 8th section declares that in every case, that is, whenever any marriage shall be solemnized in the manner described in the act, there shall be at least two witnesses present beside the minister or magistrate. The 9th, 10th, 11th, 16th, and 17th sections provide for certificates, registers, and exemplifications of records of marriages solemnized by magistrates and ministers. The 12th and 18th impose penalties upon justices and ministers joining persons in marriage contrary to the provisions of the act, and upon persons joining others in marriage, knowing that they are not lawfully authorized so to do. The 14th and 15th sections are those upon which most reliance is placed in support of the charge of the circuit court. The former declares that no marriage solemnized before any person professing to be a justice of the peace or minister of the gospel shall be deemed or adjudged to be void on account of any want of jurisdiction or authority in such supposed minister or justice, provided the marriage be consummated with a full belief on the part of the persons so married, or either of them, that they have been lawfully joined in marriage. This, it is argued, raises an implication that marriages not in the presence of a minister or justice, or one professing to be such, were intended to be declared void. But the implication is not necessarily so broad. It is satisfied if it reach not beyond marriages in the mode allowed by the act of the legislature. The 15th section exempts people called Quakers or Friends from the operation of the act. As to them the act gives no directions. From this, also, an inference is attempted to be drawn that lawful marriages of all other persons must be in the mode directed or allowed [by the statute]. We think the inference is not a necessary one. Both these sections (the 14th and the 15th), are to be found in the acts of other states, in which it has been decided that the statutes do not make invalid common-law marriages." We think that in the above opinion by Justice Strong a clear and proper construction of the statute is given.

Bishop says: "It was well observed by Lord Stowell that in a state of nature no forms need be added to an agreement of present marriage to render it complete. In the opinion of the Scotch people, and of the people of a part of our states, marriage, emphatically a thing of nature, is properly regulated by the law of nature. But in England, in other of our states, and largely in Continental Europe, civilization has undertaken to refine and improve nature's law, by denying marriage except under specified forms and ceremonies. The consequence of which is that shrewd rakes entrap single girls into nature's marriage; then, at their whim or exalted pleasure, cast them off, and leave a family of children under the disabilities and disgrace of bastardy." 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 885, 886. Bishop, after an extended review of the authorities on the subject which he cites, restates the doctrine recognized by the courts of nearly all the states having statutes similar to ours, as follows: "Any required, formal solemnization of marriage is an impediment to entering into it; therefore, since marriage is favored in law, statutory provisions establishing forms are to be strictly interpreted, not being encouraged by the courts. In the absence of any statute or local usage controlling the question, only the consent treated of in our last two chapters is indispensable to the constitution of marriage; and legislation commanding formalities, even punishing those who celebrate marriage contrary to its provisions, or punishing the parties themselves, will not render a marriage had in disregard of it void, unless the statute expressly, or by necessary implication, declares this consequence. But it is otherwise of a statute which authorizes the intermarriage of parties before incompetent, for in this case there is no common law to fall back upon. And such parties must strictly conform to the legislative direction, to render their marriage valid. In the ordinary case, wherein the common law may be relied on except as excluded by the statute, only the particular things which the statute declares to be nullifying if omitted need be observed,—all the rest being directory, and noncompliance immaterial." Id. § 449.

In an elaborate review of the authorities, and an exhaustive discussion of the question now under consideration, the supreme court of Missouri, in Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 359, held that a marriage by contract, without solemnization before a minister of the gospel or an officer of the law, was valid, the statute concerning marriages containing no positive declarations that a marriage not so solemnized shall be void. Numerous other authorities might be cited to the same effect as the above, but we deem it unnecessary.

In Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Nev. 63, this court has construed § 2 of our statute, and the reasoning of the court is applicable to the construction of all the sections relied on by counsel for appellant, and by the authorities holding that the statute nullifies common-law marriages. In that case the plaintiff brought suit to have her marriage declared annulled on the ground that she was under age, and the consent of her parent or guardian had not first been obtained. Section 2 provides that "male persons of the age of eighteen years and female persons of the age of sixteen years . . . may be joined in marriage, provided always, that male persons under the age of twenty-one years and female persons under the age of eighteen years shall first obtain the consent of their fathers" or mothers or guardians, respectively, "and provided further, that nothing in this act shall be construed so as to make the issue of any marriage illegitimate, if the person or persons shall not be of lawful age." The plaintiff's counsel contended that "the plaintiff, by reason of want of age, was incapable of contracting a valid marriage, except with the consent of her parent or guardian." He argued: "The statute provides that marriage by females under the age of eighteen shall be contracted only with the consent of their parents or guardian, and a penalty is imposed on the county clerk who shall issue a license for the marriage of such minor without such consent. . . . Beside, the statute of Nevada is peculiar in providing that nothing in it shall be construed to make the issue of any marriage illegitimate, if the person or persons shall not be of lawful age. Evidently the legislature intended by this that all marriages entered into except as provided in said act should be void. If this was not their intention, then that portion of the act which provides against bastardizing the issue of such marriages is mere surplusage and without meaning, for the reason that it would be the merest folly to provide by statute that issue of a valid marriage shall not be illegitimate." The court held, however, that "that proviso cannot indicate any such intent as claimed, as it only relates to issue of persons not of lawful age,—that is, not of the age of eighteen years in the male or sixteen years in the female. . . . By the common law, and the statute law of this state . . . marriage is held to be a civil contract. To render the contract valid, the parties must be able and willing to contract. At common law the age of capacity to make the contract of marriage was fixed at fourteen years for males and twelve years for females. . . . Marriage before such age is voidable at the election of either party, on arriving at the age of consent, if either of the parties be under that age when the contract is made. 2 Kent, Com. 44. The statute of this state does not alter the common law, save by substituting the ages therein named for the common-law ages, and it has been generally, if not universally, held, in construing similar statutes, that, in the absence of any provision declaring marriage made in violation of the statutory proviso void, it was a valid and binding contract, upon the theory that persons of the consenting or lawful age, voluntarily entering into a contract, should be held thereto, precisely as they would be held to any other lawful contract voluntarily assumed at the legal age, or upon majority." It will be observed that the court held, in effect, that in the absence of any provision of the statute declaring the marriage of a minor, without the consent of parent or guardian, void, the marriage was valid, notwithstanding the explicit requirements of the statute that such consent shall first be obtained. Our statute does not expressly, nor by necessary implication, as we view it, render a marriage had in disregard of its prescribed formalities void. We are to presume that the legislature knew that marriages by contract are valid at common law; that they have thus been entered into from time immemorial, and are liable to continue to be so contracted. And if the legislature intended to prohibit such marriages and render them void, and thus entail upon parties conscious of no wrongdoing, and their children, such evil consequences as must necessarily result therefrom, it would have expressed such intent in such terms as need no construction, and about which even laymen could have no doubt, and would thus have given due notice to all of the invalidity of informal marriages entered into simply by contract. It seems to us clearly that the legislature, by the terms used in the 1st section of the marriage act, intended to specifically recognize the common law in respect to marriages. It therein declared "that marriage, so far as its validity in law is concerned, is a civil contract to which the consent of the parties capable in law of contracting is essential." If the legislature had intended that compliance with any of the provisions of the succeeding section should also be essential to its validity in law, we are of opinion that it would have so expressed itself, and not left the definition of a valid marriage in law "a civil contract to which the consent of the parties capable in law of contracting is essential." We are of opinion that the subsequent sections were enacted for the purposes named above in the opinion delivered by Justice Strong, and for the additional purpose of accommodating the views of those who do not believe in marriages by contract simply, and would not be satisfied with entering into the marriage relation except by some mode prescribed by the statute, and for the purpose of giving to the forms and ceremonies in practice among many classes statutory recognition. While any form or ceremony the parties interested may choose is recognized by the statute, no particular form is required. The elements essential to a common-law marriage are required,—a contract per verba de presentis. In the language of the statute, the parties "shall declare that they take each other as husband and wife,"—not necessarily by word of mouth, but in some manner to declare such assent. From the great preponderating weight of authority and reason, we are of opinion that all other provisions of the statute are directory, so far as the validity of the marriage is concerned, and that a marriage by contract between parties competent to enter into that relation with each other is valid under our statute. We therefore hold that the said marriage of the appellant to Sophia Koser is valid.

Errors assigned: On the 14th day of September, 1895, about three weeks before the alleged second marriage of the defendant, he and his first wife Sophia, entered into a written agreement between themselves in settlement of their property rights, and agreed to then and there separate, and further agreed in terms as follows: "The parties hereto, each with the other, covenant and agree to sever their marital relations, and by these presents do sever their marital relations." Counsel for defendant offered to introduce this agreement in evidence, to which the district attorney objected on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The court sustained the objection. This ruling is assigned as error. Counsel argues, in substance, under the authority of State v. Gardner, 5 Nev. 377, that the agreement was proper evidence to go to the jury, as tending to show that there was no criminal intent on the part of the defendant in entering into the second marriage, he believing that the agreement had annulled the first marriage.

Criminal intent: The rule adopted by the majority of the court in the said Gardner Case, to the effect that where a statute forbids the doing of a certain thing, and is silent concerning the intent with which it is done, a person commits no offense, in law, though he does the forbidden thing, within all the words of the statute, if he had no evil or wrongful intent beyond that which is involved in the doing of the prohibited act, is disapproved, and the decision to that effect is hereby overruled. We recognize the well settled rule that, where a specific intent is required by statute to constitute the crime, such specific intent enters into the nature of the act itself, and must be alleged and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The statute under which the defendant was indicted, tried, and convicted provides: "Bigamy consists in the having of two wives or two husbands at one and the same time, knowing that the former husband or wife is still alive. If any person or persons within this state being married, or who shall hereafter marry, do at any time marry any person or persons, the former husband or wife being alive, the person so offending shall be punished. . . . Nothing herein contained shall extend to any person or persons whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent from such person or persons for the space of five years prior to the said second marriage, and he or she not knowing such husband or wife to be living within that time. Also, nothing herein contained shall extend to any person that is or shall be, at the time of such marriage divorced by lawful authority from the bonds of such former marriage, or to any person where the former marriage hath been by lawful authority declared void." There is no intent involved in this case, except the doing of the thing forbidden to be done by the statute. "Whatever one voluntarily does, he, of course, intends to do. If the statute has made it criminal to do any act under particular circumstances, the party voluntarily doing that act is chargeable with the criminal intent of doing it." Com. v. Mash, 7 Met. 472. "There was the intent to marry a second time, not knowing the husband to be dead, who had been absent for a period of about one year only, and this is the criminal intent and the only intent which is of the essence of the offense." Jones v. State, 67 Ala. 84. "Upon indictment for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor without authority from his parents or guardian, it does not matter that the defendant did not know that such person was a minor. He is bound to know whether such person is a minor or not." Farmer v. People, 77 Ill. 322. A statute of North Carolina authorized the sheriff to issue a license to sell liquor by retail only, on an order of the board of commissioners, upon application of the person seeking the license, and made it a criminal offense to retail liquor without a license. On the 1st day of January, 1883, the board, upon application of Voight, ordered the license to issue, and on the same day revoked the order. Notwithstanding this revocation, the sheriff afterwards, and on the last day of said January, issued the license, Voight knowing when he received the license that the order for its issuance had been revoked. Voight was prosecuted criminally for retailing liquor without a license. The trial court charged the jury "that if the jury were fully satisfied that the license was issued after the 1st of January, 1888, and defendant knew it was subsequent to the revoking order, and thereafter sold liquor as charged, . . . they should convict notwithstanding, at the time of the act, he had possession of the license." The supreme court approved the instruction, and said: "Nor is it a defense to a criminal accusation that the defendant did not intend to violate or evade the law, or supposed he had a right to sell, when he intended to do, and did do, the criminal and forbidden act. The criminal intent is inseparably involved in the intent to do the act which the law pronounces criminal." State v. Voight, 90 N. C. 741. The provisions of a statute in Massachusetts are as follows: "Whoever falsely makes . . . any certificate of nomination or nomination paper, or any part thereof, or files any certificate of nomination or nomination paper knowing the same or any part thereof to be falsely made. . . shall be punished," etc. Connolly was convicted under this statute, first, for falsely making nomination papers; second, for filing the same. On appeal the supreme judicial court held: "No fraudulent intent is necessary to constitute the offense. It is immaterial that the defendant did not intend to break the law. It is enough that he did the things made offenses by the statute." Com. v. Connelly, 163 Mass. 539. We cite the following additional authorities on the question of intent, which are in line with the ones given above: Walls v. State, 7 Blackf. 572; The Ann, 1 Gall. 62; Reg. v. Woodrow, 15 Meea. & W. 404; Myers v. State, 1 Conn. 502; State v. Goodenow, 65 Me. 30; State v. Whitcomb, 52 Iowa, 85, 35 Am. Rep. 258; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 283, 28 Am. Rep. 21; Davis v. Com., 18 Bush, 318; Whart. Crim. Ev. 8th ed. § 725, and cases there cited.

We therefore hold that the court did not err in excluding said agreement of the appellant and Sophia Zichfeld. This opinion disposes of all the alleged errors, and, finding no error of the court in the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Bigelow, Ch. J., and Belknap, J., concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

T. W. McELWAIN.

(.....Ky.....)

A husband's right of action for the loss of his wife's society on account of injuries which result in her death is defeated by a recovery of judgment by her personal representative in an action for her death, brought under Gen. Stat. chap. 57, § 1, for the benefit of her estate, which is more advantageous to him than his common-law right of action for loss of her society.

(February 19, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Todd County in fa-

NOTE.—How many distinct causes of action arise from injuries resulting in death.

I. Alternative action for death or injury.

- a. Generally.
- b. Actions for death as affected by release.
 1. By injured party.
 2. By others.
 3. By plaintiffs.
- c. Other actions as a bar.
 1. Actions for the injury.
 2. Other actions for the death.
- d. Multiplicity of actions for death.
- e. Bar of other actions by limitation.
- f. For death of infants.

II. Concurrent actions for death and injury.

The case of LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. CO. v. McELWAIN holds that a husband's right of action for the loss of his wife's society on account of injuries which result in her death is defeated by a recovery of a judgment by her personal representative in an action for her death, brought under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 57, § 1, providing for an action for damages for death by neglect or wrongful act for the benefit of the kindred, as this statute was intended to increase the elements of damages but not to multiply actions, and was, in fact, more advantageous to the husband than the common-law right of action. The statute was not intended to allow an action by the personal representative practically for the husband's benefit, and at the same time to allow the husband to maintain one on his own account for the same acts or negligence.

The case of LUBRANO v. ATLANTIC MILLS holds that an action for injury to the plaintiff's intestate resulting in death is barred by a judgment in a previous action brought for the next of kin, for damages arising out of the death, holding that R. I. Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 178, § 10, providing that an action of trespass on the case for damages to the person shall survive, was intended to refer to actions for damages to the person other than those which result in death, and this construction prevents two actions for the same thing. Sections 16 to 21 provide for damages for death for negligence occurring at highway or railroad crossings, and this is for the benefit of the next of kin. This is in accord with the weight of authority which holds the converse, that an action for damages for death is barred by an action or recovery for the injury which resulted in death.

Under the common law there could be no action for the death. This is shown in Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89, and the leading case on the question is Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, which held that the husband could only recover for loss of his wife's society from the time of the accident to the time of her death. There has been some diversity of devor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries for losses caused him by negligent injury of his wife. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Ben. T. Perkins, Jr., for appellant:

It will be seen from the record mentioned, offered in evidence, that the plaintiff in that action was permitted to recover for the loss of his wife's life, for her bodily and mental suffering, and for the loss of her services and power to earn money.

The statutes have not abrogated the right to seek redress under the rules of the common law. The injured party may elect to recover under the one or the other, but he cannot maintain two actions at the same time growing out of the same state of facts.

Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 145; Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 385.

Messrs. Forgy & Petrie for appellee.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 8th day of October, 1893, a freight train on the appellant's road struck Josephine E. McElwain while she was crossing the track at a public road crossing, inflicting injuries from which she died on the 23d day of December, 1893. T. W. McElwain, the plaintiff in this case, qualified as executor of her will, instituted an action as such personal representative, and recovered a judgment against the defendant for the sum of $5,000. This action was instituted at the same time by the plaintiff, as the husband of the deceased, seeking to recover, in his individual capacity, damages for the "loss of her society" from the date the injury was inflicted until her death. In the action as personal representative he recovered compensatory damages, under the instruction of the court, for physical and mental suffering, against the person causing death, and such damages may be given as under all the circumstances may be just. It was said that such action may be brought either by the heirs or by the personal representatives. When one action is brought, that is the only action which is permitted.

And in Goodsell v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 88 Conn. 53, which was an action by the administrator for the injuries of the deceased, a recovery was allowed, and it was held that only one suit for the same act would lie, under Conn. act 1848 (Rev. of 1866, p. 22), providing that all actions for injury to the person, whether the same do or do not result in death, shall survive to his administrator, and under act 1853 (Rev. 1866, p. 202), providing that if the life of a person be lost by negligence of a railroad company such company shall be liable to pay damages not exceeding $5,000, to be recovered by the executor or administrator for the benefit of the husband or widow or heirs. The same damages survived if he died and one act was to limit the extent of damages and the other was to direct the distribution to next of kin.

1. Alternative action for death or injury.

a. Generally.

In cases presenting the question of alternative action for the death or injury, the general rule is that only one action can be brought for damages arising from injury resulting in death. This rule is stated in actions for injury alone, and also in various cases where questions were made as to parties plaintiff or damages or survival of actions. Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627; Graetz v. McKenzie, 3 Wash. 194; Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515; Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 181; Mason v. Union P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 77; Goodsell v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 88 Conn. 53; State v. Maine C. R. Co. 60 Me. 490; Long v. Morrison, 14 Ind. 565, 77 Am. Dec. 72.

So, in an action for injury to the deceased, brought by the administrator, not showing that there were any next of kin, it was held that only one cause of action existed, and it must be based on reference to pecuniary damage to the next of kin under N. Y. Laws 1847, chap. 450, providing that a party causing the injury resulting in death shall be liable to damages if the injured party could have recovered, and § 2, amended by Laws 1849, chap. 256, providing that such an action shall be brought by the personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and damages may be given with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin. The expression in Baker v. Bailey, 16 Barb. 60, tending to the effect that there were two causes of action which could not be united, but the party must proceed for one or the other, was not approved. Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627.

And in Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515, in an action by an administrator on the question of the measure of damages, it was said that but one action for damages for causing death could be brought under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 377, providing that when the death of a person not a minor is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representative may maintain an action for damages against the person causing death, and such damages may be given as under all the circumstances may be just. It was said that such action may be brought either by the heirs or by the personal representatives. When one action is brought, that is the only action which is permitted.

And in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 181, on the question of the measure of damages, it was said that but one cause of suit, and that is the wrong done irrespective of its consequences, existed under Ill. act February 12, 1853, providing that whenever the death of a person shall be caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default, is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action, the party liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured. In this case the action was brought by the injured party and the administrator was substituted as plaintiff. The court held the plaintiff occupied the position that she would have held had she brought a new action after death, under the act of 1853. The act of July 1, 1872 (Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 26), providing that actions to recover damages for an injury to the person shall survive, was intended to provide for the survival of an action where the party injured died from other causes.

So, an action brought by the injured party who died before judgment could not be prosecuted by his administrator under 2 Utah Comp. Laws 1888, § 3187, providing that an action does not abate by death if the cause of action survive, and § 2961, providing that whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, which would have entitled the party if death had not ensued to maintain an action, the person who would have been liable shall be liable for damages notwithstanding the death of the person, and § 2962, providing that such action shall be brought by and in the name of the per-for expenses of treatment, and for the permanent impairment of her ability to earn money, etc. The sole question in this case is as to whether the recovery in the action as personal representative of the estate of the deceased is a bar to the husband's right to recover for a loss for which it is claimed the common law affords him redress. To determine this question, the common law must be considered in connection with the statutory remedy afforded for negligent acts resulting in death. By the principles of the common law, the right of action for an injury to the person abated upon the death of the party injured; the case falling within the familiar rule, Actio personalis moritur cum persona. Therefore, if death resulted, whether instantaneously or not, from such injury, no action could be maintained by the personal representative of the injured party to recover damages suffered by the decedent. As early as 1606, in the King's bench case of Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89, arose, wherein the plaintiff sought to recover damages of the defendant for assaulting and beating his wife, of which she died. The action seemed to have been for damages to the wife, and not for the loss of service. It was held there could be no recovery, as, the injury having resulted in death, the cause of action therefore was merged in the felony. It might be added at this point that reasons other than merger have been suggested for the rule, to wit, the law of forfeiture, the maxim, Actio personalis moritur cum persona, and public policy. From the case of Higgins v. Butcher, the question does not appear to have been raised in England until 1808, in Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493. It was an action against sonal representative, and the amount recovered shall be distributed under the directions of the probate court, and § 8179, providing that when the death of a person not a minor is caused by a wrongful act his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages. The wife or the children did not succeed to the husband's or father's cause of action, that died with him; but immediately upon his death a new cause of action arose in their favor. The statute did not revive the husband's cause of action. Mason v. Union P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 77.

And in an action by the surviving wife and child it was held that they could maintain the same, and it was said that only one action could be brought for damages for death of another under Wash. Code, § 8, providing for an action by heirs or representatives if death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. This repealed § 717, providing for an action for damages for death, by a personal representative, if the party injured might have maintained an action, although this provision occurred in the Code after the former. This construction was attained by considering the original acts from which the Code was derived, otherwise there would be two actions allowed for the same wrong. Graetz v. McKenzie, 3 Wash. 194.

And in an action by the administrator, it was held that either the widow or the personal representative might sue under Tenn. Code, Act 1871, chap. 73, amending § 2291 of the Code, and providing that the right of action of an injured person shall not abate by his death but pass to his widow, and in case there is no widow, to his children, or to his personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin. The cause of action was given to the widow in preference to the administrator, but not to his exclusion, where she elected not to sue, and her election would be presumed where the suit was prosecuted by the administrator without objection by her, and the defendant could not object that she did not sue. Webb v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 119.

In an action by indictment it was held that the only remedy for immediate death was by indictment under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 31, § 6, providing compensation to the heirs for the life of a person lost through the carelessness of a railroad corporation to be recovered by indictment. If he did not die immediately the right of action accrued to him, and Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 37, § 8, provided for the survival of such right to his personal representative. It was said that this construction prevented the absurdity of creating two independent, and to the same extent conflicting, remedies for one and the same injury. State v. Maine C. R. Co. 60 Me. 490.

34 L. R. A.

Where an administrator brought a suit for the wrongful death of a wife, and the husband and wife could have brought a joint action in her life for the injury, it was held that a right of action existing in the injured party might survive to the representative, or if not that an action might be maintained by the representative joining with her husband, under 3 Ind. Rev. Stat. p. 205, § 784, providing that when the death of one is caused by the wrongful act of another, the personal representative of the former may maintain an action if the former might have if he lived, and the damages must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children. The action should have been brought in the joint names of the husband and administrator, but the nonjoinder was held immaterial because not objected to below. Long v. Morrison, 14 Ind. 596, 77 Am. Dec. 72.

b. Actions for death as affected by release.

1. By injured party.

A release given by the injured party generally bars an action for damages arising out of the death, whether brought by the personal representative or for the surviving husband or widow, or for the benefit of next of kin. There is an exception in a Kentucky case. Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 S. C. 556; Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. 9 Best & S. 714, 37 L. J. Q. B. N. 8, 278; Hecht v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 507; Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 Barb. 183; Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 43 Am. Rep. 271, Overruling Schlichting v. Wintgen, 25 Hun, 628; Re Taylor's Estate, 179 Pa. 264.

And the same was said to be the rule in Walker v. Erdman, 23 Can. S. C. 352, and Fowkes v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 9 Heisk. 629; Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131.

A release by the injured party bars an action for damages resulting to the next of kin.

So, the settlement of a suit brought by an injured person is a bar to a subsequent action afterwards brought by his administrator for the death caused by the same injury under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 22, providing that a cause of action arising out of an injury dies with the person except in cases in which an action is given for an injury causing the death of any person, and § 224, providing that where the death of one is caused by wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representative of the former may maintain an action against the latter if the former could have maintained an action if he had lived. The court held that the intention of this section was that when the injury caused death, the action should survive, but an action for the cause of action liquidated and satisfied could not survive. It was not the intention that the party compelled to pay all the proprietors of a stagecoach on which the plaintiff and his wife were traveling when it was overturned, inflicting injuries on himself, and also upon his wife, from which she died within a month. It was declared that "the plaintiff had wholly lost and been deprived of the comfort, fellowship, and assistance of his said wife, and had from thence hitherto suffered and undergone great grief, vexation, and anguish of mind." Lord Ellenborough said: "The jury could only take into consideration the bruises which the plaintiff had himself sustained, and the loss of his wife's society, and the distress of mind he had suffered on her account from the time of the accident till the moment of her dissolution." The above is the opinion in full. Although the case was at non pro, it is the leading case on the subject. It was recognized as the law in England until the enactment of the statute familiarly known as Lord Campbell's act, in 1846. Until the passage of that act the law was recognized to be that "in a civil court the death of a human being could not be complained of as an injury." Formed after Lord Campbell's act, nearly, if not all, the states of the Union have enacted statutes making an action at law maintainable against a person who, by wrongful act, neglect, or default, may have caused the death of another. The courts of this country, with one or two exceptions, accepted Baker v. Bolton as authority until the enactment of the statutes to which we have just referred. Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616, follows Baker v. Bolton, and is a leading case upon the subject.

The question arose in this court, in 1853, in Elden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14 B. Mon.

damages resulting from injuries sustained by the wrongful act should again be subjected to an action by the personal representative after his death. Hecht v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 132 Ind. 507.

And the same was held under N. Y. Sess. Laws 1847, chap. 450, providing that in case of the death of a person caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, where the party injured would have been entitled to maintain an action if death had not ensued, the party causing such injury shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured. When death ensued the deceased had no subsisting cause of action. This construction gave but one action for the same injury to the same person. The plaintiff's construction would give two actions for the wrongful act and frequently double compensation. Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 Barb. 183.

So, a settlement by an injured party in action for such injury barred a subsequent action by his administrator for damages under N. Y. Laws 1847, chap. 450, which provided that the wrongdoer should be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, if the act was such as would have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages. It was said that a double liability might be created by a proper statute. Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 371, Overruling Schlichting v. Wintgen, infra.

In Schlichting v. Wintgen, 25 Hun. 626, a settlement of a judgment in an action brought in the lifetime of the deceased was held not a bar to an action by the administrator for damages for the wrongful killing under N. Y. Act 1847 as amended in 1849 and 1870, providing damages for the pecuniary injuries resulting to the wife and next of kin, denying Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. supra. But this case was overruled in Littlewood v. New York, supra.

In Re Taylor's Estate, 179 Pa. 264, where the injured party brought an action and died, and her administrators were substituted, and the case was compromised by the administrator, and pending that action the guardian of the children of the deceased party had brought an action also, it was held that the decision in Birch v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 135 Pa. 339, infra, L. c. 1, prevented the second action, as under Pa. act 1851 (Pub. Laws, 674), act 1855 (Pub. Laws, 309), the defendant was liable to but one action for the recovery of damages for the same injury to the same person.

In Walkerton v. Erdman, 23 Can. S. C. 352, which was an action by a widow as administratrix to recover for her own benefit and the benefit of her children damages for causing the death of her husband, it was said that a wrongful act causing death should be such as would, but for the death, have entitled the person injured to have maintained an action, and if previous to his death he released his right of action or discharged it by accord and satisfaction, a statutory cause of action could not arise upon the death.

And a release by the injured party, and satisfaction of all damages, was a bar to an action by an administrator for the use of the widow and child for damages resulting in death, under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 2183, which provided that whenever the death of a person should be caused by the wrongful act of another, and the act, if death had not ensued, would have entitled the injured party to have maintained an action, the person liable if death had not ensued should be liable notwithstanding the death of the person, and § 2186 which provided that the provision of the third preceding section should not apply where the injured party brought action which proceeded to trial and final judgment before his death. Section 2186 was to prevent a double remedy for the same wrongful act in any possible case. As to whether the statute gave a new cause of action, or simply continued the same cause of action, was not decided. Price v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 556.

So, an accord and satisfaction made by and with the injured party was a bar to an action after his death by his wife for damages for death where there was no personal representative, under 9 & 10 Vict. chap. 93, which provided that if death was caused by wrongful act, and the party injured could have recovered, then the wrongdoer should be liable notwithstanding the death of the injured party, and § 2, which provided that the action was for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child, and was to be brought in the name of the personal representative, and 27 & 28 Vict. chap. 95, § 1, which provided that if there was no personal representative the action might be brought by the beneficiary. The intention of the statute was not to make the wrongdoer pay damages twice for the same act. Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 553, 37 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 278, 9 Best & S. 714, 18 L. T. N. S. 822, 16 Week. Rep. 1040.

And in Fowkes v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 9 Heisk. 529, it was said that if an action was brought in the lifetime of the injured party, and a recovery had for his injury, or a settlement and release of the claim or accord and satisfaction was made, his representative could not then sue and recover under Tenn. Code, § 2291, which provided that the right of action to an injured person whose death was caused by wrongful act or omission of another, should not abate by his death, but should pass to his personal representative for the benefit of his widow and next of kin.

204, before the enactment of the statute. That was an action by the husband against a railroad company for the alleged negligent killing of his wife. She was killed instantly. The court followed the principle enunciated in Baker v. Bolton, but erroneously assumed that it was decided in that case that when death resulted the civil remedy was merged in the public offense. The court said in the Eden Case: "The cause of action for injuries to the person dies with the person injured, and it follows as a necessary consequence that, the cause of action having itself abated, no separate action can be maintained for such damages as are exclusively consequential. But, for aggregated injuries to the person of the wife or child, the husband or parent has an independent or separate cause of action, for the loss of the society of the wife, or the services of the child, as the case may be. This cause of action does not abate by the subsequent death of the wife or child, but the death of either affects the extent of the recovery, as by that event all further claim to the society of the one, or the services of the other, ceases and determines. And the rule still prevails, although the death that produced this effect results from the same injury which gives rise to the action. . . . According to the existing law, there can be no recovery for this injury, inasmuch as the death of the wife was instantaneous, and it is only for the loss that is sustained by the husband in this respect, from the moment of the injury up to the time of the death of the wife, for which any recovery can be had." The death resulting immediately on the infliction of the injuries, no appreciable time elapsed in which the husband could have enjoyed his wife's so-

And in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131, it was said that if the injured person in his lifetime released his claim for damages, his representative could not maintain an action upon his subsequent death resulting from the injury thus compounded.

But in Donahue v. Drexler, 82 Ky. 157, 56 Am. Rep. 884, it was held that a compromise by a husband of a suit for damages for a deadly assault did not bar his widow's right of action for the death, under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 1, § 6, p. 142, providing that the widow and minor child of a person killed by the careless, wanton, and malicious use of a deadly weapon, not in self-defense, may recover for reparation of the injury, and the jury may give vindictive damages; and Gen. Stat. chap. 10, provided that action for assault, battery, slander and crim. con. cease with the death of the person and cannot be brought or reviewed by the personal representative, and all other actions for personal injuries survive. The new cause of action given to the wife and child was one in which the deceased had no interest and for which his administrator could not sue. They had the exclusive right of action under the statute.

The case of Donahue v. Drexler, supra, distinguishes the case of Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 380, infra, holding that case was decided upon a different state of affairs, and the recovery there could have been made only by the personal representative for the pecuniary injury to the estate.

2. By others.

Some cases hold that a release of damages arising out of the death of a party, given by the party authorized to sue, or given by the sole beneficiary, will prevent further action for the benefit of the survivor or next of kin. Stephens v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 10 Lea, 448; Holder v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 92 Tenn. 141; Greenlee v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 418; Natchez Cotton Mills Co. v. Mullins, 67 Miss. 672; Trafford v. Adams Exp. Co. 8 Lea, 96; Stuebing v. Marshall, 10 Daly, 406; Hartigan v. Southern P. Co. 86 Cal. 142.

So, only one action for damages for an injury resulting in death could be brought under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 877, providing for an action by either the heirs or the personal representative, and a compromise in an action by an executor barred an action subsequently brought by the heirs of one who was killed through the negligence of the defendant. Hartigan v. Southern P. Co. supra.

A release by the surviving widow as sole beneficiary bars an action by the children for damages arising from the death.

So, a compromise by a widow and a dismissal of the suit prevented a reinstatement of the action in favor of the guardian for an infant child of the deceased L. R. A.

ceased, under Tenn. Code, Act 1871, chap. 46, which provided the right of action passed to the widow, in case of no widow to his children, or to his personal representative for the benefit of the widow or next of kin, and § 2 which provided that the widow might sue, and if no widow the children. Where the widow brought suit the children had no right to sue, and the right of the children could only accrue where there was no widow. Stephens v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 10 Lea, 448.

And a compromise by a widow of an action barred a suit in behalf of the children against the railroad, who claimed that the widow was unauthorized to receive any part of their share, under Tennessee (Mill. & V.) Code, § 3130, which provided that damages passed to the widow, or if none to his children, or to his personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin. The widow, having the first right to sue, had the right to compromise. Holder v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 92 Tenn. 141.

In Holder v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. supra, it was said that the case of Knoxville, C. G. & L. R. Co. v. Aouff, 92 Tenn. 26, infra, I. b. 2, which held that a widow had no power to compromise the suit of the personal representative, distinctly recognized her right to compromise her own suit.

And a compromise by the widow and the dismissal of the suit could not be prevented by the children in an action under Tenn. Code, § 2291 (Amended Act 1871, chap. 78), which provided that the right of action to the injured person should not abate by his death but pass to the widow, and in case there was no widow to his children, or to his personal representative for the benefit of the widow or next of kin, and § 2292, amended by the same act, which provided that the widow, or if there be none, the children, should prosecute the suit. Greenlee v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 418.

And a compromise by a widow for the death of her husband prevented the prosecution of a bill afterwards by the minors through their next friend, who claimed the compromise was void as to their interests, under Miss. Code 1880, § 1510, which provided that an action might be brought in the name of the widow for the death of her husband, the damages to be for the use of such widow, except that in case a widow had children, and that the damages should be distributed as the personal property of the husband. The court held that the widow alone had the right of action and had the right to accept satisfaction and discharge the defendant. Natchez Cotton Mills Co. v. Mullins 67 Miss. 672.

A release by sole beneficiaries generally bars an action for the heirs.

So, a settlement by a husband of his claim for ciety; hence, no damage could result. It is perfectly manifest that at the common law a husband could recover damages for the loss of her society from the date of the injury until her death, for a negligent act resulting in the injury of his wife, although she died therefrom.

The question here arises as to what effect the statute providing a remedy for injuries to the person by negligence has upon the right of the husband to maintain an action for such injuries for which the common law afforded him redress. At the common law, although the person injured may have suffered great physical and mental pain, the cause of action was abated by his death. The general assembly, in order to preserve and keep alive such causes of action, provided that, except actions for assault and battery, slander, criminal conversation, and so much of the action for malicious prosecution as is intended to recover for personal injury, they survive to the personal representative. Gen. Stat. chap. 10. To provide a cause of action where none existed, the Statute of 1854 was enacted, which gave a cause of action to the personal representative of one not in the employment of the railroad, whose life was lost by reason of the negligence or carelessness of the servants or agents, etc., of such railroad. A recovery under § 1, chap. 57, Gen. Stat., goes to the estate of the decedent. This was the section under which the plaintiff, as personal representative of the estate of his deceased wife, recovered in the other action mentioned. Counsel for appellee cites Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 381, to sustain the contention that this action can be maintained, while counsel for appellant cites damages for the injury in killing his wife barred an action by her administrator for the next of kin, under Tenn. Code, § 2291, amended December 14, 1871, chap. 73, which provided that the right of action for personal injuries causing death should not abate by his death but pass to the widow, and if none to his children, or his personal representative for the benefit of his widow or the next of kin, and § 2292, which provided that the action might be instituted by the personal representative, or, if he declined, by the widow and children, and amended by act December 14, 1871, which provided in addition to this remedy, that the widow, or if none the children, might prosecute the suit. It was held that a recovery for a personal injury to the wife, which resulted in her death, inured to the benefit of the husband under these statutory provisions, and there could be but one recovery. The court held that there was no error in submitting to the jury whether the husband had settled the case or had waived all right of action by failing to sue in twelve months. Trafford v. Adams Exp. Co. 8 Lea, 96.

And a release by a father of a deceased minor child barred an action by the personal representative of the child against the party who caused the injury, under N. Y. Laws 1847, chap. 450, where the father alone would be entitled to the proceeds of the claim for damages. Stuebing v. Marshall, 10 Daly, 405.

But in Yelton v. Evansville & I. R. Co. 134 Ind. 414, 21 L. R. A. 153, it was held that a release by a widow, who was the sole heir, could not be pleaded in bar where the release was given while an action was pending by the personal representative of the decedent, under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 284, which provided for an action to be prosecuted by the administrator and the damages recovered to inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children. While actions were for the benefit of the widow and children, she was not a party to the suit, and the fund was chargeable with the expenses incurred by the administrator for his services and attorney's fees and expenses.

A release by one who is not the sole beneficiary is not a bar to an action for others. South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 59 Ala. 272; Yelton v. Evansville & I. R. Co. supra; Dowell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 629; Knoxville, C. G. & L. R. Co. v. Acuff, 92 Tenn. 28; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bradley, 45 Tex. 171; Southern Pac. Co. v. Tomlinson, 168 U. S. 899, 41 L. ed. 193.

So, a release given by the husband for damages causing the death of his wife did not bar an action by the representative of the wife under Ala. act February 5, 1872 (Code 1876, §§ 2641, 2642), which provided for an action by the personal representative, 24 L. R. A.

and that the amount recovered should be distributed as personal property, and should not be subject to the payment of debts of the deceased. No common-law action could have been maintained in such a case, but only the action which the statute provided. South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Sullivan, supra.

So, a widow could not release and discharge an action by an administrator for the death of an intestate, where she was not the administratrix; but she could release the claim for damages she individually sustained. The satisfaction pleaded by defendant could extend no further. Dowell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. supra.

And a settlement by a widow did not defeat a pending suit by the administrator for the use and benefit of widow and children, under Tenn. (Mill. & V.) Code, § 3180, which provided for an action for negligent killing of the intestate. Although the widow had the first right to sue, it was waived by permitting the administrator to sue. Knoxville, C. G. & L. R. Co. v. Acuff, supra. See Holder v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. supra.

And a compromise by a widow for damages for the death of her husband did not affect the rights of her children to prosecute a suit under Tex. (Paschal's) Dig. 16, which authorized the heirs, representatives, or relatives of deceased persons to sue for and recover damages where the death of such person had been caused by negligence, culpable or wilful act of another, and § 2, which provided that every such action should be for the exclusive benefit of the husband, wife, child, or children, and might be brought by any one of them, and if such parties fail for three months to sue then it should be the duty of the personal representative to sue. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bradley, supra.

In an action by the widow for the benefit of herself and children, under Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 2145-2147, providing an action for damages against a railway for death by negligence, and §§ 2149-2151, providing that the action shall be for the exclusive benefit of the surviving husband, wife, children, and parents, and may be brought by all or by one for the benefit of all, a remittitur by the widow for each of the beneficiaries, amounting in all to over $31,000, rendered the judgment invalid. It was held that the intent of this provision is that the action is to be once for all. The authority given for prosecuting the action in the name of one of the parties for the benefit of all was to avoid multiplicity of actions; but it gave the nominal plaintiff no power to compromise or release the rights of others. Southern Pac. Co. v. Tomlinson, supra, Reversing (Ariz.) 83 Pac. 710.

3. By plaintiffs.

A settlement by a person authorized to bring the the case of Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144, in support of the opposing view. Hansford's Case, was not under either §§ 1 or 8, chap. 57, Gen. Stat. The petition did not charge that the life was lost by the wilful neglect of the defendant,—hence, it was not under § 8; and as it was not lost by reason of the negligence or carelessness of the proprietor of a railroad, or its agents or servants, the action could not be, and was not intended to be, under § 1. It was an action against apothecaries, because their prescription clerk, in attempting to fill a physician's prescription, put up croton oil instead of linseed oil. The croton oil was administered to plaintiff's intestate. It was charged, among other things, in the petition, that it caused him great suffering and agony, and did him serious and irreparable injury, and was the immediate cause of his death.

The action was brought by decedent's personal representative. At common law, had the deceased lived, he could have maintained the action for the agony and suffering resulting from the clerk's mistake, and at his death the cause of action would have ceased, except for chapter 10, Gen. Stat., which caused it to survive in the name of his personal representative. For this reason the court in that case held the petition was good. Under the statements of the petition, no recovery could be had for the death of the injured party. It was not in issue in the case as to what the rights of a husband were when his wife lost her life by the wrongful act of another, but the judge delivering the opinion, in the discussion of the case, restated the doctrine of Baker v. Bolton, as sanctioned in Eden's Case, 14 B. Mon. 204. Had the injured party been the suit, or by the sole beneficiary, bars an action by such person. Henchey v. Chicago, 41 Ill. 138; Guldager v. Rockwell, 14 Colo. 459; Washington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 34 Ill. App. 658.

So, a settlement of an administratrix for the wrongful death of her intestate prevents further prosecution by her of the suit. Washington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra.

And an administratrix, in a suit under Ill. act 1853 for causing the death of her husband, had power to settle and dismiss the case before judgment. Whether the children could call her to account was not decided. Henchey v. Chicago, supra.

And a release by a widow in full demand of every name and nature whatsoever from one party to the other, given to a party causing the death of her husband, barred any suit by her for damages resulting from his death, although nothing was said of any claim on account of his death at the time of settlement. Guldager v. Rockwell, supra.

In Schmidt v. Deegan, 69 Wis. 300, it was held that a compromise of damages by a widow for killing her husband was based on a valuable consideration, and was obligatory on the party causing the injury, although the personal representative was the proper party to sue under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 4523, which provided for an action by him for the exclusive benefit of the widow.

But in Maney v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 49 Ill. App. 105, it was held that an action by the wife as administratrix was not barred by accepting payments under an insurance contract in a voluntary relief department run by a railroad, which provided in the application that the same should be a "release of all claims for damages arising from injury or death, which could be made by me or by my legal representative." The action by the wife for the death of her husband was under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 70, §§ 1, 2, which provided an action for damages for death for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin, to be brought in the name of the personal representative. Although the payment was made to the wife it was not made to her as administratrix under the statute, but as beneficiary under the certificate.

c. Other actions as a bar.

1. Actions for the injury.

A former recovery for the injury to the deceased person bars an action for the next of kin. So, an action for an injury which does not abate by his death bars another action for the next of kin for damages arising from the death. Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144; Littlewood v. New York, 39 N. Y. 24-43 Am. Rep. 371; Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652; Wood v. Gray (H. L. So.) [1892] A. C. 578; Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 380, 34 L. R. A.

So, a recovery by a person injured by the wrongful act of another barred an action by his personal representative under N. Y. Act 1847, chap. 450, which provided damages for the next of kin. Littlewood v. New York, supra.

And a settlement of an action brought by an injured party and prosecuted after his death by his administrator, under Vt. Rev. Laws, §§ 2134, 2135, which provided for the survival of the cause of action where the injured party died, barred an action for the benefit of the widow and next of kin for the wrongful act which resulted in his death, under Vt. Rev. Laws, § 2138, which provided for the recovery of damages for the benefit of the widow and next of kin where death resulted from the neglect of another person. This did not create a new cause of action, but provided for the recovery of a new class of damages. Legg v. Britton, supra.

In Legg v. Britton, supra, it was said that the doctrine in Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, to the contrary was a dictum, was not approved, and was denied in the unreported case of Haliday v. Dover, Vt. 1881. And the court held that the right of recovery was conferred only where the intestate would have had remaining a right of action if he had survived.

And in Kentucky a plea in abatement of a pending action on the same facts by a resident administratrix seeking to recover only damages for mental and bodily suffering of the intestate prior to his death was sustained to an action brought by a foreign administratrix for damages causing death based upon an Indiana statute. Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 30, art. 2, § 45, provided that if there was an administrator qualified in this commonwealth he alone should have power to sue. The acts causing the death of the party from either wilful or ordinary negligence, constituted but one cause of action, whether the measure of damages was for the suffering of the intestate during his life or for the wilful negligence causing his death. It was held that the party entitled to bring the action either at common law or under the statute should make his election, and a recovery by an administrator for mental and bodily suffering would bar any proceeding either by the representative or next of kin. Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144.

And the bringing of an action by the injured party for damages, and the reviving of the same after his death, barred another action by his executrix in her own name as mother of the deceased for damages for her son's death, who was her sole means of support. It was claimed that there was an independent right of action in favor of every person who was injured by the death of the deceased, but no authority was cited. It was said no case could be found in Scotland in which an action wife, instead of the husband, then certainly she would have had the right, at the common law, to have maintained an action for the loss of the society of his wife, although her personal representative might have instituted an action to recover damages for mental and physical suffering. Had the wife survived her injuries, she could have maintained her action for her mental and physical suffering. Had the husband sustained damages in consequence of his wife's injuries, by the "loss of her society," then he could have also maintained his action to recover such damages. Had she lived, he could not recover for her mental and physical suffering, because that was a damage to her. Neither could he recover for his "loss of her society" because that was his damage. Both causes of action existed at common law. The action instituted by McElwain as personal representative was not based on a common-law right, but to enforce a right secured by statute. This statute very much enlarged the rights which had existed at common-law. It gave the personal representative the right to recover for the loss of the life, and thus increased many fold the amount which formerly could be recovered. The husband, under the statute (Gen. Stat.), would take the entire amount recovered, subject to the debts of decedent. It was greatly to the advantage of the husband to enjoy the statutory rights, instead of those which formerly existed. Therefore it cannot be said that the statute diminished the rights of the husband. We cannot believe that the general assembly intended that the personal representative should maintain an action for the death of the wife, practically for the husband's benefit, by relatives was sustained after the deceased's claim had been settled or extinguished by judgment, or where he had raised an action which passed to and might be insisted on by his executor. It was held that in cases where the relatives had the right to sue they could bring only one action in which the damages due to them respectively must be assessed. Wood v. Gray, supra.

In Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 330, a recovery by the administrator for the suffering of the decedent was allowed, under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 10, providing that no right of action for personal injury shall die with the person injured. It was said that this would not enable parties to sue for the death under the act of 1854, § 3, and also for the damages accruing prior to the death under chap. 10. And it was further said that a recovery of punitive damages for the destruction of life would bar any other action for the injury, and a recovery for injury under survival of action would bar a recovery of punitive damages. See Donahue v. Drexler, 63 Ky. 157, 36 Am. Rep. 386, supra, I. b. 2.

Where an injured person brought suit and died, the action properly proceeded in the name of her executors as plaintiffs. It was held that the right of action given by Pa. act April 15, 1851 (Pub. Laws, 474, § 19), amended by act April 28, 1856, § 1, providing that if no suit is brought by the injured party during life, the widow, or if none the personal representative, may recover damages for death, was conditioned upon two concurring facts: first, that the injured party's death was occasioned by violence or negligence, and second, that no suit for damages had been brought by him. Birch v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 165 Pa. 339.

But an action for injury of a party abating by his death does not bar an action for the next of kin.

So, an action for damages for an injury to the plaintiff abating by his death could not be pleaded in bar to an action by his personal representative for the death resulting from such injuries, under Ind. (Gavin & H.) Stat. § 782, providing that a cause of action arising out of an injury to the person dies with the person except in cases in which an action is given for an injury causing death, and § 784, providing that when the death is caused by wrongful act, the personal representative of the party injured may maintain an action therefor if the person injured might have maintained an action had he lived. It was held that the damages inured to the exclusive benefit of the widow and child, if any, or next of kin. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stout, 53 Ind. 142.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kuehn, 70 Tex. 582, where the injured party had brought a suit for the injury and died, and the widow then brought an action for the next of kin for damages resulting from the death, and these two actions were consolidated, the opinion says: "That deceased had instituted suit for damages, which suit was pending at his death, is no bar to the action of the plaintiffs."

This action was evidently under Sayles's Tex. Civ. Stat. art. 2899, providing an action for damages for injury causing death by negligence of a railway company, and art. 2908, providing that the action shall be for the sole and exclusive benefit of the surviving husband, wife, children, and parents. If only one action can be brought this case can only be maintained on the theory that the action brought by the injured party in fact abated at his death.

2. Other actions for the death.

An action by the party authorized to bring the suit, or by the sole beneficiary, bars further action.

So, an action by minor children after the expiration of six months from the death of their father would not lie where the widow had brought an action and voluntarily dismissed the same under Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 2121-2123, providing for an action for injuries resulting in death to be brought first by the husband or wife, or second, if there be neither, or if he or she fails to sue within six months after such death, then by the minor child or children of the deceased. The court said that there was no joint right of action in the husband or wife and the children. The statute gave the husband or wife six months to appropriate the cause of action, the election to be made by a suit. If they sued within that time, it was an exercise of the option, and he or she then had absolute control and could compromise, release, or otherwise settle the matter. McNamara v. Slavens, 76 Mo. 329.

And in an action by a husband as administrator of his wife to recover damages from the physician for negligence in not removing the placenta, causing the death of the wife, the court said that in the same circuit the husband had recovered damages for malpractice, and N. Y. Seas. Laws 1847, p. 575, providing for an action by the personal representative, was not intended to allow a second action for precisely the same injury, and the husband had availed himself of the common-law right of action to recover damages for the loss of his wife, and this action was not within the statute. Lynch v. Davis, 12 How. Pr. 323.

In Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515, which was an action by an administrator under an act providing that the heirs or personal representative may maintain an action for damages, it was said that the pendency of one action might be pleaded in abatement to another, and a judgment in one would bar another action.

But an action for damages for death is not a bar to another action, unless the beneficiaries are represented in the prior action.

and allow at the same time the husband to maintain one on his own account for the same acts or negligence. In the Hangford Case, in discussing the effect of a recovery of punitive damages under § 3, chap. 57, Gen. Stat., the court said: "A recovery of punitive damages for the destruction of the life will certainly bar any other action for the injury or any of its consequences." It is the degree of negligence which determines whether the recovery be compensatory or punitive, but, when the action by the personal representative is based on § 1 of the statute in question, the recovery should be as effectual a bar to any other action for the injury or any of its consequences as if the jury should have added punitive to the compensatory damages. In Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 145, it appeared that two actions were instituted by the personal representative of the deceased. The mother of the deceased qualified as administratrix in Indiana, where the injury was inflicted, and also in Kentucky, where the deceased lived. As administratrix under her Kentucky appointment she instituted an action to recover for the mental and physical suffering of deceased. As administratrix under the Indiana appointment she instituted an action to recover for the loss of life of her intestate. The acts of negligence were the foundation of each action, and the court held a recovery in one action would bar a recovery in another action. We conclude that as the statute gives the personal representative the right to maintain the action for the loss of life of the wife, and the consequences of the negligent act producing the injury, the husband cannot maintain the action for the loss of her society. The legislative intent was to increase the elements of damage following from the acts or negligence producing death. It was not the intention of the legislature to multiply actions. The husband must accept the benefits which the statute secures him, in lieu of those he possessed at common law.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions that further proceedings be had consistent with this opinion.

So, a recovery for the death of a party by the surviving wife and one child was not a bar to a recovery by a child subsequently born, in an action under Tex. Civ. Stat. art. 2903, providing that the action shall be for the benefit of the surviving husband, wife, children, and parents, although the statute only contemplated one suit should be brought. This meant one suit brought by all the beneficiaries. Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 78 Tex. 621, 11 L. R. A. 391.

And an action by a husband for the death of his wife was not a bar to an action by the surviving children of their mother for death, under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2899, providing a right of action for the surviving husband, wife, parents, or children of one whose death was caused by the wrongful act of another. The defendant in the first suit should have required other parties interested to have been made parties plaintiff. The court said that if several persons having the right to sue would be concluded by the judgment to which they were not parties against one having the right of action against them, the result would be that one would have the power to compromise, and that there was nothing in this inconsistent with the rule that only one suit should be brought. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutao, 72 Tex. 643.

d. Multiplicity of actions for death.

Where the question arises as to the multiplicity of actions for the beneficiaries, it is held that only one action can be brought. This rule is stated in cases involving the misjoinder of plaintiffs or the failure to apportion the damages in the pleadings or the verdict. Paschal v. Owen, 77 Tex. 583; East Line & R. R. Co. v. Culberson, 68 Tex. 664; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Le Gierse, 51 Tex. 199; Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 31, 30 Am. Rep. 98; Western & A. R. Co. v. Strong, 52 Ga. 461; Hayes v. Phelan, 4 Hun, 733; March v. Walker, 48 Tex. 372; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 52 Fed. Rep. 871, 10 U. S. App. 339.

So, the wife had no right to sue alone for the death of her husband, under the laws of Tennessee, as she was not the only beneficiary, but the wife and children were the beneficiaries. The court held that whatever damages accrued belonged to the widow and children jointly, and an action by the widow was improperly brought. Western & A. R. Co. v. Strong, supra.

In Hayes v. Phelan, supra, which was a suit by the widow under N. Y. Laws 1873, chap. 646, pro-34 L. R. A.

viding that every person who shall be injured in means of support in consequence of the intoxication of any person shall have a right of action against any person who caused such intoxication. It was said by Learned, P. J., that if that action would lie, three more could be brought, one by each child. It was held that one to be injured must be one who has a right of action therefor against the intoxicated person. The demurrer to the complaint was sustained.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, supra, it was held that only one action could be brought under Ark. (Mansf.) Dig. § 5225, which provided an action for damages notwithstanding the death of a person which should be caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, if the injured party could have maintained an action, and § 5226, which provided that such action should be brought by and in the name of the personal representative and if none then by the heirs, and the recovery should be for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin. A petition in an action by the widow which showed that there was a brother by half blood of the deceased living, was insufficient because all the beneficiaries should be joined, and there could be no splitting into separate actions.

In Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 238, a different construction was placed on these sections on another question showing that three actions could be brought.

And in case the party injured was an infant where there were a widow and minor children only one action could be brought under Tex. (Paschal's) Dig. arts. 15-18 (act February 2, 1860), similar to Lord Campbell's act, and Const. (1869), art. 12, § 30, which gave to certain classes of persons separately and consecutively, the right to exemplary damages, as the re-enactment in Const. (1876) art. 16, § 24, omitted "separately and consecutively." The omission showed that but one suit should be allowed and all the beneficiaries should join. It was said that when both actual and exemplary damages are sought, they should be claimed by proper allegations, in the nature of two distinct counts on different causes of action, with averments respectively appropriate to each remedy. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Le Gierse, 51 Tex. 199.

And a judgment for part of the beneficiaries was set aside because all did not unite in the one action, under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2903, providing that the action shall be for the exclusive benefit of the sur-

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Michael LUBRANO, Admr. etc.,

ATLANTIC MILLS.

(19 R. L. —)

The right of action for damages resulting from death is exclusive of an administrator's right of action to recover for the pain and expense suffered by the person of his intestate from the injuries which caused his death, under Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 178, creating a right of action for death, and also providing for the survival of actions of "trespass on the case for damages to the person," as the survival applies to cases of injuries not causing death.

(June 25, 1895.)

ACTION to recover damages for injuries inflicted on the plaintiff's intestate which afterward resulted in his death. On demurrer to replication. Demurrer sustained.

Mr. W. B. Tanner, for plaintiff:

In Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, it was decided that an action would lie by the administrator to recover for breach of contract to carry safely a passenger who was injured on a railway and died thereafter of said accident. The court said that this action was exclusive of the action by the administrator as trustee of the next of kin.

See also to the same effect, Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599; Barnett v. Lucas, 6 Ir. C. L. Rep. 247; Barley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 4 Biss. 480; Kishelman v. Shuman, 18 Pa. 561; Roves v. Boston, 155 Mass. 844, 15 L. R. A. 365; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 80.

The only English case to the contrary is Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B.

living husband, wife, children, and parents of the party whose death has been so caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. It was held that art. 2908, providing for a division of the damages by the verdict, contemplated one verdict. East Line & E. R. R. Co. v. Culberson, 68 Tex. 664.

In Paschal v. Owen, 77 Tex. 582, which was a suit by the widow for causing the death of her husband, and the amendment set out the names of the children, it was said that Tex. Stat. art. 2904, providing that an action may be brought by all the parties or by one for the benefit of all, intended that there should be but one suit for all the parties. But as the amendment showed that as to the new parties the action was barred, the widow was allowed to recover her damages.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 31, 30 Am. Rep. 98, in an action brought by a widow and as mother and natural guardian of her two infant children the judgment was reversed because the verdict failed to divide the damages assessed among the beneficiaries. It was said that but one action could be brought under Tex. (Paschal's) Dig. art. 15, providing for suits by heirs, representatives, or relatives of the deceased person for death of a relative, and Tex. Const. 1869, art. 12, § 30, providing for exemplary damages; and the petition must show the parties who are the beneficiaries, and the jury must make a division.

In March v. Walker, 48 Tex. 372, under Tex. (Paschal's) Dig. art. 15, providing for an action for the benefit of the husband, wife, child, children, and parents, and damages apportioned to the injury resulting from such death, and Tex. Const. art. 12, § 30, providing that in cases of homicide through wrongful act or omission, exemplary damages may be recovered by the surviving widow, husband, or heirs, separately or consecutively, it was said: "We see no reason why the children of deceased should not recover in one action whatever they might be entitled to under both the statute and the Constitution." This was an action by the children for the malicious killing of the father.

c. Bar of other actions by limitation.

The question as to whether or not there is more than one cause of action, one for the injury and one arising out of the death, is presented in some cases involving the statute of limitation. There is such a conflict on this question, and so few cases, that it cannot be said that a uniform rule of law can be deduced.

Where the injured party lived for fifteen months 34 L. R. A.

after the injury, it was held that the fact that an action by the party injured was barred by the Civil Code of Lower Canada, § 2262 (2), providing that actions for bodily injuries are prescribed in one year, did not prevent the recovery by a widow in her own behalf as tutrix of their minor children, under § 1056, providing an action for injuries causing death "but only within one year after his death." The court held that the death was the foundation of this right of action. Robinson v. Canadian P. R. Co. (P. C.) [1892] A. C. 481, Reversing 19 Can. B. C. 232.

And in Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 87, it was held that a cause of action would not be barred until one year after the appointment of the administrator, under Conn. Gen. Stat. p. 202, § 544, giving a right of action to the representative and requiring such suit to be brought within one year after the cause of action arises. This was held on the ground that no cause of action existed in favor of an administrator until he was appointed, and no suit could be brought by the representative founded on the injuries which occasioned the death alone.

In Sherman v. Western Stage Co. 24 Iowa. 515, it was held that the cause of action for the death was not barred by the fact that the cause of action for the injury was barred by limitation where the death was almost instantaneous. The majority opinion held that in applying the statute of limitation the cause of action did not accrue in favor of the deceased. The minority opinion held that if the statute gave the right of action for the death instead of for the wrongful act it would follow that two causes of action in favor of the same party might have their basis in the same wrongful act, one to the injured party where he survived long enough to prosecute and another after he died to his personal representative for his death, and that only one action is given. This minority opinion was affirmed in Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co. infra.

Where the damages for the death of a party was given to the wife and children, and a recovery was had by the wife and child, it was held, in another action which was brought by a child born after the first suit was settled, that the action was not barred by limitation, although not brought within one year after its birth or for the reason that he was in being at the time of the first action, and a suit could have been brought by the mother. The doctrine that the infant was barred by the statute of limitation of one year seemed to be predicated upon the rule that there could be but one recovery; but it

555. The point really decided in this case, however, is that a satisfaction made to the deceased before death bars a subsequent action by the administrator for the benefit of the next of kin. This would not necessarily conflict with a decision that a recovery by an administrator after death would not bar an action by the administrator for the benefit of the next of kin. Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. 2 Best & S. 759, Affirmed, 4 Best & S. 396; Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 801.

The action by the estate is for sufferings and expense, and not for death. The action by the next of kin is for the death and the pecuniary loss sustained by the death. It is absolutely necessary to show that there are next of kin who would suffer pecuniary loss by the death.

Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co., and Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra; Blake v.

Midland R. Co. 18 Q. B. 95; Perry v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co. 29 Kan. 420; Woerner, American Law of Administration, p. 628; Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer, 627; Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Morris, 26 Ill. 400.

Mr. Raymond G. Mowry for defendant.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover for the pain and expense arising from injuries to the plaintiff's intestate before his death, which resulted therefrom. The defendant pleads a judgment in its favor in a suit by the plaintiff in the same cause of action. The plaintiff replies that the former action was brought by him as trustee for the next of kin of the deceased, and in a different right from that inwas said that this rule does not obtain in Texas where the suit is not brought by all the beneficiaries. Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 78 Tex. 621, 11 L. R. A. 391.

This case refuses to follow the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sanders, 86 Ky. 252, which held under a similar statute that an action for damages by an infant for the death of his parent was barred where there was a personal representative who could have brought suit within the time given by law, and there was no widow, and an administrator was appointed shortly after the death and the infant did not sue until more than five years after the death. The statute says that suit shall be brought within one year after the cause of action accrues. The court held that if there was one person in case who could sue and recover, the cause of action had accrued. "But it was said that the cause of action has not accrued to the infant. There is but one cause of action. There can be but one recovery." And the court said that if the administrator had sued and recovered, it would have barred an action by the children, and when the administrator qualified the statute then began to run, not only against him, but against the cause of action, and the statutory saving in behalf of the infant only applied where there was no one who could sue.

In Kennedy v. Burrier, 36 Mo. 128, it was held that there was but one cause of action and that accrued to the parents, and in default of suit by them it passed to the children, under Mo. Rev. Code 1865, p. 648, § 2, providing for an action for damages from death to be brought: first by the husband or wife, second, on failure to sue within six months, then by the children, and the cause of action shall be brought one year after it accrues. The failure of the parent to sue within one year barred an action by the child.

But in Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co. 68 Iowa, 470, 56 Am. Rep. 568, in an action by the administrator for the benefit of the estate, where the injured party lived a few moments, it was claimed that at common law the action could not be maintained, and that there was no statute which gave a remedy for such an injury, that none accrued, and that the only action which could be maintained by the representative was on a right of action which accrued before death and which survived, under Iowa Code, § 2525, providing that all causes of action shall survive notwithstanding the death of the person entitled to the same. The court said: "We do not find it necessary to determine whether this position that the statutes of this state give no remedy for the death of a human being is sound or not." It was conceded that if one accrued to him it survived, and as he lived a few moments it was held that the cause of action accrued to him and the action could be maintained. On petition for rehearing the court adopted the minority opinion in the case of Sherman v. Western Stage Co. 24 Iowa, 515, and therefore that case is overruled in so far as it conflicts with this opinion.

And the cause of action for the injury was barred where an action for damages for the death was barred. Only one right of action was given under Iowa Code, § 2526, which provided that the civil remedy was not merged in a public offense, and when a wrongful act produced death the damages should be disposed of as personal property, and § 2527, which provided that a right of action for a wrongful injury causing death should be deemed a continuing one and to have accrued to such representative or successor at the same time as it did to the deceased if he had survived. It was held that the statute of limitation began to run as though the deceased had survived. The statute was changed since Sherman v. Western Stage Co. Ewell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 67.

A judgment for the widow in an action by her for the death of her husband was reversed where the petition disclosed that the deceased left neither children nor father but a mother living, and it was not sufficient to assert that her claim, if any, was barred by limitation. Dallas & W. R. Co. v. Spiker 59 Tex. 437.

f. For death of infants.

Some cases hold that only one action can be brought for the death of an infant, and that the primary right of action is in the parent, as in Indiana and Oregon. Some cases hold that only one action can be maintained, and that the personal representative has the primary right of action, as in Minnesota, South Carolina, Nebraska, and Kansas. In Iowa and Washington it seems that two actions may be maintained, one by the parent for loss of services, and one by the administrator based on the expectancy. In Michigan it is intimated that an action may be brought by the representative for the next of kin, and one by him for the injuries to the deceased. In Vermont an action may be maintained for loss of services, and also damages in an action by the representative. In Illinois an action may be maintained for loss of services up to the time of his death, and by the administrator for the death. In Arkansas three actions are allowed, one for the personal injury, one for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and one by the father for loss of services from the time of injury to the time of death. In Pennsylvania an action for the benefit of the family cannot be split.

The following cases hold that only one action can be brought for damages arising from the death of a minor: Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 366, 74 Am.

volved in this action, which is for the benefit of the estate. To this replication the defendant demurs. The question therefore is whether, under our statutes, an administrator has the right to maintain two actions for negligence resulting in death,—one for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, according to our form of Lord Campbell's act, and another for the damage to the person, under our statute for the survival of actions.

Upon this question two theories have been advanced. One is that the action for personal injury upon which the deceased could have sued at common law, if death had not ensued, is given, by a statute for survival, for the benefit of his estate, and that a new and independent remedy is given by Lord Campbell's act for the loss sustained by the widow and children on account of the death. The other theory is that there is but one cause of action, and one remedy, which is given, by grace, to the family of the deceased, in lieu of the aid which they might have expected from him, instead of a recovery for the benefit of his estate; and that this remedy is exclusive. It is to be borne in mind that prior to 1846 no recovery at all could be had for an injury resulting in death. The action died with the person. Neither creditors nor kin had any enforceable rights, however great might have been the loss which the death had brought upon them. Then came Lord Campbell's act, entitled, "An Act for Compensating the Families of Persons Killed by Accidents." It was not an act for the benefit of an estate, but for the family. It took no right from the estate, for it had none. It transferred no right to the family, for none then existed. It gave a new remedy to the

Dec. 259; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 32 Am. Dec. 299; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328; Berry v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 128 Ind. 484; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodykoonz, 119 Ind. 111; Scheffler v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 518; Edgar v. Castello, 14 S. C. 20, 37 Am. Rep. 714; Wilson v. Bumstead, 12 Neb. 1; Eureka v. Merrifield, 58 Kan. 794; Putman v. Southern Pac. Co. 21 Or. 230.

Other cases allow two actions, one by parent and one by administrator. Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 458; Hedrick v. Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400; Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 525; Barley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 4 Ill. 430; Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 63 Ark. 117, 7 L. B. A. 283.

Some allow two actions by the representative. Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539.

The action for the benefit of the family cannot be split. Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp, 100 Pa. 98.

So, an action could be maintained by a widow for damages for killing her infant son, under 2 Ind. (Gavin & H.) Stat. p. 33, § 27, providing that the father, or in case of death, imprisonment, or desertion the mother, may maintain an action for the injury or death of her child. This was held not repugnant to § 784, providing that when the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another the personal representative of the former may sue in a case where such person might have sued for the wrongful act had it not caused death. The statutes were reconciled by holding the latter applicable to adults and the former to infants. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 18 Ind. 366, 74 Am. Dec. 259.

And under the statute it was held that two rights of action for the death of an infant did not exist. Where the injury occurred to a minor the right of action was in the parent, and where an adult was injured the action was to be by the administrator. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 32 Am. Dec. 299; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328.

In Mayhew v. Burns, supra, the case of Gann v. Worman, 69 Ind. 458, to the effect that there was no statute giving the father the right of action for the loss of services of the child after the child's death, and that under §§ 27 and 784, supra, the only action which could be maintained by a father was as representative of the injured child's personal right of action, was modified.

And the administrator could not sue for the death of his minor child unless he alleged that the minor was emancipated, although he alleged that the deceased was eighteen years of age and left surviving him both father and mother, but that for two months before and at the time of his death he was not in the services of his parents. The petition did not show that the child was emancipated. Berry v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 128 Ind. 484.

34 L. R. A.

In Berry v. Louisville E. & St. L. R. Co. supra, it was said that the construction of the Indiana statute in Mayhew v. Burns, supra, and Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodykoonz, infra, was not altogether satisfactory, but the court said: "We cannot feel that we would be justified in overruling them."

Where death was instantaneous, and it did not appear that the guardian paid anything out of the ward's personal estate for funeral expenses, he had no right of action, the mother being alive at the time the suit was commenced. It was said that the mother might recover for loss of services. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodykoonz, 119 Ind. 111.

So, a release by a father, who is sole beneficiary, for damages causing the death of his child, is a bar to any further action. Stuebing v. Marshall, 10 Daly, 406.

Where a father brought an action for damages for services on account of the negligent killing of his infant child, under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1873, chap. 77, § 2, creating a cause of action where the death was caused by the wrongful act or omission of any party investing it in the personal representative, it was held that no one but the personal representative could maintain such a suit. Scheffler v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 125. While this action was pending the father as administrator brought an action under the same section to recover damages sustained by the next of kin, and only such damages were claimed as would accrue to the plaintiff as next of kin after the arrival at the age of twenty-one years if his son had lived. An estimate of damages made in this case upon the basis that the child will turn over to his next of kin all his accumulations over expenses was held to be erroneous. 32 Minn. 518.

In Edgar v. Castello, 14 S. C. 20, 37 Am. Rep. 714, it was held that an action by a father to recover damages for the negligent killing of his child three years of age, where death was instantaneous, there being no allegation of loss of service, would not lie under S. C. Gen. Stat. chap. 109, p. 507, providing for an action whenever death shall be caused by wrongful act of another who would have been liable if death had not ensued, and that such action shall be brought by the personal representative for the benefit of wife, husband, parent, and children as such statute excluded the idea that the party causing the injury resulting in death was to be subjected to two actions for such injury.

A father cannot maintain an action for the death of his children independent of Nebraska Comp. Stat. chap. 21, § 1, providing that the party causing the injury shall be liable for damages notwithstanding the death of the injured party, and § 2, providing that such action shall be brought in the names family for the death, and for that only. From that time to this the damages to be recovered by them have been only those resulting from the death. The states of this country quickly adopted the general features of this act, beginning with New York, in 1847. With characteristic conservatism the act was not adopted in this state until October, 1858. In § 1 it gave the remedy to an administrator, for the benefit of the widow and heirs, for the loss of life of a passenger or person in care of a common carrier; but in § 6, for general cases of death by wrongful act, it was provided that the action could be sustained "by the person who would otherwise have been entitled thereto;" for example, parents and masters, for loss of service. In January, 1855, railroad companies were made liable for the loss of life, by their negligence, of persons crossing a highway, and the same remedy for the benefit of the family was provided, except that in this act husbands were put among the beneficiaries. Up to this point, it is clear that no remedy was provided for the personal injury of the deceased, or for the benefit of his estate. In the Revised Statutes of 1857, chap. 176, §§ 16-21, the laws relating to passengers and persons crossing a highway were consolidated, and that relating to general cases of death by wrongful act was expanded to cover all cases in which an action for damages might have been maintained at the common law had death not ensued; with the remedy, however, for the benefit of the family. But in the same chapter (§ 10) there was added to the causes of action, and actions which survive, that of "tresof the personal representatives, and shall be for the exclusive benefit of the next of kin. The plaintiff in this case might have recovered his reasonable costs and expenses in a proper case. Wilson v. Dumstead, 12 Neb. 1.

In this case it was said: "There are a few cases decided in this country, notably that of Sullivan v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Dill. 335, where it is held that such an action can be maintained. But it is evident from an examination of the cases that such decisions are not derived from the common law."

In an action by a father and mother for damages for the death of their children it was held that only one action could be brought, and that must be by the personal representative under Kan. Civ. Code, § 422, providing for actions by the personal representative for the family. It was held that § 420, providing for survival of action for injuries means when the injuries do not result in death, § 422 a, providing for action by the widow or next of kin only applied where the injured party died out of the state or had no resident personal representative. Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794.

In Eureka v. Merrifield, supra, the construction placed upon these sections of the Code by the case of McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. infra, was followed. This is not the same as that in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett, infra, but that decision was not referred to in this opinion.

Where the relation of parent and child continued after majority, the parent receiving support of service could maintain his action under Hill's Or. Code, § 34, providing that the parent may maintain an action for the injury or death of a child. This was held notwithstanding the administrator could maintain his action under § 371, providing that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another the personal representative may maintain an action for the injury if the injured party could had he lived, and the amount recovered is to be administered as other personal property. It was said that if the child was under age and in the service of the parent there would be no right of action under § 371. Putman v. Southern Pac. Co. 21 Or. 230.

The administrator was not entitled to recover for damages accruing prior to the time at which the child would have attained his majority, under Iowa Rev. § 4111, providing that when a wrongful act produces death, the perpetrator is civilly liable for the injury; the parties to the action shall be the same as though brought for a claim founded on contract against the wrongdoer and in favor of the estate of the deceased. But it was said that the father or mother would be the proper party to an action to recover such damages under Iowa Rev. § 2792, providing that the father, or in case of death, imprisonment, or desertion, the mother may prosecute, as plaintiff, an action for the expenses and actual loss of services resulting from the injury or death of a minor child. The administrator may recover damages to the estate which might have accrued after the child reached majority. Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 458.

A judgment in favor of an administrator for killing a child, under Wash. Code 1881, § 8, providing that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or representative may recover such damages, pecuniary or exemplary, as may be just, was held not a bar to an action by the father for loss of services of the child aged five years and seven months, under § 1, providing that a father, or in case of death or desertion the mother, may maintain an action as plaintiff for the injury or death of a child. The damages to the parents was the value of the child's life until he would have reached the age of majority less support and maintenance, and adding expense of nursing and medicine. It was said that the administrator was only entitled to recover for injury accruing to the estate after the child would have reached majority. Hedrick v. Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400.

A recovery by a father for loss of services of his minor son and expense of nursing was not a bar to a recovery by the father as administrator of the son of such damages as the son might have recovered in an action which was brought by the son before he died, and exemplary damages might also be recovered under Vt. Gen. Stat. chap. 52, § 11, providing that if a party to an action for personal injuries shall die during the pendency of the action, it may be prosecuted to final judgment by the personal representative. Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 525.

A recovery for loss of services of a minor child from the time of the injury until he died, for medical attendance, funeral expenses, and the loss of time by father and mother, did not bar an action by the administrator for the death of the minor, under Ill. Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 582, § 1, providing that whenever death is caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, which would have entitled the injured party to maintain an action, such damages may be recovered by the personal representative, for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, as the jury shall deem a fair and just compensation with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin. Barley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 4 Ill. 430.

In Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 233, it was held that three different suits could be maintained in Arkansas for injury causing death of a minor, one by the personal representative for personal injury of the deceased occurring in his lifetime, under Ark. (Manuf.) Dig. § 5323, providing for an action for wrongs done to another, to be brought after his death by his personal represen-pass on the case for damages to the person." It is under this section that the plaintiff claims. In support of his claim he relies on Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189; Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599; Barnett v. Lucas, 6 Ir. C. L. Rep. 247; Bowes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 365; and Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 300. The opinion in Bowes v. Boston is based upon the statutes of Massachusetts, and holds that two actions, one for the benefit of the family and one for the benefit of the estate, may proceed at the same time, on independent grounds, and for different purposes. It cites no authority. In Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. the point decided was that the injury to the deceased having occurred in New Hampshire, where no right of action in either form survived, the plaintiff could not maintain action therefor in Vermont. The dictum relating to two causes of action has recently been overruled in Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. Barnett v. Lucas was an action for injury to personal estate, and is therefore not in point. Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. was on demurrer to the declaration, which alleged a breach of contract to carry a passenger safely, and it was held that the action could be maintained, notwithstanding the fact that provision for compensation for the death was made by Lord Campbell's act. The case was decided in 1875; and Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co., decided in 1876, was a case upon a similar contract, to which the defendant pleaded a denial of the averments of fact, and a recovery by the plaintiff under Lord Campbell's act. The plaintiff tatives for the benefit of the estate, and one by the personal representative under §§ 5225, 5226, providing for an action by him for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and one by the father for loss of services between the time of the injury and the time of his death under the common law. The damages to the father after death are to be recovered by the administrator for the benefit of the father as next of kin.

And in an action by the personal representative of an infant for the benefit of the next of kin, under Mich. (How.) Stat. § 8314, providing for an action by the personal representative and damages with reference to the pecuniary injury, an amendment was refused setting out an additional cause of action to the administrator for injuries to the deceased, under § 7397, providing that actions for negligent injuries to the person shall survive. It was said that they were two separate and distinct causes of action and satisfaction of one would not bar the other. Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 34 Mich. 539.

In an action by a father to recover for the negligent killing of his married minor son, it was held that independent actions to the father and to the widow of a minor killed by wrongful act or negligence are not given by Pa. act 1858 giving a right of action first to the husband or widow, second to the children, and last to the parents. It was said that this statute limiting the right in all cases to the family had never been construed to give the husband and parents joint or separate actions for the loss of a deceased wife and daughter. The widow's rights in this case are the same as though the son was of age. Lehigh Iron Co. v. Rupp, 100 Pa. 98.

II. Concurrent actions for death and injury.

Some decisions hold that more than one cause of action is given by the statutes, one for the injury or expenses and one for the death. Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 557, 35 L. T. N. S. 334, 24 Week. Rep. 781; Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 81 L. T. N. S. 847; Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 34 Mich. 539; Davis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. 233; Bowes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L. R. A. 365; Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294; Westcott v. Central Vermont R. Co. 61 Vt. 440; Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693.

The contrary was held in Kansas in an early case, but there is some conflict in that state. See infra.

So, an action by an administratrix of her husband for expenses in loss of business, medical attendance, and nursing, where he was a season-ticket holder, and died from injuries received through the negligence of the railway company, was held not barred by an action brought by the administratrix for the 34 L. R. A.

benefit of herself as wife and his children for the injury caused to them by his death. The last action was under 4 Edw. III, chap. 7, which enabled an executor to bring an action for damages to the personal estate, and the first action was under Lord Campbell's act, and the administratrix sued in different rights. The court held that the cause of action was sustained by Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 148, 81 L. T. N. S. 847, infra; but that case was questioned, although followed. Leggott v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 557, 35 L. T. N. S. 334, 24 Week. Rep. 784.

And a recovery was allowed in two actions, one for pain and suffering of the deceased, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 17, providing for an action for damages for the life of a person lost by a defective highway, by the personal representative for the use of the widow and children or of next of kin, and another under § 18, providing for a recovery by the person who was injured from the defective highway, which survived under chap. 165, § 1. Bowes v. Boston, supra.

In Westcott v. Central Vermont R. Co. supra, where the declaration showed that death resulted from the tortious act of the defendant, and that the deceased left a widow and next of kin, and that plaintiff was his representative, it was held that this was a cause of action under Vt. Rev. Laws, §§ 2138, 2139, providing for the recovery of damages for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and that the declaration should show that they were living at the time the suit was brought. It was further said that two rights of action might arise from death caused by tort, one under this section and one under Rev. Laws, §§ 2134, 2135, which authorized a recovery for damages sustained by the deceased. See Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652, subd. I. c. 1, supra.

In Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294, it was said that the personal representative has two causes of action, one in favor of the decedent for his injury in his lifetime, and the other founded on his death for damages to widow and next of kin, under Vt. Gen. Stat. chap. 52, § 15, providing an action for death if the injured party could have maintained an action, and § 16, providing that the action shall be for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and chap. 52, § 11, providing for the survival of an action for personal injury. But see Legg v. Britton, supra, I. c. 1.

In Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236, which was an indictment under Mass. Stat. 1890, chap. 223, § 37, for death by a street-railway company, and it was claimed that the indictment was bad because it did not allege that death was immediate, the fact that a civil action for damages lies under another statute does not justify this interpretation. It was said that the common-law action surviving under the statute to the administrator replied that the defendant was estopped by the judgment in the former case to deny the facts, and to this replication the defendant demurred. The court held that there was no estoppel, because the plaintiff sued in a different right, and, in so deciding, followed Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. but not without protestation. Mellor, J., said: "With the single exception, so far as I am aware, of the case in the common pleas, Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co., there appears to be no authority that an action will lie by the executor in respect of what is claimed in this action.

But as that case has been decided on the very point, I entirely yield to the authority of the decision, so far as to say that in this court it cannot be questioned, and we must therefore abide by it." In Pulling v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 110, the Bradshaw case was further commented upon. Denman, J., said: "None of the authorities go so far as to say that, where the cause of action is in substance an injury to the person, the personal representative can maintain an action merely because the person so injured incurred in his lifetime some expenditure of money in con-and an indictment under the statute did not cover the same ground. In the former damages for the personal injury to the deceased are alone recovered; in the latter the purpose is to secure to the relatives some compensation for their loss as well as to inflict some punishment. In one case damages are recovered by the legal representative, which may never come to the relatives, in the other the amount of the fine is fixed by the court and paid to the use of the widow and children. As to what effect, if any, the proof of a judgment in a civil action before a settlement with the party injured or his representatives would have upon the prosecution of an indictment for the same act, was not decided.

In Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 189, 44 L. J. C. P. N. S. 143, 31 L. T. N. S. 847, a recovery was allowed an executrix in an action for breach of contract to carry a passenger who died in consequence of an injury by an accident on the cars, and damages were allowed to his personal estate for medical service and loss occasioned by inability to attend to business. It was claimed that Lord Campbell's act took away any right of action that the executrix would have had but for that act, and provided for the only action that could be brought, but it was held that the intention of the act was to give the personal representative a right to recover compensation as trustee for children or other relatives, and not to affect any existing right belonging to the personal estate in general, and did not interfere with the common-law right of the executor.

In a suit by the administrator to recover damages for killing the intestate, it was held that an independent right of action was given by Miss. Code 1880, § 2078, providing for suit by a personal representative of any personal action whatever, which the deceased might have commenced and prosecuted, this was held to be distinct from and independent of Code, § 1510, authorizing a suit by husband, wife, or child to recover for the death of a person caused by the wrong or negligence of another, if the party injured could have sued had he lived. Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693.

In Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crudup, 63 Miss. 291, as to whether two suits might be brought, one by the administrator for the injury to the deceased and another for the damages suffered by the next of kin by his death, was not decided; but one suit for both causes may be brought and a full recovery be had in an action by the father as administrator of his son, killed in Tennessee. Tenn. Code, §§ 2291, 2292, provided that the right of action for personal injuries caused by another should not abate by his death, but passed to his personal representative for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, and Tenn. laws 1863 provided that where the person's death was caused by the wrongful act of another, the party suing under Code, §§ 2291, 2292, should have the right to recover damages for mental and physical suffering, loss of time and necessary expenses resulting to the deceased, and damages resulting to 34 L. R. A.

the party for whose use and benefit the right of action survives. It was held that whether the damages given to the next of kin by the death were distinct or not from the right to recover for the injury inflicted on the deceased, given as a new cause of action, both may be recovered in one suit.

In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett (Kan. App.) 67 Pac. 183, which was an action to revoke the appointment of an executor so as to prevent him from prosecuting a suit brought by the injured party, it was held that two causes of action are given by Kan. Civ. Code, § 420, providing that actions for injury to the person shall survive, and § 422, providing that the personal representative may recover for the death if the injured party might have recovered if he had lived, and the damages must inure to the widow and children. Under the first section the right of action survives for the benefit of the estate, and under the second a new right of action is created for the sole benefit of the widow, children, or next of kin. (Disapproving McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 28 Am. Rep. 742.)

But in McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. supra, where the person was injured in Missouri and died in Kansas, and his administrator appointed in Kansas brought an action under Kan. Civ. Code § 422, providing for an action by the personal representative for the benefit of the next of kin when death results from wrongful act, it was held that this section takes away the right of the administrator to sue for the benefit of the estate generally where death resulted from the injury, and the action could not be maintained by claiming the benefit of § 420, providing that an action for injury to the person shall survive notwithstanding the death. This was construed to mean when death resulted from other causes than the injury, and when death results from the wrongful act § 422 applies. An administrator could not maintain an action under §§ 420, 422, for the same injury. This case was followed but doubted in *Hulbert v. Topeka, *infra, and denied in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett, supra.

And the only action which can be maintained in Kansas when the wrongful act of the defendant causes the death of the intestate is that provided for by Kan. Comp. Laws 1879, § 422 providing that when death is caused by the wrongful act of another the personal representative may maintain an action for the injury if the injured party might have maintained an action had he lived, and the damages must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children, § 420 providing that a cause of action for the personal injury shall survive as construed with § 422 only causes an action to survive for injuries to the person when the death occurs from other causes. (Justice Brewer rendering the decision doubted this construction although he was a member of the Kansas court which established the rule, but felt constrained to follow the state decision of McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. supra; Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510.) See Eureka v. Merrifield, supra, L. T.

sequence of the personal injury. The case of Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. certainly does not go to that length, because the judgments in that case are expressly based upon the distinction, in this respect, between actions of contract and actions of tort, and upon the fact that in that case the action was an action of contract." The opinion (Pollock, B., concurring) decided that the plaintiff could not sue for damages to the intestate's person. In view of these comments, the support which the Bradshaw Case gives to the plaintiff turns out to be more apparent than real. Prior to these cases, that of Read v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, had been decided in 1868, holding that satisfaction received by the deceased, in his lifetime, for the injury, was a bar to a suit for the death. That case stated the principle upon which the compensatory act is founded. It creates no new cause of action by reason of the death, but gives a new right of recovery in substitution for the right of action which the deceased would have had if he had survived. Upon this principle the new remedy must be exclusive, since otherwise there would be two recoveries for the same cause of action, namely, the negligence of the defendant, which is the cause of action on which the deceased would have sued at common law, if he had survived. Moreover, the recognized rules of construction lead to the conclusion that the remedy for the death is exclusive. While the act relates to a remedy, it is, nevertheless, in derogation of the common law, because it gives a right of action where none existed at common law, and so it should be strictly construed. The provisions for survival of actions for damages to the person and for the remedy for the death, have been embodied in the same statute in this state since 1857, although the latter was first adopted. The general provision should not be construed to modify the special, since the intention to modify the former statute by giving an additional remedy is not plain, and both can stand together; the act for survival embracing damages to the person other than those which result in death. This is the construction which was given to precisely similar provisions in Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 184, where it was held that the only cause of action was the wrong done, irrespective of consequences, and that a statute of survival, subsequently passed, did not give a remedy additional to that of the prior act relating to the death. That case had been commenced by the deceased in his lifetime, but the court held that it could not proceed without amendment alleging and suing for the death. So, in Chicago & H. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586, it was held that where the plaintiff, pending an action for injuries, dies from some other cause than the injury, the action survives, and may be prosecuted by his administrator. In McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 28 Am. Rep. 742, where both provisions for an action for death and for survival of an action for injury to the person had been embodied in a revision, as in our own statutes, it was held that they must be construed in part materia, and that the latter provision applied only to cases where the death did not result from the injury. This decision was followed in Hulbert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510; but "Mr. Justice Brewer, although he had concurred in the opinion, as a member of the state court, and felt constrained to follow it, expressed a doubt of its correctness. See also Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 539; Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515; Hartigan v. Southern Pac. Co. 86 Cal. 143; Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 84 Conn. 57; Putman v. Southern Pac. Co. 31 Or. 280.

A further consideration in favor of a single action is the confusion of damages which would result from the maintenance of two actions. Although they might be theoretically separate, a practical separation would be quite impossible. The measure of pain and suffering, or estimated damage to one's estate, cannot be so definitely marked as to limit liberality of a sympathetic jury.

One more consideration may also be noted. While a court may not be justified in resting a decision upon a common opinion of the bar, yet such an opinion, held and acted upon for a long time, furnishes a strong presumption that a decision in accordance therewith is correct. We think that the common understanding has been that two actions could not be maintained. The memory of the members of this division, covering a period of more than thirty years at the bar and on the bench, does not recall an instance where two suits have been brought, and, in view of the diligence which has been shown by many attorneys in cases of this kind, it is hardly conceivable that the second one would have been omitted if it had been thought that it could be maintained.

Our conclusion is that the defendant's demurrers to the plaintiff's replication must be sustained.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Nathan HOLLEMAN, Appt.,

v.

W. H. HARWARD et al.

(119 N. C. 150.)

The sale of laudanum as a beverage to a married woman, knowing that it is destroying her mind and body and causing loss to her husband, when continued after his repeated warnings and protest, renders the seller liable to him for the damages which he sustains on account of the loss of her services.

(November 24, 1894.)

NOTE.—The above case, like the recent case of Kujek v. Goldman (N. Y.) 84 L. R. A. 156, applies old and broad principles to sustain a novel cause of action. The peculiar element of difficulty in the present case is that of the wife's free will. To 34 L. R. A.

avoid the maxim Volenti non fit injuria the decision must rest upon the fact that she had become incapable of rational action in the matter, so that the injury to her is like an injury to property or to a person non compos mentis.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wake County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff by reason of the sale of laudanum to his wife. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Argo & Snow, for appellant:

For every legal right there is a corresponding legal remedy for the deprivation or infringement of that right.

8 Bl. Com. 23; 1 Addison, Torts, 72.

Injuries that may be offered to a person considered as a husband are principally three: Abduction, or taking away a man's wife; adultery, or criminal conversation with her; and beating or otherwise abusing her.

If the beating or other maltreatment be very enormous, so that thereby the husband is deprived for any time of the company and assistance of his wife, the law then gives him a separate action upon the case for this ill-usage, per quod consortium amittit, in which he shall recover a satisfaction in damages.

8 Bl. Com. 140.

The husband has the right to sue alone for any infringement of his conjugal rights to her services, society, affection, and fidelity; hence arise rights of action against one who injures his wife.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 829.

For an injury to the wife either intentionally or negligently caused, which deprives her of the ability to perform services or lessens that ability, the husband may maintain an action for the loss of service, and also any incidental loss or damage, such as moneys expended in care and medical treatment and the like.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 226; Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240, 82 Am. Dec. 670; Mowry v. Chaney, 48 Iowa, 609; Berger v. Jacobs, 81 Mich. 215; Bloomington v. Arnett, 16 Ill. App. 199; King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 364; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Steenerson v. Morris, 87 Ohio St. 10; Matteson v. New York C. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 487, 91 Am. Dec. 67; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 94 U. S. 11, 24 L. ed. 48; Kavanaugh v. Jonesville, 24 Wis. 618; Smith v. St. Joseph, 55 Mo. 456, 17 Am. Rep. 660; Fuller v. Naugatuck R. Co. 21 Conn. 557.

He who assists the wife in the violation of her duty as such is guilty of a wrong, for which an action will lie by the husband, where injury is thereby inflicted upon him.

Hoard v. Peck, 56 Barb. 202.

The consent of the wife to the performance of the act or acts is no defense and does not defeat the right of action.

Ibid.; Reeves, Dom. Rel. 139; Barnes v. Allen, 30 Barb. 668; McAulay v. Birkhead, 18 Ired. L. 28, 55 Am. Dec. 427.

Messrs. Battle & Mordecai and H. E. Norris for appellees.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover of the defendants damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendants having sold laudanum to his wife, the defendants being druggists, and knowing that the plaintiff's wife was using the same in large quantities, and as a beverage, to the injury of her health. A demurrer overtans on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was sustained by his honor. The defendants had answered, denying all the material allegations of the complaint, but, for the purposes of this action, the demurrer having been entered and sustained, the matters alleged in the complaint are to be taken as true. The complaint shows that the plaintiff's wife, many years before this action was brought, while suffering from some temporary illness, was forced to take preparations of opium for relief, and from this was formed the habit of taking laudanum. The plaintiff, as soon as he discovered the habit, set to work to cure or prevent it, and so informed the defendants, who lived in the same town with him, and forbade them to sell to his wife opium in any form, except upon his own order, the defendants then and before having sold her the laudanum knowing that she was addicted to the use of it as a beverage. It is further alleged in the complaint that, notwithstanding these protests and orders to the contrary of the plaintiff, the defendants have almost daily, through a series of years, against the frequent protest and warnings of the plaintiff, sold to the plaintiff's wife large quantities of laudanum, which they knew she was using as a beverage; that the defendants knew that at the times when they were selling the laudanum to the plaintiff's wife she was using it as a beverage; that she was becoming, and had become, what is known as an "opium eater;" that she was, through the use of the drug, wrecking her mind and body; and that the plaintiff was doing his utmost to prevent such use, and to counteract the effects of the ruinous drug. The plaintiff alleges in his complaint "that his wife, by reason of the use of the drug as a beverage, had become a mental and physical wreck, and almost deprived of moral sensibility, unfitted and disqualified to attend to her household duties, or to the care and nurture and direction of her children; and that by the means aforesaid so furnished by the defendants knowingly, wilfully, and unlawfully, the plaintiff has been deprived of the society of his wife, of her services in her home, and his children have suffered from neglect and want of motherly care;" that the plaintiff's family consists of his wife and six children, some of them very young, and all under age; that the plaintiff himself is dependent on his daily toil for a living, and the care of his household and children is dependent upon the services and attention of his wife; and that by the sale and use of the laudanum she has become physically and mentally incapable of attending to her duties. The complaint further alleges that, but for the conduct of the defendants in selling and furnishing the plaintiff's wife laudanum, the plaintiff would have been able to have counteracted the habit, which was only forming at the time the defendants began to furnish her with the said deadly drug; and his said wife instead of being a burden from mental and physical and moral imbecility, would have been a comfort and a helpmeet. The question, then, is, Can the plaintiff, upon the facts set out in the complaint, maintain an action?

The action is a novel one. With the exception of the case of Hoard v. Peck, 56 Barb. 202, which, in its most important aspects, resembles the one before us, we have been able to find no precedent in the English common-law courts or in the courts of any of our states. It does not follow, however, that because the case is new the action cannot be maintained. If a principle upon which to base an action exists, it can be no good objection that the case is a new one. It is contended for the defendants, though, that there is no principle of the common law upon which this action can be sustained, and that our own statutory law gives no such remedy as the plaintiff seeks in this action for the wrong done to him by the defendants, and that the novelty of the action, together with the silence of the elementary books on the subject-matter of the complaint, while not conclusive, furnishes strong countenance to their contention. It is claimed for the defendants that while, in the abstract, such facts as are stated in the complaint would make the parties charged guilty of a great moral wrong, there would be no legal liability incurred therefor. It was argued for the defendants that there was no legal obligation resting upon themselves not to sell the drug, as is alleged, to the plaintiff's wife, or upon the wife not to use it; that many of the ancient restrictions upon the rights of married women had been repealed by recent legislation, or modified by a more liberal judicial construction; that a married woman was ordinarily free to go where she would, and that the husband could not arbitrarily deprive her of her liberty, nor use violence against her under any circumstances, except in self-defense, and that, if he could not restrain her locomotion and her will, he could not prevent her from buying the drug and using it; that the wife's duty to honor and obey her husband, to give to their children motherly care, to render all proper service in the household, and to give him her companionship and love, was a moral duty, but that they could not be enforced by any power of the law, if the wife refused to discharge them. But, notwithstanding the claim of the defendants, we think this action rests upon a principle,—a principle not new, but one sound and consistent. The principle is this: "Whoever does an injury to another is liable in damages to the extent of that injury. It matters not, whether the injury is to the property, or the person, or the rights, or the reputation, of another." Story, J., in Dexter v. Spear, 4 Masson, 115. And also in the third book of Blackstone's Commentaries (chap. 8, p. 123) it is written: "Wherever the common law gives a right, or prohibits an injury, it also gives a remedy, by action." A married woman still owes to her husband, notwithstanding her greatly improved legal status, the duty of companionship, and of rendering all such services in his home as her relations of wife and mother require of her. The husband, as a matter of law, is entitled to her time, her wages, her earnings, and the product of her labor, skill, and industry. He may contract to furnish her services to others, and may sue for them, as for their loss, in his own name. And it seems to be a most reasonable proposition of law that whoever wilfully joins with a married woman in doing an act which deprives her husband of her services and of her companionship is liable to the husband in damages for his conduct. And the defendants owed the plaintiff the legal duty not to sell to his wife opium in the form of large quantities of laudanum as a beverage, knowing that she was, by using them, destroying her mind and body, and thereby causing loss to the husband. The defendants and the wife joined in doing acts injurious to the rights of the husband. From the facts stated in the complaint, the defendants were just as responsible as if they had forced her to take the drug, for they had their part in forming the habit in her, and continued the sale of it to her after she had no power to control herself and resist the thirst; and that, too, after the repeated warnings and protests of the husband. There is no difference between the principle involved in this action and the principle upon which a husband can recover from a third person damages for assault and battery upon his wife. That assaults and batteries are made criminal offenses makes no difference, the foundation of the husband's suit being, not for the public offense, but for damages,—compensation for the injury which he has sustained on account of the loss of his wife's services. The sale of the laudanum by the defendants to the plaintiff's wife, under the circumstances set out in the complaint, was wilful and unlawful, and the husband's injury is just as great as if his wife had been disabled from a battery committed on her, although the unlawful act is not indictable.

The defendant's counsel also insisted that the selling of laudanum is a lawful business, that it is on the same footing as the sale of spirituous liquors unrestrained by the statute. It is true that there is no statutory provision in North Carolina prohibiting the sale of laudanum as a beverage or as a medicine, but it does not therefore follow that a sale of it under all circumstances is lawful. As is well said in Hoard v. Peck, supra, "Its lawfulness or unlawfulness depends upon the circumstances of the sale, and the uses and purposes to which it is to be applied." It is lawful to sell laudanum as a medicine. It is also lawful to sell spirituous liquors as a beverage upon the dealer's complying with the license laws, except in the cases prohibited by statute. Certainly no fair inference can be drawn from this that damages may not be recovered from one who knowingly and wilfully sells or gives laudanum or intoxicating liquors to a wife, in such quantities as to be attended by such consequences to the wife as are set out in the complaint in this action. We have in our state (Code, § 1077) a statute which makes it unlawful to sell liquor in any quantity to a minor (except he is a married man), and § 1078, gives to the person injured damages therefor. But suppose we had no statute on the subject of liquor selling to minors, would the law permit with impunity a dealer or other person to sell liquor to a man's child, without his knowledge or consent, in such quantities as to produce habitual intoxication, or to render him unfit for employment? But laudanum is well known to be a poisonous drug. As a beverage, it cannot be drunk without injury to the body, affecting the health of the physical and moral powers, and this is known to most persons of ordinary intelligence and to all druggists. The defendants knew, taking the complaint in this appeal to be true, that the plaintiff's wife did not buy the laudanum for medicine. They knew that she was buying it as a beverage; that she was violating her duty to her husband in destroying her health, and thereby rendering herself unfit as a companion for him, and to render proper service in the household. They assisted her and encouraged her, for gain, with the means of doing all this in face of his frequent protests and warnings. The habit she had formed was the direct result of the use of the drug, which the defendants sold to her in such large quantities, and they knew it, and persisted in it, although repeatedly warned and entreated by the husband not to do so. His honor erred in sustaining the demurrer. It ought to have been overruled.

Error.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS' MUTUAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION OF FLORENCE COUNTY, Resp't.,

v.

Thomas S. BURCH, App't.

(47 S. C. 453.)

1. The lien of a mutual insurance company upon insured property of members for their shares of the losses and expenses of the company takes precedence of the members' homestead rights under a by-law which provides that the insured buildings and the right, title, and interest of the assured to the lands on which they stand shall be pledged to the company, which shall have a lien against all persons interested during the continuance of the insurance as to all debts or liabilities incurred by the company.
2. A pledge of property insured in a mutual insurance company as security for payment of the owner's share of the debts and liabilities of the company is a mortgage within the meaning of a statute restricting the modes of waiving homestead rights to alienation or mortgage of the property.

(August 10, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Florence County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce a lien upon defendant's property for his portion of the losses and expenses of plaintiff. Affirmed.

"The plaintiff, by its amended complaint, shows to the court:

(1) "That at the times hereinafter mentioned, plaintiff was, and still is, a corporation duly organized and authorized under an act of the general assembly of this state, and the following provisions appear in said act of incorporation (Laws 1894, p. 1049):

"Sec. 2. That said corporation shall have the right to mutually insure the respective dwelling houses, barns, and other buildings of its members, of Florence county, against loss by fire, wind, or lightning, upon such terms and upon such conditions as may be fixed by the by-laws of the said corporation. It may sue and be sued in any court of this state, and may have a common seal."

"Sec. 4. That every member of said corporation shall be, and is hereby, bound and obliged to pay his, her, or their portion of all losses and expenses accruing to said corporation, together with the right, title, and interest of the assured to the lands on which such buildings or other property may stand, shall be pledged to the said corporation; and the said corporation shall have a lien thereon against the insured, his or her heirs, representatives, and assigns, during the continuance of their insurance, as to all debts or liabilities contracted or incurred by said corporation subsequent to the passage of this act.

"Sec. 5. All property insured by said corporation shall be liable as herein provided until all outstanding losses shall have been paid, and until the owner thereof shall have withdrawn his insurance in the manner prescribed by the by-laws of said corporation."

"(2) That on 1st day of January, 1895, the plaintiff and the defendant duly entered into a contract in writing, duly signed by the plaintiff and the insured [the defendant], whereby the defendant became a member of plaintiff association, and whereby the plaintiff insured the defendant against loss or damage by fire of the property hereafter described. A copy of the material portions of said contract of insurance is hereto attached as Exhibit A. and made a part of this amended complaint.

"(3) That it is provided in said contract of insurance and membership, and in consideration thereof, that the defendant 'does, on the 1st day of January, 1895, at 12 o'clock M., become a member of said company, assigning to the same the following described property: One frame, shingle roof, one-story dwelling-house, situated upon the following described real estate, to wit: All that tract of land, in county and state aforesaid, containing 7 1/2 acres bounded north by lands of estate of Sarah W. Kennedy, east by lands of Mrs. M. D. Burch, south by lands of Mrs. M. D. Burch, and west by lands of Mrs. S. J. Harrell; also, 'three bed-room sets, and one set of parlor furniture, stove, and kitchen furniture, being in and upon the house and premises, as above described;' also, 'one frame barn and contents, situated upon the above described premises.' And the said plaintiff insured, as aforesaid, the above-described property to the amount of $700, as will more fully appear by reference to said policy, hereto attached, and made part of this complaint.

NOTE.—For the liabilities of members of mutual insurance companies, see note to Ionia, R. & B. 84 L. R. A.

Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Ionia Circuit Judge (Mich.) 82 L. R. A. 481.

"(4) That in said contract of insurance the defendant agreed to bear his pro rata portion of all expenses and losses sustained by the members of this association on account of loss or damage of property that has been assigned to this association by fire . . . and likewise the said association shall pay to the insured, within thirty days after the treasurer has given notice of assessment, all damages to the property described in said insurance contract.

"(5) That afterwards Mrs. M. A. Anderson, who was a member of said association, sustained loss by fire on her dwelling house, insured by plaintiff association, and which had been assigned to plaintiff, as aforesaid, to the extent of $320; and D. H. Mixon, likewise a member of said association, sustained loss by fire on his dwelling house, insured by plaintiff, and which property had been assigned to plaintiff, as aforesaid, to the extent of $35; and H. N. Mixson, likewise a member of said association, sustained loss by fire on her dwelling house, insured by plaintiff, and which property had been assigned to plaintiff, as aforesaid, to the extent of $125; and John Chisholm, likewise a member of said association, sustained loss by fire on his dwelling house, insured by plaintiff, and which property had been assigned to plaintiff, as aforesaid, to the extent of $500. And plaintiff further alleges that all of said losses were duly adjusted by plaintiff association at the respective sums as aforesaid.

"(6) That the defendant's pro rata portion of said losses and expenses, under the terms of the policy or contract, set out in this complaint, was duly fixed and assessed at the sum of $3.50; and the defendant was duly notified of said assessment, but he has failed and refused to pay the same, although long since due.

"Wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment that the said lien be enforced by this court; that the personal property and the real property (if so much be necessary) be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the costs of this action, then to the payment of the said sum claimed to be due; and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and equitable."

Exhibit A was as follows:
Policy of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association of Florence County, South Carolina.

This agreement, this day entered into between Thomas S. Burch, of Florence, S. C. (who is called the insured), and the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association of Florence County, whereby it is agreed: (1) That the insured shall bear his pro rata portion of all expenses and losses sustained by the members of this association on account of loss or damage of property that has been assigned to this association by fire, lightning, or wind storm of any description. Likewise, the said association shall pay to the insured, within thirty days after the treasurer has given notice of assessment, all damages to the property described below (provided the amount of insurance herein specified shall equal such loss), by fire, lightning, or wind storm of any description. . . . (5) This policy shall remain in force until such time as it may be canceled, either by the insured or the association, as provided in this policy, or the by-laws of this association. . . . In consideration of the above, the insured does, on the 1st day of January, in the year 1895, at 12 o'clock, become a member of said company, assigning to the same the following-described property: One frame, shingle roof, one-story dwelling house, situated upon the following-described real estate, to wit: All that tract of land, in county and state aforesaid, containing seventy-seven and one half acres, bounded on the north by lands of estate of Sarah W. Kennedy, east by lands of Mrs. M. D. Burch, south by lands of Mrs. M. D. Burch, and west by lands of Mrs. S. J. Harrell, $500; three bed-room sets and one set of parlor furniture, stove and kitchen furniture, being in and upon the house and premises as above described, $100; one frame barn and contents, situated upon the above-described premises, $100. Dated this 1st day of January, A. D. 1895. [Duly signed by insured and officers of company.]

The amended answer was as follows:

"The defendant above named, answering the amended complaint herein, admits the truth of the allegations set forth therein. The defendant, further answering the said amended complaint, alleges that he is the head of a family residing in the state; that the personal property described in the complaint is worth less than the sum of $500; and that the real estate described therein is worth less than the sum of $1,000; and that he owns no other property out of which his homestead exemption can be assigned. Wherefore the defendant prays that the said complaint be dismissed in so far as it prays for the sale of said property."

The decree was as follows:

"This cause came on before me at chambers, under an agreement of counsel filed in the cause, on the amended pleadings. All the facts alleged in the amended complaint and the answer are admitted to be true. The defendant raises the question that he is entitled to homestead exemptions, and resists the sale of the property on that ground. I hold that the charter of the plaintiff and the agreement of insurance create a lien on the property insured and the real property upon which the same is situated. The claim of homestead cannot prevail against this lien or its enforcement. It is ordered and decreed that the property described in the complaint (if so much be necessary) be sold by the clerk of this court on sales day in July, 1896, etc.
"O. W. Buchanan, Judge 3d Circuit."

Report of the Circuit Judge.

"The matter herein presents a novel question in relation to the homestead exemption: Whether or not under the circumstances the benefit of the exemptions should be allowed the defendant. As in the previous judgment heretofore rendered, I hold that under such contract no such exemption should be allowed him. Upon the appeal, for the settlement of this question, certain facts contained in the record were admitted. No question was made as to the time at which the contract was made with reference to the incorporation of the plaintiff herein, but argument was made below upon the admitted facts of the complaint, answer, etc. In the decision on appeal, the case was decided upon the time of its contraction with reference to the incorporation of the plaintiff. It is proper for me to say that no such question was made before me, and the admitted facts for the settlement of this case contained no such issue before me. Certain facts were admitted, and judgment was rendered upon such admission. Let this report be made a part of the 'case' on appeal."

Exceptions.

"(1) That his honor erred in holding that the alleged contract of insurance is anything more than an attempted waiver of homestead. (2) That his honor erred in holding that the charter of the plaintiff creates such a lien on all the property described in the complaint as will defeat the claim of homestead. (3) That his honor erred in holding that the policy of insurance and charter of the plaintiff create such a lien on said property, both real and personal, as will defeat the defendant's claim of homestead, when it is respectfully submitted that they create a lien, if any, on said personal property only. (4) That his honor erred in holding that the plaintiff had a lien on the land described in the complaint, when it appears that the policy or contract of insurance only purports to assign to plaintiff the dwelling house and the personal property insured. (5) That his honor erred in holding that the claim of homestead herein can be defeated in any other way than by aliening or mortgaging said property. (6) That his honor erred in ordering the sale of the property described in the complaint."

Messrs. W. A. Brunson and H. A. Brunson, for appellant:

The legislature has provided the machinery for completing the homestead exemption, and has established a homestead law, providing that there are only two ways by which a debtor can defeat his homestead, viz., by "aliening or mortgaging," the same.

The charter of the plaintiff is a special act, private and local in character. There is no express repeal by it, or any existing provisions of the homestead law. There is nothing in the title of the act of incorporation indicating anything more than the chartering of a mutual insurance company.

21 S. C. Stat. 1040.

The alleged lien is void for want of certainty.

The lien adjudged to exist is not that of a legal mortgage of real estate, is not the act of the debtor, and is not within the definition of a mortgage as contemplated by the law, and in any event, as the defendant "assigned" only the "dwelling house situated upon" the land and the personal property, this assignment will not carry the land.

Hendrix v. Seaborn, 25 S. C. 485, 60 Am. 24 L. R. A.

Rep. 520; Harper v. Barsh, 10 Rich. Eq. 149; Pledger v. Ellerbe, 6 Rich. L. 266, 60 Am. Dec. 123; Whilden v. Pearce, 27 S. C. 44.

Words denoting conveyance or transfer are essential to a legal mortgage.

Green v. Jacobs, 5 S. C. N. S. 283; Jones, Chat. Mortg. 8, 12, 18.

The nature of the agreement must be such that by the mere nonperformance of the conditions, the title will be transferred to the mortgagee by the force of the agreement.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 175.

The word "assigning" alone does not convey this force as between the parties.

1 Jones, Liens, § 81.

Messrs. Thompson & Kershaw, for respondent:

The general assembly shall enact such laws as will exempt from attachment, and sale under any mesne or final process issued from any court, to the head of any family residing in this state, a homestead, etc.

Const. 1868, art. 2, § 32 (Amend. 1890).

The right of dominion of the owner of lands, including the power to alien or encumber, is not either directly or indirectly the subject of this provision. The whole force of the constitutional provision is expended in preventing interference in certain cases with that dominion.

Homestead Assn. v. Enslow, 7 S. C. N. S. 19.

The right to alien, of necessity, carries the right to do a lesser thing, to wit, to encumber.

Thompson, Homesteads & Exemptions, 456.

A sale to enforce a lien on specific property is not a sale under any "mesne or final process," within the meaning of the Constitution.

Homestead Assn. v. Enslow, 7 S. C. N. S. 20.

An instrument whereby a corporation pledges the real and personal estate of said company for the fulfillment of a contract may be enforced as a mortgage.

1 Jones, Mortg. 166.

Jones, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question in this case is whether the plaintiff association, by its charter and the contract of insurance with the defendant, a member, has a lien on the property insured for the member's portion of the association's losses and expenses, which will prevent the defendant from claiming a homestead therein against such claim. This action was commenced January 1, 1896, to enforce an alleged lien for $3.50 against certain real and personal property of the defendant, to pay his pro rata portion of the losses and expenses of the plaintiff corporation. On the former appeal in this case, the judgment of the circuit court was reversed (46 S. C. 550), on the ground solely that the alleged contract of insurance, according to the record before this court, antedated the act incorporating the plaintiff. This court, while reversing the judgment below on this point, surmising that there was some error in the pleadings below, gave leave to apply for amendment. In justice to Judge Buchanan, who heard the case, it should be said that the point upon which the case was reversed was not called to his attention or passed on by him. The pleadings having been amended, the case was again submitted to Judge Buchanan, who held that the charter of the plaintiff and the agreement of insurance create a lien on the property insured and the real property upon which the same is situated, and that the claim of homestead cannot prevail against this lien or its enforcement, and accordingly decreed for sale of the property, or so much as may be necessary to pay the claim, etc. The case was heard upon the facts stated in the complaint and answer, which, with the exhibit, the decree and report of his honor, and the exceptions, will be found in the report of this case. The exceptions raise practically the one question stated at the beginning of this opinion.

We hold with the circuit court on this question. The plaintiff is a mutual insurance association, chartered by the legislature of this state December 18, 1894, with power to "mutually insure the respective dwelling houses, barns, and other buildings of its members of Florence county against loss by fire, wind, or lightning, upon such terms and under such conditions as may be fixed by the by-laws of said corporation." Section 4 of the act of incorporation, incorrectly set out in the complaint, is as follows: "That every member of said corporation shall be, and is hereby, bound to pay his, her, or their portion of all losses and expenses accruing to said corporation; and all buildings and other property insured by and with said corporation, together with the right, title, and interest of the assured to the lands on which such buildings or other property may stand, shall be pledged to the said corporation; and the said corporation shall have a lien thereon against the insured, his or her heirs, representatives, and assigns, during the continuance of their insurance, as to all debts or liabilities contracted or incurred by said corporation subsequent to the passage of this act." When, therefore, a person becomes a member of this association, and enters into the contract of insurance, he voluntarily gives to the corporation the lien upon the dwelling houses, barns, and outbuildings insured, together with the right, title, and interest of the insured to the lands on which such buildings stand. We are not to be understood as ruling that this association has power to insure, and by its charter acquire therefor a lien upon personal property. This question is not before us. Indeed, in the third exception of appellant it is claimed that the charter and contract create a lien, if any, on the personal property only. While the first exception might be strained to cover this question, the question was not made before the circuit court, nor argued in this court; hence we assume it is not intended to be made.

The question is to be determined by the Constitution of 1868, in force when the contract in question was made. Under that Constitution, it has been often adjudged that the homestead is not an estate, but a mere exemption from attachment and sale under any mesne or final process issued from any court. The title and dominion over the property remaining with the owner, he could alienate or encumber it as he saw fit, consistently with the constitutional or statutory enactment creating the homestead. The Constitution of 1868 placed no limitation on this power. But it is provided in § 2180, Rev. Stat., that "no waiver of the right of homestead, however solemn, made by the head of a family at any time prior to the assignment of the homestead, shall defeat the homestead provided for in this chapter: provided, however, that no right of homestead shall exist or be allowed in any property, real or personal, aliened or mortgaged, either before or after assignment, by any person or persons whomsoever, as against the title or claim of the alienee or mortgagee, or his, her, or their heirs or assigns." It has been held that this act limits the modes of defeating a homestead to those named therein,—alienation or mortgage of the property. Hendrix v. Seaborn, 25 S. C. 485, 60 Am. Rep. 520. The mortgage, however, need not be in form a legal mortgage; an equitable mortgage may defeat the homestead allowed by the Constitution and act under consideration. Besides, the "pledge" of the property insured—the "lien" thereon, which is "a tie that binds property to a debt or claim for its satisfaction"—is, in this case, given by the statute, upon the assent of the owner by his becoming a member of the association, and entering into the contract of insurance, designating the property insured and subject to the lien. The express purpose of the act of incorporation was to give a lien on the very property usually included and claimed under homestead exemption—"the dwelling house," etc. The lien created by the statute and contract pursuant thereto is a mortgage in the sense of § 2180, quoted above. It is a voluntary pledge or dedication of specific property, as a security for the satisfaction of an obligation.

We reach this result with all the more satisfaction because the legislation and contract in question are not hostile to the preservation of homesteads, but, on the contrary, are directly designed to afford owners of homesteads, at small expense, mutual protection against the destruction of their homes.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

KINGMAN COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,

Piffs. in Err.,

v.

William F. LEONARD.

(.....Kan.....)

"The statutes of this state do not provide for, nor authorize, the assessment and taxation of judgments rendered by the courts of this state in favor of, and owned by, citizens of other states.

(December 5, 1894.)

ERROR to the District Court for Kingman County to review a judgment enjoining the collection of a tax upon plaintiff's interest in a judgment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John T. Little, Attorney General, and C. W. Fairchild for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. M. D. Libby and P. B. Gillett, for defendant in error:

All tax certificates, notes, judgments, bonds, and mortgages in this state are subject to taxation as personal property. The situs of such property must be "in this state;" but the statute does not mean that tax certificates, notes, judgments, bonds, and mortgages, as such, shall be subject to taxation; the intent and meaning are, that the right, the debt (credit), the thing of value, shall be subject to taxation, if "in this state." "Tax certificates, notes, . . . bonds, and mortgages," as such, are tangible—tangible evidences of the things of value, and as such might be the subjects of taxation (Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 67, 50 Am. Rep. 462); but the legislature clearly makes a distinction between the evidence and the things of value thereby represented, as property subject to taxation, for it is said, "the term 'personal property' shall include every tangible thing, etc.; also tax certificates, notes, judgments, bonds, and mortgages, etc.," indicating that the latter things, as property, are intangible, and that the intangible—the debt (credit), is what "shall be subject to taxation, in the manner prescribed by this act," when "in this state."

State v. Earl, 1 Nev. 394; Desty, Taxn. 330; Cooley, Taxn. 43; Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 12 Iowa, 530; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania ("State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds"), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300-326, 21 L. ed. 179-189; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 445, 24 L. ed. 760, 763; Arapahoe County Comrs. v. Cutter, 3 Colo. 349; Collins v. Miller, 48 Ga. 336; Goldgart v. People, Goar, 106 Ill. 25; Lanesborough v. Berkshire County Comrs. 131 Mass. 424; St. Paul v. Merritt, 7 Minn. 258; Thomas v. Mason County Ct. 4 Bush, 185; Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167; People v. Park, 28 Cal. 189; Adam v. Litchfield, 10 Conn. 127; People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 602.

The old maxim, Mobilia sequuntur personam,

*Headnote by ALLEN, J.

applies to choses in action in determining a situs for taxation.

In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary this common-law rule would control, and personal property be taxable only where the owner had his domicile.

Griffith v. Carter, 8 Kan. 571; Swallow v. Thomas, 15 Kan. 66.

The domicile of the owner determines the situs of choses in action ("credits") for the purposes of taxation.

Finch v. York County, 19 Neb. 50, 56 Am. Rep. 741; Herron v. Keeran, 59 Ind. 472, 26 Am. Rep. 87; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 426, 19 Am. Rep. 546; Griffith v. Watson, 19 Kan. 23; Ottawa County Comrs. v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 245, 27 Am. Rep. 101.

The balance of judgment sought to be taxed in this case is not secured by lien on real estate, and being a demand for money it comes within the term "credit" when and where used in the statute.

Brown v. Thomas, 37 Kan. 286.

Then, by the common-law rule, as affirmed by the statutes (§ 6854) and this court, the judgment in the case at bar is not taxable in Kansas, but at the domicile of its owner in the state of Missouri.

A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law pronounced by a court or other competent tribunal in a proceeding therein.

Davidson v. Smith, 1 Biss. 351; Blaskie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 236; Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 8 Colo. 321; Zeigler v. Vance, 3 Iowa, 530; Bouvier, Law Dict.; Bl. Com. 395; Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 150.

The final determination of a right is not the thing taxed; it is the thing of value, the right itself, which the taxing power reaches for.

If the old maxim, Mobilia sequuntur personam, ever applied to intangible property, in the very nature of things it must apply to judgments.

Story, Conf. L. § 378; Broom, Legal Maxims, 522; Black, Law Dict.; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491-499, 25 L. ed. 558-563; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania ("State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds"), 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 300-326, 21 L. ed. 179-189; Com. v. Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. 29 Pa. 370; Shakespeare v. Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. 97 Pa. 178; Orcutt's Appeal, 97 Pa. 179; Commonwealth's Appeal (Pa.) 14 Rep. 183; Com. v. Standard Oil Co. (Pa.) 15 Rep. 59; Com. v. American Dredging Co. 123 Pa. 386, 1 L. R. A. 237, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 221.

By and of itself a judgment for money has no situs, no dwelling place on land or sea, but is a mere rule of human conduct finally determined as between living persons and their representatives, and apart from these it has no existence in fact or law.

People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 603; Barber v. Farr, 54 Iowa, 57; Smith v. Byers, 43 Ga. 191; People v. Worthington, 21 Ill. 171, 74 Am. Dec. 95.

The creditor who has debts due him from residents of another state than that of his residence is not taxable in the state of the debtor's residence; the credits, not the debts, are taxable.

NOTE.—As to the situs of debts evidenced by notes and mortgages for the purpose of taxation, see Boyd v. Seima (Ala.) 16 L. R. A. 729.

34 L. R. A.

The present case seems to be a novel one on the subject of taxing judgments.

Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 445, 24 L. ed. 763; Arapahoe County Comrs. v. Outter, 3 Colo. 849; Collins v. Miller, 43 Ga. 836 (promissory note); Goldpart v. People, Goar, 106 Ill. 25; Lanesborough v. Berkshire County Comrs., 181 Mass. 424; St. Paul v. Merritt, 7 Minn. 258; State v. Earl, 1 Nev. 894.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the defendant in error, as plaintiff below, to enjoin the collection of taxes on the unpaid balance of a judgment in his favor rendered by the district court of Kingman county. This judgment was rendered in an action to recover the amount of a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the same. The mortgaged property was sold, and, after the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the judgment, there remained a balance; and the balance remaining unpaid was assessed, in the city of Kingman, the county seat of Kingman county, for taxation. The plaintiff is a resident of Missouri. The question presented for our consideration is whether judgments rendered by the courts in this state in favor of nonresident parties are taxable while they remain unsatisfied. There is no claim in this case that the party against whom the judgment was rendered is insolvent, or that the valuation placed on the judgment is excessive. Has the legislature assumed the power to and provided for the taxation of such judgments? Section 1, chap. 107, of the General Statutes of 1889, reads: "Section 1. That all property in this state, real and personal, not expressly exempt therefrom, shall be subject to taxation in the manner prescribed by this act." In § 2 the term "personal property" is defined as follows: "The term 'personal property' shall include every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership, not forming part or parcel of real property; also, all tax-sale certificates, judgments, notes, bonds and mortgages, and all evidences of debt secured by lien on real estate; also, the capital stock, undivided profits, and all other assets of every company, incorporated or unincorporated, and every share or interest in such stock, profit, or assets, by whatever name the same may be designated; provided, the same is not included in other personal property subject to taxation, or listed as the property of individuals; and also every share or interest in any vessel or boat used in navigating any of the waters within or bordering on this state, whether such vessel or boat shall be within the jurisdiction of the state or elsewhere; and also all 'property' owned, leased, used, occupied, or employed by any railway or telegraph company, or corporation within this state, situate on the right of way of any railway." Section 7 of the same chapter provides where property shall be listed for taxation, and the part of the section material to this inquiry reads as follows: "Every person required to list property in behalf of others shall list such property in the same township, school district, or city in which said property is located; but he shall list such property separate and apart from his own, specifying the name of the person, estate, company, or corporation, to which the same may belong. All toll bridges shall be listed in the township or ward where the same are located; and if located in two wards or townships, then one half in each of such wards or townships. And all personal property shall be listed and taxed each year in the township, school district, or city in which the property was located on the 1st day of March, but all moneys and credits not pertaining to a business located shall be listed in the township or city in which the owner resided on the 1st day of March." It will be observed that the provisions with reference to what property shall be subject to taxation are very sweeping, and that judgments, as well as other forms of intangible property, are not only included within the general terms used, but are specifically mentioned as included in the term "personal property." Sections 9 and 10 of the act require the owners of property subject to taxation to make lists thereof and § 10a provides that the statement shall set forth the number of the school district or districts in which such property was situated on the 1st day of March. It is ably and earnestly argued that the common-law rule embodied in the maxim, Mobilia personam sequuntur, applies with full force in this case, and that the situs of the intangible property evidenced by the judgment is at the domicile of the owner, and subject to taxation there only. This rule of law is subject to so many exceptions and limitations that it is quite as liable to mislead as to furnish a correct guide, when considered alone. In the distribution of the estates of deceased persons, it is generally, if not universally, given full force and effect, both as to tangible and intangible property; and, from comity, nations foreign to each other generally recognize the law of the place of the owner's domicile as controlling in the distribution of the personal estate of the deceased owner. To questions of taxation the maxim has very little application. Every sovereignty asserts the right to levy taxes on persons and property within its protection, and the ground on which all taxation is justified is that it is a burden necessarily imposed by the sovereignty in order to enable it to perform its duty in protecting persons and property. 1 Desty, Taxn. 59; Cooley, Taxn. 19 et seq.; Story, Conf. L. 548, note A, and cases cited. We think it now quite well settled that choses in action belonging to a nonresident, in the hands of a managing agent within the state, are taxable. New Albany v. Meekin, 56 Am. Dec. 522, note page 580, and cases therein cited; 1 Desty, Taxn. 64; Finch v. York County, 19 Neb. 50, 56 Am. Rep. 741. The power to tax residents of the state on credits due from citizens of other states is often upheld. Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 426, 19 Am. Rep. 546. And this even where it results in duplicate taxation. Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 400; note to People v. Worthington, 74 Am. Dec. 85, and cases cited. The cases upholding the power to tax promissory notes and other written securities held within the state, though owned by a nonresident, sometimes lay stress on the fact that the securities are, in a certain sense, property, and are subject to seizure for debt, and that a title may be made to the intangible debt by delivery of the written evidence of it.

We perceive no valid objection to the power of the legislature to tax all judgments by domestic courts, and remaining unsatisfied, whether owned by citizens of this state, or other states, or foreign countries, provided the rate of taxation be the same as that imposed on other forms of property belonging to citizens of this state. The question here, however, is whether the legislature has expressed a purpose to tax judgments in favor of a citizen of another state, rather than as to the power to do so. Judgments are included, by the express provision of § 2, in the term "personal property." Does this mean judgments owned by citizens of this state, or those rendered by courts within the state, without reference to ownership? In answering this question, some weight, at least, should be given to the rule that credits are generally regarded as residing with the creditor. The case of Fisher v. Rush County Comrs. 19 Kan. 414, is an extreme one, and has been criticised. A resident of this state may undoubtedly be taxed on moneys due him from citizens of other states, and this would be equally true after the claim is reduced to judgment in a foreign jurisdiction. Under the provisions of § 7, where the owner of a domestic judgment resides in this state, it seems clear that it must be taxed at the place of his residence, provided it does not pertain to a business located at some other place. Where the owner is a nonresident, if taxed at all, it must be taxed in the township, school district, or city in which it is located; and, to be taxable, it must be held to have a situs of its own. The authorities with reference to the situs of a judgment are not numerous, and no case is called to our attention where the precise point now under consideration has been decided in an action where the owner of the judgment resided out of the state. But, in cases where the owner resided in the state, it has been held that the situs of the judgment for purposes of taxation is at the residence of the judgment creditor. Meyer v. Pleasant, 41 La. Ann. 645; People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601.

When this case was first considered, the writer was strongly inclined to the opinion that a judgment should be held to have a situs of its own at the place where the record of the court rendering it is kept; but it seems quite clear that, if the owner be a resident of the state, the situs is with him, at his place of residence, and there is no purpose expressed by the legislature to give judgments in favor of nonresidents a situs for the purpose of taxation. If the legislature wishes to change the rule, and establish a situs for taxation for all judgments rendered by the courts of this state, it ought to employ language expressive of its purpose to do so. The natural implication from the language in fact employed would seem to be that, as to the situs of credits for taxation, the rules generally recognized were intended to be followed.

The judgment is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

S. T. McLAUGHLIN, Appt.,

v.

LOUISVILLE ELECTRIC-LIGHT COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A stockholder in a corporation which owns stock in another company is disqualified to act as juror in an action against the latter company.
2. The utmost care is necessary to keep the insulation of dangerous electric wires perfect at a place where people have a right to go to work, business, or pleasure, although very great care may be sufficient as to wires at other places.
3. The apparently proper insulation of electric-light wires on the side of a building is an invitation or inducement to persons painting the building to risk the consequences of contact with them, especially in the middle of the day.
4. The fact that the insulation of dangerous electric wires is very expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for failure to make such insulation perfect at points where people have the right to go for work, business, or pleasure.

NOTE.—For negligence as to electric light wires in or on buildings, see Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. (Mass.) 32 L. R. A. 400, and note.
34 L. R. A.

5. A man who comes in contact with an electric-light wire on the side of a building while climbing out of a window upon a cornice while at work painting the building is not guilty of contributory negligence, unless in so doing he fails to exercise the degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually exercise under such circumstances.

(November 25, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused by contact with an improperly insulated electric wire belonging to defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Junius C. Klein for appellant.

Messrs. Gibson & Marshall, O'Neal, Phelps, & Pryor, and Phelps & Thum for appellee.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is alleged in the petition in this action that "the plaintiff is and was on the 8th day of July, 1893, a painter by trade, and followed the same for a livelihood, and was on the 8th day of July, 1893, engaged in painting a house on the east side of Fourth street, in the said city of Louisville, between Market and Main streets, and numbered —; that on said 8th day of July, 1893, and long prior thereto, the defendant, its agents and servants, had erected and maintained one of its electric wires, charged with electricity, on the side of said house facing Fourth street; that the said wire, on the 8th day of July, and long prior thereto, was insufficiently, carelessly, and negligently insulated, and that defendant, its agents and servants, were well aware of said want of insulation, or could have been aware of same by the exercise of proper diligence; that plaintiff on said 8th day of July, 1893, while in the discharge of his duties as painter aforesaid, and without fault on his part, came in contact with said wire, which at the said time was heavily charged with electricity by the defendant, its agents and servants, whereby he was severely shocked and rendered insensible, and that he remained insensible and unconscious for twenty minutes and more; that he suffered severe pain, both physically and mentally, by reason of said shock, and that the flesh on his left hand was burnt and blistered to such an extent as to render said hand useless, and that ever since and now said plaintiff is unable to use said hand in the performance of his vocation as a painter; that plaintiff is rendered less able thereby to make a living at his trade as a painter; that the said injuries received by the said plaintiff are permanent, and that his entire nervous system, by reason of said shock, is unbalanced, causing plaintiff much and severe pain; that the said injuries complained of herein were caused wholly by the gross negligence of the defendant, its agents and servants; that the plaintiff had been damaged by reason of said injuries in the sum of $2,500. Wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant for the sum of $2,500, and for his costs, and for all proper relief." The defendant filed a demurrer to the petition, which was overruled by the court. The first paragraph of the answer substantially denies all the averments in the petition which show any right to recover. The second paragraph of the answer is as follows: "Further answering, this defendant says that the injuries received by the plaintiff, and set forth in the petition, were received wholly and entirely because of his want of proper care and caution in looking out for his own safety, and by reason of his carelessness in coming in contact with an electric light wire, which he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety could have known. Was then and there charged with a current of electricity, making it dangerous to life for anyone to come in contact with the said wire. Defendant says that, by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, and such as circumstances and surroundings made it apparent was necessary, the plaintiff could have avoided coming in contact with the said wire, and could have escaped all injury therefrom. Defendant says that plaintiff came into contact with said wires by failing to exercise that degree of care which he knew or ought to have known under the circumstances was necessary to be exercised by him to avoid injury from said wire. Wherefore, having answered, defendant prays to be dismissed. The reply of plaintiff traversed the allegations of the answer. The jury found for the defendant, and his petition was dismissed. Appellant relied on these grounds for a new trial, viz.: That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by plaintiff in instructions Nos. 1, 2, 8, 8, and 9; (2) that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by sufficient evidence; (3) that the court erred in not excusing a juror, William Fryatt, for cause, he being a stockholder in the Louisville Gas Company, and it being the owner of stock in the defendant company. The motion for a new trial was overruled, and plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff below (appellant here) testified in substance as follows: "S. T. McLaughlin testified: That he was twenty-two years of age, and a house painter by trade; was a contractor in that line, and had a job in conjunction with Asa Carr of painting the front of H. C. Green's hotel, known as the 'Fourth Avenue Hotel,' and had almost finished the work, on the 8th day of July, 1893, when he came in contact with one of the defendant's electric wires, near the side of a window, and received a shock. That defendant had two wires running from the west side of Fourth street in Louisville, Kentucky. That these two wires were fastened to brackets attached to the side of the wall between the first and second windows of the hotel, counting from the north. These windows were on the second floor of the building. The first floor was occupied by business firms. That these brackets were fastened to the wall about 6 inches from each window, and about 5 feet above the sill of the windows. That defendant had an iron box, called a 'converter,' attached to the side of the hotel building, midway between these two windows. That this box was about a foot above an iron cornice running the full length of the building, immediately below the windows, about 6 inches below. That these two wires ran from the brackets to the top of this converter or box. That plaintiff was shocked by the wire next to the north side of the second window, at a place where the wire was joined together, and about half way between the bracket and the converter. That this wire ran down from its bracket along the side of the window, and 6 inches from the window, for about 2 feet, and then turned over north to the converter. That the iron cornice was about 12 inches wide; space enough for a man to stand on conveniently, and paint. That he and his men had used the cornice to work from, as there were wires preventing the staging or swinging ladder from being let down between them. When he had painted down to the bracket and wires, he pulled the staging up, out of the way, and painted around the wires and the iron box, while standing on the iron cornice. The window sill was outside about 5 inches by 5 inches, and rested on the iron cornice inside of the wood about a foot wide. That he had put several coats of paint on the house, and was through, with the exception of touching up the right hind ear of the iron box. That he was in the act of getting out of this second window on the cornice, to touch up this ear, when he received the shock. That he had taken his brush full of paint in his right hand, and nothing in his left, and was on the sill of the window, turning back out onto the cornice, when he used his left hand to steady himself against the north side of the window opening, when his hand came in contact with the wire, and he received the shock which rendered him unconscious, and he did not know anything more for about a half an hour, when he was revived and found himself inside of the house, with Asa Carr, W. J. Cody, his employee, and Mr. H. C. Green, working with him to revive him. That his left hand was burnt and blistered on the 3d and 4th fingers, and at the edge of the palm, at base of small finger. That he suffered a great deal at the time of the shock and long afterwards. That he went home and went to bed for a week. That he has never fully recovered the full use of his left arm and hand. That he has not been able to work at his trade or calling on account of the weakness of his hand. That he cannot properly handle the brush and ropes. That in his trade it requires strong hands and arms to hoist and lower himself on the staging. That he has not had any work at his trade at all. That he did and is working as a hand on the steamer —, plying between Louisville and Cincinnati; and has worked about two months. That there was no sign or anything else to warn him of a danger about or near those wires." On cross-examination, said S. T. McLaughlin testified: That no one warned him at any time about those wires. That he did not know Squire Green, but did know Mr. Green, proprietor of the hotel. That Squire Green did not tell him to keep away from those wires. Did not see Squire Green around the building the day before the accident. Squire Green did not offer to cut the wires if he wanted it done. Nor did he tell Squire Green that he could get along without the wires being cut. That no one told him that the wires were alive or dangerous. That he knew that electric wires were dangerous, but that he had been working around the wires all week, and all seemed to be insulated, and yet he was not hurt. That he did not know electricity was turned on. That it was about noon of the 8th day of July, 1893, when he was hurt. That he saw no lights about the building. That he came up to the office of the defendant one Sunday night; whether first Sunday after the accident or not he did not remember. Was there because Mr. Smith had sent for him. Did not tell Mr. Smith or anyone else that he was not hurt, or was scared more than hurt, and did tell him then and there that he was hurt, and showed him his hand, and pointed out the places where it was burned. That he did not meet Squire Green every other Sunday on Third and Jefferson streets. Witness then showed his hand to the jury, pointing out the only indication of the burn at edge of palm. That what appeared to be a wart there was not a wart. It was not there when he was shocked. It came there afterwards, when it healed up.

William J. Cody testified: "Was working there on the 8th day of July, 1893, the day on which Sam McLaughlin was hurt. That he was standing on the first window, inside of same, stirring some paint. The work of painting the building was finished with the exception of a little space below the second window sill, and one of the ears of the iron box on the side of the house between the first and second windows. That McLaughlin got his brush full of paint, and was going out to paint this ear; and, while I was at the first window, he started to get out of the second window, with his brush in his right hand. Had nothing left in his left. He had hardly gotten into the window opening when I heard a groan, followed immediately by a second one, and I then leaned out of the window, and looked in the direction of the groans, and saw McLaughlin have hold of the electric wire between this iron box and a bracket right on the joint of the wire. I quickly ran to the second window, put my arm between him and the north side of the window out around his body, then reached over his head, and took hold of the wrist of his left hand, and jerked it loose from the wire, and lifted him into the building, and laid him down on the floor. About that time Asa Carr came into the room, and then Mr. Green, of the hotel. We all rubbed him, walked him, and slapped him for fully twenty minutes before he was revived. At the time I pulled his hand loose from the wire, I received a shock myself, but not enough to hurt me. McLaughlin, when I reached him, was doubled up partly on the window sill, and one leg out on the iron cornice below the window. He suffered a great deal; was unconscious for fully twenty minutes. Examined the joint he had hold of immediately after we had got him to himself. Found the joint very loose and rotten. One end of the stuff used in wrapping it was hanging down about 2 inches. The wires all seemed to be covered with insulation. The place McLaughlin had hold of this wire was very near the north edge of the north side of the second window. The bracket to which it was fastened was within 6 inches of the edge of the window. These windows were about 3 feet apart. The sills were of wood and stone. The stone was 5 inches wide and thick, and rested on an iron cornice, running above the storerooms on the first floor. This iron box or converter was placed against the wall between the first and second windows in the middle, and about a foot above the iron cornice. This wire entered at the top of the box at the side. The wires come from across the street, from the west side, and run over to these brackets, and then down to the box. Whenever we had painted to the top down to these wires, we pulled the staging up out of the way, and stood on this iron cornice, and painted from there. The cornice is 12 inches wide. Had worked around the very same wire several times. Had experienced no shock, nor did he notice anything wrong with the wire. All seemed insulated. Did not remember seeing Squire Green around there. Did not hear him or anyone else warn McLaughlin to beware of the wires. Nothing was said about the wires being dangerous." Other witnesses testified as to the injury.

John F. Bunscomb testified as follows: "John F. Bunscomb testified that he is an electrician. Have run similar plants to that of defendant. Knows the defendant's plant well, and its power. Formerly an employee, when the defendant was on Third street, several years ago. Electric wires are always insulated; that is, covered with a material that is a nonconductor. This is done to prevent a waste of power, and for safety. There are different grades of insulation. The insulation is put on at the factory. Whenever it is desired to join two ends of different wires, the ends are scraped of all insulation. The clean ends are then twisted around each other closely, in order to make close connection. After, the joint is then soldered together. This makes a perfect connection. Then, to protect this joint, it is wrapped usually with a rubber tape about an inch wide, putting on five layers, which is considered by the underwriters as a sufficient insulation. This rubber tape adheres to itself, and, if pressed and wrapped on tightly, it will not come off easily. This is the method of wrapping joints in high tension wires, which is the character of defendant's electric wires. These joints, as well as the regular insulation on the wires, is apt to rot and wear off. The action of weather has something to do with this. The rubber will rot in time, and, in case a layer or two is thus rotten, it will more easily catch moisture, which renders the joint dangerous. All wires are more or less dangerous when wet, as in raining weather; and if, in such case, a good ground was had, I would not risk any of them. Iron cornice as usually used above stone buildings forms an excellent conductor, and standing on it, and holding a wire charged with electricity of high tension, even though insulated and in dry weather, is risky; also, most certainly so, in bad weather. Stone is not a good conductor as iron in wet weather. Using it instead of iron, I would not risk it. There is absolutely no perfect insulation except at a great cost, which prevents it being used extensively. All insulation is affected by the changes in the weather. Rubber, for instance, gets wet, and then it is dried by the sun. This soon wears it out. If a joint has on it less than five layers of wrapping, it is just as much or more apt to be dangerous. The smallest pinhole is sufficient to let the electricity of these high-tension wires escape in force enough to be fatal. If a joint is wrapped loosely, it will catch the rain and moisture, and rot sooner than if wrapped tightly and evenly. A joint with an end of the wrapping hanging down a couple of inches would be considered dangerous. The iron box referred to is a converter. It reduces the force of the current. The wires entering the converter are called the 'primary wires,' and those leaving the box the 'secondary wires,' which are not dangerous because they carry a light current; otherwise, if a heavy current, it would burn out the lamps. The full power or volt of the plant is used on those arc lights we see on the streets, and only a small part is used for lights inside the stores and residences. Have seen men apparently receive two thousand volts of electricity without serious results. The amount taken, though, is mostly guesswork. So many conditions enter into the estimation of the amount actually received. Some men seem to be able to stand more than others. Would not tempt even the best of insulation if I was standing on a good conductor, especially in wet weather."

At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to find for defendant, which motion was overruled by the court. The testimony of defendant conducted to show that the defendant had used reasonable care, and that plaintiff was not severely injured. It also contends that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

The following are the instructions offered by plaintiff, and refused by the court: "No. 1. The court instructs the jury that it is the duty of the defendant, the Louisville Electric Light Company, to so insulate or protect its wires as to make them free from danger to those who may be brought in contact with them; and if they shall believe from the evidence that the said company failed to so insulate or protect the wire with which S. T. McLaughlin came in contact, and that his injuries were caused by the reason of such failure, then the law is for the plaintiff, and they shall so find, unless they shall further believe from the evidence that the said S. T. McLaughlin, by his own negligence, contributed to cause his injuries, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was. No. 2. If the jury shall believe from the evidence that S. T. McLaughlin came in contact with said wire while in the act of climbing out of said window, and that the said wire was not so insulated or protected as to be free from danger to him, and that his injuries were caused thereby, they ought not to find him guilty of contributory negligence, unless, in so doing, he failed to exercise that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually exercise under the same or similar circumstances. No. 3. That the injury to the plaintiff is conclusive proof of the defective insulation of the said wire, and of negligence of the defendant." "No. 5. Contributory negligence means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from injury, and, by reason of such failure, helped to cause or bring about the injury complained of." "No. 8. That if they believe from the evidence that the said wire had all the appearances of having been properly insulated at the time the plaintiff received his injuries, that this was then an invitation or inducement to plaintiff to risk the consequences of contact with same, in the performance of his work in painting the house to which said wire was attached. No. 9. That, if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was not cautioned especially as to the dangerous condition of said wire before the accident occurred, then they are not to find him guilty of contributory negligence." The instructions given are as follows: "No. 1. The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the defendant, the Louisville Electric Light Company, to so insulate or protect its wires at places where they may be dangerous to human life, as to make them reasonably free from danger to persons who may come in contact with them; and if they shall believe from the evidence that the wire with which the plaintiff came in contact was not insulated or protected at the point where he caught it, and that he received the injuries of which he complained because thereof, then the law is for the plaintiff, and they shall so find, unless they shall further believe from the evidence that he contributed to cause his injury by his own negligence, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was. No. 2. But unless they shall believe from the evidence that the defendant's wire at that point mentioned in instruction No. 1 was not so insulated or protected as to make it reasonably free from danger, and that the plaintiff was injured thereby, the law is for the defendant, and they should find. No. 3. Or if they shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was negligent, and thereby contributed to cause the injury of which he complained, and that he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence, if any there was, then the law is for the defendant, and they should so find. No. 4. If the jury find for the plaintiff, they should award him such a sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence would fairly compensate him for the mental and physical sufferings endured by him by reason of his injuries, and for loss of time and capacity to earn money at his trade and occupation. If they shall find from the evidence that the injuries of S. T. McLaughlin were caused by the negligence of defendant, and shall further believe from the evidence that the negligence, if any there was, was gross, then they may, in their discretion, award him such a further or additional sum as punitive damages as they may deem right and proper, under the evidence and these instructions, not exceeding in all the sum claimed in the petition. Gross negligence means the absence of slight care. No. 5. Ordinary care means that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances. Negligence means the failure to observe ordinary care. No. 6. Contributory negligence means the failure to observe that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances to protect themselves from harm, and, by reason of such failure, helped or caused to bring about the injury complained of." To the giving of instructions Nos. 1 and 2, the plaintiff excepted.

The demurrer to the petition was properly overruled, as was also the motion for instruction to the jury to find for the defendant. It also seems to us that William Pryott had a disqualifying interest in the action, and should have been excused for cause. But by far the most important question involved is the law applicable to the case. Electricity is a powerful and subtle force, and its nature and manner of use not well understood by the public, nor is its presence easily ascertained or determined. Its use for private gain is very extensive, and becoming more and more so. The daily avocation of many thousands, of necessity, brings them near to the subtle force, and it seems clear that the electric companies should be held to the use of the utmost care to avoid injuring those whose business or pleasure requires them to come near such a death-dealing force. In the case of Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 695 et seq., 16 L. R. A. 48, the court said: "The deceased, Clements, was lawfully on the gallery roof. He was engaged in a service that necessarily required him to run the risk of coming in contact with defendant's wires, either by stepping over them or going under them. It is probable that the latter mode was the most convenient, and there is no evidence that, in so doing, he incurred any greater risk. The wires were visible, and to all appearances were safe. The great force that was being carried over the wire gave no evidence of its existence. There was no means for a man of ordinary education to distinguish whether the wire was dead or alive. It had all the appearance of having been properly insulated. From this fact there was an invitation or inducement held out to Clements to risk the consequences of contact. He had a right to believe they were safe, and that the company had complied with its duties specified by law. He was required to look for patent, and not latent, defects. Had he known of the defective insulation, and put himself in contact with the wire, he would have assumed the risk. The defect was hidden, and the insulation wrapping was deceptive. It is certain, had it been properly wrapped, Clements would not have been killed. His death is conclusive proof of the defect of the insulation and the negligence of defendant. He exercised reasonable care in going under the wire in the performance of his duty, as he had a right to believe, from external appearances, that the wire was safe. His action was such as not to tend to expose himself directly to the danger which resulted in the injury. In fact there was no apparent danger. . . . It cannot be said that, when Clements went on the roof to repair it, he went into the presence of known danger, and assumed the hazards of the employment. The employment was not dangerous. The wires, if properly insulated, as above stated, would have been harmless. It was only a remote danger, which he had to risk, and this depending upon the fact whether or not the defendant company had done its duty as specified by law. The external appearances, the only indication of performed duty to which Clements' attention could be fixed, were guarantees that the defendant company had done its duty. These appearances assured him that in the performance of his work in sweeping the roof, it was not dangerous for him to risk going over or under the wire. Bomar v. Louisiana North & South R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 983. Even in the presence of a known danger, to constitute contributory negligence it must be shown that the plaintiff voluntarily and unnecessarily exposed himself to it, unless it is of that character that the plaintiff must assume the risk from the very nature of the danger to which he is exposed. From the appearances of the wire, its wrappings with insulated tape, and the known duty of the defendant to protect the insulation at this particular splice or joint, Clements had no reason to anticipate danger except from the fault of the defendant company. This fault was the cause of his death, and his act in passing under or over the wires was too remote to give it the character of contributory negligence." The case of Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 211, 26 L. R. A. 810, was an action to recover for death caused by a boy taking hold of a live broken wire that was in the street. We quote from the decision of the court as follows: "It is due to the citizen that electric companies that are permitted to use for their own purposes the streets of a city or town shall be required to exercise the utmost degree of care in the construction, inspection, and repair of their wires and poles, to the end that travelers along the highway may not be injured by their appliances. The danger is great, and care and watchfulness must be commensurate to it. Passengers on railroad trains have a right to expect and require the exercise by the carrier of the utmost care, so far as human skill and foresight can go, for the reason that a neglect of duty in such case is likely to result in great bodily harm, and sometimes death to those who are compelled to use that means of conveyance, 'as the result of the least negligence may be of so fatal a nature the duty of vigilance on the part of the carrier requires the exercise of that amount of care and skill in order to prevent accidents.' Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, p. 58. All the reasons that support the rigid enforcement of this rigid rule against the carrier of passengers by steam apply with double force to those who are allowed to place above the streets of a city wires charged with a deadly current of electricity, or liable to become so charged. The requirement does not carry with it too heavy a burden. Human skill can easily place wires and poles so that they will not fall or break, unless subjected to some strain that could not be anticipated; and it can as readily prevent the possibility under ordinary circumstances of the contact of wires that should not be allowed to touch one another."

The evidence in this case conduces to show, that appellant was at work at his regular trade, and was where he had a right to be, and the joint of the wire, being apparently insulated, was to some extent, at least, a guaranty that there was no danger; but, independent of that fact, the situation of appellant, his work in hand, and the proximity of the wire, were such that he might without negligence have thoughtlessly taken hold of the wire, because he seemed to need support; and, besides, it was hardly to be expected that the current was on the wire at about noon, the wire being used wholly to supply incandescent lights or lamps. It seems clear to us that appellee should have been required to have had perfect protection on its wires at the point and place where appellant was injured. The fact that it was very expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for such failure. Very great care might be sufficient as to the wires at points remote from public pass-ways, buildings, or places where persons need not go for work or business; but the rule should be different as to points where people have the right to go for work, business, or pleasure. At the latter points or places the insulation or protection should be made perfect, and the utmost care used to keep it so. Instructions Nos. 1, 2, 8, 5, and 8, asked by appellant, should have been given. The others refused were not important, and tended to draw attention to particular facts or evidence. Such instructions are not favored in law. It results from the foregoing views that the court erred in giving instructions Nos. 1 and 2, marked as given. The other instructions given by the court were not excepted to; hence need not be discussed.

For the errors indicated, the judgment below is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and judgment, and for a new trial upon principles consistent with this opinion.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

Thomas LANCEY et al., Appts.,

v.

KING COUNTY et al., Rspts.

(25 Wash. 2.)

1. Provisions concerning the condemnation and disposal of land by counties in relation to public improvements undertaken by the state or the United States are sufficiently covered by a title "An Act to Grant to and Prescribe Powers of Counties Relative to Public Works Undertaken or Proposed by the State or the United States."

2. A prohibition of county aid to any individual, association, company, or corporation does not apply to such aid to the state or United States.

3. A prohibition against county indebtedness for any other than strictly county purposes will not prevent indebtedness for a public canal through the county to connect two large public waterways with the ocean.

4. That title to a public improvement when it is completed is to be conveyed to the United States will not prevent the state from exercising its power of eminent domain to acquire the necessary land upon which to construct it.

(June 18, 1893.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of defendants in a proceeding to enjoin defendants from making a certain public improvement under an act of the legislature. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to what will constitute a public purpose for which public money may be used, see note to Daggett v. Colgan (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 474.

34 L. R. A.

As to the right of a foreign corporation to take property by eminent domain, see note to Lancaster v. Amsterdam Improv. Co. (N. Y.) 24 L. R. A. 327.

Mr. C. W. Turner, for appellants:
No bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title.

Const. art. 1, § 19. This is mandatory.

The act of the legislature in question violates this provision of the Constitution, because it embraces more than one subject and not one of the real subjects of it is expressed in the title.

Woolf v. Taylor, 98 Ala. 254; State, Standish v. Nomland, 8 N. D. 427; Quinn v. Cumberland County, 162 Pa. 55; State, Ives v. Kansas City, 50 Kan. 508; Grand Rapids v. Burlingame, 93 Mich. 469; Davies v. Saginaw County Supers. 89 Mich. 295; Montgomery v. State, 88 Ala. 141; People, Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 568; State v. Brown, 79 Ga. 824; Astor v. Arcade R. Co. 113 N. Y. 93, 2 L. R. A. 789; People, Seeley v. Hall, 8 Colo. 485; Henderson v. London & L. Ins. Co. 185 Ind. 23, 20 L. R. A. 827; Thomas v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 126, 7 L. R. A. 145; Davis v. State, 61 Am. Dec. 381, and note and cases cited therein at pp. 342-346; People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 624; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 269; Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. pp. 147-151.

The statute under consideration provides that the expenses to be incurred in acquiring the property, etc., mentioned therein for the United States, shall be defrayed through the taxing power of the state, and that therefore such power shall be exercised by one sovereign for the benefit of another, at the sole cost of the taxpayers of one county. This is not the "public purpose" for which the state can lay taxes.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 4, 55, 108-110, 113, 140-142, and note, 143-145, 688, et seq.; 1 Desty, Taxn. pp. 14, 17, 25, 26 (embracing §§ 8, 9); Taxation and Eminent Domain Distinguished, Id. § 2; Restriction on Legislative Power, Id. p. 272; Purpose must be Local, Id. pp. 274, 283-287.

The statute objected to authorizes the exercise of the state's eminent domain for the use and benefit of the United States, which is beyond the power of any state to do.

People, Twombly v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 471, 9 Am. Rep. 94; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. ed. 449; New Orleans v. United States, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 723, 9 L. ed. 597; Dickey v. Maysville, W. P. & L. Turnp. Road Co. 7 Dana, 113; McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 429, 4 L. ed. 607; Darlington v. United States, 82 Pa. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 766.

Messrs. A. W. Hastie, R. S. Greene, and Thomas Burke, for respondents:

The judiciary will not interfere to avoid legislative action except in cases where the violation of constitutional inhibitions is most clear.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 92; Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 155, 27 L. ed. 433; State, McCarty v. Montgomery County Comrs. 26 Ind. 522; People, Rochester v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 553.

The Constitution does not prescribe the terms in which the subject of a bill shall be set out in its title. It will be sufficient if the subject of the act is so expressed in the title as to indicate to all what that subject is, or to call attention thereto.

Allegheny County Home's Case, 77 Pa. 77; Johnson v. People, 83 Ill. 436; Sun Mut. Ins. 34 L. R. A.

Co. v. New York, 8 N. Y. 252; Marston v. Humes, 8 Wash. 276; Illinois v. Illinois C. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 766; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 51.

The provisions of the act, as described in its different sections, are not incongruous, but, on the contrary, have an intimate connection and relation to each other.

State, Weir v. Davis County Judge, 2 Iowa, 280; Clinton Twp. v. Draper, 14 Ind. 295; Wishmier v. State, Dickey, 97 Ind. 160; Brester v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116; Woodson v. Murdock, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 351, 22 L. ed. 716; San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S. 315, 24 L. ed. 817; Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 27 L. ed. 431; Otoe County v. Baldwin, 111 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 331; Mahomet v. Quackenbush, 117 U. S. 508, 29 L. ed. 982; Carver County v. Sinton, 120 U. S. 517, 30 L. ed. 701; People, Badger v. Loewenthal, 93 Ill. 191; Blake v. People, 109 Ill. 504; Miz v. Illinois C. R. Co. 116 Ill. 502; Phillips v. Covington & C. Bridge Co. 2 Met. (Ky.) 219; State v. Bank of Missouri, 45 Mo. 528; Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa, 82; Whiting v. Mount Pleasant, 11 Iowa, 482; Reed v. State, 12 Ind. 641; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 8; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. p. 520, note; Yesler v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 308; Gauch v. Davis, 1 Wash. 290; State v. Spokane Falls, 2 Wash. 40; Marston v. Humes, 8 Wash. 267; Maling v. Crumney, 5 Wash. 222; Seymour v. Tacoma, 6 Wash. 138; McMaster v. Advance Thrasher Co. 10 Wash. 147.

The proposed improvement is a public improvement; and, being such, is a public purpose for which debt can be incurred or taxes levied either by the state or one of its municipal subdivisions.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 130-182; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 153, 158, 508; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. 429, note; Burroughs, Taxn. §§ 15, 25; Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Henson v. Albany, 24 Barb. 248; Clarke v. Rochester, Id. 446; People, Doty v. Henshaw, 61 Barb. 409; Leavenworth County Comrs. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 426; Pattison v. Yuba County Supers. 13 Cal. 179; Stockton & F. R. Co. v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 147; Stewart v. Pitkin County Supers. 30 Iowa, 9; Bonfield v. Edgewell, 32 Iowa, 149; Thompson v. Lee County, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 827, 18 L. ed. 177; Knox County Comrs. v. Aspinwall, 62 U. S. 21 How. 539, 16 L. ed. 208; Amey v. Allegheny City, 65 U. S. 24 How. 364, 16 L. ed. 614; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 539; Mercer County v. Hackett, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 83, 17 L. ed. 549; Myer v. Muscatine, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 384, 17 L. ed. 564; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Otoe County, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 674, 21 L. ed. 380; Butler v. Dunham, 27 Ill. 474; Northern P. R. Co. v. Roberts, 42 Fed. Rep. 734; Roberts v. Northern P. R. Co. 158 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 873; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 171, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; 1 Desty, Taxn. §§ 8, 59; Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 15 L. R. A. 42.

The canal in this instance is a county purpose.

Goddin v. Crump, 8 Leigh, 120; Taylor v. Neuberger Comrs. 2 Jones, Eq. 141, 64 Am. Dec. 566; Nichol v. Nashville, 9 Humph. 532; Lar- brouck v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 42, 80 Am. Dec. 718; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Darlington, 68 Fed. Rep. 76; State, Atty. Gen., v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L. R. A. 729; Folsom v. Township Ninety-Six ("Folsom v. Ninety-Six") 159 U. S. 611, 40 L. ed. 278; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 268, 14 Am. Rep. 99; Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455; Marks v. Purdue University, 37 Ind. 155; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608; Merrick v. Amherst, 12 Allen, 500.

The question of what is a public purpose is for the legislature to determine in the first instance.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 604; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 658, 88 Am. Dec. 711; Speer v. Blairsville School Directors, 50 Pa. 150; Schenley v. Allegheny, 25 Pa. 128.

Admitting, for the present, the assumption that the intent of this act is to provide that the state should vicariously exercise its right of eminent domain in behalf of the United States, the weight of authority and the better reasoning are in support of that right.

Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 258; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 1; Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 868, 8 Am. Rep. 339.

It cannot be successfully claimed that a ship canal within the borders of the state is not a public use to the people of that state.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 170; Mills, Em. Dom. § 14; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 659; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. 449, note; Cheapecke & O. Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cranch, C. C. 599; Willard v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio St. pt. 2, p. 111, 30 Am. Dec. 195.

Assuming, then, that the object to be accomplished is a public use, the question of the necessity of exercising the power arises. The decision of this question is legislative and not judicial.

Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406, 25 L. ed. 207; Story, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 653; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 238; Mills, Em. Dom. § 11.

The use being public and its necessity declared, the agency by or through which the state proceeds to the fulfillment of the use and the accomplishment of that end lies in the judgment of the legislature.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 666; Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Townsend, 24 Barb. 658; New York & E. R. Co. v. Young, 33 Pa. 175; Abbott v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 145 Mass. 450; Re Townsend, 89 N. Y. 171; Harris v. Elliott, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 25, 9 L. ed. 338, and cases cited below.

The state has a general right to condemn land to public use; she may select her own agent to accomplish this public end, she has selected the United States as such agent; the government is capable of undertaking the trust and receiving title; this public use is a use to the state; neither the Constitution of the state nor that of the United States forbids the Federal government from taking or the state from granting this right; and the rights and interests of the citizens are as fully protected as if the state took the land for her own peculiar purposes.

Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 258; United States v. Dumplin Island, 1 Barb. 24; Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550; Burt 34 L. R. A.

v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 856, 8 Am. Rep. 339; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590; United States v. Reed, 56 Mo. 585; Re United States, 96 N. Y. 237.

It is not the intention of the act to exercise the right of the state for the use and benefit of the United States.

Vast works of the character indicated may be beyond the present ability of the county to prosecute, but that should be no good reason for refusing to permit it to receive aid from, and so far as it can to extend help to, the Federal government, when that government moves in a matter in which the county is so vitally interested.

Re United States, supra; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 525; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 856, 8 Am. Rep. 339; People, Twombly, v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 481, 9 Am. Rep. 94; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. ed. 449; Darlington v. United States, 82 Pa. 382, 22 Am. Rep. 766.

Scott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to enjoin the respondents, as county officers, from proceeding under an act of the legislature approved February 12, 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 3), entitled "An Act to Grant to and Prescribe Powers of Counties Relative to Public Works Undertaken or Proposed by the State of Washington, or the United States, and Declaring an Emergency" to condemn land for a right of way for a ship canal to connect lakes Union and Washington, in King county, with the waters of Puget sound, an undertaking projected by the general government. The constitutionality of the act is attacked upon several grounds, the first of which is that it is in violation of § 19, art. 2, of the Constitution, which provides that "no bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." Similar provisions are contained in the Constitutions of many of the states, and there are so many cases bearing upon the proposition as to prevent a consideration of them in detail. It is well settled, however, by the weight of authority, that an act of the legislature will not be declared void except in cases where the violation of this constitutional inhibition is most clear, and sound policy and legislative convenience require that this provision should be liberally construed. The subject of this act is the condemnation and disposal of land by counties for a public use in relation to public improvements undertaken by the state or the United States; and, in our opinion, the subject-matter of the act is fairly included within the scope of its title, and there is nothing misleading in the title. The powers granted are not itemized therein, but this is unnecessary. The title gives notice that certain powers are granted for the purposes mentioned, and that those powers are prescribed in the act. There is one general subject embraced in the act, and only one, and that is expressed in the title sufficiently to prevent any person from being misled thereby. The purpose of the title is only to call attention to the subject-matter of the act and the act itself must be looked to for a full description of the powers conferred. Marston v. Humes, 3 Wash. 267; Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 27 L. ed. 431;

State, McCarty, v. Montgomery County Comrs. 26 Ind. 522; People, Rochester, v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 558; Allegheny County Home's Case, 77 Pa. 77; Johnson v. People, 83 Ill. 481.

Another objection is that the act is in conflict with § 7, art. 8, of the Constitution, which provides that "no county . . . shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit, to or in aid of any individual, association, company, or corporation except for the necessary support of the poor and infirm, or become directly or indirectly the owner of any stock in or bonds of any association, company, or corporation." It is clear that neither the state nor the United States is an "individual, association, company, or corporation," within the meaning of this section, and cannot legitimately be brought therein by any judicial construction thereof. Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24.

It is next insisted that the act is obnoxious to the provisions of § 6, art. 8, of the Constitution, which prohibits a county from incurring debt for any other than strictly county purposes, it being contended that the tax to be levied in the prosecution of said undertaking is not for a county purpose, but that it is for a state or Federal purpose. But it is beyond question that the proposed undertaking is a public improvement. It is entirely within the limits of King county, and is for the purpose of connecting two large public waterways with the Pacific ocean; and it seems to us that such a canal can more properly be considered a public improvement than a railway for the construction of which it is well settled that aid may be granted by a municipality when authorized to do so by the legislature, there being no constitutional prohibition. The word "strictly" lends little or no additional meaning to the provision. It could not have been intended thereby to limit counties to ordinary running expenses, and a canal may be as strictly a county purpose as a highway or a bridge, etc. It is apparent that the benefits resulting from this particular improvement will be largely local, notwithstanding the fact that it may also be of great general benefit; and it results that the purpose of the tax is local as well as public. 1 Desty, Taxn. §§ 8, 59; Goddin v. Crump, 8 Leigh, 120; Mobile County v. Kimball, 103 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 288; Folsom v. Township Ninety-Six ("Folsom v. Ninety Six"), 159 U. S. 611, 40 L. ed. 278; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Darlington, 63 Fed. Rep. 76; Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 42, 80 Am. Dec. 718; Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455.

The remaining objection to the act, and the one most strongly insisted upon by the appellants, is that the act authorizes the exercise of the state's eminent domain for the use and benefit of the United States. But this is hardly a fair statement of the proposition. While it is proposed to convey the right of way, when obtained, to the United States, the improvement is for the use and benefit of the general public, and in a much greater degree for the citizens of that locality. It is not to be occupied and controlled by government agents, like a fort, but is for everybody's use as a great public highway, and the control by the general government is only to regulate that use for the general good, and it matters little by whom this is done. The essential character of the work as a local public improvement directly connected with the commercial business of the citizens of the county cannot be taken away from it, even though it has a considerable value to the general government for naval purposes and otherwise. It is apparent that the character of the work cannot be essentially altered by its ownership or control, and it is immaterial whether the United States or the county prosecutes the enterprise, or whether they do so jointly. Nor can it make any difference whether the power of the state or that of the general government is invoked to condemn the right of way. It is conceded that either the United States or the county could singly prosecute the enterprise, and, if either could do it, it would require some good reason for holding that they could not proceed jointly. The appellants contend that in all cases where the eminent domain of the state is exercised in the prosecution of a public improvement, the improvement when constructed, must remain in the control of the local authorities. If this assertion were true, it would afford a sufficient reason for holding that the contemplated undertaking was unauthorized in the form in which it is being prosecuted. But we are clearly of the opinion that this contention is not well founded, as, if the improvement be for a public use and benefit, the state can authorize the exercise of its eminent domain by individuals or by corporations other than municipal, and, if there is no constitutional prohibition, it may be a foreign corporation (New York & E. R. Co. v. Young, 33 Pa. 175; Abbott v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 145 Mass. 450); and in such cases the control or management of the improvement is not retained by the state. For a more marked instance, see the case of Re Townsend, 39 N. Y. 171, where a canal was constructed without the limits of the state, but which resulted in some damage to lands within the state.

"4 L. R. A.

Appellants concede that there are several cases holding that the exercise of the state's eminent domain can be for the benefit of the United States, but they contend that in such instances the question of the public use was a legislative, and not a judicial, question; but it is apparent that this can go only to the manner of deciding it, and if it is for a public use the condition is satisfied, however decided. A case very like the one at bar was that of Re United States, 96 N. Y. 237, where many of the cases are taken up and considered. There, by an act of the legislature, the United States was granted the right to acquire the right of way necessary for the improvement of the Harlem river and Spuyten Duyvil creek, and for the construction of another channel from the North river to the East river through the Harlem Kills, and ceding jurisdiction. The undertaking was prosecuted jointly by the state and national governments, and the court said that, if either party might proceed in the matter, "it would be very singular if that which either party might do could not with equal propriety be accomplished by both." If such were not the case, it might prevent the consummation of a great public undertaking, such as is contemplated here, on account of the vast expense, if it was to be exclusively borne by the locality principally benefited, and through the unwillingness of the general government to bear the entire expense where the benefits were so largely local. We are of the opinion that no such condition of affairs was intended by the Constitution makers, and, there being no express provisions in the Constitution prohibiting it, a narrow technical construction should not be adopted to bring it about.

Affirmed

Hoyt, Ch., J., and Dunbar, Anders, and Gordon, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

KEYSTONE LUMBER COMPANY, Appt.,

Louis KOLMAN, Resp't.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A licensee under an unrevoked license to cut and remove timber for which he has paid full value has sufficient title in the timber to support replevin for it when wrongfully cut by a trespasser.

2. For the enhancement by a trespasser of the value of timber which he manufactures into lumber a licensee having the right to cut and remove the timber must repay him in order to recover the lumber or its value, since, if he adopts or ratifies the trespasser's acts in severance of the timber, he must adopt them in full.

(Cassoday, Ch. J., dissents.)

(November 24, 1896.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashland County in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to recover possession of lumber. Reversed.

Statement by Newman, J.:

Replevin for a quantity of pine lumber. The lumber was manufactured by the defendant from logs which he cut, without authority, from certain lands which the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company acquired in 1884 from the state, under its land grant, and then owned. In 1886 the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company, by an instrument in writing, bargained and sold, granted and conveyed, to the Superior Lumber Company, and to its assigns, the right to cut and remove, for its own use, during the period of twenty years, "all the pine timber standing and being" on the said lands, for a full consideration, of which it acknowledged the receipt. This instrument was executed by the railroad company and its trustees, by its attorney in fact, Charles L. Colby, and sealed with a scroll, but was not signed by the president of the corporation, nor countersigned by its secretary. This license was afterwards duly assigned to the plaintiff. In 1887, by an instrument in writing, executed by the same persons, and in the same manner as the license to the Superior Lumber Company was executed, the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company bargained and sold, granted and conveyed, to the defendant, the same lands; reserving, however, to itself, its successors and assigns, all the pine timber growing or to grow thereon, with the right to enter thereon and remove the timber, at pleasure. The defendant cut and removed the timber, and manufactured it into lumber. The plaintiff made demand for the lumber, and, on refusal by the defendant to deliver it, brought this action. The property was delivered by the sheriff to the plaintiff, who sold it during the pendency of the action. There was a verdict for the defendant. There was judgment for the defendant for the value of the property at the time of the commencement of the action, with interest from that date, from which the plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Tomkins & Merrill, for appellant:

The defendant had neither an interest in nor possession of the trees. They did not pass under the conveyance of the land to him; his cutting and removing of the trees in question was therefore, as to the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company at least, a tortious taking, for which replevin in the cepi might be properly brought.

Warren v. Leland, 2 Barb. 618.

Even if the conveyance from the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company to the plaintiff was a mere license, still, as the license amounts to a power or authority to do all acts licensed, the licensee, as against all strangers, has all the rights of the licensor and may hold them responsible for any interference with the enjoyment of the privilege given him.

7 Wait, Act. & Def. 218; Sawyer v. Wilson, 61 Me. 529; Gamble v. Cook (Mich.) 2 Det. L. N. 536.

As fast as timber was cut it became personal property with the right of the possession in the plaintiff.

Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365, 50 Am. Rep. 253; White v. King, 87 Mich. 107; Freeman v. Underwood, 66 Me. 229.

If the plaintiff had a right to the use of the property at will it had a right to replevy it from a wrongdoer.

Tandler v. Saunders, 56 Mich. 142; Bassett v. Armstrong, 6 Mich. 897.

Any interest coupled with a right of immediate possession constitutes ownership under the replevin statutes.

Cobbey, Replevin, § 538.

NOTE.—As to the measure of damages for injury to or destruction of trees, see note to Bailey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 19 L. R. A. 653. See 84 L. R. A.

also the later cases of Whiting v. Adams (Vt.) 36 L. R. A. 598; Gaskins v. Davis (N. C.) 35 L. R. A. 313; and White v. Yawkey (Ala.) 35 L. R. A. 190.

The contract under which the plaintiff claims is something more than a license; it is a grant or contract for a valuable consideration, and irrevocable.

2 Bingham, Real Prop. p. 55; 8 Kent, Com. 425; Pierrepoint v. Barnard, 6 N. Y. 291; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 568; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 Mees. & W. 888; Thomas v. Sarrell, Vaughan, 381; Ganter v. Atkinson, 35 Wis. 48.

The right to immediate possession is all that is necessary to maintain the action of replevin. Dicey, Parties to Actions, 368.

Messrs. Olin & Butler, with Mr. A. E. Dixon, for respondent:

In order to maintain the action of replevin for timber cut from unoccupied land, the plaintiff must establish a legal title thereto.

Cobbe, Replevin, § 376; Hungerford v. Redford, 29 Wis. 845; Paige v. Kolman (Wis.) 67 N. W. 700; McNarra v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 69; Wadleigh v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546.

The instrument under which plaintiff derives its right, if any it has, to maintain this action, does not grant or convey to plaintiff the timber, but only "the right to cut and remove" the same during a limited period. Such a license carries no right to maintain replevin.

Gillett v. Treganza, 6 Wis. 848; Rich v. Zeiladorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81; Martin v. Gilson, 37 Wis. 360; Silby v. Trotter, 29 N. J. Eq. 229; East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 82 N. J. Eq. 248; King v. Merriman, 38 Minn. 47; Pfister v. Byrd, 43 Mich. 14; Gillerson v. Mansur, 45 Me. 25; Balcom v. McQuesten, 65 N. H. 81.

The Wisconsin Central Company certainly would not be bound by a determination in this case of the nonrevocation of the license. It would still be entitled to claim in its suit against defendant that his plea that the Central Company had no interest in the timber because of its license to the plaintiff here was bad because such license had been revoked.

Johnson v. Wilkinson, 189 Mass. 8, 52 Am. Rep. 698; Fletcher v. Livingston, 153 Mass. 388; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Met. 818.

Newman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The instrument under which the plaintiff claims title to the lumber in controversy is a mere license to cut and remove the timber. This is clear from its express terms. A license to cut timber is assignable, whether made so by express words or not. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1081. This license is made assignable by express words. So, the plaintiff had the right to cut and remove this timber, and make it its own, at pleasure, at any time within the limited period, at least, unless the license should be sooner revoked. Whether the license gave such an interest in the timber to the licensee as that it should be deemed irrevocable by the licensor, it is not important to inquire. In either case the title to the timber did not pass to nor vest in the licensee until it should be severed from the land. The mere license to cut and remove the timber did not vest the title to the timber in the licensee. So, until the fact of its severance, the licensee has no title in the timber, such as would support an action of replevin; for, to maintain an action of replevin, the plaintiff must have the general or a special property in the property replevied, and the right to immediate and exclusive possession, at the time when the action is commenced. In the action of replevin the principal question is the right of immediate possession. Where that right depends upon the title, the issue is one of title. Now, as a mere licensee to cut timber gets no title to the timber until it is actually severed, and this timber was cut by a wrongdoer, and not by the licensee, the case comes to depend on this question, whether the title to the timber, when cut by a trespasser, vests in the licensee, so as to give him sufficient title to maintain replevin against the mere trespasser. This question is not decided by any case in this court to which attention is called, or which has been found. A question which, on a superficial view, may seem to bear some analogy to this question, has been decided by this court. It has been decided that, where timber or minerals have been severed by the owner of the land, the title to the timber or minerals so severed does not vest in a mere licensee, so that he can maintain replevin for them against the owner of the land. Gillett v. Treganza, 6 Wis. 348, is a leading case upon that question. The reason is plain. Severance by the owner operates as a revocation of the license, at least pro tanto; and the title, not having passed before severance, will not pass by severance after the license has been revoked. But that question has little, if any, analogy to the question in the instant case. This question is whether a licensee under an unrevoked license to cut and remove timber, for which he has paid full value, has sufficient title in the timber covered by his license to support replevin for the timber when wrongfully cut by a trespasser. This question does not seem to have often been passed upon by the courts. The case of Gamble v. Cook (Mich.) 2 Det. L. N. 536, seems to be in point. In that case it was held by the supreme court of Michigan that a vendee in a land contract, which gave him the right of possession, and to cut and remove timber, had title in the timber sufficient to maintain replevin for timber cut by a mere trespasser. No doubt, in that case the legal title to the timber was in the vendor until the severance by the trespasser. No reason is perceived why that case is not sound in principle. The trespasser gets no legal title or right in the timber through his wrongful act, as against any person who has a legal right or interest in it. The licensor has no just claim, for he has sold it, and has had his pay. He makes no claim. He is not injured. To preserve the fiction of legal title in him, beyond the severance, can have no other effect than to obstruct justice. In justice, the severed timber should belong to the licensee, who has bought and paid for it. He might have employed the trespasser to cut and remove it. In that case there would be no doubt that the title to the severed timber would be in him. No reason is perceived why, when the timber is cut by one unauthorized, the licensee may not at once assume possession of it; why he may not adopt the act of the wrongdoer, in the severance, as his own, and ratify, so to speak, the unauthorized act,—some what in analogy to the principle by which the unauthorized acts of agents are ratified or a tort is waived. That view has the merit, at least, of doing complete justice among the parties.

But, if the plaintiff adopts or ratifies the acts of the defendant in the severance of the timber, it must adopt them in full. It must adopt as well that part which carries a burden as that which is to its benefit. In the view which has been taken, the wrongful acts of the defendant have proved, on the whole, to have been a real service to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff adopts this benefit, it should reimburse the defendant what he has reasonably disbursed in its service. The plaintiff should recover the lumber or its value, after paying the defendant the reasonable cost of such enhancement of its value as has resulted from his expenditures upon it. Perhaps the defendant was entitled to retain possession of the lumber until such costs were paid; but it does not appear that his refusal to deliver it to the plaintiff was put upon any such ground.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Cassoday, Ch. J., dissenting:

I agree with that portion of the opinion filed which is to the effect that the written "instrument under which the plaintiff claims title to the lumber in controversy is a mere license;" that "the mere license to cut and remove the timber did not vest the title to the timber in the licensee;" that, until severance, the licensee had "no title in the timber" that "would support an action of replevin;" that, "to maintain an action of replevin, the plaintiff must have the general or a special property in the property replevied, and the right to immediate and exclusive possession, at the time when the action is commenced." But I am compelled to dissent from the conclusion reached to the effect that the plaintiff may, without any such title vested in itself, and with the title vested in the railroad company, maintain this action, merely because the timber was wrongfully severed by the defendant. That this license to cut and remove timber from the land of the railroad company was revocable, and vested no title or interest in the plaintiff, is settled by numerous adjudications of this court. Hazleton v. Putnam, 3 Pinney, 107, 54 Am. Dec. 158; Clute v. Carr, 20 Wis. 531, 91 Am. Dec. 442; Duinneen v. Rich, 22 Wis. 550; Fryer v. Warne, 29 Wis. 511; Strasson v. Montgomery, 32 Wis. 52; Golden v. Glock, 57 Wis. 118, 46 Am. Rep. 32; Thoenke v. Fiedler, 91 Wis. 386. Some of these cases held that such a license is not assignable. I do not think the decision in this case is supported by Gamble v. Cook (Mich.) 64 N. W. 483, cited in the opinion.

In that case it was held that "the vendee under a land contract, with the right to cut and remove timber, has title sufficient to maintain replevin for timber cut on the land by a mere trespasser." In that case the vendee had paid all the purchase money, and had taken possession of the land, and so was not a mere licensee, as here, but the real owner. Such contract gave the vendee a vested interest in the land and the growing timber, which could have been specifically enforced. Young v. Lego, 36 Wis. 894; Lacy v. Johnson, 58 Wis. 422; Lillie v. Dunbar, 53 Wis. 198. The decision in the case at bar allows the plaintiff to recover on the ground that it waived the defendant's tort, and adopted his wrongful act in severing and removing the timber. But there is nothing in the complaint nor in the record indicating such waiver. On the contrary, the complaint expressly alleges, in effect, that the plaintiff was the owner, and entitled to the possession of the lumber, and that the defendant wrongfully took and unlawfully or wrongfully detained the same from the plaintiff. Besides, the tort (the wrongful act complained of) was not, and could not, in law, be, wrongful as against one not having any title or vested interest in the timber, but was necessarily wrongful as against the one having the legal title and exclusive right to the timber; and the plaintiff could not, as it seems to me, vicariously waive such tort for the legal owner. For aught that appears, the defendant is liable in law to the railroad company for all the timber he so cut and removed. But the decision in this case, as I understand it, only allows the plaintiff to recover on condition that it "reimburse the defendant what he has reasonably disbursed in its service;" that it "should recover the lumber or its value" only "after paying the defendant the reasonable cost of such enhancement of its value as has resulted from his expenditures upon it;" and indicates a possibility of the defendant's being "entitled to retain possession of the lumber until such costs were paid." To carry out these suggestions would seem to require an equitable accounting as to the reasonable value of the defendant's services and disbursements of cutting and removing the timber, and putting the same in the condition in which it was found at the time this action was commenced. Such an accounting would seem to be an anomaly in a straight action of replevin, like this, and does not seem to be contemplated in the verdict and judgment prescribed by the statutes. Rev. Stat. §§ 2859, 2868.

For the reasons hastily and thus summarily given, I am forced to disagree with my brethren.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Lucy S. HINES, Appt.,

v.

James M. WILLCOX, Jr.

, (96 Tenn. 148.)

1. Oral evidence that a landlord agreed to put the leased premises in safe condition before the contract was made, or that at the time it was made he and his agent represented that they had been put in safe condition as promised, is admissible where the written contract relates only to the obligations and undertakings imposed upon the tenant, and does not in fact include all of these.

2. The question whether an entire contract was reduced to writing, or an independent collateral agreement was made, is one of fact for the jury, where there is any evidence to sustain a contention upon the point.

3. A landlord is liable to his tenant for damages that may result from the unsafe and dangerous condition of the premises leased when that was known to, or with reasonable care and diligence might have been known to, the landlord, but not to the tenant, although the latter examined the premises and did not discover the defect.

(February 4, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of defendant in an action brought by a tenant to recover for injuries alleged to have been received by reason of the defective condition of the leased premises. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. Parks, E. A. Price, and J. W. Gaines for appellant.

NOTE.—Liability of landlord for injury to tenant from defect in premises.

HINES v. WILLCOX is a new departure in the law of landlord and tenant. It places a duty on the landlord which it has not been the rule to place there, and to a large extent relieves the tenant from a duty which has always rested upon him. It makes a general rule of an exception which has only been applied in a peculiar class of cases, which does not include so obvious a defect as existed in HINES v. WILLCOX. No active care and diligence to discover defects have generally been placed on the landlord.

Landlord not bound to have premises safe.

The general rule is that the tenant must beware. He must examine the premises before taking them and rely upon his own examination, unless he procures a warranty from the landlord of the safety of the premises. The burden of the examination is placed on him, and not on the landlord.

In Akerley v. White, 58 Hun. 362, where the injury occurred through defective stairs, the jury were instructed that if the stairs at the time of the letting were weak to an extent that would be easily ascertained upon inspection, a verdict might be rendered against the landlord; but upon appeal the court held that this instruction imposed upon the owner the duty of active vigilance to see that the premises he was about to rent were in good condition, and was erroneous because the law imposed upon the tenant the risk of such defects in the demised premises as were visible upon inspection.

Where the defect alleged was noisome odors arising from premises adjoining those leased, the court said in the absence of express covenant or of fraud, deceit, or wrongdoing on the part of the landlord, the lessee of real estate must run the risk of its condition. Franklin v. Brown, 118 N. Y. 110, 6 L. R. A. 770.

A lessor of buildings, in the absence of fraud or any agreement to that effect, is not liable to the lessee for their condition, or that they are tenantable and may be safely used for the purpose for which they are apparently intended. Jaffe v. Harteau, 56 N. Y. 393, 15 Am. Rep. 438.

In the absence of fraud or deceit or express warranty or covenant to repair, there is no implied covenant that the premises are suitable or fit for 34 L. R. A. occupation, or that they are in a safe condition for use. O'Brien v. Capwell, 59 Barb. 497.

If the landlord has created no nuisance, and is guilty of no wilful wrong or culpable negligence, he is not liable for an injury suffered by any person occupying the premises during the demise. Donner v. Ogilvie, 49 Hun. 229.

A dangerous condition of the premises, as a pile of stones near the front door covered with snow, not misrepresented or fraudulently concealed by the landlord, will not render him liable for injuries suffered by the tenant by falling over it. Jones v. Roberts, 32 Ohio L. J. 118.

A lessee in an action for rent cannot counterclaim damages for the sickness of himself and family from the escape of sewer gas because of defective plumbing if the lessor is not guilty of any wrongful concealment of the facts. Chadwick v. Woodward, 13 Abb. N. C. 441.

A parent of the lessee cannot recover for injuries by a defective door-knob, in the absence of a covenant that the building is safe or that the landlord will make repairs, there being nothing to show that it was a nuisance per se. McNeal v. Emery, 8 Ohio L. J. 265.

Where there is no express warranty that the premises are fit for the use to which they are to be put, the owner is not liable in case the building falls to the injury of the tenant. Dutton v. Gerish, 9 Cush. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 45.

A landlord is not liable for defects known to the lessee at the time of the letting. Wien v. Simpson, 2 Phila. 153.

There is one case in a lower New York court in which a rule was adopted, placing a liability upon the landlord.

In Johnson v. Dixon, 1 Daly, 173, where a horse fell through the stable floor and was injured, the court held that the landlord having wrongfully permitted the floor to become unsafe, and when his attention was called to it having promised to repair it, which he did not do, he was liable for the injury.

But in a later case upon a similar state of facts the decision was the other way.

In that case the tenant's horse fell through the floor of the stable, and the court says whether the floor was in fact unsafe could have been discovered by the tenant as easily as by the landlord, and that the landlord was not liable for the injury. Lynch v. Speed, 23 N. Y. S. R. 90.

Messrs. E. T. Smith and E. McPhail Smith for appellee.

For the arguments, see Stenberg v. Willcox (Tenn.) ante, 615.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while occupying the house of defendant, as his tenant. The cause was heard before the court and a jury, and there was a verdict for the defendant, and judgment against plaintiff for costs, and she has appealed and assigned errors.

The plaintiff, with several members of her family, and boarders in the house, was injured by the falling of a defective and unsafe back porch. There are two counts in the declaration, the first alleging, in substance, that defendant contracted that the house should be put in safe and tenable condition before the rental contract was made, and that at the time the contract was closed the defendant's agent represented and stated that it had been put in a safe and tenable condition as had been previously promised and agreed. The second count alleges, in substance, that the house was in an unsafe and dangerous condition when plaintiff rented it from defendant, and that defendant and his agent knew of this fact and concealed it from her, and that it was not known to her. The pleas were, in effect, a general denial of the truth of the matters alleged, not guilty, and contributory negligence. There was what is termed a "rental contract," signed by the parties, in the words and figures following:

Nashville, Sept. 28, 1892.

A. V. S. Lindsley, agent, has this day rented to M. P. Hines and wife, Lucy S. Hines, the two-story dwelling house on the S. W. corner of Church and McLemore streets for one year from Oct. 1, 1892, to Oct. 1, 1893, for $50.00 per month, payable monthly in advance. To secure payment of said sum, said M. P. Hines and his wife have this day executed twelve notes, payable to A. V. S. Lindsley, agent, falling due, one Oct. 1, 1892, and one on the first of each month thereafter, till the twelve notes are paid. M. P. Hines and wife further

For the reason that the landlord is not responsible for the condition of the leased premises a subtenant's remedy is against his lessor, and not against the owner, unless the premises are such a nuisance that the owner would be liable to the public. Quay v. Lucas, 25 Mo. App. 4.

Upon the general question of the landlord's liability to the tenant's guests, see note to McConnell v. Lemley (La. Ann.) ante, 609.

There are no implied covenants.

The court does not imply any covenants in a lease. If the landlord does not expressly undertake to make and keep the premises safe he is not charged with that duty.

If the tenant wishes the landlord to take the responsibility of the sewer being sufficient, that provision must be inserted in the lease. Wilkinson v. Clauson, 29 Minn. 91.

The leasing of a house for a private residence does not imply a covenant that it is reasonably fit for habitation, and the owner will not be liable if the tenant's family is made sick by defective drains therein. Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. 242, 57 Am. Dec. 43.

In Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. N. S. 221, the court says the tenant's remedy, if any, is upon his contract.

In case a building falls and injures the tenant's property the landlord will not be liable for the injury, although he has covenanted to make necessary repairs to the building, since such covenant does not include an undertaking that the building shall not give way. Leavitt v. Fletcher, 10 Allen, 119.

In Frank v. Conradi, 50 N. J. L. 23, where the tenant was injured by the giving way of a rail on premises which the landlord had undertaken to repair, the court says that the covenant did not mean that the premises would never be out of repair, but that the duty imposed upon the landlord was to properly inspect the premises and make such repairs as a due inspection would show to be necessary. But this cannot be stretched so as to include an obligation to repair what a reasonable examination would not disclose to be in need of repair.

No action for nonrepair.

As part of the rule that there are no implied covenants the landlord is not liable for failure to 84 L. R. A. repair, unless he has agreed in the lease to make repairs.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff was injured by a fall of certain stairs attached to defendant's building which plaintiff as tenant was entitled to use, and that it was the duty of defendant as owner to keep the stairs in good condition and repair, does not state a cause of action, since, the premises not being occupied by defendant but by the tenants, the duty of keeping the stairs in good repair presumptively rested on them, and not on him, in the absence of a special agreement by him to assume that duty. Corey v. Mann, 14 How. Pr. 162.

A landlord is not bound to repair unless upon covenant to do so, and he is not liable for an injury arising from a failure on his part to repair, whether it result to the tenant's goods or to his person. Ward v. Fagin, 101 Mo. 669, 10 L. R. A. 147, Reversing 28 Mo. App. 116.

In Willson v. Treadwell, 81 Cal. 58, where the injury was to a servant of the tenant, the court says the rule that the landlord is not liable to strangers for a failure to repair applies with equal force to the tenant and his employees.

The landlord is not liable for injuries caused by the premises getting out of repair during the term of the lease. Libbey v. Telford, 48 Me. 316, 77 Am. Dec. 229.

A landlord is not liable for a defect in a drain which in the course of a tenancy at will is discovered to him, nor for failing to disclose it to the tenant, if the defect is unknown to the latter. Bertie v. Flagg, 161 Mass. 504.

The owner who has not undertaken to repair is not under any obligation to take measures to prevent the falling of the building by reason of an excavation made on the property next to it, and he will not be liable for injuries to the tenant caused by such fall. Brewster v. DeFremery, 33 Cal. 341.

In the absence of an undertaking to make repairs, the landlord is not liable for any hurt or damage that may accrue to the tenant or to any member of his family through his negligence in failing to perform such a supposed duty. Little v. Macadaris, 20 Mo. App. 382, 36 Mo. App. 187.

In Cleves v. Willoughby, 7 Hill, 83, the court says the maxim caveat emptor applies to the transfer of all property, and the purchaser takes the risk of its quality and condition, unless he protects himself agree and bind themselves to keep said premises clean and in a sanitary condition, satisfactory to the city authorities. Should any of the above notes remain due and unpaid, A. V. S. Lindsley, agent, reserves the right to re-enter and take possession, or to enter suit for collection of all notes unpaid. A. V. S. Lindsley, agent, also reserves the right to re-enter and take possession of said premises should M. P. Hines and wife fail to keep said property in a good sanitary condition.

[Signed] A. V. S. Lindsley, Agent,
by J. T. Lindsley.
M. P. Hines.
L. S. Hines.

During the rental year, M. P. Hines, the husband, died; and L. S. Hines, his widow, continued to occupy the premises under the same contract previously made with her and her husband, and the injuries occurred after his death. The case has been most ably and elaborately argued on both sides, and a vast array of authorities have been collected and commented upon. We can only notice the salient features which must determine the decision of the case, leaving many others untouched.

The trial judge excluded from the jury all evidence offered by plaintiff to show that defendant made any promise or agreement to put the premises in good and safe condition before the rent contract was signed, and all evidence as to statements made that the premises had been put in safe and tenantable condition at the time and contemporaneous with its signing. This is assigned as error. In excluding the evidence, the court said it was done because: "(1) It goes to alter the terms of a written lease to plaintiff. (2) It attempts to introduce a warranty of the condition of the premises at the time of the demise, when no such warranty is contained in the lease. (3) Because the complaint made by plaintiff of the condition of the premises had no reference to the condition of the porch, or its insecurity, at or before the time the lease was executed; said complaints relating only to minor matters, such as the accumulation of dirt on the premises, the absence of glass from the windows, by an express agreement on the subject. Where there is no agreement to put the premises in repair the tenant takes them for better or worse, and the landlord is under no obligation to repair.

If the premises are in good repair when demised, but afterwards become ruinous and dangerous, the landlord is not responsible therefor either to the occupant or to the public during the continuation of the lease, unless he has expressly agreed to repair. Clancy v. Byrne, 66 N. Y. 133, 15 Am. Rep. 391.

Where the lessor does not covenant to repair demised premises, he cannot be made liable in damages to the lessee for their being out of repair. Joyce v. DeGinerville, 2 Mo. App. 566.

In Norris v. Catmur, Cab. & E. 576, where a sub-tenant received an injury by a piece of the roof falling upon her head, the court says it is clear that the tenant could have sustained no action against the landlord for nonrepair. The plaintiff can be in no better position than the tenant.

In Gott v. Gandy, 2 El. & Bl. 847, 2 C. L. Rep. 382, 33 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1, 13 Jur. 310, a chimney fell and injured the tenant's goods, and the court held that the duty to repair did not rest upon the landlord from the mere relation of landlord and tenant. Erie, J., says: "The present action is in form of action for a wrong; but it is in substance for the breach of a duty arising from a contract between landlord and tenant. The plaintiffs ask us to interpolate into that contract a term without showing anything from which it might appear that it was intended by the parties that there should be such a term."

In the absence of an agreement by the landlord to repair he is not answerable to the tenant for damages resulting to the latter from the want of necessary repairs. Laird v. McGeorge, 16 Misc. 70.

Construction of covenant to repair.

Where the tenant was injured because the floor of a back room on the second story was defectively and insufficiently supported and the lumber in the flooring worn and rotten, and the landlord had covenanted to make repairs, the court held that there was no duty to make the repairs until a reasonable time after notice, and since no notice had been given in this case there was no liability on the landlord. Sleber v. Bianco, 78 Cal. 173.

Where the owner had undertaken to repair, and after the tenant had been in possession for five 34 L. R. A.

months the cellar stairs fell under her and she was injured, the court held that, it not appearing that the landlord knew of the defect in the stairs, or that he had been asked to repair, he was not liable for the injury. The court says unless the landlord knew the stairs were unsafe to use, or from the facts and circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence he should have known of their dangerous condition, he cannot be made liable for a tort. And he will not be liable for breach of his contract unless he had notice of the necessity of such repairs, and then only after a reasonable time had elapsed for him to make the repairs. Spellman v. Bannigan, 36 Hun. 174.

The mere fact that the landlord has undertaken to keep the elevator in repair will not give a right of action for injuries caused by nonrepair if the landlord was not notified that repairs were needed. Sinton v. Butler, 40 Ohio St. 158.

A landlord who has covenanted to repair is not liable to the tenant in tort for personal injuries arising from the want of repair. Sanders v. Smith, 5 Misc. L.

Warranty or representations by landlord.

If at the time of making the lease the owner warrants the safety of the ceiling he will be liable in case it falls upon and injures the tenant's infant child. Moore v. Steljes, 60 Fed. Rep. 518.

If the landlord, after discovering the polluted condition of the water of a well, and, without remedying the cause, permits the tenant to continue its use without notifying him of the cause, whereby the tenant is made sick, the landlord will be liable for the damages. Especially when the landlord had particularly warranted the water wholesome when he made the lease. The court said the landlord owed the duty to see that the premises were in a healthful condition, or at least to disclose any fact within his knowledge which tended to make the premises unhealthful and not fit for habitation. Maywood v. Logan, 78 Mich. 135.

If the tenant learns before taking the lease that a contagious disease has been in the house, and upon asking the landlord about it is informed that the report is untrue, he has a right to rely upon the landlord's statement, and need not take further precautions to ascertain as to the fact. Snyder v. Gorden, 46 Hun. 533.

But the mere fact that the owner represents the premises to be dry and safe from water will not and the absence of grates from some of the fireplaces in the house. Witness has testified to nothing else. (4) The promise alleged to have been made by defendant's agent to put the place in repair, or the representations that the place had been put in repair, must be held to have reference only to the previous complaints made by the plaintiff." The plaintiff excepted to the action of the court. Taking up these grounds of the trial judge's action, we will examine them in the light of the facts of this case.

The general rule is that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict a written agreement, whether simple or by deed. Bedford v. Flowers, 11 Humph. 242; Ellis v. Hamilton, 4 Sneed, 512; Bryan v. Hunt, Id. 544, 70 Am. Dec. 262; Price v. Allen, 9 Humph. 708; McLean v. State, 8 Heisk. 22; Fields v. Stunston, 1 Coldw. 40; Stewart v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 9 Lea, 104; Weisinger v. Bank of Gallatin, 10 Lea, 330; Nashville L. Ins. Co. v. Mathews, 8 Lea, 508; East Tennessee & V. R. Co. v. Gammon, 5 Sneed, 571; Kearley v. Duncan, 1 Head, 400, 73 Am. Dec. 179. But this rule does not apply in cases where the parol evidence in no way contradicts or alters the terms of the written contract, but tends to establish an independent or collateral agreement not in conflict with it. Betts v. Demumbrune, Cooke (Tenn.) 48; Leinau v. Smart, 11 Humph. 308; Cobb v. Wallace, 5 Coldw. 539, 98 Am. Dec. 435; Lytle v. Bass, 7 Coldw. 308; Stewart v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 9 Lea, 104; Vanleer v. Fain, 6 Humph. 104; Ferguson v. Rafferty (Pa.) 6 L. R. A. 83, notes; Durkin v. Cobleigh (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 270, and notes. Nor does it apply in cases where the original contract was verbal and entire, and a part only of it was reduced to writing. 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 284a; 1 Starkie, Ev. 367; Vanleer v. Fain, 6 Humph. 104; Dick v. Martin, 7 Humph. 263; Mitchell v. Planters' Bank, 8 Humph. 216; Leinau v. Smart, 11 Humph. 308; Cobb v. O'Neal, 2 Sneed, 438; Cobb v. Wallace, 5 Coldw. 539, 98 Am. Dec. 435; Bryan v. Hunt, 4 Sneed, 543, 70 Am. Dec. 362; Lytle v. Bass, 7 Coldw. 308; Bissenger v. Guiteman, 6 Heisk. 277; Hicks v. Smith, 4 Lea, 464; Smith v. O'Donnell, 8 Lea, 468; Hawkins v. Lee, Id. 42; Breeden v. Grigg, 8 Baxt. 163; give the tenant a right of action in case, by reason of the defective construction of the walls and a period of high water, water is backed up in the sewer and goes through the walls causing damage. Loupe v. Wood, 51 Cal. 586.

So, where, previous to the making of the lease, the owner said he would put the water closet and drainage in order, and subsequently said the water closet was in perfect order, whereupon the lease was executed and the tenant brought action to recover for illness caused by defects in the closet, recovery was denied upon the ground that the representations did not amount to an agreement nor to fraud, and that the tenant could maintain no action. Burstal v. Bianchi, 65 L. T. N. S. 678.

Fraud or deceit.

The landlord may be liable in case he is guilty of fraud or deceit in effecting the lease.

In Stevens v. Pierce, 151 Mass. 207, which was an action for recovery of rent paid, the court says the only remedy was in tort for fraud and deceit in inducing the taking of the lease, or for negligence in failing to inform the tenant, if by reason of a concealed defect which could not readily be discovered and which was known to the owner and not known to the tenant the house was dangerous to those who might occupy it.

But in Keates v. Earl Cadogan, 10 C. B. 591, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 76, 15 Jur. 428, where the house fell and it was alleged that the lives of the tenant and his family were greatly endangered thereby, the court held that an action of deceit would not lie because of the mere fact that the owner knew that the tenant wanted the place for immediate occupation, and that it was in an unfit and dangerous state, and did not disclose that fact to the tenant.

So, it has been held that a lessee of a building who sustains injury occasioned by the defective condition of the building cannot maintain an action of tort against the lessor founded upon a breach of an agreement to repair the building within a reasonable time. That form of action cannot arise out of a mere breach of contract. Tuttle v. George H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. 145 Mass. 169.

Concealment of defects.

As a branch of the liability of the landlord for fraud or deceit the question has arisen as to how far it is his duty to disclose defects or to warn of dangers. The rule on this subject seems to be no 34 L. R. A.

stronger than this: If he knows of a defect which is likely to produce injury, the nature of which is such that careful examination by the tenant would not disclose it, he must notify the tenant of it. It is not his duty to search for defects, and if the defect is easily discoverable he need not mention it.

There is no legal presumption that a landlord has knowledge of the particular condition of a house leased by him from the facts that he is the owner, that he resides next door, and that the house has been vacant for several months. Jackson v. Odell, 9 Daly, 371.

A landlord is not liable for injuries to the tenant by a snow-slide which destroyed the house, on the ground that he did not warn the tenant of the danger. The court says the evidence wholly failed to show that there was any special and secret danger from snow slides, which was known to the landlord, and which could not have been ascertained by the tenant. Doyle v. Union P. R. Co. 147 U. S. 413, 37 L. ed. 223.

A lessor of a building having defective walls is not liable to the lessee, who had full opportunity to ascertain its condition, which was apparent to the most casual observer, from damages arising from the fall of the walls, in the absence of express warranty or misrepresentation. Davidson v. Fischer, 11 Colo. 563.

Mere failure of the landlord to disclose defects in the plumbing, of which he has knowledge, will not render him liable as for fraud in case the tenant is made sick by such defect. Blake v. Ranous, 25 Ill. App. 486.

There are few instances in which it is the duty of the landlord to disclose to the intending tenant any defects in the subject of negotiation. The rule is that the landlord is not bound to disclose any defects in the structure or condition of the premises that make them unfit for habitation. Defects in plumbing or flues cannot be discovered, perhaps, by any examination the intending tenant can be expected to make, but it has never been held that the landlord is bound under the penalty of fraud to disclose such defects, even though he be aware of them. Coulson v. Whiting, 14 Abb. N. C. 63.

Where the tenant was injured by the breaking of a stair which had been sawed by a former occupant of the premises, the court says there can be no liability on the part of the landlord without knowledge of the defect. He must disclose concealed

Waterbury v. Russell, Id. 162; Brady v. Isler, 9 Lea, 856; Barnard v. Roane Iron Co. 85 Tenn. 189. Parol evidence is admissible as to collateral matters not varying the terms of the writing, such as fraud in the soundness of an article, when the written warranty extends only as to title (M. Farlane v. Moore, 1 Overt. 174, 3 Am. Dec. 752; Lytle v. Bass, 7 Coldw. 808); or when fraudulent representations were made in negotiating the contract (Barnard v. Roane Iron Co. 85 Tenn. 189); or when representations and statements are made as inducements to the contract, and form the basis or consideration of it. Waterbury v. Russell, 8 Baxt. 162; Hogg v. Cardwell, 4 Sneed, 157. In Betts v. Demumbrune, Cooke (Tenn.) 48, the written contract was for the rent of a tavern. It was permitted to be shown by parol that the landlord agreed to erect a kitchen on the ground; that this was an inducement to rent the tavern, and only part of the contract was in writing. In Vanleer v. Fain, 6 Humph. 104, it was held that, in a written contract for the hire of a slave, parol evidence could be introduced to show that one of the terms of the hiring was that the slave should not be removed out of the county. In Leinau v. Smart, 11 Humph. 308, there was a written contract for the sale of a tavern, and it was permitted to show by parol, as part of the same agreement, and an inducement to it, that the vendor would close up another tavern he owned in the same town. In Dick v. Martin, 7 Humph. 263, parol evidence was allowed to prove an agreement to waive demand and notice of negotiable paper, although made at the time of the indorsement, which was full and dated. In Mitchell v. Planters' Bank, 8 Humph. 216, it was permitted to be shown by parol that the cashier of a bank informed the directors that one of the makers had promised the indorser's name on the note, the evidence being treated as part of the res gesta. In Cobb v. O'Neal, 2 Sneed, 439, there was a written warranty of the soundness of a slave. It was permitted to show by parol that the vendee agreed to look to a third person, and not to the warrantor, in case of a breach, in consideration of an abatement in price. In Brynn v. Hunt, 3 Sneed, 543, 70 Am. Dec. 262, it was held that the general rule excluding parol sources of mischief about the house which no examination can discover if he has knowledge of them. But that exception to the rule does not apply to the case of a saw cut in one of the treads of a staircase, especially where the owner tried the step and it bore his weight, and he thought it would bear anybody's. The tenant having neglected to require any warranty from the landlord, and having had full opportunity to examine the tenement, it was his own fault if he did not see what was apparent on the surface. The law is unusually strict in exempting the landlord from liability for injuries arising from defects when there is no warranty and no actual deceit. Bowe v. Hunking, 135 Mass. 340, 46 Am. Rep. 471.

In Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 48 Am. Rep. 380, which was an action to recover money expended for putting the premises in condition and for losses incurred by inability to use them when the term began, the court recognizes the rule that there is no implied duty on the owner of a house which is in a ruinous and unsafe condition to inform a proposed tenant that it is unsafe for habitation, and no action will lie against him for failure to do so, in the absence of express warranty or deceit.

The duty of the landlord to disclose hidden defects does not spring directly from the contract but from the relation of the parties, and is imposed by law. When there are concealed defects attended with danger to the occupant, and which a careful examination will not discover, known to the lessor, the latter is bound to reveal them in order that the lessee may guard against them. And this exception applies to the case of an insecure covering to a cess-pool in the yard, which is covered with earth so that grass and weeds are growing over it, and the location of it is not pointed out to the tenant. Cowen v. Sunderland, 145 Mass. 383.

But where the tenant was injured by falling into a cess-pool in the yard, which was covered by an iron cover set into wooden frames which had become decayed, the court said it was as much her duty when she hired the house and yard to examine the premises and ascertain whether they were in such repair that she could use them as of the owner. And it was held that she could not recover because the existence of the cover was plainly visible. But the court says, if there is a concealed defect that renders the premises dangerous, which the tenant cannot discover by the exercise of reasonable diligence, of which the landlord has or ought to have knowledge, it is the duty of the landlord to disclose it, and he is liable for an injury which results from the concealment of it. Booth v. Merriam, 155 Mass. 521.

A concealed well operating as a cess-pool under a house, being partly filled up and containing water, dead vermin, and filth, from which noxious vapors arise to the injury of the health of the occupants, constitutes a nuisance, and renders the owner who erected the house over it liable for injuries to a tenant who had no knowledge of it. The court says the cause of action is based upon the maxim that everyone must so use his own premises as not to injure others, and that it was the duty of defendant to disclose to the tenant defects in the premises amounting to nuisance known to the defendant and concealed from plaintiff, which would calculate to impair and had impaired the health of plaintiff. Kern v. Myll, 80 Mich. 523, 3 L. R. A. 682.

But upon another trial of the case the proof did not support the declaration, and it appeared that before the house was erected, years before the suit was brought, the well had been filled up even with the surface, and during all the intervening time no complaint had been made to the landlord while plaintiff had occupied for three years without complaint, and there was nothing to put defendant on notice of the fact that the filling had sunk and the well become a cess-pool. The court says the landlord was not chargeable with such negligent ignorance as is equivalent to actual knowledge, and a recovery was denied. Kern v. Myll, 94 Mich. 481.

In Wallace v. Lent, 29 How. Pr. 239, 1 Daly, 481, where the action was for rent, which the tenant refused to pay because the premises were unsafe for occupation and had to be abandoned, it appeared that the landlord knew that they were not fit for occupation by reason of a cause which the tenant could not discover by a mere inspection of the premises, and the court held that when the landlord knows that a cause exists which renders the house unfit for occupation it is a wrongful act on his part to rent it without giving notice of its condition.

Where a vault partly filled with dangerous matter was boarded over so that the tenant could not learn of its existence, although the landlord knew that it was dangerous, the landlord will be liable if evidence has no application to agreements made subsequent to the execution of the written contract. In Cobb v. Wallace, 5 Coldw. 539, 98 Am. Dec. 435, there was a written contract for the hire of a coal barge. It was allowed to prove by parol that it was hired for one particular purpose and trip only, and the question whether the writing embraced the whole contract was for the jury. In Lytle v. Bass, 7 Coldw. 303, a note was given for a sawmill. It was permitted to show, as a separate, collateral, substantive agreement, that the vendor warranted the sawmill. In Bissenger v. Gutteman, 6 Heisk. 377, it was held that it was competent to show by parol that, at the time a promissory note was executed, it was agreed it should be held for nothing, on the happening of a specific condition. In Hicks v. Smith, 4 Lea, 463, there was a mortgage, and it was permitted to show by parol that Thomas should have priority when it was satisfied, though the mortgage did not so provide. In Hawkins v. Lee, 8 Lea, 42, it was allowed to add terms to a written contract by parol, to the effect that plaintiff was to work at a particular place, and not remove his tools therefrom, and other conditions. In Smith v. O'Donnell, 8 Lea, 468, it was held that a contract might be part in writing and part in parol, and in such case parol evidence was admissible. In Breeden v. Grigg, 8 Baxt. 163, it was held that parol evidence is admissible to prove conditions upon which a written contract was made. In Waterbury v. Russell, 8 Baxt. 162, there was a sale of corn, —contract in writing. It was permitted to be shown by parol that the corn was represented to be sound, as an inducement to the written contract. In Brady v. Isler, 9 Lea, 357, it was held that parol proof may be allowed to show whether a written contract was in fact made, or whether it was to take effect only on certain conditions. In Barnard v. Roane Iron Co. It was held that, in a proceeding by a vendor to rescind a contract for the sale of land on the ground of fraud, parol evidence of the fraudulent representations of the vendee, made in negotiating the contract, is admissible, the purpose being to show that the vendor was entrapped into an agreement that he otherwise would not have made. The general rule, as he does not disclose the condition to the tenant. Martin v. Richards, 155 Mass. 381.

The owner of a dwelling house, who, knowing that it is infected with small pox so as to endanger the health of the occupants, leases it for the purposes of a habitation without disclosing the fact to one who is ignorant of its condition, and who, without contributory negligence on his part, by reason of the state of the house, is attacked by the disease, will be liable for the injury. Minor v. Sharon, 113 Mass. 477, 27 Am. Rep. 122.

A landlord who lets premises knowing that they are infected with a contagious disease without notifying the tenant thereof is liable to the latter, in case the disease is communicated, for the damage sustained. Cesar v. Karutz, 60 N. Y. 220, 19 Am. Rep. 164.

In an action by a tenant for injuries caused by contracting diphtheria in the landlord's house, the court says it is settled that a landlord may be liable for not disclosing a source of danger known to him to be such and not discoverable by the tenant. But it is not enough that the landlord knows of the source of danger unless he also knows or common experience shows that it is dangerous. He is bound at his peril to know the teachings of common experience; but he is not bound to foresee the results of which common experience could not warn him and which only a specialist would apprehend. The general rule between landlord and tenant is caveat emptor. And this rule cannot be eluded by showing that the tenant did not know of a defect, that the landlord did, and then asking the jury to pronounce it a secret source of danger. Cutter v. Hamlen, 147 Mass. 471, 1 L. R. A. 429. The court further holds that the landlord is bound to disclose the fact that the drains are in bad condition, and that there has been a case of diphtheria in the house within a short time. The court says there is strong ground for requiring the tenant to insist on a warrant of the safety of drains if he does not wish to take the risk; but that defective drains in combination with diphtheria in the house indicate a special danger of infection from the drains, and that the landlord could not keep quiet under such circumstances.

In Coke v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499, where the injury was to the tenant's daughter, it appeared that the landlord knew of the dangerous condition of a portion of the premises which would be frequently used by the tenant and his family, 34 L. R. A.

and failed to disclose the condition to the tenant, although it was so situated as not to be readily discoverable to them, and the court held that because of his failure to disclose his knowledge he was liable for the injury.

In Schmalzried v. White (Tenn.) 32 L. R. A. 782, the court held that the duty of disclosing to the tenant hidden defects and secret conditions that contributed to make the property unsafe is not imposed upon the landlord who is ignorant of them without fault or negligence on his part; but it says that this ruling is not intended to conflict with that in HINES v. WILLCOX, that the landlord is liable, not only for what he knows of the defects in the premises let, but for what he might have known by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence.

Statutory Liability.

Under the English act of 1885, relating to the housing of the working classes, which requires that the house shall be in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation, the tenant may sue the landlord in case the premises are not reasonably fit for habitation so that the plaster on the ceiling falls and injures her. Walker v. Hobbs, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 458.

Under the California Civil Code the tenant has the option, in case repairs are needed and they do not exceed in value a month's rent, to make them and deduct the amount from the rent or to vacate the premises, and in case he fails to exercise his option he cannot recover damages for injuries done by the dilapidated condition of the premises. Van Every v. Ogg, 59 Cal. 565.

Where a statute required the owner to put the premises in a condition fit for occupation, and the tenant was injured by the fall of the woodshed which a servant of the landlord had assured the tenant was safe, the court held that the lessor would be liable for injuries resulting from defects in the premises known to him and unknown to the lessee if he allowed the lessee to occupy in ignorance of the risk. Whenever the defect is inherent and unknown to the lessor he is not accountable, nor can he be held when he has done all that a reasonably prudent man would have done towards fitting the place for occupation. It is as much the duty of the lessee to satisfy himself of the safety of the premises as it is of the lessor to make them so; and when it would appear from an examination such as an ordinarily prudent man would make be-well as the different cases in which it does not so apply as to exclude parol evidence, is forcibly stated, and fully commented on in Ferguson v. Rafferty (Pa.) 6 L. R. A. 38, and notes; Durkin v. Cobligh (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 270, and notes.

It must be admitted that, in the multitude of exceptions to the general rule, much confusion has arisen, not only in our state, but elsewhere; so that the exact limit to be placed upon the exceptions depends, not only upon the peculiar facts of each case, but also, to some extent, upon the peculiar cast of thought of the individuals composing the court, as is substantially said in Richardson v. Thompson, 1 Humph. 154. Nevertheless, the exceptions are as well sustained and based upon authority as is the general rule, and there remains only the application of the rule and its exceptions to each case as it arises. Looking to the case as presented in this record, it is evident at a glance that the written contract set out only relates to the obligation and undertaking imposed upon the tenant, and it makes not the remotest reference to any act to be done, or obligation assumed or representation made, by the landlord; so that if the landlord agreed to do anything to the premises to make them safe, or represented that he had made them safe, which induced the plaintiff to make the contract, or which was to be a part of the contract, it was not embraced in the writing. Indeed, the record shows that not all the requirements made of the tenant are embraced; for the parol evidence, as well as the note filed, shows that it was one of the vital terms of the contract that Mrs. Hines should bind her separate estate for the payment of the notes, and that she did attempt to do so in the notes. This was an independent, collateral agreement to the contract of rental, and an inducement to make it not embraced in the lease contract which was written. We are of opinion it was error to exclude evidence tending to show that the defendant agreed to put the premises in safe condition, if such were made before the contract was closed, and also evidence tending to show that, at the time the contract was signed, defendant or his agent represented that they had been put in safe condition as promised.

fore venturing to reside in or upon the premises that they were unsafe, and the defect rendering them so is discernible, the lessee is presumed to have had notice of such defect and accepted the risk incident thereto if he occupies the premises. If he could have discovered the defect by examination he was not justified, in view of the fact that he suspected the safety of the premises, in relying on the assurance of the servant that they were safe. Daley v. Quick, 90 Cal. 179.

As to neglect to provide fire escapes, see note to Rose v. King (Ohio) 15 L. R. A. 160.

Landlord actively negligent.

The landlord is liable for injuries caused by negligence in making repairs. Mitchell v. Plaut, 31 Ill. App. 148.

If the landlord undertakes to make repairs, and the tenant is injured by the negligent manner in which they are made, the landlord is liable for the injury. Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 478; Little v. Macadaras, 29 Mo. App. 332, 38 Mo. App. 187.

If the landlord undertakes to make repairs, and does it so unskillfully as to subsequently cause an injury to the tenant, he will be liable therefor. Gregor v. Cady, 82 Mo. 131.

A landlord whose negligence in making ordinary repairs is the cause of a personal injury to the tenant is liable therefor. Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548.

If the owner in making repairs negligently causes the building to burn he will be liable to the tenant for his injury. Hine v. Cushing, 53 Hun. 519.

If the repairs are negligently made the tenant may recover the damages which he suffers because of the defect, if he was ignorant that the premises had not been made safe. Walker v. Swayzee, 3 Abb. Pr. 138.

In Franklin v. Brown, 21 Jones & S. 474, where the injury was caused by noxious gases which came through the window and which the evidence showed neither party knew of before the signing of the lease, so that there was nothing to show negligence on the part of the landlord, the court says, if guilty of negligence or other delictum which leads directly to the accident and wrong complained of, the landlord is liable.

Where the owner raised the leased house and did not provide a safe and proper means of entrance to and egress from it and the tenant's wife fell and was injured in attempting to leave the house, the 84 L. R. A.

court held that if the fall was caused because the owner failed to provide any means of egress whatever or through some patent defect in the plan of the contrivance the tenants could not recover, but if the structure was proper but was insufficiently secured and therefore gave way under the attempted use there might perhaps be a recovery. Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95.

If the injury results from a nuisance on the landlord's adjoining property there may be a recovery. Alston v. Grant, 3 El. & Bl. 128, 2 C.L. Rep. 433, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 163, 18 Jur. 332.

Where the landlord removes the gas fixtures without plugging the ends of the openings, and subsequently permits gas to be turned into the pipes, by reason of which an explosion occurs and injures the tenant, he will be liable for the injury. Kimmell v. Burfelnd, 2 Daly. 155.

In Meany v. Abbott, 6 Phila. 256, where the landlord employed a plumber to make certain additions to the building, the court held that he was not liable for the defects in the work when done, on the ground that the plumber was not his servant for whose acts he was liable.

So, if the landlord, with the consent of the tenant, lets the repairs out to a contractor, he will not be liable for injuries caused by the contractor's negligence. Francisco v. Brinkley, cited in 3 King's Dig. (Tenn.) 2d ed. § 3515.

Contributory negligence.

The tenant cannot recover if the unsafe condition of the premises was his own fault. Kahn v. Love, 3 Or. 206.

If the tenant, knowing that a stairway is dangerous and has not been used for more than a year, voluntarily attempts to use it without adequate cause, she will be guilty of such negligence as to prevent a recovery against the landlord, although he has not complied with his promise to repair it. Town v. Armstrong, 75 Mich. 580.

In case the landlord does not comply with his agreement to make repairs, the tenant cannot, knowing that his property will be exposed to injury if left on the premises, take the hazard of leaving it there at the risk of the landlord. If he does leave it there, and the property is injured, he cannot recover from the landlord therefor. Cook v. Soule, 56 N. Y. 420.

In Scott v. Simons, 54 N. H. 426, the court says that the landlord will be liable if he has negli-

The learned trial judge, however, excluded the evidence also upon another ground; and that was because, in his opinion, the evidence offered did not go to the extent of setting up a distinct collateral agreement to make the premises safe, or an assurance that they had been made safe, but that the evidence only went to show complainants about the sanitary condition of the premises, and promises in regard to the grates and windows and other minor details and assurances only as to them. The most material evidence upon this question is that of plaintiff, which is somewhat indefinite. She does not, in her evidence, mention the porch, and does refer to the windows and grates, and general sanitary condition of the premises; but she also says that the promise was to put the house in good repair,—safe repair. The question as to whether the entire contract was reduced to writing, or an independent collateral agreement was made, was a question of fact; and where there was any evidence to sustain the contention, it was a matter for the jury to determine, and not for the court. Cobb v. Wallace, 5 Coldw. 540, 98 Am. Dec. 435; Stew- art v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 9 Lea, 104, 112. We think that it was therefore error in the trial judge to determine these questions, and exclude all evidence in regard to them.

The court charged the jury, among other things, substantially, that if the landlord knew the unsafe condition of the premises, and concealed the fact from the tenant, and that she did not know of their unsafe condition, or could not have known by the exercise of proper care and diligence, then she could recover, etc. It will be noted that the learned trial judge, in this charge, makes the tenant responsible, not only for the facts known to her, but also such as she could have known by the exercise of proper care and diligence; but he only holds the landlord responsible for his actual knowledge, and not for such knowledge as he might have had by the exercise of proper care and diligence. We think the great weight of authority is that, if a landlord lease premises which are at the time in an unsafe and dangerous condition, he will be liable to his tenant for damages that may result, if he knows the fact and conceals it, or if, by reasonable care gently constructed the premises or negligently suffered them to remain defective after notice that they have become so. But it holds that the evidence did not show that he had done either. The court further says the landlord might be liable to the tenant if after notice of the defect he failed to repair it, but "we think not to one who after being aware of the defect unnecessarily exposed his goods to injury by it."

If the tenant continues to occupy knowing of the dangerous condition of the premises he will be guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for the injury caused by the accident: Kampinsky v. Hallo, 62 N. Y. S. R. 265.

If the tenant, knowing of the defective condition of the premises, continues to use them and is injured by the defect, contributory negligence will bar a recovery for the injury. Sanders v. Smith, 5 Misc. 1.

In Cantrell v. Fowler, 22 S. C. 589, it is said while the landlord would be liable for all injury which the tenant might sustain because of his breach of contract to repair, yet the tenant should not stand quietly by and voluntarily assume the risk of injury, thus contributing to his own loss. He ought to make the repairs himself, and charge the sum to the landlord.

A tenant has no right to use demised premises which he knows to be unfit for occupation in such a way as to cause damage and loss, and then seek to recover damages from his landlord for the injury so occasioned by his own act. Nichol v. Dusenbury, cited in 2 Hilt. 223.

In Arnold v. Clark, 13 Jones & S. 252, the court says although the representations as to the safety of the premises were false the tenant could not, having knowledge of the falsehood, take the risk of continuing its use and look to the landlord to indemnify him for any loss that he might sustain. And the same would be true in reference to a promise to repair. The measure of damages is what the repairs would cost if made by the tenant, or the loss in the use of the premises while making them, or the difference in rental value with and without them.

And that principle was followed in Kabus v. Frost, 18 Jones & S. 72.

Proximate cause.

A landlord is not liable for injuries to a tenant by the fall of plaster which was loose and which he had promised to repair, if the proximate cause of the fall was the act of an employee of an independent contractor in the room above, who pushed his foot through the ceiling. Fitzgerald v. Timoney, 13 Misc. 327.

Measure of damages.

An express contract between landlord and tenant that the former is to repair the demised premises does not render him liable for an injury to the tenant arising from want of repair, although the tenant has notified him of the unsafe condition of the premises. The tenant's only remedy is to make the repairs at the expense of the landlord. Brown v. Toronto General Hospital, 23 Ont. Rep 599.

In case the owner does not put the building in repair as he agreed to do the tenant cannot recover for the loss of the services of one of his employees, an opera singer, who was made ill by the unsuitable condition of the premises. New York Academy of Music v. Hackett, 2 Hilt. 217.

Where the leasing of a house is procured by fraud in statements as to the capacity of the furnace the tenant may retain the premises, and recover his damages, which will be the difference between the rental value of the property as it is and as it would have been had it been as represented. Pryor v. Foster, 130 N. Y. 171.

If the landlord refuses to comply with his agreement to repair a dangerous pit fall near the well, and the tenant falls into it and is injured, he cannot recover for the injury, since the damages are too remote. He should have had the repairs made at the expense of the landlord. Hamilton v. Feary, 8 Ind. App. 615.

In Flynn v. Hatton, 48 How. Pr. 333, it is said the ordinary damages for breach of a general agreement to keep the premises in repair are the expenses of repair and the loss of the use of the premises while the party contracting was in default, and such an agreement in no way contemplates any destruction of life or casualties to the person or property which might accidentally result from an omission to fulfil the agreement.

Distinguishable cases.

Undoubtedly the landlord should not be permitted to shield himself behind his bare statement that he did not know if under all the circumstances it is evident that he should have known of the and diligence he could have known of such dangerous and unsafe condition, provided reasonable care and diligence are exercised by the tenant on his part. Taylor, Land. & T. 7th ed. § 175; 2 Wood, Land. & T. p. 854, and note; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 709-711; Cowen v. Sunderland, 145 Mass. 368; Coke v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499; Cesar v. Karuta, 60 N. Y. 229, 19 Am. Rep. 164; Lovell v. Spaulding, 50 Am. Dec. 780, note; Woodf. Land. & T. 12th ed. 707; Godley v. Hagerty, 20 Pa. 387, 59 Am. Dec. 731; Carson v. Godley, 26 Pa. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 404; Edwards v. New York & H. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 249, 50 Am. Rep. 659; Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 70 Am. Rep. 548. The same principle is held in our own case of Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 244, citing 1 Thomp. Neg. 317; Whart. Neg. §§ 817, 845. See also Timlin v. Standard Oil Co. 126 N. Y. 514; Ahern v. Steele, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 446; Maywood v. Logan, 78 Mich. 135; Lindsey v. Leighton, 150 Mass. 285; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 687, 691, note. This is not in conflict with the general rule that, in the absence of any stipulation or statement, there is no warranty that the premises are in a habitable condition, and no obligation to repair, as held in Southern Oil Works v. Bickford, 14 Lea, 657, and Banks v. White, 1 Sneed, 614; but the cases proceed upon the idea that the premises, when leased, are unsafe and that fact is known to the landlord and concealed by him from the tenant, or might have been known by him by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. The liability does not arise upon any question of contract, but upon the obligation to the tenant not to expose him to danger of which the landlord knows, or could know by reasonable care, nor is it done away with by the fact that the parties examined the premises, and the tenant did not discover the defect if he exercised reasonable diligence. This view of the case was presented in the second count of plaintiff's declaration. Upon this feature of the case the learned trial judge charged the jury, among other things: "If the plaintiff had any right to recover, her right must depend upon what took place after the plaintiff took possession of the premises, and before the accident occurred."

defect. But the cases cited above seem to indicate that the cases are few in which the landlord, not actually knowing of a defect, should be charged with notice when the tenant should not be charged with the same notice. In Spellman v. Bannigan, 36 Hun, 174, the expression is used that the landlord would be liable if he knew or "from the facts and circumstances in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence he should have known" of the defect, and in Booth v. Merriam, 155 Mass. 321, it is said the landlord must disclose concealed defects of which he has "or ought to have knowledge." In each case the expression is a dictum. Of the cases cited in the rehearing opinion in HINES v. WILCOX as containing such an expression Martin v. Richards, 155 Mass. 331, was a case of illness caused by a concealed vault which had been covered by a platform. The question was as to the admissibility of evidence. The court intimates that there might be a recovery if all the admissible evidence would warrant the jury in finding that at the time of the letting the defendant knew the source of danger, and knew or ought to have known that danger existed. There the facts were all known to the landlord or his agent, and the only question was 34 L. R. A.

Without going further into the case, and without commenting on the vast array of authorities presented by the defendant's attorneys in support of the trial judge's position, some of which are in conflict with the views herein given, we think the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Appellee will pay costs of appeal.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently filed, in response to which Wilkes, J., on March 5, 1896, handed down the following response, which applies also to Stenberg v. Wilcoz (Tenn.) ante, 615:

In these causes petitions to rehear have been filed, and pressed with much earnestness. The trial judge in the court below correctly laid down the law in regard to the tenant, and imposed upon her the risk of the premises, if she knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence could have known, of their dangerous condition. It is complained that this court imposed upon the landlord a like degree of care in ascertaining whether his premises were in safe condition when he let them. The correctness of the rule and liability of the landlord is not denied when he has actual knowledge of the danger and fails to disclose it, but denied so far as it requires him to exercise reasonable care and diligence to acquaint himself with their condition. The facts assumed by counsel in arguing this point are worthy of notice. In one portion of his briefs he says: "Neither the landlord nor his agents had any notion [we suppose he means notice or knowledge] of the condition of the porch. . . . They so swear, and there is no contradictory evidence." In another portion of his briefs he says: "The premises were old, and, to my belief, the porch was obviously dangerous at the outset." And again: "The porch was, at the outset, obviously, out of fix. No ordinarily careful person would have used it. That is the simple truth of the case." We think the evidence tends to show a state of facts between these two extremes, to wit, that the porch was unsafe when the premises were let, partly from the manner of construction, and partly from age, and that this was either known to, or by reasonable care whether or not he ought to have known that the covered vault was dangerous. In State, Baabe, v. Boyce, 73 Md. 469, the injury occurred on a wharf, as to which there is an inclination to make an exception to the general rule. See note to McConnell v. Lemley (La. Ann.) ante, 609. In Carson v. Godley, 26 Pa. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 404, the owner constructed the building negligently in view of the uses to which it was to be put. In Cope v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499, it was an admitted fact in the case that the owner knew of the defect.

In Lindsey v. Leighton, 150 Mass. 285, where it is said that it was not necessary to show that the landlord had actual knowledge of the defect, that his duty was that of due care, and ignorance of the defect was no defense, the injury occurred on the common stairway of a tenement house, as to which an entirely different rule applies from that applicable to cases where the tenant is in possession of the entire property. See note to Dollard v. Roberts (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 239.

Moynihan v. Allyn, 162 Mass. 272, was also the case of an injury on a common passage of a tenement house.

H. P. F.

could have been known to, the landlord; but it was not so obviously dangerous as to have deterred an ordinarily careful person from using it, or seeing its danger. It is said that the landlord's liability to his tenant is more restricted than it is to third persons, and this is unquestionably so, in so far as it rests upon the contract between the parties, and want of care in the tenant; but, in this and similar cases, there is a separate and distinct ground of liability, depending, not upon contract or want of contract, but upon the obligation the landlord or landowner is under to his tenant, as well as third persons, not to expose them to danger which he knows or could know by the exercise of reasonable diligence. The rule laid down does not place upon the landlord the obligation of an insurer or warrantor by contract, nor does it impose the extreme duty of constant care and inspection, but it does impose upon him the duty of reasonable care and diligence to inform himself of the condition of the property which he proposes to let; and if, when he leases, he knows, or by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence should know, that the premises are dangerous, it is his duty to make them safe before he leases, or inform the tenant of their condition; and if he does not, he must respond, to any person not in fault, for damages caused by such condition of the premises, whether tenant or third person. Nor does this holding imply, as counsel suggests, that the tenant is thereby entirely relieved from the duty of proper diligence on his part, and that the landlord is virtually made guardian for the tenant. The obligation of the tenant to exercise proper diligence was properly stated by the trial judge, and there is nothing in the ruling of this court that can legitimately bear the construction given to it by counsel to relieve the tenant of such care.

The contention in the Stenberg Case is, mainly, that, being a boarder, she was the guest of the tenant, and not a third person in the eye of the law. It suffices to say, upon this point, without noting other considerations, that the evidence shows that the house was let to be used as a boarding house, and recommended by the landlord for that purpose. If it was unsafe for that purpose, which is a quasi-public purpose, and defendant knew it, or could by reasonable care and diligence have known it, he should respond in damages to any person injured on the premises. The boarder is there as much by invitation of the landlord as of the tenant. She is there, not strictly as a guest, but as a third person, legitimately on the premises on business, for the purpose for which they were let. The rule is that, if the landlord is guilty of delictum or negligence, he is liable; otherwise, not. And in this view of the case, the tenant and his boarder stand upon the same footing, the contract being out of the way. The tenant may have more extensive rights if she expressly contracts for safe premises, and is assured of their safety; and, on the other hand, her rights may be restricted if she is guilty of negligence in ascertaining for herself the condition of the premises when she rented them, or took them knowing them to be unsafe. The rule, as laid down by this court, imposes reasonable care and good faith on both landlord and tenant, in the absence of a contract to make the premises safe, or a warranty of their condition; and, keeping this rule in view, the tenant and his boarder are entitled to as much protection against the landlord as is the stranger passing along the street or occupying adjoining premises. It cannot be the law that the owner of an hotel which is in an unsafe condition, known to him to be so, or by reasonable care and diligence he could know, can lease it to a tenant, who exercises reasonable care and diligence, and does not discover the danger, and then escape liability to either the keeper of the hotel, or his family or servants, or the persons who enter the hotel for its accommodation. What the hotel keeper's liability may be at the same time is not a question now before us. While many of the cases cited in the opinion are cases where the liability was held to exist as to third persons, there is no difference between such third persons and the tenant and his servants, the matter of contract and negligence of tenant being out of the way, as is said in Cowen v. Sunderland, 145 Mass. 368. There is an exception to the general rule of caveat emptor, as between lessor and lessee, "arising from the duty which the lessor owes the lessee. This duty does not spring directly from the contract, but from the relation of the parties, and is imposed by law." We quote from Wood on Landlord and Tenant (p. 855): "Where there are defects in the premises not open to ordinary observation, of the existence of which the landlord knows, or ought to know, which are dangerous to the person of the tenant, it is his duty to disclose them to the tenant, and if he fails to do so, and the tenant is injured thereby, the landlord is responsible for all the damages that ensue to the tenant therefrom." Again (p. 869), the same author says: "But, when the premises, at the time when they are leased are in so defective a condition as to be per se a nuisance, especially when they are leased for a quasi-public use, the landlord is responsible for injuries resulting either to the tenant or third persons lawfully upon the premises therefrom."

The rule laid down by this court, and (as we think) sustained by authority and reason, is that, in the absence of a contract to repair, or warranty of condition, both the landlord and tenant must use reasonable care and diligence. If the tenant neglect such reasonable care and diligence to ascertain the condition of the premises, or, knowing their condition, assumed the risk, then he cannot recover against the landlord. On the other hand, if the landlord neglect to use reasonable care and diligence in ascertaining whether his premises are safe, or if he actually knows they are unsafe, and conceals or misrepresents their condition, then he is liable, the tenant being in no fault. It is not upon the ground of an insurer or warrantor of condition under his lease contract, but on the ground of the obligation implied by law not to expose the tenant, the public to danger which he knows, or in good faith should know, and which the tenant does not know, and cannot ascertain by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. The cases are numerous which use the expression, laid down in the opinion in this case, that the landlord is liable, not only for actual knowledge, but also for reasonable care and diligence in obtaining such knowledge,—not only when he knows, but when he ought to know, of the defects, by using ordinary care and diligence. As using this expression, we cite, among others, Martin v. Richards, 155 Mass. 881; State, Bashe, v. Boyce, 73 Md. 469; Carson v. Godley, 26 Pa. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 404; Coke v. Gutkese, 80 Ky. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 499. In the late case of Lindsey v. Leighton, 150 Mass. 288, it was held that it was not necessary to show that the owner had actual knowledge of the defects. His duty was that of due care, and ignorance of the defect was no defense, in the absence of such care. In Moynihan v. Allyn, 162 Mass. 272, it was held that it was the duty of the landlord to inform the tenant of any hidden defects, which could not be discovered by reasonable diligence on his part, and of which the defendant ought, for his proper protection, to be informed; citing quite a number of other Massachusetts cases. Mr. Pingrey says, in § 592 of his work on Real Property: "Of course, if there is a concealed defect which renders the premises dangerous, which the tenant cannot discover by the exercise of reasonable diligence, of which the landlord has or ought to have knowledge, it is the landlord's duty to disclose it, and he is liable for an injury which results from his concealment of it." In § 594 the same author says: It is held that the obligation and liability are the same to the tenant's guest and to his servants, "and the landlord is responsible, unless it appears that such owner did not know, or by reasonable care and diligence could not have known, of the unsafe condition of the premises when he leased them."

Under the principle we have attempted to lay down, the landlord's liability, leaving the contract of lease out of view, is the same to the tenant as to his servant, or his guest, or his customer, or his wife or child, or to the stranger passing along the streets or on the premises for any legitimate purpose. The only case cited by counsel apparently holding a doctrine contrary to that laid down by this court is that of Burdick v. Cheadle, 26 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767. This case is also reported in 50 Am. Dec. 782, and referred to as a peculiar case, and, as we think, very justly criticised, as placing the party injured in a very anomalous position. The case is clearly out of line with the current of authority. It may be remarked, however, that in that case the court said: "Whether the noxious structures existed at the time the lessees entered into the possession of the storeroom does not appear." As illustrative of the application of the rule we have laid down, we cite the following, among other cases, showing when the rule is applied, and as to what persons held applicable: In Sworids v. Edgar, 59 N. Y. 28, 17 Am. Rep. 295, a longshoreman in the service of the tenant sued the owner, and recovered. In Godley v. Hagerty, 20 Pa. 887, 59 Am. Dec. 731, a servant of the tenant sued the owner, and recovered. In Carson v. Godley, supra, a customer of the tenant sued the owner, and recovered. In Cesar v. Karutz, 60 N. Y. 229, the owner was held liable to the child of the tenant. In Coke v. Gutkese, supra, the owner was held liable for injuries sustained by a child of the tenant. In Martin v. Richards, 155 Mass. 881, three cases were tried together, and the owner was held liable for an injury to the child and wife of the tenant. In Minor v. Sharon, 112 Mass. 477, three cases were tried together, and the owner was held liable for injuries to the tenant's children. In State, Bashe, v. Boyce, 73 Md. 469, the owner was held liable for injuries to the servant of the tenant. In Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548, the owner was held liable for an injury to the wife of the tenant. In Nugent v. Boston, O. & M. R. Co., 80 Me. 62, the owner was held liable to persons rightfully on the premises. In Nelson v. Liverpool Brewing Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 311, the right of the servant of the tenant to sue was recognized. In Moynihan v. Allyn, 162 Mass. 272, the right of the child of the tenant to sue was recognized. And Mr. Pingrey, in his work on Real Property, expressly states that there is no distinction in the rule as to the liability of the owner to the tenant or to the tenant's guest, or to the tenant's servant. In each instance he says the rule is the same.

34 L. R. A.

We see no reason or occasion for rehearing the causes upon further arguments or briefs. The petitioners make no new grounds of defense, and lay down no principles that have not already been fully argued by counsel for defendant, and still more fully investigated and considered by the court. It could serve no useful purpose to have further argument along lines that the court does not consider conclusive or material in the case. The court is satisfied with its conclusions, and has no doubt of their correctness when properly understood and applied.

The petition to rehear is denied, and dismissed.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT

GRAND ISLAND & NORTHERN WYOMING RAILROAD COMPANY

v.

Norval H. BAKER et al.

(.....Wyo.....)

1. A question arising upon the pleadings which is certified to the supreme court for decision cannot be answered if the facts do not sufficiently appear in the pleadings to authorize a complete determination of it.
2. In determining whether or not county indebtedness violates a constitutional provision that no county shall create any indebtedness exceeding 2 per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property in it, compulsory obligations imposed by the legislature must be included.
3. The fact that the validity of the debt on which a judgment against a county was rendered cannot be questioned in a proceeding to enforce a tax to pay it does not prevent a resistance of the tax on the ground that it was not authorized by law.
4. A judgment against a county for a claim which should have been paid out of current revenue, but was not because the amount limited by the Constitution was exhausted, and which did not become valid county indebtedness because the constitutional limit of indebtedness had already been reached, or because it was not legally adopted by the people, is not "public debt" within the meaning of a provision of a Constitution limiting the tax rate except for public debt and interest thereon.
5. Recourse to the claims upon which judgments against a county were rendered may be had to determine to what class they belong, and whether or not any limit is imposed upon taxation by which they may be enforced.
6. The expense of maintaining the district court is a county purpose which must be provided for out of the fund raised by the limited tax levy authorized by Const. art. 15, § 5.
7. Compensation to be made to a landowner for land taken by a county for the location of a public road must be paid out of the ordinary county revenue raised by the limited tax provided by Const. art. 15, § 5.
8. A board of county commissioners which can only act as a body in session cannot confess judgment against the county under a statute requiring defendant to personally appear in court in order to confess judgment.
9. A power of attorney to confess judgment cannot be given by a board of county commissioners without statutory authority.

(June 30, 1896.)

RESERVATION by the District Court for Crook County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of certain questions arising in a proceeding to enjoin defendants from collecting certain taxes which had been levied in Crook county for the year 1895. Answers favorable to complainant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burke & Fowler and N. K. Griggs for plaintiff.

Messrs. J. L. Stotts and M. Nichols, for defendants:

There is no distinction made by the courts between bonded debt and liquidated debts generally so far as the application of the term "public debt" is concerned. The bonded debt is simply a funded debt and the other a floating debt.

State, Palmer, v. Hickman, 11 Mont. 541; People, Seeley, v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 9 Colo. 404; Law v. People, Huck, 87 Ill. 385; Gray v. Bennett, 3 Met. 536.

In United States, Butz, v. Muscatine, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 490, the court states: "The statute of Iowa, that the city of Muscatine shall levy a tax of only 1 per cent a year does not excuse such city from levying a tax to pay a judgment against it, so long as the state Code provides for the levying of such tax."

See Carroll County Supers. v. United States, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 71, 21 L. ed. 771.

The county purposes or taxes for which any certain county, by § 2, chap. 6, Laws of 1867, is limited to 3 mills on the dollar, except on a vote of the people, include only the ordinary expenses of the county, and do not include money to pay principal or interest of a county debt.

McCormick v. Fitch, 14 Minn. 252; State v. Milwaukee, 25 Wis. 122; Cooley, Taxn. 138.

The limitation of 12 mills for county revenue was to prevent the board of county commissioners from incurring indebtedness by extravagant or reckless management. But the salary of an officer is not an indebtedness of the county which is created by the county board.

State, Wessel, v. Weir, 88 Neb. 35; State, Rotwitt, v. Hickman, 9 Mont. 370, 8 L. R. A. 403; Welch v. Strother (Cal.) 16 Pac. 22.

A liability imposed by the legislative power of the state does not come under the general rule limiting the creating of public indebtedness.

Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 453; People, Rollins, v. Rio Grande County Comrs. 7 Colo. App. 229.

Mr. Chester B. Bradley amicus curia.

Mr. R. H. Vosburg for Weston county.

Mr. J. T. Hoop for Sheridan county.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff filed its petition in the district court for Crook county, praying for an injunction

NOTE.—On the question, What constitutes an indebtedness of a municipal corporation within the meaning of provisions restricting it, see Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 23 L. R. A. 402, and note.

As to the conclusiveness of a judgment against a municipality in a proceeding by mandamus to compel its payment, see Howard v. Huron (S. D.) 28 L. R. A. 483; but attention should be called to the distinction between the conclusiveness of the judgment itself and the right to exceed the limitation fixed for taxes.

pel its payment, see Howard v. Huron (S. D.) 28 L. R. A. 483; but attention should be called to the distinction between the conclusiveness of the judgment itself and the right to exceed the limitation fixed for taxes.

against the collection of a portion of the taxes levied in that county for the year 1895. A demurrer was interposed, and upon the hearing thereof the court ordered the cause to be reserved to this court for its opinion upon certain questions certified to be important and difficult. In the year 1895 the board of county commissioners of the county of Crook levied the following taxes: General revenue, 10 mills; general county school, 2 mills; judgment tax, $8\frac{1}{2}$ mills; court-house and jail bonds, 2 mills; funding bonds, $2\frac{1}{2}$ mills,—amounting in the aggregate to 19 $\frac{1}{2}$ mills on the dollar. The only part of the levy complained of in this action is the judgment tax of $8\frac{1}{2}$ mills, which is assumed to have been levied to pay certain judgments rendered against the county. The facts connected with the judgments are not, as the pleadings now stand, sufficiently disclosed to definitely indicate the precise nature of the claims entering into them. We are not informed by the pleadings, either, as to the time when, or the court wherein, such judgments were secured. Inferentially it may appear that they were obtained since the admission of the state, and largely upon warrants issued in payment for current expenses of the county, since the adoption of the Constitution. Indeed, the argument in this court was largely confined to the effect of judgments rendered upon warrants so issued, and the taxing power associated therewith, although the suggestion was advanced by counsel that for all which appeared in the pleadings funding bonds might have constituted the source of the judgments. It would seem that no necessity exists for dispute upon the essential facts. It would have been more satisfactory, therefore, and would perhaps have narrowed the scope of our investigation, had the issues been fully made up prior to the reservation to this court, so as to clearly and without cavil present the questions submitted by the learned court for our consideration. It is not our duty, however, to pass upon the demurrer. Our jurisdiction is limited to a decision upon the certified questions, and we are not requested thereby to direct the ruling which should be made upon the present condition of the pleadings.

The judgment tax is charged to have been illegal and void, and levied without authority; that the same was not levied for the payment of the public debt of the county, or the interest thereon; and the county had exhausted its power to levy taxes for general revenue purposes by a levy of the constitutional limit of 12 mills for such purposes in the year 1895 and each year thereafter since the organization of the state. It is attempted also to attack the judgments upon two grounds: First, that the alleged debts upon which they were obtained were void, as having been contracted, or the evidences of such indebtedness having been issued, in excess of the limit upon county indebtedness established by the Constitution; second, that the said judgments were procured through the consent and confession of the board of county commissioners contrary to law.

The questions certified for our decision are as follows: (1) Is the levy of the board of county commissioners of the county of Crook of $8\frac{1}{2}$ mills of judgment tax, as set forth in plaintiff's petition, and the agreement of parties thereto attached, in excess of the limitation, as fixed by the Constitution and laws of the state of Wyoming? (2) Separate and apart from each of the propositions herein made, is or is not the defendant entitled to judgment on its agreement with the plaintiff (Exhibit A, plaintiff's petition) for the sum of \$927.66? (3) For what purposes can a tax be levied by the board of the county commissioners in excess of the 12-mills limitation, and under the term "Public Indebtedness and Interest Thereon," as the term is used in § 5 of art. 15 of the Constitution? (4) Can a tax in excess of 12 mills be levied by the board of the county commissioners for the payment of an indebtedness growing out of and by reason of the provisions of chapter 6 of the Laws of 1893, entitled "An Act to Encourage the Destruction of Predatory Wild Animals?" (5) Can a tax in excess of 12 mills be levied by the board of the county commissioners for the purpose of paying warrants issued for salaries of county officers when the revenue of the county derived from taxation in previous years has not proved sufficient to defray its expenses, and such warrants are outstanding and unpaid for the want of sufficient funds? (6) Does the placing of warrants, issued for legitimate county expenses, into judgment, justify the board of the county commissioners in levying a tax in excess of 12 mills with which to pay the same? (7) In case judgment has been rendered in favor of a landowner for damages caused by the location, construction, and opening of a public road through his land, can a tax be levied to pay such judgment in excess of 12 mills provided by law to be levied for all county purposes, the revenue raised by the 12-mill tax being all required and used for county purposes? (8) Has the board of the county commissioners authority and power under the Constitution and laws of the state to confess and authorize a confession of judgments against the county? (9) Can a judgment rendered by the district court of Crook county, having jurisdiction over the person and subject-matter, be attacked collaterally in this case? (10) Cannot the board of the county commissioners levy the district-court tax for the maintenance of the court in addition to the levy of 12 mills for county revenue?

The second question, viz.: "Separate and apart from each of the propositions herein made, is or is not the defendant entitled to judgment on its agreement with the plaintiff (Exhibit A, plaintiff's petition) for the sum of $927.66,"—cannot receive our consideration, for the reason that the facts do not sufficiently appear in the pleadings before us to authorize a complete determination thereof upon the merits of the cause.

For the purposes of convenience, we propose to discuss the legal questions involved in the various questions, without, as in general, a specific reference to any particular question, or the order in which they are presented. A majority of the certified questions do not admit of categorical answers. A careful elucidation of the views entertained by the court covering the subject-matters of the questions ought to, and, we conceive, will, be sufficiently indicative of our opinion upon the questions themselves.

Involved in the questions thus submitted is the construction of the various constitutional provisions affecting the power of counties to incur indebtedness and levy taxes. The gravity of the interests which may depend upon a determination of these questions has not been underestimated, and with a keen appreciation of the responsibility resting upon the courts in such matters it is only after studious and mature deliberation that we have arrived at our conclusions. Upon the argument much attention was devoted by counsel to the policy of the constitutional restrictions upon public indebtedness and taxation, but the courts possess no control over matters of mere policy. If the people of the commonwealth by adopting a Constitution have committed themselves to a mistaken policy, the only remedy is an amendment, by constitutional methods, of that instrument. Within the province of the legislature, recourse must be had to that body for the correction of any errors of policy which may have induced its enactments. The jurisdiction of the courts extends only to the construction and enforcement of the Constitution and laws as they exist. That jurisdiction should be zealously guarded, but not used as a cloak to encroach upon the functions of the other departments of government. The provisions of the Constitution controlling the matters before us are as follows:

Article 15, § 5: "For county revenue there shall be levied annually a tax not to exceed 12 mills on the dollar for all purposes including general school tax, exclusive of state revenue, except for the payment of its public debt and the interest thereon. An additional tax of $3 for each person between the ages of twenty-one and fifty years, inclusive, shall be annually levied for county school purposes."

Article 16, § 3: "No county in the state of Wyoming shall in any manner create any indebtedness exceeding 2 per centum on the assessed value of taxable property in such county, as shown by the last general assessment, preceding; provided, however, that any county, city, town, village, or other subdivision thereof in the state of Wyoming, may bond its public debt existing at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, in any sum not exceeding 4 per centum on the assessed value of the taxable property in such county, city, town, village, or other subdivision as shown by the last general assessment for taxation."

Article 16, § 4: "No debt in excess of the taxes for the current year shall, in any manner, be created by any county or subdivision thereof, or any city, town, or village, or any subdivision thereof, in the state of Wyoming, unless the proposition to create such debt shall have been submitted to a vote of the people thereof and by them approved."

Other provisions, which may affect the construction to be given to the sections above quoted, will be referred to as we proceed.

We are to consider the power and authority of a county in this state, first to create indebtedness, and, second, to levy taxes. Prior to the admission of Wyoming as a state, municipal, and county indebtedness in this as well as other territories was limited by congressional enactment to 4 per centum on the value of the taxable property within such corporation or county, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness. Stat. 1st Sess. 49th Cong. chap. 818, p. 171; Rev. Stat. Wyo. 1887, p. 89. The language of that act is as follows: "That no political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision in any of the territories of the United States shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness exceeding," etc. Acknowledging this last limitation upon county indebtedness, the Constitution expressly authorized the bonding of the public debt of any county in any sum within the congressional limit of 4 per cent. Article 16, § 3. As a primary proposition it must be manifest that the framers of the Constitution did not propose to afford vitality to any indebtedness incurred in excess of the limitation declared by Congress. In case any county had become so indebted, it was not permitted to issue bonds to pay such excess; and no other constitutional provision refers to it. This may become an important consideration. County indebtedness amounting to, but not exceeding, 4 per cent on the assessed value of taxable property was therefore recognized as valid and enforceable; and, as no limitation was placed by the Constitution upon the power to levy taxes to pay the valid public debt of a county, means were allowed by which the same could be eventually satisfied. It is also clear that in authorizing the funding of county indebtedness in an amount not exceeding 4 per cent, all manner of indebtedness, whether for imposed or voluntary obligations, was understood to be included within the congressional limitation, it being obvious that the intention was to permit the bonding of all legal and valid debts existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and that it was not the purpose to repudiate any valid obligation or liability. Upon future indebtedness another limit was placed by the Constitution. First, it is provided that no county shall in any manner create any indebtedness exceeding 2 per centum on the assessed value of taxable property in such county, as shown by the last general assessment, preceding; second, no debt in excess of the taxes for the current year shall in any manner be created by any county, unless the proposition to create such debt shall have been submitted to a vote of the people, and by them approved. Without reference now to the classes of indebtedness included within these restrictions, if any distinction in that respect exists, it is apparent that, if the indebtedness of a county has reached or exceeds 2 per centum on the assessed value of taxable property, such county is powerless to create any debt in excess of the taxes for the current year, either with or without a submission of the matter to a vote of the people, or their approval thereof. The absolute limit of lawful indebtedness being reached, it cannot be exceeded. If, however, the indebtedness of a county thus restrained is less than such 2 per centum, then there arises the further prohibition against the creation of any debt in excess of the taxes for the current year without first submitting the same to a vote of the people, and thereby securing their approval; but, in such case, if a proposition of that character is so submitted to and approved by the people of the county, then, so far as concerns the constitutional provisions, such county becomes authorized to create the additional debt, if, together with the existing indebtedness, it will not exceed 2 per centum on the assessed value of the taxable property within the county. Thus the two sections (§§ 8 and 4 of art. 16) are harmonious, and their meaning readily discerned. We apprehend no difficulty has arisen in reference to the obvious purport of the Constitution in this regard. The intention evidently was: First, to place an absolute limit upon the debt included in the provisions; and, second, to forbid any such debt to be created in any year, even within the absolute limit, if in excess of the taxes of the current year, without the sanction of the people of the county; and when the final limit was reached to require the affairs of the county to be conducted practically upon a cash basis.

The more serious question, however, is, What debts are included within these constitutional prohibitions? It is insisted by counsel for defendants that they do not embrace any debts imposed by law, or such as may be termed "compulsory obligations," such as salaries of officers, which are definitely established by the legislature. It is urged that the Constitution requires the legislature to fix the amount of the salaries of county officers, and that when thus fixed the obligation is one which the county has not created; and it is contended that the restriction upon indebtedness applies only to such liabilities as have been incurred by the county authorities voluntarily, and, therefore, that, in determining whether the debt of a county exceeds the limit established by the Constitution, the amount of the salaries of its officers, and warrants outstanding to pay them, are not to be considered; that a county in its corporate capacity, acting through its commissioners, is not prohibited from creating any indebtedness which, exclusive of such imposed or compulsory obligations, does not in the one case exceed the taxes for the current year, in the other 2 per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property in the county. We have approached this question with some hesitation, as it is impossible not to be impressed with its great significance. The argument briefly adverted to is not without some force, and rests to some extent upon precedent. Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 453; Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412. In the case of Grant County v. Lake County, supra, the supreme court of Oregon, construing the provisions of the Constitution of that state prohibiting a county from creating any debts or liabilities which shall singly or in the aggregate exceed the sum of $5,000, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion, held that such inhibition did not imply that all debts and liabilities of a county over the sum named were necessarily obnoxious to the constitutional provision; and in the course of the opinion the learned judge said: "Said provision of the Constitution, as I view it, only applies to debts and liabilities which a county, in its corporate character, and as an artificial person, voluntarily creates." In Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, the supreme court of California held, under a constitutional provision prohibiting any county from incurring in any manner or for any purpose any indebtedness or liability exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year without the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters, that it referred only to an indebtedness or liability which the municipality has itself incurred; that it limited the power of the municipality as to any indebtedness which it has a discretion to incur, or not to incur; and the opinion is expressed by the court in that case that such are the clear intent and meaning of the provision. The effect of that decision is that if, in expending the revenues of any year, by a municipality in paying salaries of officers and other expenses, the latter including such as have been incurred through the discretion of the local authorities, such revenues are exhausted, salaries and other imposed obligations thereafter are valid, but no other liability can then be incurred; and what more than one half of the qualified voters are powerless to accomplish, the legislature, which might not be strongly representative of the particular municipality, may do; that the legislature is not amenable to the restrictive provisions of the Constitution, and it may fasten numerous burdens in the way of indebtedness upon the people, which the local authorities are without authority to incur unless two thirds of the voters shall acquiesce therein. On the other hand, the courts of other states and the Supreme Court of the United States have reached a different conclusion under somewhat similar constitutional provisions. The Constitution of Missouri provides that no county shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner, or for any purpose, to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof, nor, with such assent, to an amount in the aggregate exceeding 5 per cent on the value of the taxable property therein, etc. In the case of Barnard v. Knox County, 105 Mo. 382, 13 L. R. A. 244, the county was sued upon a warrant issued for books and stationery bought for the use of the clerk of the county court, which the law required to be furnished. The defense was interposed that the debt was created after the county warrants exceeded the revenue of the year in question. Anticipating such defense the plaintiff had pleaded that the debt was created by law, and was not the act of the county authorities. The supreme court of that state had previously held that there was a distinction between compulsory obligations and debts voluntarily contracted by the county. See Potter v. Douglas County, 87 Mo. 240. In the present case the former was expressly overruled, and a contrary opinion expressed. The court says, after quoting the constitutional provision: "The language just quoted is clear and explicit, and construes itself. It is broad and comprehensive as to the character of the indebtedness. It includes indebtedness created in any manner or for any purpose. This strong and comprehensive language admits of no distinction between debts created by a county court and debts created by law. In a sense all county debts are created by law, for the counties possess those powers, and those only, which are conferred upon them by the Constitution and laws of the state. While it is the duty of the county court to care for paupers and insane persons, and to build bridges and repair roads, still the county court is governed by the statute in the performance of these duties. Debts incurred for such purposes may be called debts created by law, as well as debts incurred by the county clerk for books and stationery." Under a somewhat similar provision in the Constitution of Colorado prohibiting a county from becoming indebted, the Supreme Court of the United States in Lake County Comrs. v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 33 L. ed. 1060, in reversing the case of Rollins v. Lake County, 34 Fed. Rep. 845. In speaking upon this question said: "Neither can we assent to the position of the court below that there is, as to this case, a difference between indebtedness incurred by contracts of the county and that form of debt denominated 'compulsory obligations.' The compulsion was imposed by the legislature of the state, even if it can be said correctly that the compulsion was to incur debt; and the legislature could no more impose it than the county could voluntarily assume it, as against the disability of a constitutional prohibition. Nor does the fact that the Constitution provided for certain county officers, and authorized the legislature to fix their compensation and that of other officials, affect the question." The action in which this opinion was delivered was brought upon warrants issued in payment of fees of witnesses, jurors, constables, and sheriff. A clause in the Constitution of Illinois provides that "no county, city," etc., "shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose," etc. In that state it is held that in respect to such prohibition no distinction exists between debts imposed by law and those voluntarily assumed, and that it makes no difference whether the debts are incurred for necessary current expenses or not. Prince v. Quincy, 105 Ill. 188, 44 Am. Rep. 785, 105 Ill. 215; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. A similar construction is given to the constitutional prohibition against county and municipal indebtedness in Iowa. Council Bluffs v. Stewart, 51 Iowa, 385; National State Bank v. Marshall Independent Dist., 39 Iowa, 490; French v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 614. See also Guthrie v. New Vienna Bank (Okla.) 38 Pac. 4, where this question is fully and learnedly discussed.

We are not unmindful of the difference in language between the Constitution of this state and that of some of the other states above referred to, but in respect to the present inquiry we fail to observe that the courts have drawn or indicated any distinction by reason of such difference in language. The object in either case is the limitation upon municipal indebtedness. To "become indebted" would seem to be no broader nor to be any more restrictive than to "create a debt." If a county is prohibited from "becoming indebted," we are not able to impart to that language any greater restriction upon the character of the indebtedness than if the prohibition is against the "creation of a debt." If the constitutional limitation operates to restrain the legislature from imposing obligations upon a county in excess of the limitation in the one case, so far as the mere difference in words is concerned, it would have the like effect in the other case. In the California and Oregon cases it does not appear that there was also a constitutional limitation upon the means of raising the annual revenue, as in the case with us, which might aid or control the construction to be given to the debt limitation. Recurring to our own Constitution, we are required to give that effect to its provisions which will harmonize all the parts bearing upon the question. An inspection of the limitations placed upon indebtedness and taxation will demonstrate with satisfactory clearness the object, purpose, and intent which found expression in the provisions under consideration. We have already adverted to the limitation placed by Congress upon municipal and county indebtedness which controlled while we remained in a territorial condition, and the fact that all debts which could during that period have been lawfully incurred were given recognition, and provision inserted in the Constitution permitting the funding of the same. That no indebtedness theretofore incurred exceeding 4 per centum (the congressional limitation) was thus recognized, clearly displaying a constitutional interpretation of the former limitation, embracing by necessary inference in such limitation all debts for salaries of officers, and other imposed or so called "compulsory" obligations. The Constitution in the same section establishes a smaller limit upon future debts, reducing the limitation to 2 per centum; and, as if to emphasize the intention to compel the strictest economy in the conduct of county and municipal affairs, further required that no debt in excess of the taxes for any year should be created without the approval of the people. Like restrictions are placed upon the creation of debts by the state. In making provision for taxation, the Constitution again resorts to the method of limitation. For county revenue, for all purposes except the payment of the public debts and interest thereon, the rate of taxation is limited to 12 mills. If it is to be assumed that the debt limitation does not include any imposed liabilities, then the tax of 12 mills was merely to provide revenue to satisfy voluntary obligations, if they should amount to enough to consume all the funds raised by such levy for county revenue; and as the imposed obligations would be unpaid, a fund each year might then be provided by a tax without limit to pay them as a part of the public debt. It must be manifest that salaries of public officers, the fees of witnesses and jurors, and such other expenses as may be said to be compulsory, which relate to the ordinary management of county affairs, are properly chargeable to and payable out of the general county revenue; and the conclusion is irresistible that in providing authority to tax for county revenue for all purposes the section unequivocally comprehends the furnishing by that particular tax of funds out of which all obligations ordinarily and properly chargeable to and payable out of the general annual county revenue shall be discharged, unless, indeed, at the time any such obligations are contracted, other provisions are made in pursuance of the Constitution and laws having specific reference to their future payment in another manner and out of other funds, as might be the case of the creation of a debt in excess of the taxes in any year by consent of the people, the county having authority to incur such a liability. In such case it would not be intended to charge such debt to the ordinary county revenue. Salaries being unquestionably chargeable ordinarily to county revenue, and the tax for county revenue being a limited tax, it would seem to follow that the restriction upon incurring liabilities in excess of current taxes includes such salaries and other claims against a county similarly situated. Had this not been the intention, provision would have surely been made for an additional tax, clearly expressed, to pay such an important class of liabilities as salaries of officers. We are of the opinion that no county board, money being in the general fund, raised by the tax for general county revenue, ever hesitated to allow and pay salaries out of that fund. The limitation upon taxation, then, being upon the power to raise a fund out of which salaries are payable, must not the restriction upon the right to create debts in excess of the taxes include in the term "debts" all ordinary expense of the county, inclusive of salaries? We think so. The evident object of all these provisions was an economical administration of public affairs, which is rendered more emphatic, if possible, by the maximum placed upon the salaries of the various county officials. Article 14.

It is assumed that the board of county commissioners constitutes the county, and that a liability imposed by law is not the creation of a debt by the county, not being within the discretion of the board. It is doubtful whether the board does constitute the county in the strict sense. As an official board it is charged with many duties and invested with numerous powers respecting the management of the ordinary, and particularly the local, affairs of the county. This authority, however, is not exclusive in all matters; it is, after all, not boundless. Some of the important interests of a county are not permitted to be delegated to the board, viz., the matter of compensation to be paid to its public officials; others are under the control of independent officers, such as the collection of taxes, although the board may exercise a qualified supervision over the conduct of the officers charged with such duties. The supreme court of Indiana, in discussing the relation of the board to the county, said: "We know that comprehensive powers are conferred upon county commissioners; we know, too, that they are, in a sense, the county. But, after all, the county is no more than a public corporation created by statute, and deriving its powers from the legislature. If a county is not given power to fix the fees of public officers by statute, it can possess no such power. It adds nothing, therefore, to the strength of the appellee's position to affirm that the board of commissioners is the county. But it is not strictly true that the board is the county. It can by no possibility be true that the board is the county, for in a just sense the inhabitants of the organized locality constitute the county. In strict accuracy the commissioners are public officers representing the county, with powers and duties defined and prescribed by statute. The money which they control is the money of the county, the debts which they incur are the debts of the county, and the authority they exercise is such as resides in them as the officers and representatives of the county." Tippecanoe County Commrs. v. Barnes, 133 Ind. 408. It may be equally as accurate to say that the legislature is the county, within the sphere of its control, as to make that application to the commissioners. In all matters of public concern it would seem appropriate to attach to the legislature the character of representatives of the county itself, whenever it assumes control of any of its interests, either in pursuance of constitutional requirement or otherwise; and that in doing so it acts for the counties in about the same way that the local board does regarding those matters committed to the direction of the latter; and thus, if an obligation is imposed upon the county, it cannot be said to be compulsory to any greater extent than if imposed by the county board. "Municipal corporations" (and in this designation, so far as concerns this discussion, we include counties) "are of a twofold character,—the one public, as regards the state at large, in so far as they are its agents in government; the other private, in so far as they are to provide the local necessities and conveniences for the citizens." Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783. In fixing salaries of county officers the legislature deals with counties as one of the agencies of government. In respect to its officers and the duties they are required to perform the county is public in character. The Supreme Court of the United States in Lake County v. Hollins, supra, indicated that from an accurate standpoint the compulsion arising on account of imposed obligations might not be to incur debt. It is evident that such compulsion in all cases does not result in a debt; and rather by way of suggestion than argument, it may be said that the character of debt in excess of taxes as applied to unpaid salaries does not necessarily arise from the enactment of the law providing their amount and times of payment, but that it is possible the allowance of other claims within the discretionary control of the board, and the use of funds in the general fund, or raised by the county revenue tax to satisfy such claims, may so deplete the treasury as to create the inability to pay the salaries or other so-called "imposed" liabilities. Therefore it may not be entirely accurate to say that the debt is created by the legislature, even if any distinction should be thought to exist respecting this matter within the terms of the constitutional provision.

Before leaving this branch of the case, we call attention to some very pertinent remarks contained in the address of the people prepared by a committee of the constitutional convention, submitted to that body prior to its adjournment, and embraced in the record as a part of its proceedings. We quote: "The extravagance in the management of county affairs that has prevailed in the past has been circumscribed and rendered impossible. The restrictions upon taxation and the creation of public debts are such as to necessitate economy in public affairs, and insure to the people the highest excellence in government for the least money." This is strong language, and indicates that the purpose had been to place as additional restriction upon public indebtedness and taxation. Considering the limitations theretofore in force, the restraint upon taxation under existing territorial laws, and the construction given to the antecedent limitations, it is readily observed that, if the construction given to the Constitution by counsel for defendants is correct, the statements quoted from the address were but delusions, and that, instead of having further circumscribed county extravagance, the limitations were practically removed. We are aware that the address is not to be entirely controlling of the construction; but, in connection with past conditions and events, in the light of which constitutional provisions must be interpreted, such an address may very properly be resorted to as indicating somewhat the intent and object which caused the incorporation of disputed clauses into the fundamental law. Whether the constitutional limitations include all obligations, of whatever character, we cannot, in this case, properly determine, and do not do so. It has been held by some eminent authorities that similar limitations do not cover a debt established against a municipality for a tort. Bloomington v. Perdue, 99 Ill. 829; Chicago v. Sexton, 115 Ill. 230; Bartle v. Des Moines, 38 Iowa, 414. It will be time enough, however, to decide that question when it is clearly presented in a proper case.

We are constrained to express as our opinion that the limitations upon county indebtedness include salaries of county officials, and as well such obligations as are legal and valid and lawfully imposed under the legislation of 1893, respecting the payment of bounties for the destruction of certain predatory wild animals; as the same reasoning in the main applies with equal force to those liabilities. In this connection we expressly refrain from deciding or indicating any opinion whatever regarding the constitutionality of that legislation, or the validity of any claims arising thereunder, irrespective of questions touching the debt and tax limitations. We are convinced that any different construction would be destructive of the plain import and object of the Constitution, and would invite the most reckless and improvident administration of public affairs; and, notwithstanding that the burdens of taxation are now conceived to be oppressive, temperate language would utterly fail to depict the condition which might result if the contention of counsel on behalf of the counties is sound. We do not desire to be understood as impugning in the least the motives or the honesty or patriotism of those at this time or heretofore in charge of county governments. We appreciate the many difficulties of their position, and are aware that in no public office is a higher degree of care, sagacity, and withal of integrity, required, and often displayed, than that through which the affairs of these local agencies of the state are administered. If inconveniences or consequences are to receive consideration, the hardships which may accompany an attempt to confine county indebtedness and taxation within constitutional boundaries cannot approach in all that would be disastrous the effects which might follow if the construction otherwise insisted upon was to prevail. Nevertheless, the courts are powerless to alter the Constitution, and should not attempt to evade its clear and imperative commands. As has been already suggested, the remedy, if any is deemed to be necessary, resides elsewhere.

We come now to a consideration of the judgments. Assuming that the claims upon which the judgments were rendered were in excess of the limit, it is contended that they cannot be attacked collaterally by the plaintiff taxpayer in this case; that they are conclusive as to the validity of the debt, and therefore constitute a part of the public debt of the county, for which a tax may be levied irrespective of the limit as to taxation for county revenue. The question, so far as this case is concerned, resolves itself into this: Do judgments, assuming them to have been rendered by a court of competent and general jurisdiction, having likewise jurisdiction of the parties, form a part of that public debt of the county for which a levy may be made to provide funds for their payment, although, in fact, the warrants upon which they are founded were issued for current expenses in excess of the taxes for the current year, and in excess of the absolute constitutional limit upon county indebtedness? Is any inquiry into the indebtedness back of and behind the judgments precluded by them? It is apparent that several questions are involved in such an inquiry. Not only are we to determine the meaning and scope of the words "public debt" as used in the section of the Constitution providing for county taxation, but the effect of the judgments as to their conclusiveness or otherwise, and in respect to what matters they are conclusive, if any, becomes a matter for investigation. Upon this branch of the case we are aided materially by the authorities. After judgment upon a claim preferred against a county or municipality, it has been frequently, and where that question alone was involved, uniformly, held, in mandamus proceedings to compel the levy of a tax to pay the judgment, that an allegation that the debt upon which the judgment was rendered had been created in excess of the constitutional limit upon such indebtedness, and was illegal and void, constitutes no defense; that such defense by the county is absolutely precluded by the judgment, as it could have been interposed in the suit wherein the judgment was obtained. Howard v. Huron, 6 S. D. 180, 26 L. R. A. 493; State, Ledger Pub. Co., v. Gloyd, 14 Wash. 5; United States v. Ottawa Auditors, 28 Fed. Rep. 407; United States v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 331, 25 L. ed. 225; People, Rollins, v. Rio Grande County Commrs., 7 Colo. App. 229; Atina L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 44 Fed. Rep. 329. And the citizen and taxpayer cannot attack such a judgment any more than the county. Clark v. Wolf, 29 Iowa, 197; Freem. Judgm. § 178; 2 Black, Judgm. § 584; Ashton v. Rochester, 133 N. Y. 187. In the case of Clark v. Wolf, supra, the court said: "It must be, in the absence of fraud or collusion or the like on the part of the municipal officers, that the legal liability of the county, being once fixed by a valid judgment, the citizen, no more than the county, can afterward resist the collection of said judgment upon the want of power to contract the debt. That stage in the controversy is past." And in the same case those matters which may be contested by the taxpayer, even in case of a valid judgment, are also stated as follows: "If the officers shall attempt to make a levy not warranted by law (for instance, a greater per cent than the law allows), or to collect the same in an illegal manner, or the like, these are questions between the citizen and the corporation, and do not touch either the validity of the debt or the correctness of the judgment which is intended to be satisfied."

The distinction thus mentioned we regard as clearly existing. The validity of the debt was, or could have been, fully litigated in the suit in which the judgment was secured. That question is therefore absolutely concluded as against a collateral attack, both as concerns the county and a citizen or taxpayer thereof; but it does not necessarily follow that the county may levy, or the judgment creditor may insist that it shall levy, a tax to pay the same not authorized by law. The cases holding that a power to contract a debt includes authority to pay it, and, where a tax is essential for such purpose, the authority and duty to tax do not contravene this view. None of those cases, as I understand them, announce a contrary doctrine.

Having determined this much, the inquiry arises, How far may a county go in its annual tax levy? For county revenue for all purposes the annual levy must be confined within 12 mills, and this is inclusive of school tax. For the payment of its public debt and the interest thereon there is no limit. The legislature of the state, in amending the territorial statutes requiring the annual levy, conformed them to the Constitution, authorizing an annual levy of not to exceed 8 mills for general school purposes, and prescribing that an annual tax should be levied for county revenue for all purposes; but providing that the aggregate tax for county revenue, including general school tax, should not exceed 12 mills on the dollar (exclusive of state revenue), excepting from such limitation the payment of the public debt and interest thereon. Laws 1895, p. 237, chap. 102. Prior to the enactment just alluded to, the laws in force anterior to statehood remained unaffected by any later legislation, but were, of course, modified by the constitutional clauses referred to. Those earlier statutes prescribed certain rates of taxation for various purposes connected with county revenue, and placed a maximum limitation of 16 mills upon county taxation, which was held by this court to be exclusive of the general school tax. When the Constitution took effect, it immediately reduced the maximum limit to 12 mills, and included therein the general school tax. It is now urged that the judgments in question constitute a part of the public debt of the county, to pay which the county may levy a tax irrespective of the taxation for county revenue; and our attention is directed to § 1798 of the Revised Statutes of 1887. That section is found in the chapter devoted to the powers and duties of county commissioners, and was enacted prior to the admission of the state, and continued in force, unless in conflict with the Constitution. It provides, in substance, that when a judgment shall be rendered against the board of county commissioners of any county, or against any county officer, in an action prosecuted by or against him or them in his or their name of office, where the same shall be payable by the county, no execution shall issue thereon, but the same shall be paid by a tax levied and collected for that purpose, as in the case of other county charges; and when so collected shall be paid by the county treasurer to the person to whom the same shall be adjudged upon the delivery of a proper voucher therefor. The argument is that, as the judgments must be paid by a tax, and they are part of the public debt, as to which no limitation applies, the tax complained of is legal, without regard to the nature of the claims merged in the judgments. On the other hand, it is earnestly insisted that the judgments do not form a part of the public debt to pay which unlimited taxation is permitted. Counsel for plaintiff contend, first, that bonded indebtedness alone is what is intended by the term "public debt" in the section of the Constitution referring to county taxation, and it seems also to have been urged that no indebtedness which did not exist at the time of the adoption of the Constitution is included. We cannot entirely agree with the position taken by either counsel. It is obvious that debts incurred since the adoption of the Constitution, if lawfully existing, are not excluded. To exclude them would have the probable effect of preventing subsequently organized counties from paying their legitimate public debts, although the same could not have existed at the time the Constitution was adopted. There are other reasons, however, which suggest the unsoundness of that contention. We are further of the opinion that the public debt which is excepted from the general tax limitation is not confined to bonded indebtedness. The same words "public debt," are used in § 8 of article 16, permitting the bonding of the public debt of the county existing at the time the Constitution was adopted; and it is clear that in the latter section the words were not exclusive of indebtedness other than bonded, but that they comprehended all manner of lawful debts, not exceeding the congressional limitation of 4 per centum; and such has been the legislative and public construction placed upon that section. We are unable to attribute any narrower meaning to those words as used in § 5 of art. 15, relating to taxation. It is not confined to bonds, but may involve ordinary warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness, if properly and lawfully issued; and may also include judgments, but not necessarily so. To illustrate: If a county's indebtedness is within the constitutional limitation, and in pursuance of law it creates a debt in excess of the current taxes by the consent and approval of the people, which, together with existing indebtedness, does not exceed the amount within which it may lawfully become indebted, such debt will not only be legal, but, although it may be evidenced alone by warrants, will constitute a part of the public debt, and to pay the same a tax is permissible, the same as in the case of bonded indebtedness. If judgments are rendered upon such warrants, or upon bonds, the debts themselves being lawful public debts of the county, the judgments will partake of the same character. On the contrary, in case warrants or other evidences of indebtedness are issued for ordinary current expenses in excess of the taxes for the current year, without the consent or approval of the people, or in case the maximum limit has been reached, then, with or without such approval, such indebtedness is clearly not a part of the public debt, but the same has been incurred for current expenses, which in the case of such a county cannot in any event exceed the revenue for such year. There is no method by which such liabilities can have imparted to them voluntarily the character of public debts. If a judgment is obtained upon any such claim, the fact must yet remain that it represents a liability incurred for current expenses which should have been confined within the limits of the current taxes, to provide for the payment of which the Constitution has afforded only a limited power of taxation.

The statutory provision with reference to the payment of a judgment by tax does not contemplate a tax in excess of the limitation, and did not permit a tax for that purpose in excess of the statutory limit anterior to the adoption of the Constitution. Much less could the legislature contravene the positive restrictions of the Constitution. If the judgments are rendered upon claims which should have been paid out of the revenue raised by the tax which is confined to 12 mills, they must be paid, if at all, by a tax levied for such purpose; the aggregate tax for county revenue not to exceed the maximum limit. The judgments being valid, the legality of the debt is settled until such judgments are set aside in some direct proceeding, and therefore, within the limitation for county revenue, a tax may be levied to pay the same. This we apprehend to be the plain intent of the Constitution. Any other course would amount to an evasion of its terms. A different construction would authorize such a management of county affairs as to exhaust the county revenue each year, to incur additional obligations ordinarily payable out of such revenue, permit prosecution of such claims to judgment, and the levy of a special tax to pay them; and this could be repeated annually, thus completely evading, if not operating to effectually nullify, the constitutional limitation. The effect would be, as all must concede, to provide a greater revenue each year for current expenses than the Constitution intended to authorize when it confined the same to 12 mills on the dollar. This would accomplish by indirection that which cannot be done directly, which, generally at least, is not allowable. The views thus expressed we believe to be in accord with the authorities. As it is apparent that under the law requiring a judgment to be paid by tax the latter must, if levied, be confined with other taxes within existing constitutional limitations, it necessarily follows that to determine the limitations the claims placed in judgments must be inquired into. The statute authorizes a tax to pay such judgments "as in the case of other county charges." The funds to pay other county charges for ordinary expenses are raised by a limited tax. As the statute with respect to a judgment does not fix its class, and does not authorize a special tax irrespective of statutory or constitutional limitation, it is obvious that we must have recourse to the claims themselves to determine to what class the judgment belongs, and whether any limit is imposed upon taxation, by which they may be enforced.

84 L. R. A.

The application of the converse of this proposition has not been infrequent. In the case of Rolls County Ct. v. United States, 105 U. S. 735, 26 L. ed. 1221, the court said: "While the coupons are merged in the judgment, they carried with them into the judgment all the remedies which in law formed a part of their contract obligations, and these remedies may still be enforced in all appropriate ways, notwithstanding the change in the form of the debt." This language was used in a cause wherein it was sought by mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay a judgment. The opinion in that case also recognizes that courts are powerless to require a tax to be levied, even to pay a judgment in excess of the constitutional or legislative limitation upon the taxing power. The same learned court in another case of like character, in speaking upon this question, said: "So, too, if the municipality has no power, either by express grant or by implication, to raise money by taxation to pay the bond, the holder cannot require the municipal authorities to levy a tax for that purpose. . . . We have no power by mandamus to compel a municipal corporation to levy a tax which the law does not authorize." United States v. Macon County Ct. 99 U. S. 591, 25 L. ed. 333. "But mandamus will not lie to compel the levy of a tax in excess of the legal limitation." Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 738. The following authorities are also in point: Brownsville Tanning Dist. Comrs. v. Longue, 129 U. S. 493, 32 L. ed. 780; Arnold v. Hawkins, 95 Mo. 569; Black v. McGonigle, 103 Mo. 192; Trull v. Madison County Comrs. 72 N. C. 388; French v. New Hanover County Comrs. 74 N. C. 692; Carroll County Supers. v. United States, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 71, 21 L. ed. 771; Re House Roll 234, 81 Neb. 505; Clark v. Davenport, 14 Iowa, 494; Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Sac County, 39 Iowa, 137; Sterling School Furniture Co. v. Harvey, 45 Iowa, 466; State, Shackleton, v. Guttenberg, 39 N. J. L. 660; Union P. R. Co. v. Buffalo County Comrs. 9 Neb. 449; Osborne County Comrs. v. Blake, 25 Kan. 357; State, Reed, v. Marion County Comrs. 21 Kan. 419; Grand County Comrs. v. King, 14 C. C. A. 421, 67 Fed. Rep. 202, 32 U. S. App. 1; Desty, Taxn. § 41. The case of Osborne County Comrs. v. Blake, supra, closely approaches the one at bar. The question there presented was whether a county board, after having levied the full amount of taxes for current expenses which it had by law any power to levy for that and previous years, could in a certain year levy an additional tax to pay a judgment rendered upon county warrants which had been previously issued to pay county current expenses for the same years. An express statutory provision required a judgment to be collected by tax as in case of other county charges, and the general limitations upon taxation were statutory, instead of constitutional. The right to levy such a tax was denied, the Kansas supreme court saying: "The judgment shall be collected by means of a tax, in the same manner as other county charges are collected; and other county charges, when collected by means of a tax, can be collected only by means of a limited tax. . . . A judgment rendered upon a claim against a county is simply one of the items which the county board takes into consideration in levying a tax for county charges, or for county expenses, or for current expenses. . . . All the statutes upon the subject seem to contemplate that the county board will not create, nor allow to be created, liabilities against the county faster than the legal and proper taxes will pay them. But suppose the county board should allow liabilities to be thus created, then may all the creditors of the county convert their claims into judgments, and then compel the county board to levy county taxes vastly beyond the limits prescribed by § 181? We think not." The Supreme Court of the United States, in Brownsville Taxing Dist. Comrs. v. League, supra, held that, it appearing from the petition that the bonds upon which the judgments were rendered were issued under an abrogated statute, and were consequently void, and that no power to tax to pay them was possessed by the taxing district, because such power was given only by the statute which had ceased to exist, mandamus to levy tax to pay the judgments would not be awarded. The Constitution excepts from the limit for taxation for county revenue purposes, not the payment of judgments, but the payment of the public debt. We are unable to class a judgment in all cases irrespective of the nature of the obligation merged therein, as a public debt within the purview of the section of the Constitution in question. The Constitution clearly and forcibly distinguishes between those liabilities which are payable out of the general and ordinary revenue and those for which provision must otherwise be made. It was not intended that a county powerless to legally contract debt which could not be paid out of the current revenue, because of its exhaustion in paying other expenses, could nevertheless by incurring such debts be permitted to employ unlimited taxation to defray those expenses which the Constitution declares must be provided by a limited tax. Our attention has been called to the case of Theiss v. Hunter, before the supreme court of Idaho, 45 Pac. 2. Although the text of the decision in that case is not before us, extracts therefrom, found in No. 14 of volume 1 of Selected Corporation Cases, indicate that it was held that municipal indebtedness incurred during a given fiscal year cannot be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year, unless it be especially raised for the payment of such indebtedness, on the ground that the evident intent of the Constitution of that state was to make the revenue or income collected each year pay such year's indebtedness, unless by the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters, given as provided by law, other indebtedness was authorized. It follows from what has been said that to raise a fund to pay salaries of county officers, and valid liabilities under the act with reference to bounties for the destruction of predatory wild animals, a tax in excess of 12 mills in any year for county revenue is not allowable, unless the debt therefor has been created in the manner provided in the Constitution, and any legislation conformable thereto, by a county possessing authority to incur such indebtedness.

The tenth certified question inquires if the board of county commissioners cannot levy the district court tax for the maintenance of the court, in addition to the levy of 12 mills for county revenue. What we have already said disposes of this inquiry. We fail to observe anything in the Constitution or statutes which authorizes a levy for court expenses in excess and exclusive of the limited tax of 12 mills for county revenue.

With respect to the seventh question, we assume the damages to have been recovered in a proceeding to determine the compensation to be paid the landowner by reason of the exercise by the public of the right of eminent domain, and the consequent taking of some of the land for public purposes. We regard this as not entirely free from doubt, but are inclined to the opinion that the damages thus assessed are payable out of the ordinary county revenue; and the result would be that, if the county is unable to make the compensation, it is powerless to complete the location of the road, which might result in the taking of private property without just compensation. If the damages are recovered as for a tort, another inquiry would arise, which, in this case, we refrain from deciding.

The final question requiring the opinion of this court affects the right of the board of county commissioners to confess and authorize a confession of judgments against the county. A decision upon that question is not free from difficulty. We are practically without precedent, and resort must be had to our rather meager statutory provisions covering the subject of confession of judgments, as well as to those prescribing the duties and powers of the board of county commissioners. "A person indebted or against whom a cause of action exists, may personally appear in a court of competent jurisdiction and with the assent of the creditor or person having such cause of action, confess judgment, whereupon judgment shall be entered accordingly." Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2668. In such case it is required that the debt or cause of action be stated in the judgment or writing to be filed as pleadings in other actions. § 2669. "An attorney who confesses judgment in any case shall, at the time of making such confession, produce the warrant of attorney for making the same, . . . and the original or a copy of the warrant shall be filed with the clerk." § 2671. In the first case, under § 2668, the debtor must personally appear. The members of the board of county commissioners individually are not authorized to allow claims against the county. The board of commissioners, at any meeting, is given authority by statute to settle and allow all accounts against the county, and when so settled and allowed they may issue county orders therefor as provided by law. Rev. Stat. 1887, § 1901. County orders are required to be signed by the chairman of the board, and attested by the clerk, under the seal of the county. Section 1807, as amended by chapter 33, Laws 1893. The meetings of the board are to be held in public. § 1802. The authority over county affairs is thus vested in a board which is composed of three persons, although a majority constitute a quorum, and may act. The board can only act at a meeting of the board. Doubtless some detail matters may be attended to by one or more of the commissioners outside of a meeting by previous authority of the board, or such act may in some cases, perhaps, be ratified, but the allowance of claims must be at some time the act of the board as such. The county is constituted, by law, a body politic and corporate, and its powers as such corporate body are exercised by a board of county commissioners. Such powers are to be exercised, and the duties devolving upon the board are to be discharged, in the manner provided by law. We do not understand that the members composing the board are authorized to act as a board except when together in session. Their act is then not individual, but as a body, acting as a unit. McCortle v. Bates, 29 Ohio St. 419. Whatever authority, if any, is possessed by the commissioners, to confess a judgment against the body corporate and politic—the county—must reside in them as constituting a board, rather than as individual officers. As such a board, required to act as a body, we are unable to conceive that it can personally appear in court, as required by § 2668. No statutory provision exists empowering one or more of the commissioners or any other official to so personally appear, and in the name of the county enter confession of judgment. In the absence of some such provision in the present condition of the law concerning judgments by confession, we are clearly of the opinion that the board of commissioners are without authority to personally appear in court and confess a judgment against the county. It would seem to follow that, being powerless in that respect, the board, even as a body, cannot authorize some person to do so. Such authorization could only be accomplished, however, by the execution of a warrant of attorney. No express power to execute such an instrument is granted by statute, nor do we observe any authority given the board from which such power can be implied. In discussing this matter it is perhaps needless to state that we refer only to confession of judgments in its strict sense, and do not refer to actions regularly brought, in which issues are duly framed, and upon hearing or trial, by admission of the lawful representative of the county in such suits, the court may be satisfied of the justness of the claim sued upon, and thereupon enter up judgment. Such an action is not dependent upon the statutes governing confession of judgments, but is in reality a judgment rendered upon trial and proof. We tender this explanation that any possible confusion respecting the decision of the court may be avoided. This, I believe, disposes of all the questions.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., and Conaway, J., concur.

STATE of Wyoming, ex rel. Charles E. BLYDENBURGH,
v.
Charles W. BURDICK, Secretary of State.
(.....Wyo.....)

1. The grouping of candidates for pres-

NOTE.—As to name appearing more than once on official ballot, see also State, Bateman, v. Bode (Ohio) ante, 498; also Fisher v. Dudley (Md.) 12 34 L. R. A.

idential electors is to be made by the county clerk, and not by the secretary of state, under Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 104, providing that the names of such electors presented in one certificate shall be arranged in a separate group, but the secretary must so certify the names and description of the candidates as to convey to the clerk all knowledge requisite to such grouping.

2. The name of a person as candidate for elector of President and Vice President cannot appear in more than one place upon the official ballot under Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 104, which provides for no party headings or columns set apart for separate parties, but requires the ballot to name the party or principle represented by a candidate in connection with his name.

3. The name of a candidate nominated by certificate of electors in place of a person previously nominated in the same way, but who has declined, should be given the same place upon the ballot that the prior nominee would have been entitled to.

4. The exclusion from the signers of a certificate of electors nominating candidates by Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 89, of those persons who have joined in a certificate nominating other candidates for the same office, does not apply to persons who have participated in the nomination of other persons through primaries, but only those who have joined in nominations by certificate.

5. The validity of a nomination made by a chairman of the state committee of a political party with 100 associates to fill vacancies in the list of presidential electors nominated in the same manner, when not in violation of statute, cannot be contested by the committee of an entirely distinct political party.

(October 20, 1893.)

APPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to change his certificate to the county clerks of the names of the candidates for presidential electors to be voted for at a coming election. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter R. Stoll for relator.

Messrs. Lacey & Van Devanter for respondent.

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, brings the present action, seeking thereby the allowance of a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of state to rescind or modify the form or character of his certificates to the several county clerks respecting the candidates for electors of President and Vice President of the United States. The respondent certified such nominations in the following manner and order: the names of three candidates of the Republican party, simply naming them with the word "Republican" following each of their names; the names of Patrick J. M. Jordan, John Sims, and Daniel L. Van Meter, with the word "People's" accompanying the names of Jordan and Sims, and the words "Democrat and People's" following the name of Van Meter; the names of three Prohibition candidates; and lastly the names of John A. Martin and Patrick J. Quealy, with the word "Democrat" following each of their names. The petition discloses: That at the regular Democratic state convention George H. Cross, John A. Martin, and Patrick J. Quealy were nominated for presidential electors, and at the regular state convention of the People's party Francis M. Matthews, Charles H. Randall, and Daniel L. Van Meter were nominated for such office. All of these nominations were duly certified to the respondent by the respective chairmen and secretaries of such conventions. That within the time allowed by the statute, Cross, one of the Democratic nominees, and Randall and Matthews, two of the nominees of the People's party, duly declined. That in pursuance of the authority expressly conferred upon it by the convention making the original nominations the state committee of the Democratic party filled the vacancy caused by the declination of Cross by the nomination of Daniel L. Van Meter. That neither any convention or committee of the People's party attempted to fill the vacancy occasioned by the declinations of Matthews and Randall, nor took any action concerning the matter, and that the People's party convention had not empowered its state committee to fill such or any vacancies. It further appears that on the 8th day of October one John W. Patterson, who had been appointed by the said convention of the People's party as the chairman of the state committee of that party, delivered to the respondent a certificate of nomination purporting to nominate for the office of presidential electors to fill the vacancy in the list of People's party candidates caused by the declination of Matthews and Randall, respectively, Patrick J. M. Jordan and John Sims; it appearing from the record that in the body of such certificate it was recited that "the undersigned and the said Patrick J. M. Jordan and the said John Sims so nominated to fill such vacancies represent the People's party;" and that the same was verified by said John W. Patterson, who made oath that the statements contained in the certificate were true, and described himself in his affidavit as the chairman of the state committee of the People's party. The said certificate was signed by 100 electors, including said Patterson. The relator in his petition charges that this certificate of nomination was void. The allegations to support such charge, summarized, are to the effect that the nominations mentioned therein were not made by the People's party; that the laws of this state contemplate and expressly require that vacancies occurring in the ticket of any political party nominated in regular convention shall be filled only by the convention itself or by the party committee duly authorized; that the certificate was not filed within the time required for original nominations; and that no number of electors can supplant or supersede the action of an organized political party; and the electors whose names are subscribed to the certificate in question were not authorized to represent the People's party, or act in its behalf. It was also averred that a large number of the persons whose names were signed to the certificate had joined in nominating at least three other candidates for the same office by attending and participating in the primaries of the Republican party. This last-mentioned allegation is general in character. It is neither stated when they so attended and participated, or in what the participation consisted, nor are the particular individuals referred to indicated. The petition avers that the certificate of the respondent is illegal and wrong in two respects: First, in failing to certify the name of Daniel L. Van Meter in the same group and in conjunction with the names of Martin and Quealy, the other Democratic candidates; and second, in including the names of Jordan and Sims in the group of the candidates for electors of the People's party. The prayer of the petition is that a writ of mandamus issue directing the respondent to rescind his certificate, and to issue therefor new ones, placing the name of Van Meter in the group of Democratic candidates, and omitting the names of Jordan and Sims from the group of the candidates of the People's party, or requiring him to so modify his certificates already sent out that the same result may be accomplished.

L. R. A. 586; and Todd v. Election Comrs. (Mich.) 29 L. R. A. 330.

34 L. R. A.

The case was heard upon the petition and the various certificates of nominations for the office of presidential electors filed in the office of respondent. From the record outside of the petition it appeared that on the 25th day of September—several days before the chairman and secretary of the convention of the People's party filed their certificate of the nominations made by that party at its said convention—a certificate of nomination, signed by 100 electors representing themselves as members of the People's party, was filed, making original nominations of candidates for electors to represent the principles of the People's party, naming as the nominees thereof the same persons who were nominated at the state convention of that party, viz. Matthews, Randall, and Van Meter.

The duty of the secretary of state with respect to the certification of nominations filed in his office is defined by the provisions of § 93 of chap. 80 of the laws of 1890, as follows: "Not less than twenty-five nor more than thirty days before an election to fill any public office, the secretary of Wyoming shall certify to the county clerk of each county within which any of the electors may by law vote for candidates for such office, the names and description of each person nominated for such office as specified in the certificate of nomination with the said secretary." If the respondent has complied with this duty, then the writ prayed for should not be allowed. It is contended that he has failed to perform the duty in the two particulars already mentioned. Upon the hearing, although it was not conceded by counsel for relator that the names of Jordan and Sims were entitled to be certified in any manner whatever, the chief contention seemed to be narrowed to the proposition that they were not properly certified as People's candidates, and in one group with Van Meter; but that, if certified at all, some words, such as "Independent" or "Electors," should be used to indicate that they were nominated by certificate of electors. The argument respecting the grouping of the Democratic nominees, and including therein the name of Van Meter in the certif-cate of the secretary, was based upon the requirements concerning the official ballot. Section 104 of chapter 80 of the Laws of 1890 provides that "all ballots prepared under the provisions of this act shall be white in color and of a good quality of paper, and the names shall be printed thereon in black ink. Every ballot shall contain the name of every candidate whose nomination for any office specified in the ballot has been certified or filed according to the provisions of this act and no other name. The names of candidates for each office shall be arranged under the designation of the office in alphabetical order according to surnames, except that the names of electors of President and Vice President of the United States presented in one certificate of nomination, shall be arranged in a separate group, every ballot shall also contain the name of the party or principle which the candidates represent as contained in the certificate of nomination. At the end of the list of candidates for each office shall be left a blank space large enough to contain as many written names of candidates as are necessary to fill such office. And on the ballot may be printed such words as will aid the voter to vote, as 'Vote for one,' 'Vote for two,' 'Vote for three,' 'Yes,' 'No,' and the like." It is not required of the secretary that he prepare the official ballots. With this he has nothing whatever to do. That duty resides with the county clerk of each county. Under our system of voting the elector is required to place a cross opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desires to vote; and, although the names of candidates for electors presented in one certificate of nomination are required to be arranged upon the ballot in a separate group, one cross will not suffice to vote for the three, or for the group thus arranged, but the voter, if desiring to vote for three, as he may do, is required to place a cross opposite the name of each one of the three. At the time of orally announcing the conclusion of the court it was stated that the secretary was not required to group the candidates for electors at all, and that, if he did so, his arrangement into groups was not binding or conclusive upon the officers charged with the duty of preparing the ballots. This statement was made in view of the rather meager provisions affecting the duty of the secretary, and the nature of a mandamus proceeding; and it seemed that, unless it was clearly the duty of the respondent to group the candidates, he ought not to be directed by a writ of mandamus to do so. The statute does not expressly require that he shall certify such candidates in the manner in which they are required to be arranged upon the ballot; and, so far as the name of Van Meter is concerned, that is the extent of the prayer of relator. But we are somewhat apprehensive that a misunderstanding of the views of the court may arise from what was said when its conclusion was announced, without some further explanation. While it is true, as above suggested, that there is no express provision requiring the secretary to do more than certify the names and description of each person nominated, as specified in the certificate of nomination, it is likewise true that those candidates for presidential electors presented in one certificate of nomination are entitled to be arranged upon the official ballot in a separate group, and that the officer charged with the duty of thus arranging them can have no other source of official information than the contents of the certificate of the secretary. It would, therefore, seem reasonably clear that in the performance of the duty devolving upon the secretary he should so certify the names of such candidates and their description as will convey to the county clerk all requisite knowledge. The relator and his counsel assumed that this could only be accomplished by the proper grouping of the candidates in the certificate of the secretary. We are not, however, prepared to assent to that view. If the information sufficient for the appropriate performance of the duty of the county clerk can be given in other ways than by grouping,—and we apprehend that may be practicable,—then it would be erroneous to say in the absence of an express requirement to that effect, that the secretary is under official obligation to place the candidates in groups, as they are entitled to appear on the ballot, and by this method alone to certify the necessary information to the county clerks. The alternative writ commanded the respondent to thus group the names, or show cause to the contrary. In case the writ should be made peremptory, the same command would continue, notwithstanding the duty to afford proper information could as well, and perhaps even better, without trespassing upon the discretion of the county clerks, be capable of performance in another manner. The soundness of the contention of the relator, moreover, depends upon the correctness of his theory that the name of Van Meter should appear upon the ballot in a group to be comprised of his name and the other two Democratic nominees. If that is not a right to which he is entitled, then assuredly the respondent is not required to certify his name in such a group in any event, and we will not rest our conclusion entirely upon the fact that the respondent might employ different methods, but will inquire into the proposition thus insisted upon by the relator. It is manifest that the issues in this case do not directly involve the preparation of the ballot; but that matter bears a close relation to the obligations imposed upon the secretary, and as affecting his duties it may very properly be considered.

It was decided by this court in the case of Savin v. Pease (Wyo.) 42 Pac. 750, that as to any office other than elector for President and Vice President a candidate nominated by more than one party for the same office was not entitled to have his name appear upon the ballot more than once, and we can see no reason for departing from that rule. The opinion in that case out of abundant caution expressly stated that whether or not a different rule would apply as to presidential electors was not decided. The reason for the principle adopted in Savin v. Pease arose out of our system of ballots and voting; the requirement that a cross must be placed opposite the name of each candidate for whom the elector desired to vote; the impossibility of voting a straight ticket, or for any number or group of candidates representing the same party or principle, by a single mark or cross; and as a consequence, the probability of mistake and confusion should the name of any candidate be printed in more than one place as a candidate for the same office. Are those reasons, and is the rule deduced therefrom in the case of other offices, inapplicable to the office of presidential elector? The one difference existing in the law between that and other offices is that the names of those candidates for presidential electors presented in one certificate of nomination shall be arranged upon the ballot in a separate group. In view of the further provision of law affecting alike all candidates upon the ballot that one cross votes for but one individual, and that the name of the presidential nominee nowhere appears on the ballot, we are unable to distinguish the case of such candidates from that of candidates for any other office in the respect under consideration; otherwise any person or group of persons nominated by more than one party would be entitled to as many places upon the ballot corresponding with the number of parties nominating them, or certificates lawfully filed of such nominations. The same group of three persons might be presented by several parties, and the entire group be given as many places upon the official ballot. Such a result could only cause much confusion, and throw doubt upon the correctness of the returns of the votes cast. We are clearly of the opinion that the law does not contemplate the printing of the name of one person as candidate for elector of President and Vice President in more than one place upon the ballot. Daniel L. Van Meter was regularly nominated by the People's party, and the certificate thereof duly filed. He has not declined that nomination. There is certainly no authority to remove his name from the People's party group. His nomination by that party was made long prior to its adoption by the Democratic party. His name being entitled to but one place upon the ballot, and no one possessing the right to ignore his first nomination in the preparation of the ballot, it necessarily follows that his name is not imperatively required to be also printed in the same group, and in conjunction with the other Democratic candidates. He is described as Democratic as well as People's, and this description indicates to the voter that he has been nominated as representing both parties. An arrangement of the ballot in which all appropriate groups could be maintained, and yet the name of Van Meter immediately precede or follow the names of the other Democratic candidates, thus bringing the three into closer proximity, would certainly not violate the letter or the spirit of the law; but that matter has been left to the discretion of the county clerks, which, unless the statute is departed from, is not subject to the control of the courts. These views find support in State, Sturderant, v. Allen (Neb.) 62 N. W. 85, and Miller v. Pennoyer, 28 Or. 364. Had someone, not already a candidate of another party, been nominated to fill the vacancy caused by the declination of George H. Cross, the name of such nominee would be entitled to a place in the same group with the original associates of Cross. A reasonable construction of the statutory provision would clearly require the name of one thus substituted to be given the same place upon the ballot that the name of the candidate who had declined would have been entitled to.

34 L. R. A.

The next question submitted involves the status of the nominations of Jordan and Sims. One ground of objection is that a large number of the persons purporting to sign the certificate of nomination had joined in nominating at least three other persons for the same office by attending and participating in the primaries of the Republican party. Independent of the very general character of the allegation, we are of the opinion that the provision of the statute (Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 89), attempted to be thus invoked is prohibitory only of the same person joining in a certificate of nomination by electors of more than one person for the same office. The last part of the clause containing the provision referred to provides that, if any person does so join, his name shall not be counted upon either certificate, and the context clearly indicates that it was only intended to forbid one from joining in more than one elector's certificate making a nomination for the same office. Whether anyone shall have so joined can then easily be ascertained by the officer with whom the certificates are required to be filed. It is, however, contended that 100 electors cannot supplant a regularly organized political party, and are not authorized to place in nomination any candidate as representative of such a party. The position taken is that a party nomination is permitted to be made only by a party convention. Counsel for relator stated upon the hearing that they were until that time unaware that the People's nominees had first or at any time been nominated by an electors' certificate; and it was conceded by such counsel that, if a vacancy occurs in the nominations made by such an electors' certificate, it might be filled in the same manner. The papers upon which the cause was submitted conclusively show that 100 electors had nominated by certificate in due form said Randall, Matthews, and Van Meter as candidates of the People's party or representing the principles of that party, and that filing preceded the certificate of the officers of the convention. The resignation of Randall and Matthews declined by clear and express language only the nominations conferred by the state convention of the People's party; but included in their respective statements of declination was a direction to the secretary of state to omit their names from the official ballot sufficiently indicating an intention upon their part to entirely withdraw as candidates for presidential electors. It is at least certain that the respondent has not certified their names, and that no person or party is insisting that his action in that regard was erroneous. A vacancy, then, occurred in the list of candidates for the office in question, presented by the said certificate of electors. That vacancy at least was filled by the certificate which is now attacked, naming Jordan and Sims. It is not necessary therefore, for this court to decide whether or not a vacancy in nominations made by a regular convention of a political party can be filled by an electors' certificate, even though, as in the case at bar, such political party has not again acted in the matter by convention, and the convention making the original nominations, has not empowered any committee to fill vacancies. Indeed, the contention seemed to have narrowed to an attack upon the action of the respondent in grouping the names of Jordan and Sims with that of Van Meter, and using in connection with their names the party name "People's," without any qualifying words to indicate that they were not presented by a party convention. So far as concerns the objection to their being grouped with Van Meter, what has already been said is sufficient, bearing in mind that the latter-named person was originally nominated by the certificate of electors conjointly with Randall and Matthews, for whom Jordan and Sims were afterwards substituted.

It is, however, very seriously insisted on behalf of the relator that the respondent is not authorized to certify the designation of "People's" in connection with the names of these substituted candidates, but that he should use some other word of description, or add to that so used, which would clearly indicate that they were nominated by certificate of electors; and in support of that view we are referred to the case of Philips v. Curtis (Idaho) 88 Pac. 405, which gives countenance to that proposition. That case, however, is founded upon a statute which, although quite similar in some respects to our own, and particularly so concerning the making of nominations, is radically different in others, which must have considerable bearing upon the question. In that state the method of preparing the ballot follows that of most of the states using the Australian system. Their statute expressly requires that "the width of the ticket shall be divided into as many equal parts by lines the whole length of the ticket, . . . as there are political principles or parties represented by the candidates each of said parties or divisions to have a heading or caption designating the political principle or party represented by the several candidates." The ballot in that state therefore is arranged in separate columns, the candidates of each party being contained in one column with the name of the party or principle at the head. In the case cited we are led to infer from the opinion that the People's party, although holding a convention, and making certain nominations, had failed to mention any one as a candidate for state senator; and Philips, who had been nominated for that office by another party, sought to have his name placed upon the ticket of the People's party under a nomination made by a certain number of electors, the certificate thereof designating him as People's party candidate. The effect would be, if his prayer had been granted, that his name would have gone upon the regular People's party ticket, and in the column upon the ballot set aside for the ticket of that party, and with the other candidates regularly nominated by a convention of that party. It was held that the certificate authorized his name to go upon the ballot as an independent candidate only, and that any number of electors could not secure the name of any candidate which they saw fit to indorse to be placed upon the ticket of any party. It will be observed, whether it is important or not, that the candidate seeking the aid of the court in that case was already named upon the ballot in the ticket of another party. The same comments are applicable to the case of Atkeson v. Lay, 115 Mo. 585, which was not cited by counsel, but has come to our notice. While according to each of those courts our entire respect, if the conclusions arrived at in the cases cited are not at all depending upon the character of their ballot, we would hesitate to follow them in their application to a statute such as that in force in this state. We are inclined, however, to the opinion that there is a well-defined distinction between those cases and the one at bar. In this state, any convention or primary meeting held for the purpose of making nominations to public office, and also a specified number of electors, may nominate candidates for public office to be filled by election. Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 84. A convention or primary meeting is defined as "an organized assemblage of electors or delegates representing a political party." § 85. Nominations made by a convention or primary meeting are required to be certified in writing containing the name, residence, and business of the person nominated, and in not more than five words, the party or principle which such convention or primary meeting represents. It is required to be signed by the presiding officer and secretary of the convention or primary meeting, and verified by them in a certain manner. § 86. Candidates for office may be nominated otherwise than by convention or primary meeting, as follows: A certificate containing the name of a candidate for the office to be filled with such information as is required to be given in certificates of nominations by convention shall be signed by electors, etc. When the office is to be filled by the electors of the entire state, the certificate must be signed by not less than 100 electors. Such certificates may be filed in the same manner, and with the same effect, as a certificate of nomination made by a party convention. § 88. Provision is made for declining a nomination, at least twenty-five days before election (§ 95); and, in case of vacancy occurring for any reason, the same may be filled in the manner required for original nominations. § 96. In case the nomination thus vacated has been made by a party convention, which has delegated to a committee the power to fill vacancies, the same may be filled by such committee. § 97. It was urged by counsel for respondent that the language of § 96, vis., "may be filled in the manner required for original nominations," expressly permitted a vacancy to be filled in either of the ways provided for the making of original nominations, irrespective of the manner in which the original nomination in the particular instance had been made; that is to say, either by convention (or committee, if authorized), primary meeting, or certificate of electors. Whether or not the language or purport of the statute goes to that extent we do not, as already intimated, express any opinion, as we find in this case the vacancies to have been filled in the same manner as the original nominations were made and presented.

In an earlier part of this opinion we adverted to the method of making up the ballot, from which it appears that there are no party headings thereon, nor columns set apart for separate parties; but the ballot is required to contain, in addition to the names of the candidates, the name of the party or principle represented by them respectively as contained in the certificate of nomination. It must be observed that the certificate under which the controversy arises as to the right to use the word "People's" is not arraigned by any persons or authority representing the People's party. No one claiming any allegiance to that party is here complaining of the act of Chairman Patterson and his associates. The complaint comes from the chairman of the state committee of an entirely separate political party. While he probably has the right to prefer such a complaint, and have the matter adjudicated, nevertheless we are confronted with the fact that at the instance of one not affiliated with the People's party in any manner, so far as the record discloses, we are asked to judicially deny the right of more than 100 electors, including the one highest in authority in the party in this state, describing themselves as the representatives of that party, from giving the party name to their candidates. If this certificate had come in conflict with other nominations made by the same party in regular convention, a very different question might arise. In the case at bar, however, we have before us the broad question whether, in any case, the secretary of state is at liberty to respect the designation of a political party or principle mentioned in a certificate of nomination by electors, when the certificate is signed, sworn to, and presented by the state chairman of such party, and in its body alleges that the signers represent the party, in the absence of any other existing nomination by such party for the same office; or whether he is bound to disregard such description, or add something to it, not found in the certificate, indicating the manner in which the nominations were made. There can hardly exist a doubt but that our legislation on the subject of elections is more or less imperfect, which fact invites conflict, and possibility of confusion; but the courts cannot supply omissions in the law. Anticipating, or perhaps having experienced, controversy along this very line, many of the states have explicitly regulated the manner in which party nominations may be made. There is nothing of that character in our law. We have searched the election law in vain to discover any limitations upon party nominations. There is not a clause or line anywhere requiring or tending in that direction that a political party can only present nominations for public office through the medium of party conventions or primary meetings. The writer of this opinion believes that a wise regulation in that regard, and legislation explicitly defining the status of nominations by certificate of electors, would be desirable; but there is no such legislation at present, and the courts have no authority to place restrictions upon those matters when the legislature has left them open. A convention of delegates, or even a mass convention, is, after all, but a representation of some political party; neither constitutes the party itself; and until the appropriate department has limited or restricted the method by which a party may be represented, and through what character of representation it may act, we do not consider it within the province of the courts to do so. If there is any doubt about a matter of this character, then that construction of the statute should be adopted which will accord to the citizen the greater liberty in casting his ballot. People, Eaton, v. District Court, 18 Colo. 26. It has been held that, where two factions of the same political party have held separate conventions, and certified nominations, using the same political designation, the secretary of state is without authority to decide which of the two is entitled to the party name, and is required in such case to certify both sets of nominations, giving to each the political designation found in the certificate of nomination. People, Eaton, v. District Court, supra; Phelps v. Piper, 48 Neb. 724, 33 L. R. A. 53; Shields v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 164, 18 L. R. A. 780. In Kansas a nomination by electors designating their single candidate as the nominee of the Miners' and Laboring Men's party was recognized as a party nomination, and the court says: "We think that each political party has a perfect right to select its candidates as it pleases, and have their names printed under its party heading; that there is nothing in the law nor in reason preventing two or more political parties, whether acting through conventions or by petitions, from selecting the same individuals for one or more of the offices to be filled." Simpson v. Osborn, 52 Kan. 328. In Minnesota the supreme court upheld as party nominees certain candidates named by a mass convention, in opposition to rival candidates presented by a delegate convention of the same party; one of the reasons assigned being the entire absence of any statutory provision regulating the manner in which political parties should proceed in organizing conventions or making nominations. Manson v. McIntosh, 58 Minn. 525, 28 L. R. A. 605. To hold that the provisions of the statute authorizing a convention to make nominations, and defining a convention as an organized assemblage of electors representing some political party or principle, necessarily confines a political party to proceedings by and through a convention, especially in view of the other provisions affecting nominations by electors' certificate, or by petition, as it is sometimes popularly termed, would require the judiciary to interpolate something which has been omitted, perhaps purposely, from the statute. In the case at bar no convention of the People's party has acted as to two candidates for electors subsequent to the declination of two persons named in convention as well as by petition. No committee was given authority to act. The chairman of the state committee, with 100 associates, present the certificate in question as alleged representatives of the party. If a party may, under any circumstances, act otherwise, than by convention or primary meeting, no lawful or reasonable objection can be urged to such action in the case and upon the facts before us. We conclude, therefore, that the respondent was not bound to disregard the political designation accompanying the names of the candidates Jordan and Sims in the certificate nominating them, that a fair and reasonable construction of the statute does not require him to add to or qualify the party name thus used. No such duty being imposed upon that officer, it does not rest upon the court.

The writ prayed for must be denied.

Conaway, J., concurs. Groesbeck, Ch. J., did not participate in the decision.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Andrew DEBNEY, Pisf. in Err

v.

STATE of Nebraska.

(45 Neb. 856.)

*1. The crime of murder is regarded as having been committed at the time when the fatal blow or wound is inflicted, although the death occurs on a subsequent date; and the party is to be tried by the laws in force at the time the injurious act is done.

*2. It is not reversible error to give an er-

*Headnotes by NORVAL, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Time when homicide is deemed to be committed.

As to the locality of crime committed by shooting or striking across state boundary, see note to State v. Hall (N. C.) 28 L. R. A. 59.

This note is limited entirely to the consideration of the question of time, and does not include any cases involving the jurisdiction of the court, or the question of place, although in many cases the time and place of the commission of the crime would seem to be treated as analogous, the weight of authority being in favor of the doctrine that the crime is committed where the blow is struck, the shot fired, or the poison administered, and therefore it would seem that if the place where the blow is given determines the place or jurisdiction of the court, the crime may equally be said to be committed at the time the blow is given, the shot is fired, or the poison is administered.

There is, however, very little direct authority upon the question involved in this note, the courts as a general rule seeming to assume that the place where the crime is committed determines the time of the commission of the offense. The dicta of the courts in many cases wherein the point raised was purely one of jurisdiction lead to this supposition.

With respect to the question of time, it has been held that murder is a complex term denoting several facts of which the death of the party is one of the most essential. The mortal stroke or the administration of poison does not constitute the crime, unless the sufferer dies thereof within a year and a day. Com. v. Parker, 3 Pick. 550, 558. This principle may be said to be the settled rule of law, the authorities as a whole supporting it.

In United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 596, it was held that murder was committed within the District of Columbia when the felonious blow was struck there, notwithstanding the consequent death happened without the District and in one of the states.

So, in People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 637, where the blow was given before, but the death ensued after, the passing of the California statute of April 16, 1856, which provided that upon trials for crimes committed previous to its passage the party should be tried by the laws in force at the time of the commission of such crime, the court holding that the death must be made to relate back to the unlawful act which occasioned it, and that as the party died in consequence of the wounds received on a particular day, the day on which the act was committed, and not the one on which the result of the act was determined, was the day on which the murder was properly charged.

And again, in Green v. State, 66 Ala. 44, 41 Am. Rep. 744, it was held that the crime of murder consisted in the infliction of the fatal wound coupled 34 L. R. A.

roneous instruction where it could not have prejudiced the complaining party.

3. Held, that the eighth instruction, defining the term "deliberation," was as favorable to the accused as he was entitled to have given.

4. Instructions given to a jury should be construed together; and if, when so considered as a whole, they properly state the law, it is sufficient.

5. Held, that the twenty-fourth paragraph of the charge to the jury, upon the subject of intoxication, is applicable to the evidence adduced on the trial.

6. Evidence held to sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree.

with the requisite contemporaneous intent and design which legally rendered it felonious,—the subsequent death of the injured party being the result or sequence, rather than a constituent elemental part of the crime, the giving of the blow constituting the felony, the blow alone being the act of the party, the death only a consequence of such act.

Again, in Stout v. State, 76 Md. 817, it was held that by the inflicting of a mortal wound then and there, the accused expended his active agency in producing the crime, no matter where the injured party might languish, or where he might die, if death ensued within the time and as a consequence of the stroke or poison given, the grade and characteristics of the crime being determined immediately that death ensued, and that the result related back to the original felonious wounding or poisoning, the giving of the blow that caused the death constituting the offense.

And so in State v. Gessert, 21 Minn. 302, it was held that it was for his acts that the defendant was responsible, such acts constituting his offense, the death which characterized those acts not being his act but the consequence thereof.

Again, in Com. v. Maclooin, 101 Mass. 1, 7, 100 Am. Dec. 89, the court in support of the theory that the deed is committed at the time when the fatal blow, etc., is given, stated that the injury and death were as much the continuance, operation, and effect of the unlawful act as if the deed had proved instantly fatal, the unlawful intent attending and qualifying the act until its final result.

And in Riley v. State, 9 Humph. 648, 668, it was held that the blow given was the act of the party, and the death was only the consequence of the blow.

So, in State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 490, the time that the blow was given was looked upon as the time of the commission of the offense. That case, however, was one dealing with the question of jurisdiction.

And in People v. Adams, 8 Denio, 190, 45 Am. Dec. 468, which was also a case relating to jurisdiction, the court held that a crime was committed in the state of New York at a time when a party, though out of the state, put in motion his act by an innocent third party acting under him within the state.

Again, in Burns v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 182, 185, the court said that if a party assaulted, after a felonious attempt, died within a year and a day, the same act, which till his death was an assault and a misdemeanor only, though aggravated, was by that event shown to have been a mortal wound, the event, strictly speaking, not changing the character of the act, but relating back to the time of the assault, and the same act which might be a felonious assault only, had the party not died, was shown by that event to have been a mortal wound and the crime a capital felony.

7. When the county attorney finished his closing address to the jury, some of the bystanders, without the knowledge or connivance of anyone connected with the prosecution, applauded, which was quickly suppressed by the presiding judge, and who administered a rebuke to the persons making the applause. Held, that the record failed to disclose that the defendant was prejudiced by the demonstration.

(October 1, 1896.)

ERROR to the District Court for Nance County to review a judgment convicting defendant of murder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reid & Morgan, M. V. Mondy, and Albert & Reeder for plaintiff in error.
Mr. A. S. Churchill, Attorney General, for the State.

Norval, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An information was filed by the county attorney in the district court of Nance county, charging the plaintiff in error, Andrew Debney, with murder in the first degree. The prisoner was found guilty as charged, and was by the court sentenced to be hanged, which judgment he seeks to reverse by this proceeding. It appears from the record before us that the plaintiff in error and his wife, Catherine

And in state v. Hall, 114 N. C. 909, 919, 28 L. R. A. 59, it was stated that if a party standing in one state shoots at another in a neighboring state, until the act consummates a crime there is simply an attempt, but when the party is wounded by such shot the crime in its completeness exhibits itself.

So, in State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475, the court stated that although the crime was not complete until death, yet the death simply determined the character of the crime committed in giving the blow, and referred back to and qualified that act.

And it has been held that the offense of shooting at another is committed in the state of Georgia when one in the state of South Carolina, without malice aforethought, but not in self-defense, or under other circumstances of justification aims and fires a pistol at another, who at the time is in the former state, even though the ball misses him and strikes the water in that state near the boat which he occupies. Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 23 L. R. A. 243.

In Archer v. State, 106 Ind. 426, 428, the court pointed out the conflict in the authorities as to whether death was part of the crime of murder, some authorities maintaining that death was the mere consequence of the crime; others holding that it was part of the crime, for the reason that there was no murder until death occurred, which must be within a year and a day, but the court did not pass upon the question, as in that case, which was one of murder, the defendant's acts were substantive criminal wrongs, forming essential parts of the crime, and the point was wholly jurisdictional in its character.

And the same conclusions would seem to have been arrived at by the court in the case of State v. Kelly, 76 Me. 381, 49 Am. Rep. 620, although that was a case of jurisdiction.

So, it would seem that the court, in State v. Blunt, 110 Mo. 332, 337, looked upon the offense as committed at the time the blow was given, inasmuch as it stated that the fact that death occurred a short time after the county boundary had been reached, was a mere incident and result of the crime previously committed in another county. But that case related solely to the question of jurisdiction.

And the same principles form the basis of the court's decision in passing upon the court's jurisdiction in Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 15 L. R. A. 223, a poisoning case, where the death occurred within the state, but in that case as jurisdiction was expressly conferred upon the state court by statute, the court upheld the prosecution in the state where the death occurred.

Although the case of State v. Ryan, 18 Minn. 371, was one wherein the sufficiency of the indictment was attacked, the defendant being indicted and convicted of murder in the first degree, under the laws in effect at the time charged in the indictment, which alleged the killing of the deceased on a 34 L. R. A.

given date, and while the state laws had changed the penalty prior to the finding of the indictment, the court held the indictment sufficient as charging that the deceased died on the day of the act committed, prior to the finding of the indictment, and the passing of the law changing the death penalty.

Again, in Com. v. Stafford, 12 Cush. 619, the court would also seem to lean to the opinion that the crime is committed when the poison is administered at various times, death or murder being the result. In that case, however, the question was one of practice relating to the allegation of the crime in the indictment, as being caused by injuries inflicted on different days.

In a case wherein the defendant was convicted of manslaughter under § 5844 of the United States Revised Statutes, which makes it manslaughter for a captain, engineer, pilot, or other person employed on a vessel, by his misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties, to cause the death of any person, the court stated that the offender was guilty, not when the misconduct or negligence occurred, but where that misconduct bore fruit by causing the death of a human being. Re Dele, 4 Fed. Rep. 193, 193.

In Hex v. Hargrave, 5 Car. & P. 170, in a case of manslaughter against the prisoner as principal in the second degree, the court stated that the giving of the blows which caused the death constituted the felony, and that the languishing of the deceased was no part of the offense.

And again, the case of Reg. v. Lewis, 7 Cox, C. C. 277, Dears & B. O. C. 123, 126, 26 L. J. M. C. N. 8, 104, 8 Jur. N. S. 523, would also seem to support the theory that the offense was committed at the time the blow is given, although that case was one entirely relating to the question of jurisdiction.

In Reg. v. Holland, 2 Moody & R. 351, the court stated that if the prisoner wilfully and without justifiable cause, inflicted the wound which ultimately caused the death, he was guilty of murder, and that it made no difference whether the wound was in its nature instantly mortal, or whether it became the cause of death by reason of not being properly cared for, the real question being whether in the end the wound inflicted was the cause of death, the court considering the ultimate death as the consequence of the blow.

In the case of Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 35, 369, 361, 362, in answer to the argument that the murder was considered in law as occurring when the blow was given which resulted in death, the court looked upon death as an essential ingredient in homicide, and that until it occurred there was no such crime, no murder being then committed, there being no doctrine of relation which could alter the date or the time of the death, and no rule which could anticipate the death and complete the crime earlier,—especially where there was no statutory provision to the contrary.

E. W.

Debney, being unable to live happily together, a separation took place. Subsequently a reconciliation was brought about, and after a time a second separation occurred. Afterwards, on the 4th day of July, 1893, the accused went to the place where his wife was stopping, in Nance county, and asked her if she would go home with him, and she replied she would not. He then inquired if she never intended to go with him, and, upon receiving a negative answer, he drew his revolver, and shot at his wife five times, three of the balls penetrating her body. After she fell to the ground, he jumped upon her, and stamped her head and breast. From the wounds thus inflicted, Mrs. Debney died, in Platte county, on the 9th day of the same month. The verdict of the jury found the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, but did not fix the penalty.

The first question argued by counsel is whether the accused was entitled to the benefit of the amendment to § 8 of the Criminal Code adopted by the legislature of 1893, fixing the punishment for murder in the first degree at death or imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, in the discretion of the jury. The act of the legislature containing the aforesaid amendment of the Criminal Code contained no emergency clause. Therefore, under the provisions of § 24, art. 3 of the state Constitution, it did not become operative until three calendar months after the adjournment of the session of the legislature at which it was enacted. The twenty-third legislative assembly finally adjourned on the 8th day of April, 1893, and it is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that the act to which reference is made above went into effect at the expiration of three calendar months from such adjournment, or on July 9, 1893, the day on which the death of Mrs. Debney occurred. On the other hand, the attorney general argues that the amendment did not go into effect until August 1, 1893: in other words, that the "three calendar months" begins to run at the expiration of the months within which the legislature adjourned sine die. In our view, it is unnecessary—indeed, it would be quite out of place—to decide at this time between these conflicting positions of counsel, or to review their arguments or the authorities cited in support thereof, since the time when the amendment of 1893 to § 8 of the Criminal Code went into force does not on the record arise in this case, unless the crime with which the plaintiff in error is called upon to answer was committed on July 9, the day Mrs. Debney died, and not on the 4th day of the same month, when the fatal wounds were inflicted. Undoubtedly, the concurrence of both the wounds and the consequent death were necessary for the consummation of the crime of murder, for, until death ensues, the crime is not complete. The question has been frequently before the courts for adjudication. Where is the crime committed when the wounds or blows, and the death resulting therefrom, occur in different counties or states? And the great weight of the decisions holds that, independent of any statutory provision upon the subject, the crime is committed and is punishable in the jurisdiction where the fatal wound or blow is given; in other words, that it is not the place of the death, but the place where the criminal act is perpetrated, to which the jurisdiction to try and punish is given. It was the inflicting of the fatal wounds by the prisoner, coupled with the requisite contemporaneous intent or design, which constituted the felony; the subsequent death of Mrs. Debney being a result or sequence rather than a constituent element of the offense. The doctrine is stated thus by Mr. Bishop, at § 51 of volume 1 of his work on Criminal Procedure: "The true view appears to be that the blow is murder or not, according as it produces death within a year and a day or not; and therefore, in all cases, an indictment lies in the county where the blow was given." To the same effect, see 1 Whart. Crim. L. 292; Kerr, Homicide, § 226; Rea v. Hargrave, 5 Car. & P. 170; Green v. State, 66 Ala. 44, 41 Am. Rep. 744; State v. McCoy, 8 Rob. (La.) 545, 41 Am. Dec. 801.

In Riley v. State, 9 Humph. 646, it was held that the venue is proved in a murder case by establishing that the mortal blow was inflicted in the county in which the prosecution is brought, without proving the county where the deceased died. Green, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "For, although, at common law, it was said the offense was not complete until death, yet it would be doing violence to language to say that the offense was committed in the county where the death happened, although the strokes were given in another county. . . . East says the common opinion was that he might be indicted where the stroke was given. That alone is the act of the party. He commits this act, and the death is only a consequence."

United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, was a prosecution for the murder of President Garfield. In that case the fatal shot was fired in Washington, in the District of Columbia, from which the president died three months later, at Elberon, in the state of New Jersey. Guiteau was indicted and tried for the crime in the District of Columbia. The point was made in the case that the court had no jurisdiction on the ground the crime was committed at the place where the death occurred. The court, in an opinion by Justice James, held that the murder was committed within the District of Columbia, since the fatal wound was given there, although the consequent death happened without the District, and in one of the states.

State v. Kelly, 76 Me. 331, 49 Am. Rep. 620, was a prosecution for murder. The wound which produced the death was inflicted within the limits of Ft. Popham, a fort of the United States, from the effects of which wound death ensued at Phippsburg, outside the limits of the fort. It was held the crime was committed where the mortal blow was given, and not where the person died. The court, in the opinion, observes: "But, it is said that, although a mortal wound may be inflicted within a fort, still, if the person wounded dies elsewhere, the crime must not be regarded as having been committed in the fort, but at the place where the person dies, and that in such a case the courts of the latter place have jurisdiction. It is undoubtedly true that the courts of the latter place do sometimes have jurisdiction; but we are satisfied that, when this is so, it is not because the crime is to be regarded as having been committed there, but because some rule of law, statutory or otherwise, expressly confers such jurisdiction. The modern and more rational view is that the crime is committed where the unlawful act is done, and that the subsequent death, while it may be sufficient to confer jurisdiction, cannot change the locality of the crime."

State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 499, was an indictment for murder. The blows were struck in Hudson county, New York, from which the injured party died in New Jersey, where the prosecution was brought. Vredenburg, J., in speaking for the court upon the question of jurisdiction, uses this language: "The only fact connected with the offense alleged to have taken place within our jurisdiction is that, after the injury, the deceased came into and died in this state. This is not the case where a man stands on the New York side of the line, and, shooting across the border, kills one in New Jersey. When that is so, the blow is in fact struck in New Jersey. It is the defendant's act in this state. The passage of the ball after it crosses the boundary, and its actual striking, is the continuous act of the defendant. In all cases the criminal act is the impinging of the weapon, whatever it may be, on the person of the party injured, and that must necessarily be where the impingement happens. And whether the sword, the ball, or any other missile passes over a boundary in the act of striking, is a matter of no consequence. The act is where it strikes, as much where the party who strikes stands out of the state as where he stands in it. Here no act is done in this state by the defendant. He sent no missile or letter or message that operated as an act within this state. The coming of the party injured into this state afterwards was his own voluntary act, and in no way the act of the defendant. If the defendant is liable here at all, it must be solely because the deceased came and died here after he was injured. Can that, in the nature of things, make the defendant guilty of murder or manslaughter here? If it can, then, for a year after an injury is inflicted, murder, as to its jurisdiction, is ambulatory at the option of the party injured, and becomes punishable, as such, wherever he may see fit to die. It may be manslaughter, in its various degrees, in one place; murder, in its various degrees, in another. Its punishment may be fine in one country, imprisonment, whipping, beheading, strangling, quartering, hanging, or torture, in another, and all for no act done by the defendant in any of these jurisdictions, but only because the party injured found it convenient to travel."

In the case of State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475, Brewer, J., after reviewing the authorities bearing upon the question, says: "It seems to us, without pursuing the authorities further, reasonable to hold that, as the only act which the defendant does toward causing the death is in giving the fatal blow, the place where he does that is the place where he commits the crime, and that the subsequent wanderings of the injured party, uninfluenced by the defendant, do not give an ambulatory character to the crime; at least, that those movements do not, unless under express warrant of the statute, change the place of offense; and that, while it may be true that the crime is not completed until death, yet that the death simply determines the character of the crime committed in giving the blow, and refers back to and qualifies that act."

In State v. Gessert, 21 Minn. 369, it appeared that the defendant was indicted for murder in Washington county, in that state, by feloniously stabbing and wounding one Savazyo, in said county, from which he died in the county of Pierce, in the state of Wisconsin. The indictment was demurred to, on the ground that it did not charge the commission of an offense in Washington county. The court sustained the indictment. Berry, J., in passing upon the question of jurisdiction, said: "It is for his acts that defendant is responsible. They constitute his offense. The place where they are committed must be the place where his offense is committed, and therefore the place where he should be indicted and tried. In this instance the acts with which defendant is charged, to wit, the stabbing and wounding, were committed in Washington county. The death which ensued in Pierce county, though it went to characterize the acts committed in Washington county, was not an act of defendant committed in Wisconsin, but the consequence of his acts committed in Washington county."

If the crime is deemed committed in the county where the fatal wounds were given, as the authorities hold, it follows that the offense was committed when such wounds were inflicted. True, the death occurred at a subsequent date, but it relates back to the time the mortal injury was received. The accused committed all the acts constituting the offense on July 4: the death which ensued in Platte county, on July 9, merely characterized his acts. The crime of murder consists in intentionally and unlawfully causing the death, and, while it is true that the crime is not complete until death occurs, yet it is incorrect to say that the death is an element in the crime. It is merely a necessary condition to it. The elements of the crime are the acts of the perpetrator, such as the malice, intent, and the wound or blow. The crime was committed when the mortal wounds were inflicted, and he is to be tried by the laws then in force.

A case precisely in point is People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 687. The defendant was indicted for the crime of murder. After the blow, but prior to the death of the victim, a change in the statute was made by the legislature. A conviction was had under the amended law, and upon a review of the case the supreme court held the crime to be of the date of the blow, and governed by the law then in force. The chief justice, in the course of his opinion, observed: "The blow was given before, but the death ensued after, the passage of the last statute. The death must be made to relate back to the unlawful act which occasioned it, and as the party died in consequence of wounds received on a particular day, the day on which the act was committed, and not the one on which the result of the act was determined, is the day on which the murder is properly to be charged."

Complaint is made of the giving of the twelfth instruction, which reads as follows:

"(12) You would in this case be warranted in convicting the defendant of murder in the first degree, and it would be your duty to do so, if you find the following facts from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt: First, that Catherine Debney is dead, and that she died in the county of Platte and state of Nebraska on the 9th day of July, A. D. 1898, or at some time prior to the 21st day of November, 1898, which is the date of filing the information in this case; second, that said Catherine Debney died from the effects of wounds and injuries inflicted on her by the defendant in the manner and by the means specified in the information; third, that the defendant inflicted said wounds and injuries upon the said Catherine Debney unlawfully, and with the purpose and intent to thereby kill her, and that the said wounds and injuries were so inflicted by the defendant of his deliberate and premeditated malice; fourth, that the said wounds and injuries were so inflicted by the defendant upon the said Catherine Debney in the county of Nance and state of Nebraska on the 4th day of July A. D. 1898, or at some time prior to her death." The criticism, and the only one, suggested upon the foregoing instruction,—that it assumes that the death occurred within a year and a day from the time the mortal blow was inflicted,—is without merit. It is firmly settled by our own decisions that the court has no right in its instructions to assume that any essential element of a crime has been established. It is for the jury alone to pass upon the facts and the credibility of the witnesses. Heldt v. State, 20 Neb. 492, 57 Am. Rep. 835; Long v. State, 23 Neb. 83. But the rule stated above has not been violated or infringed by the instruction already quoted. It does not assume that the death occurred within a year and a day after the injury was received, but it was left for the jury to determine from the evidence whether or not, beyond a reasonable doubt, Mrs. Debney died after the wounds were given, and before the filing of the indictment.

Exception was taken to the eighth paragraph of the court's charge, as follows: "(8) Deliberation means the act of deliberating or weighing or considering the reasons for and against a choice or measure. In the sense in which the word is here used, an act is done deliberately or with deliberation when it is done in cool blood, and not under the influence of violent passion, suddenly aroused by some real or supposed grievance. A person who does an act, not in the heat of sudden passion, but after having coolly weighed or considered the mode and means of its accomplishment, does it deliberately." The foregoing definition of "deliberation" is substantially within the rule announced in Craft v. State, 8 Kan. 450. It is true, this court, in Simmerman v. State, 14 Neb. 570, criticised the definition given in the Kansas case in so far as it held it was necessary for the accused to have considered the different means for the accomplishment of the killing. And in the case at bar the instruction informed the jury that the weighing of the mode and means of the accomplishment of the act was essential to deliberation. Whether this was correct or not it is unnecessary to determine, for, if it was erroneous, it was more favorable to the accused than he was entitled to.

34 L. R. A.

Error cannot be predicated upon the giving of an instruction where it could not have prejudiced the complaining party. Converse v. Meyer, 14 Neb. 190; O'Hara v. Wells, Id. 403; Labaree v. Klosterman, 33 Neb. 150; Hoggenkamp v. Hargreaves, 39 Neb. 544; Hurlbut v. Hall, Id. 890; Jolly v. State, 43 Neb. 857.

The twenty-fourth instruction, given by the court on its own motion, reads thus: "(24) While it is a general rule of law that voluntary intoxication is no excuse for the commission of crime, still, in cases of this kind, drunkenness, if proved, may be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining whether the accused, at the time of the alleged killing, was capable of forming a wilful, deliberate, and premeditated purpose to take life. And if, in this case, although you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant killed the deceased in manner and form as charged in the information, still, if you further believe from the evidence that, at the time he inflicted the fatal injuries, he was so deeply intoxicated as to be incapable of forming in his mind a design deliberately and premeditatedly to do the killing, then such killing would only be murder in the second degree. If, however, the defendant took intoxicants to steady his nerves for the commission of the crime with which he is charged, then his intoxication would neither excuse the crime nor reduce it from murder in the first degree to the second degree." The criticism directed against the foregoing is twofold: First, that it imposes the burden of proving intoxication upon the defendant; and, second, that the last clause of the instruction is not based upon the evidence.

As to the first objection, we remark that counsel for the prisoner are correct when they say that the law does not cast the burden of proving intoxication upon the defense, but that it was sufficient if the jury from the evidence entertained a reasonable doubt upon that point. It must be borne in mind that intoxication is not a justification or an excuse for crime, but evidence of intoxication is admissible in some cases for the purpose of showing no crime has been committed, or to show the degree or grade of the offense where the crime charged, e. g. murder, consists of different degrees. In a prosecution for murder, it is competent for the jury to consider evidence of intoxication as tending to show that the act was not premeditated, and that there was not such deliberation as was necessary to constitute murder in the first degree. Smith v. State, 4 Neb. 278. By at least four instructions, the jury were informed that the accused should be acquitted unless from the evidence they found that every element of the crime was established beyond a reasonable doubt. The fifteenth paragraph of the charge is in this language: "(15) By the law of the land, every person is presumed to be innocent of crime; and the defendant in this case is entitled to the benefit of this presumption as evidence in his favor, and in order to convict him of the crime alleged in the information, every fact necessary to constitute such crime must be established by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. If, after a full and fair consideration of all the evidence in the case, you entertain any reasonable doubt upon any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime of murder in the first degree, it is your duty to give him the benefit of such doubt, and acquit him of that crime; and if, upon a like consideration of the evidence, you entertain a reasonable doubt as to the existence of any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime of murder in the second degree, you should give him the benefit of such doubt, and also acquit him of that charge. You should likewise acquit him of the charge of manslaughter, if, upon a full and fair consideration of the evidence, you entertain a reasonable doubt of the existence of any fact necessary to constitute that offense." The foregoing was a full and clear statement of the law upon the question, and put, and properly, the burden upon the state to make out its case at every point beyond a reasonable doubt, although it would have been more appropriate to have used the word "degree" instead of "crime." To convict of murder in the first degree, it was necessary that the act be done with deliberation and premeditation; and, if the evidence left any reasonable doubt upon the minds of the jury as to whether there was any deliberation or premeditation, they knew from the charge that they could not convict him of the highest degree of murder, and they knew, too, that it was not incumbent upon the accused to prove his intoxication at the time the mortal wounds were given, since they were told that the state was required to establish every fact or element necessary to constitute the crime by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. This is not a case of conflicting instructions, nor does the instruction criticised undertake to impose the burden of showing intoxication upon the defendant, but the rule upon that point was covered by the general instructions upon the burden of proof. The doctrine is well settled that instructions must be construed together; and if, when so considered, the law is properly stated, it is sufficient. St. Louis v. State, 8 Neb. 406; Murphy v. State, 15 Neb. 383; Lincoln v. Smith, 28 Neb. 762.

There was sufficient evidence before the jury upon which to base the latter portion of the twenty-fourth instruction. The evidence discloses that the defendant often drank liquors to excess, and, when under the influence of intoxicants, he is cross and rough; that after he first saw his wife on the morning of the tragedy, and before its occurrence, he drank liquors. The defendant testified that, on the day of the shooting, he took the priest to Genoa. "I was drinking outside. It was carried out in pails. I got 25 cents worth of beer, and 25 cents worth of rum." The inference could properly be drawn from the testimony that defendant drank "intoxicants to steady his nerves for the commission of the crime." The instruction was applicable to the evidence.

It is also urged that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. The evidence is uncontradicted that the defendant purchased a revolver a short time before the homicide, and that he inflicted the wounds from which his wife died. The accused relies upon the defense of insanity. After a second reading of the record, we are fully satisfied that the defendant at the time fully comprehended what he was doing; that his mind was clear; and that, with deliberation and premeditation, he committed one of the most atrocious murders that has come under our observation. The evidence bearing upon the defense of insanity was fairly submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and the verdict has settled that point against the defendant. The assignment that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence must be overruled.

Finally, it is insisted that the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial, on account of alleged misconduct of the audience in attendance upon the trial. It appears that, at the close of the argument of the county attorney to the jury, the spectators applauded by stamping of feet and clapping of hands, which applause was immediately suppressed by the presiding judge, who rebuked the persons for making the same. It was also shown that the applause was without the knowledge or connivance of those connected with the prosecution. The record fails to disclose what was said by the prosecutor in his closing address, nor does it appear from the showing made that the applause was in approval of the sentiments expressed by the county attorney. The incident complained of occurred in the presence and hearing of the trial judge, and he is better enabled than we to determine the effect, if any, the applause had upon the jury. By overruling the motion for a new trial, containing an assignment relating thereto, submitted upon the affidavits both on behalf of the accused and the state, the trial court must have been of the opinion that the demonstration was not of such a character as to influence the verdict, and no prejudice being shown, its determination will not be interfered with. Edney v. Baum, 44 Neb. 294; State v. Dusenberry, 112 Mo. 277.

The accused has been accorded a fair trial, and, no prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

January 10, 1896, fixed for the execution of the sentence imposed by the trial court.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1)

Joseph YOOH, Resp't.,

v.

HOME MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, App't.

(111 Cal. 503.)

1. Gasoline kept as part of the usual stock of merchandise will not avoid a policy in which a written description of the property insured names such stock "as is usually kept in country stores," although a printed condition declares that the policy shall be void if certain articles, including gasoline, are kept, used, or allowed on the premises.
2. Written parts of an insurance policy will control printed parts, and in case of repugnancy the latter must be disregarded.
3. An "agreement indorsed," permitting otherwise prohibited articles to be kept on insured premises, is made where the articles are included in the written description of the property insured.
4. Untrue answers to questions in an application for insurance do not constitute a concealment or misrepresentation by the insured which will make the policy void, where the misstatements were written by the insurance agent without any direction or knowledge of the insured.
5. Leading questions may be permitted where the only objection is that they are irrelevant and immaterial.

(Beatty, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 11, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Orange County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Van Ness & Redman, for appellant:

The policy expressly provided that it should be void if gasoline was allowed or kept upon the premises, and as it was so kept, ipso facto, liability upon the part of the defendant ceased.

Civ. Code, §§ 2611, 2612; Cerf v. Home Ins. Co. 44 Cal. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 165; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Mahlman, 48 Ill. 313, 95 Am. Dec. 543; Beer v. Forest City Mut. Ins. Co. 39 Ohio St. 109.

In Lancaster F. Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. 497, 33 Am. Rep. 778, the effect of policy clauses similar to those in the case in hand was considered, and the conclusion reached that they were not inconsistent or repugnant, and that the prohibitory clause was of controlling effect.

The statement concerning the number of rooms in the building was material, and if false, and made by the insured, it avoided the policy.

If the truth had been known by the company a higher rate of premium would have been charged, and this, in and of itself, determines materiality.

Ryan v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 46 Wis. 671; May, Ins. § 184; Civ. Code, § 2565.

It was explained that the rate of premium to be charged and collected was dependent upon the number of rooms in the house, and Brooks admits his signature to the application in which that number is falsely stated. This would seem to make a clear case of a knowingly false statement by an authorized agent, and for such statement the principal is liable.

Stockton Combined Harvester & A. Works v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 98 Cal. 557.

By signing the application he adopted it and warranted it as true, and by such adoption and warrant the same result ensues as if he had in the first instance made it.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 984; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 46 Me. 394, 74 Am. Dec. 459.

Misrepresentation as to a material fact will avoid the policy, even although innocently made.

May, Ins. 2d ed. p. 218; Phillips, Ins. § 387; Flanders, Ins. p. 337; Carpenter v. American Ins. Co. 1 Story, C. C. 57; Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 25 Gratt. 266, 18 Am. Rep. 681.

Petition for rehearing in banc.

The decision in department is not sustained by a single authority, and is opposed to authorities cited, but not referred to, in the opinion.

Lancaster F. Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. 497, 33 Am. Rep. 778, note; Cobb v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 17 Kan. 493; Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Krieger, 83 Pa. 64, 24 Am. Rep. 147.

Messrs. Victor Montgomery and William T. Kendrick, for respondent:

Gasoline was an article of merchandise usually kept in a country store, and was customarily kept in the store building, but in a separate room from the other stock.

The description of the property, which, as we have seen, includes gasoline, is in writing, and the provision "all while contained in above-described building" is also in writing, and if the printed portion of the policy does absolutely forbid the keeping of it there, the printed clause so forbidding is repugnant to the written clause and therefore of no force or effect.

Civ. Code, §§ 1653, 1441; Wood, Fire Ins. 2d ed. § 206, p. 491; Pindar v. Kings County F. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 648, 98 Am. Dec. 544; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Updegraff, 43 Pa. 353; Elliott v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 13 Gray, 189; Reynolds v. Commerce F. Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 597.

The burden of showing the written representation was upon the appellant, and if there is any doubt or uncertainty the construction must be in favor of the insured and against forfeiture.

Wood, Fire Ins. 2d ed. § 63.

Dungan was in fact the agent of the company. The information furnished by him was at the request of the company's authorized agent, it was for the company's benefit, and the company paid him for the information.

Bartford F. Ins. Co. v. Josey, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 290; Commercial U. Assur. Co. v. Elliott (Pa.) 13 Atl. 970.

Dungan had acted as foreman while the house was being built, it had been recently completed and he knew as much about the house as Mr. or Mrs. Brooks did.

Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 108; Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. O'Connell, 84 Ill. App. 857; Arff v. Star F. Ins. Co. 125 N. Y. 57, 10 L. R. A. 609.

Dungan's knowledge as to the number of rooms in the house was the company's knowledge.

Reynolds v. Iowa & N. Ins. Co. 80 Iowa, 568.

At the time the application was made out the insured had no notice as to the scope of Freeman's authority to employ Dungan to make a diagram of the building for the use of the company. The act was within the general scope of his apparent authority and is binding upon the company.

Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 415; Furnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 88 Cal. 246, and cases therein cited on page 357.

In filling out the printed form of the application furnished by the company, Freeman acted for the company and his act in writing down a false statement without Brooks' knowledge would not avoid the policy even though Brooks did sign the application without reading.

Continental Ins. Co. v. Pearce, 89 Kan. 896; McComb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 88 Iowa, 247; Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Lunkenheimer, 127 Ind. 586; Follette v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 107 N. C. 240, 12 L. R. A. 815; Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 415; Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 98 Mich. 514, 18 L. R. A. 481.

The misrepresentation referred to in the policy is a wilfully false or intentional misrepresentation.

National Bank v. Union Ins. Co. 88 Cal. 497; Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. supra.

The company through its agents Freeman and Dungan made a personal inspection of the building, and had actual knowledge of the number of rooms contained therein.

Under such circumstances the company is estopped from denying its liability on the policy.

Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Brodie, 53 Ark. 11, 4 L. R. A. 458.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant issued its policy of insurance against fire to Mrs. W. H. Brooks, the assignor of the plaintiff, in the sum of $4,000, upon a frame building occupied as a country store, and also upon household furniture and the stock of merchandise, "such as is usually kept in country stores," while contained in said building. Before the expiration of the policy the insured property was totally destroyed, and the present action is brought to recover for the loss thereby sustained. The defendant alleged, as grounds of defense, that the insured kept for sale and allowed gasoline upon the premises, in violation of the terms and conditions of the policy, and that, in her written application for the policy, she made a material misrepresentation in reference to the building to be insured. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff. From the judgment entered thereon, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

The policy was made out upon a printed form, in which, after the agreement of insurance, there were printed certain conditions to be observed by the insured, and certain limitations upon the liability of the insurer. In the insurance part of the policy the defendant insured Mrs. Brooks for the term of one year against all direct loss or damage by fire, "except as hereinafter provided," and intermediate this part of the policy and the printed conditions and limitations were written, with pen and ink, the description of the property upon which the insurance was made. One of these printed conditions was as follows: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if (any usage or custom of trade or manufacture to the contrary notwithstanding) there be kept, used, or allowed on the above-described premises benzine, benzole, gasoline, Greek fire, etc." Testimony was given at the trial tending to show that gasoline is one of the articles of merchandise usually kept in country stores, but that it is customary to keep it in a room or building by itself. It was also shown that, during the month prior to the fire, the insured would, in the daytime, bring small quantities of gasoline—one or two cans—from a building on another lot, which was used for storing it, into a room within the insured building, and adjacent to the store, for the purpose of selling it at retail to her customers. Upon this evidence the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury: "If, from the evidence, you find that, during the period between the delivery to plaintiff of the policy of insurance in this action sued on and the fire, gasoline was at any time for several days kept for sale in the building described in the policy, or in any part of said building, your verdict should be for the defendant." The court refused this instruction, but told the jury: "If you find, from the evidence in this case, that gasoline was, during all or any portion of said time between the issuance of said policy and the said fire, an article of merchandise usually kept in country stores, then and in such case the fact that the insured did keep for sale or allow gasoline, if she did, either by herself or agent, allowing or keeping such article on the insured premises—that is, habitually—is no defense to this action." It is urged by the appellant that, in giving this instruction, and also in refusing to give the one asked by it, the court erred.

A contract of insurance is to be interpreted by the same rule as is any other contract. It must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable. If it is reduced to writing, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible. The whole contract is to be taken together. When it is partly written and partly printed, the written parts control the printed parts, and, if there is any repugnancy between the two, the printed part must be disregarded. It may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made. In cases of uncertainty it is to be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. Civ. Code, §§ 1686-1684. Applying these rules to the contract in the present case, it must be held that it was the intention of the defendant to insure gasoline, if it was an article usually kept in country stores, and that, if such was its intention, it was no violation of the policy for the insured to keep gasoline upon the premises as a part of the stock of merchandise. When the defendant agreed to insure a stock of merchandise "such as is usually kept in country stores," it must be presumed to have known the character of the merchandise which is usually kept in country stores, and that gasoline was one of these articles, and, consequently, that its policy covered all such merchandise. Harper v. Albany Mut. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 194; Pindar v. Kings County F. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 648, 98 Am. Dec. 544. The court would have no judicial knowledge of the character of merchandise which is usually kept in country stores, and it was therefore competent to offer evidence upon that point, for the purpose of enabling it, when interpreting the language of the policy, to understand the matter to which it related, and the circumstances under which it was made. Elliott v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 13 Gray, 189; Whitmarsh v. Conway F. Ins. Co. 16 Gray, 359, 77 Am. Dec. 414; Archer v. Merchants & Mfrs. Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 484; Maril v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 95 Ga. 604, 30 L. R. A. 885; Fraim v. National F. Ins. Co. 170 Pa. 151; Wood, Ins. § 64; May, Ins. § 239. When it was shown that gasoline is one of the articles which is usually kept in country stores, the court correctly held that it was a part of the subject of the insurance, and that the insured did not violate the policy by keeping it in stock. The defendant, when it issued the policy in question, knew the character of a country store, and that Mrs. Brooks kept it for the purpose of retailing to her customers all of the articles kept by her, and that the gasoline which she kept was to be disposed of by retail in the same way as the other portion of her stock. To give to the policy the construction now claimed by the defendant would be to hold that, although it agreed with her to insure all the stock she usually kept in her store, yet, if she continued to keep that stock, she forfeited all rights under the policy. The clause in the policy above quoted, and which is relied on by the appellant, cannot be construed as having this effect. The qualification therein which excepts the policy from becoming void, viz., "unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon," is found in the policy itself. The subject matter of the risk—the stock of merchandise "such as is usually kept in country stores,"—was written on the policy by the insurer; and, as the defendant must be deemed to have intended thereby to insure all such articles as are usually kept in a country store, it must be held that this was an "agreement indorsed" upon the policy which removed the exemption from liability that would otherwise have existed. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124. If there be any repugnancy between the written phrase "such as is usually kept in country stores," and the printed clause, "any usage or custom of trade or manufacture to the contrary notwithstanding," the former controls the latter, as being the more deliberate expression of the contracting parties. Fraim v. National F. Ins. Co. 170 Pa. 151; Civ. Code, § 1651.

Counsel for appellant has cited the case of Lancaster F. Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. 497, in support of his contention; but this case seems to stand by itself. Mr. Freeman, in his note to the case (38 Am. Rep. 778), says that the case "is utterly opposed to the decisions in all the other states, and that it is quite difficult to reconcile it with previous decisions in the same state." A subsequent case in the same state (Fraim v. National F. Ins. Co. supra) appears to be at variance with the rule in the Lenheim Case. It may also be observed that the opinion of the court in the Lenheim Case rested materially upon the fact that, in the policy then before it, the condition exempting the insurer from liability for loss where turpentine was kept, was "in immediate connection" with the clause by which it insured the property specified, "except as hereinafter provided," whereas, in the present case, the words "except as hereinafter provided" are in direct proximity to the words "loss or damage by fire" which is insured against and may be regarded as a limitation upon the causes of fire against which the insurance is made, rather than as a qualification of the contract of insurance. In subsequent portions of the policy there are certain causes of loss for which the insurer expressly declares that it will not, under any circumstances, be liable; and it is more reasonable to construe these as the matter referred to by the phrase "except as hereinafter provided," than those provisions in which it is declared that in certain contingencies the policy shall be "void."

The policy sued on contains the following provision: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented in writing or otherwise any material fact or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof." It is alleged, in the answer, that the policy was issued upon the written application of the assured, in which it was stated that the building to be insured contained less than fifteen rooms, whereas, in fact, it contained twenty rooms; and that the materiality of this representation consisted in the fact that the rate of premium for the risk assumed was greater for a building of twenty rooms than it was for a building with fifteen rooms. It was sufficiently shown at the trial that the building contained more than twenty rooms, but it was also shown that the statement in the application that there were less than fifteen rooms was written therein by the agent of the defendant from information which he had obtained at his own instance, and without any direction on the part of the insured, from one Dungan, the carpenter who had built the house; and it was not shown that either the assured or her husband had made any statements or representations to the agent in reference thereto. The defendant offered in evidence a document signed by Mr. Brooks which is claimed to be the application. This document is indorsed: "Daily Report of Policy Issued for the Home Mutual Insurance Company. Instructions to Agents." The face of the policy is headed, "Questions," with the following direction, evidently intended for the agent of the defendant, et c.: "By having the following questions so fully answered that the company can get a clear idea of the risk, and can verify rates, the agent will avoid much unnecessary correspondence." Under this are various printed questions, numbered consecutively to twenty-five, and beneath these printed questions there was written, upon a blank line on this printed page: "(26) Less than fifteen rooms." The agent of the defendant testified that, before he presented this document to Mr. Brooks for signature, he had written these words in the application from information which he had obtained from Dungan, and he did not testify that he made any inquiry of Mr. Brooks concerning the number of rooms in the house. Mr. Brooks testified that, when the application was presented to him for his signature, he signed it without reading it, and that, when he signed it, he had no knowledge that these words were there. It does not clearly appear whether the matter referred to in these words was the subject of a question which was intended to be put to Mr. Brooks, and to which no answer was written in the application, or whether the words constitute a statement written by the agent of the defendant for the information of his principal. It is quite as consistent with the evidence on this point that the jury should have found that these words were written by the agent for the information of the company, as that they were an answer to any question put to Mr. Brooks by the agent. In the line numbered 24, the questions, "Have you personally examined the risk?" and "Do you recommend it?" are evidently questions which were to be answered by the agent, and he testified that the answer to the next question, "Has the risk been recently rejected?" to which the answer "No" is written, was not discussed by him with Mr. Brooks.

The court instructed the jury, in substance, that if Mr. Brooks, in applying for the policy, made a written representation that the building contained less than fifteen rooms, they should find for the defendant; but, if they should find that the facts contained in the application respecting the number of rooms were obtained by the defendant from Dungan, and from the diagram or plans furnished by him, and that Brooks made no representation personally in the matter, but signed the application without knowing what it contained as to the number of rooms, it did not constitute a defense. This instruction properly directed the jury in their deliberations upon their verdict, and their verdict thereunder is justified by the evidence. Whether Mr. Brooks made any representations to the agent concerning the number of rooms in the house was to be determined upon a direct conflict of evidence; and, if the jury believed that he did not, his signing the application with the ambiguous phrase, "Less than fifteen rooms," without knowing that it was there or the purpose for which it had been inserted, cannot be construed as a written representation by him that the building contained less than fifteen rooms. The rule that one who signs an instrument which contains terms of obligation upon himself is not absolved from such obligation by showing that he signed the instrument without reading it, has no application like the present, where the instrument signed contains no words of obligation, and the clause invoked against the signer does not purport to be a statement by him, or in answer to a question put to him. The policy sued on does not refer to this application, or in any way incorporate its contents into the conditions upon which the contract of insurance is made: but the appellant sought by extrinsic evidence to connect the two instruments, and make the one dependent upon the contents of the other. In such a case the evidence should be very clear that the statements in the application relied on to defeat the action were made by the applicant, and that, at the time of making them, the applicant knew that they were to form the basis of the policy to be issued to him. Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492; Schwarzbach v. Ohio Valley Protective Union, 23 W. Va. 668; Combs v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 48 Mo. 148, 97 Am. Dec. 333; Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 550; May, Ins. §§ 144 et seq.

34 L. R. A.

Certain rulings of the court at the trial were excepted to by the appellant, but we are of the opinion that no error was committed in these rulings. The question asked of Freeman, "In whose handwriting was the statement, 'Less than fifteen rooms?'" was subsequently stated by him to be in his own handwriting. The question whether Brooks stated to him that there were less than fifteen rooms in the building was clearly leading, and was properly excluded upon that objection. Whether Brooks made such a statement was a material point of inquiry, and it would have been competent for the defendant to ask of Freeman whether any statement was made by him on that subject, and, if so, what it was; but the defendant omitted to make such inquiry. Equally proper was it for the plaintiff to show by Brooks that he did not make such statement, and that, at the time he signed the application, he was not aware that the statement was there. The only objection to these questions was that they were irrelevant and immaterial, and this objection was properly overruled.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: Garoutte, J.; Van Fleet, J.

Rehearing in banc denied, Beatty, Ch. J., dissenting.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Mike ARNESTAD et al., Respts.

(.....N. D.....)

Sureties who sign a bond for the fidelity of a firm as agents for the obligee are not liable for funds misappropriated by one of the members of such firm after the dissolution of the partnership and the retirement of the other partner from the business of such agency. And this is the rule notwithstanding the fact that the obligee knew nothing of such dissolution.

(November 20, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Cass County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to enforce a bond which had been given by defendants for the fidelity of a firm which had been appointed to act as agents for the sale of plaintiff's goods. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Melvin A. Hildreth, for appellant:

The defense of a dissolution of partnership is an affirmative defense, and must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence.

The statements and declarations of partners as to their status or dissolution, or any change in their relationship, should be closely scrutinized when others may be injuriously affected by the establishment of any fact which such declarations or statements may tend to prove. They are interested witnesses.

Clinton Lumber Co. v. Mitchell, 61 Iowa, 182.

In this state the common-law rule that the contract of suretyship shall be strictly construed does not apply.

Rev. Code, § 4653.

The principle that the dissolution of a partnership releases the sureties upon a bond covering the acts of the partners, applies only where the bond covers the acts of the partners as partners only, and in those cases knowledge of the dissolution was generally brought home to the plaintiff. The case at bar is distinguishable, first, in that the bond herein is a joint and several bond and extends to the individual acts of Arnestad and Eggerud, or either of them or their employees, or the employees of either of them, or anyone to whom they or either of them, may intrust the business of the company while acting as the agents of the plaintiff; and second, the plaintiff had no knowledge of the alleged change in this partnership.

See Palmer v. Bagg, 36 N. Y. 528; Hayden v. Hill, 52 Vt. 259.

The act itself of intrusting plaintiff's goods to Arnestad & Lindstrom by the firm of Arnestad & Eggerud without notifying plaintiff and without plaintiff's consent, was an act of misappropriation of plaintiff's goods which brings them squarely within the terms of the bond, as partners.

Palmer v. Bagg, 64 Barb. 641; Bates, Partn. § 655, p. 688, and cases therein cited.

Mr. F. W. Ames, for respondents:

The principals in the bond are Mike Arnestad and Ole Eggerud, copartners as Arnestad & Eggerud, and it is their fidelity, and that of their employees, and those to whom they may intrust the business of the appellants, that are expressly undertaken by the respondent sureties; the expression, "or either of them," as shown by the tenor of the whole bond imports nothing more than an intention to be responsible for the acts of either during the existence of the partnership.

2 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, 2d ed. § 118; Simson v. Cooke, 8 J. B. Moore, 588; Hawkins v. New Orleans Printing & P. Co. 29 La. Ann. 134.

A surety cannot be held beyond the express terms of his contract.

Rev. Code, 4651; Miller v. Stewart, 23 U. S. 9 Wheat. 630, 6 L. ed. 189.

A surety who guarantees that a firm composed of particular individuals will do certain acts or discharge certain duties, cannot be held liable where there is a change in the firm, although the firm name is not changed.

Dupee v. Blaka, 148 Ill. 453; Barnett v. Smith, 17 Ill. 565; 1 Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, 2d ed. § 118, etc.; Crane Co. v. Specht, 39 Neb. 123; Theobald, Principal & Surety, 72; Simson v. Cooke, supra; Kipling v. Turner, 5 Barn. & Ald. 261; Penoyer v. Watson, 16 Johns. 100; Shaw v. Vandusen, 5 U. C. Q. B. 353; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Hines, 61 Mich. 423, and cases cited; 3 Kent, Com. 124; Backhouse v. Hall, 6 Best & S. 507; Manhattan Gaslight Co. v. Ely, 39 Barb. 174.

The fact that plaintiffs were not notified of the change is immaterial.

Birch v. De Rivera, 24 N. Y. S. R. 770; 3 Parsons, Cont. 505.

Corliss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The object of this suit is to hold the defendants, as sureties upon a bond, liable for the embezzlement of one of the principals in such obligation. The Standard Oil Company, the plaintiff herein, having selected as its agents at Mayville, in this state, the firm of Arnestad & Eggerud, required of them a bond with sureties as a condition of shipping them its goods, to be handled by them as such agents at that point. In response to this demand the bond in suit was executed by the firm, and by defendants Hanson and Gullicks as sureties. The sole question before us relates to the liability of the sureties. Their only defense is that the bond secured the honesty of only the firm, and that before the embezzlement in question took place Eggerud had withdrawn from the firm, and that at the time the money sued for was misappropriated the business of such agency was being carried on by Arnestad and Lindstrom.

*Headnote by CORLISS, J.

NOTE—The opinion of the court and the briefs in the above case seem to present very fully the authorities on the point in question as to the effect 34 L. R. A.

of a bond for the fidelity of a partnership, so that no attempt will be made to annotate the case.

As the construction of the bond is involved, we deem it necessary to quote it in full:

"Know all men by these presents: That we, Mike Arnestad and Ole Eggerud, copartners as Arnestad & Eggerud, principals, and John P. Hanson and C. Gullicks, sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the Standard Oil Company in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500), lawful money, to be paid to the Standard Oil Company, its executors, administrators, and assigns, for which payment well and truly to be made we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, severally and collectively, firmly by these presents. The condition of the above obligation is such that if, through the neglect, carelessness, or inattention to the business of the said company by the said Arnestad & Eggerud, or either of them, or any of their employees to whom they may intrust the business of the said company, the company shall sustain any loss or damage, then the said Arnestad & Eggerud, and parties hereto subscribed as sureties, shall indemnify the said company to the amount of this bond; and the subscribing parties also firmly bind themselves to sustain and pay the Standard Oil Company, not to exceed the amount of this bond, any loss resulting to the said company through the theft or fraud on the part of the said Arnestad & Eggerud, or anyone to whom they may intrust the business of the company. The direct purpose of this bond is to secure and indemnify the said company against any loss from shortage on account of stock not being properly accounted for, and loss on account of funds belonging to the said company being misappropriated by the said Arnestad & Eggerud, or either of them, or anyone to whom they shall intrust the business of the said company. If the said Arnestad & Eggerud shall faithfully and accurately perform the duties as agents for the Standard Oil Company, and shall correctly account for all stocks or funds belonging to the said company which shall be intrusted to him or his employees acting in his stead, whose acts he herein directly assumes, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue."

It is urged that by the use of the words "or either of them" the parties intended to cover the individual defalcation of either member of the firm as well after the dissolution of the firm as before. But we are unable to discover any justification for such a construction of the instrument. We think that these words were employed (unnecessarily employed, it is true) to express what the law would have implied had they been omitted; i. e., that both partners need not join in the wrongful act to render all parties to the obligation liable. The bond was given to secure the plaintiff from loss growing out of the agency held by the copartnership, and there is nothing in its language to indicate that the parties were contracting with reference to a possible dissolution of the partnership, and the continuance of the agency by one of the firm. Other provisions of the bond indicate the exact reverse. The instrument declares that "the subscribing parties also firmly bind themselves to sustain and pay to the Standard Oil Company, not to exceed the amount of this bond, any loss resulting to the said company through the theft or fraud on the part of said Arnestad & Eggerud, or anyone to whom they may intrust the business of the company." Again, the bond provides that, "if the said Arnestad & Eggerud shall faithfully and accurately perform the duties as agents for the said Standard Oil Company, and shall correctly account for all stock or funds belonging to the said company which shall be intrusted to him or his employees acting in his stead, whose acts he herein directly assumes, then the above obligation to be void," etc. It is evident that the words, "to him or his employees acting in his stead, whose acts he herein directly assumes," were intended to express the plural instead of the singular. In preparing the bond, a blank was probably used which had been so worded as to apply to a single agent. Looking at the whole instrument, and interpreting it in the light of surrounding circumstances, we are unable to find in it any purpose on the part of the obligors to give, or on the part of the obligee to exact, security for the act of either partner after the partnership as such had ceased to act for the plaintiff. Had this been the object of the parties, an explicit provision to that effect could, and certainly would, have been incorporated in the bond. We are therefore forced to fall back upon the inquiry whether the law will imply any promise on the part of the sureties to be responsible for Arnestad's honesty after he had ceased to be associated with Eggerud in the business. On this point we have no doubt. A surety who engages to be responsible for the honesty of a firm may be entirely influenced by the consideration that one of the partners is a man of integrity, and of such strength of character, and such shrewdness and watchfulness in business affairs, that the risk of dishonesty from the action of the other partner, in whom the surety may place no trust, is reduced to the minimum. The sureties in this case may have been willing to become bounden for the fidelity of Arnestad & Eggerud while acting as a firm, and yet at the same time not willing to incur the hazard of obligating themselves as sureties of the partner Arnestad alone. Based upon such considerations as these, the rule of law has long been established that the surety, standing upon the very letter of his contract, may insist that he cannot be held for aught that is done after the dissolution of the firm, for which alone he became responsible. Backhouse v. Hall, 6 Best & S. 507; Dupee v. Blake, 148 Ill. 453; 2 Bates, Partn. §§ 648-655; Birch v. De Rivera, 24 N. Y. S. R. 770. See also Penoyer v. Watson, 16 Johns. 100; Crane Co. v. Sprech, 39 Neb. 123; Manhattan Gaslight Co. v. Ely, 39 Barb. 174; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Hines, 61 Mich. 423; Barnett v. Smith, 17 Ill. 565; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 764, 765. The case of Dupee v. Blake, 148 Ill. 453, so far as the principle of law is concerned, presents the same features as the case at bar. The court there said: "The rule is that, if a surety engages for an individual, the engagement is understood to extend to the acts of that individual alone, and will not continue if he takes in a partner. In other words, the surety for a single individual is not liable for a partnership of which such individual is a member. A surety who guarantees that a firm composed of particular individuals will do certain acts or discharge certain duties cannot be held liable where there is a change in the firm, although the firm name is not changed. As the surety's liability is strictissimi juris and cannot be extended by construction, his guaranty to a partnership is extinguished if any partner is taken into or retires from the partnership, unless it appears from the terms of the instrument that the parties intended the guaranty to be a continuing one without reference to the composition of the firm. A party may be induced to become surety for the individuals who compose a firm because of his confidence in their integrity, prudence, accuracy, and ability as business men, but he cannot be presumed to have intended to become responsible for the possession of such qualities by some third person, who may be afterwards taken into the firm without his knowledge or consent. It is often in the power of one partner, by want of discretion or integrity, to ruin another."

Our attention has been called to certain decisions which it is urged with great earnestness are opposed to the authorities already cited, and we are requested to follow them as enunciating the sounder doctrine. These decisions are Palmer v. Bagg, 56 N. Y. 523, 64 Barb. 641; Hayden v. Hill, 52 Vt. 259. But, in our judgment, these cases are plainly distinguishable from the case before us for final settlement. Their facts were different from the facts of this controversy in vital particulars. The sureties there had become responsible for the honesty of an individual agent. As the court very properly held, such sureties took the risk, not only of their principal's honesty, but also of the dishonesty of those whom he might employ in any capacity to assist him in the prosecution of the business of the agency. Should he hire a subagent as an assistant, the sureties would still be bound. And so they would remain liable if he should see fit to give such assistant an interest in the property of the business of the agency, provided the obligee did not deal with the new firm as agents, and thus extinguish the original agency. The sureties in those cases undertook to guarantee the fidelity of the agent to his trust, and therefore necessarily agreed to be responsible for whatever he should do himself or through his agents and employees. They agreed to assume the risk of his integrity and his business judgment in employing assistants in any capacity. It is upon this ground that all these decisions relied on by counsel for plaintiff proceed. In Hayden v. Hill, 52 Vt. 259, the court said on this point: "(1) The report shows that Mitchell took in one Clapp as a partner, and that said agency was managed, and funds therefor received, during a portion of the time, by the partnership; and it is claimed that a portion of the funds from sales and leases of the property were received by Clapp, and never actually came into the hands of Mitchell. But the report further states that the plaintiff never recognized such partnership, and dealt solely with Mitchell. He refused even to receive a note indorsed by the partnership name. If the plaintiff had seen fit to have consigned the property to the partnership, and dealt with it in such manner that the firm of Mitchell & Clapp would have been the responsible parties in the accounting, these defendants, as sureties for Mitchell on the bond, could not be liable to respond for the laches of the firm, for it would be the default of a different party from that for which they were bound. Mitchell was at liberty to employ such agency as he chose to assist him. He could pay assistants a stipulated salary, or compensate them with a portion of the profits of the business. It was a matter of indifference to the plaintiff, so long as Mitchell fulfilled all the stipulations of his agreement. If he employed unfit agencies, and thereby the property was squandered and lost, it was, so far as this plaintiff is concerned, the default of Mitchell alone, and he and his sureties must respond. If the fact that defendant took in a partner in conducting the business of the agency did enhance the risk of these defendants, as the sureties of Mitchell, it was not induced or recognized by the plaintiff, and was a matter over which the defendants had quite as much control as the plaintiff. We think that the referee was right, under the circumstances of the case, in finding that Mitchell was 'responsible for the acts of Clapp,' as for any other agent or assistant that he employed, in conducting the business of the agency; and that money that came to the hands of Clapp in the conduct of this business by legal intentment came to the hands of Mitchell. Palmer v. Bagg, 64 Barb. 641." And in Palmer v. Bagg [56 N. Y. 525], the court said: "We do not think this sufficient to change the relations between Fanning and the plaintiffs. The latter did no act creating or recognizing any change. The agencies or means which Fanning employed to dispose of the machines after receiving them did not necessarily interfere with the relations between him and the plaintiffs. . . . He might employ other persons to aid in the selling and pay them wages or a percentage, or a share of profits as partners. So long as the plaintiffs confined their dealings with him under the power of attorney, they would not be affected by any arrangements he should make." In neither of these cases did it appear that the obligee had dealt with the firm. Had this appeared, a different question would have been presented, for then the sureties could have claimed that their bond did not cover a partnership agency, but only an individual agency. And it is apparent from the language of the courts in these cases that this fact would have constrained them to hold that the sureties were not liable.

Finally, it is said that it does not appear that the plaintiff knew of the withdrawal of Eggerud from the firm, and that hence it follows that the old firm, as a firm, was still liable to the plaintiff for the funds misappropriated, no matter by whom they were embezzled. Upon this foundation plaintiff builds up the argument that, inasmuch as the principals in the bond are liable, so are the sureties. But this reasoning entirely misapprehends the nature of the obligation of the sureties in this case. By signing the bond, they did not, in effect, assert to the plaintiff that they would be bound whenever the principals in the bond were liable in any way to the plaintiff, whether because of their having embezzled the property, or by reason of the doctrine of estoppel which would seal their lips against a denial of liability. They merely agreed to become responsible for the fidelity of the firm so long as each of the members of the firm should remain in the business. They contracted to be bound for the acts of Arnestad so long as they could have the protection resulting from the association of Eggerud with him in the same business. But they did not guarantee the integrity of Arnestad alone, unwatched and influenced by Eggerud, who may have been the only person in whom they reposed any trust. If the plaintiff was ignorant of the change in the firm, so were the sureties; and, if the sureties have a right to stand upon the terms of their contract, then it behooved the plaintiff to ascertain at its peril whether all the persons for whom the sureties had become responsible still remained at the helm of the business of the agency. On this point the decision of the court in Birch v. De Rivera, 24 N. Y. S. R. 770, is decisive. The court there said: "The fact that the plaintiffs were not notified of the change is immaterial. They may have an action against the firm as it existed before the change because of failure to notify them of such change, or to publish the dissolution. That proceeds upon another principle, namely, the presumption attached to continuous firm dealings without notice. The guarantor, however, is not responsible for the state of facts which might justify a recovery against the original members. There is no evidence here that he was aware of the change. He seems to have been as much without notice as the plaintiffs themselves. But were it otherwise, we may say, in the language of Lord Blackburn, 'Nothing is stated to show either that the defendant was under any obligation to inform the banking house of that fact or that he took any steps to conceal it.' At all events, his contract is to guarantee a copartnership firm composed of certain persons, and that contract cannot be altered or extended without his consent." See also Backhouse v. Hall, 6 Best & S. 507.

34 L. R. A.

We are unable to agree with counsel for plaintiff that there is not sufficient evidence of the dissolution of the firm of Arnestad & Eggerud. The evidence on the point is very satisfactory. Nor do we find anything in the case to rebut it. The deficit sued for having resulted from misappropriation of funds by Arnestad after Eggerud had retired from the business, the district court was right in rendering judgment for the sureties on the bond. It follows that such judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

All concur.

END OF CASES IN BOOK 34.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the 3d Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1896, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. PERSONAL CAPACITY.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Legislative bodies.

Failure to enter the yeas and nays on legislative journals, as required by the Constitution on the second and third readings of a statute authorizing municipal indebtedness, is held fatal, although the speakers certify that the act was ratified. (N. C.) 487.

A proposal to hold a constitutional convention is held to be properly submitted to popular vote and to be properly made by joint resolution, and not in the form of an ordinary law. (N. D.) 97.

The distinction between a concurrent resolution of the legislature and a law is maintained in a case which holds that such a resolution ratifying an appointment by the governor is not "express authority of law," within the constitutional provisions requiring such authority for any contract which can create a claim against the state. (Cal.) 262.

A rule of procedure requiring two thirds of the members of a branch of a municipal government in order to dispense with a reading of a proposed ordinance is construed to mean two thirds of the members voting, if they are a majority, and if a majority constitutes a quorum. (Md.) 469.

Eminent domain.

Payment into court of the amount of an award appealed from in eminent domain cases is held insufficient to satisfy a constitutional provision that just compensation must be paid or secured before the property is taken or injured. (Pa.) 439.

A railroad is held to be public and entitled to the exercise of eminent domain, although built for a few miles from a sawmill, through a timbered region where all who choose are entitled to ride upon it as passengers or to have freight transported over it, even if the number exercising the right is very small. (Or.) 868.

The authority given to a street railway company to cross any railroad is held limited to the right to cross on streets or highways where other provisions confine the street railway route to the established streets and highways. (Pa.) 572.

Licenses.

The constitutionality of a statute imposing the burden of a state license fee of $35 upon itinerant vendors of goods, and requiring a deposit of $500 as security, and then requiring a local license fee in every place in which goods are sold equal to the amount of tax on the value of the stock of goods at the ratio of the last tax assessment, is sustained, although the act is oppressive. (Vt.) 100.

Taxes and assessments.

Money of a nonresident deposited in a bank within a state, although mingled with trust funds, is held to be property within the state so as to be subject to the New York transfer tax act. (N. Y.) 235.

While expressing the opinion that the legislature has power to tax domestic judgments in favor of and owned by nonresidents, a Kansas case holds that the statutes mentioning judgments among other classes of personal property to be taxed do not include judgments owned by nonresidents. (Kan.) 810.

Bonds of foreign corporations when deposited within the state, although owned by a nonresident, are held to be property within the state subject to the New York transfer tax act. (N. Y.) 232.

A distinction between bonds and stocks of a domestic corporation which are in the possession of a nonresident decedent at the time of his death in another state is made by holding that the stock, but not the bonds, constitutes property within the state subject to a transfer tax. (N. Y.) 238.

A taxation of the average amount of live stock received each week by dealers and usually sold one day after receiving is sustained under the Maryland statutes, although they intend to export a part of them and actually do export about two thirds of all that they receive. (Md.) 309.

A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagor shall pay all taxes upon the premises is held not to bind him to pay taxes required of the mortgagee under a subsequent statute. (Mich.) 308.

A constitutional limitation of the tax levy by a county is held to constitute a defense against such a levy for the enforcement of a judgment against a county, although the validity of the debt on which the judgment was rendered may be conclusively established thereby. (Wyo.) 835.

The exemption of the roadbed of a railroad company from city taxation is held not to extend to the whole of a strip of land 1,500 feet wide used as a coal and ore terminal, although a large part of it is covered by tracks; but on a sale of such a yard to satisfy tax liens the purchaser takes subject to the easement of the tracks. (Pa.) 564.

A special assessment for special benefits on property in a levee district is held to be within a constitutional provision that all property must be taxed according to its value, and therefore a tax on the land alone and partly by acreage instead of value is invalid. (Tenn.) 725.

Poll tax.

The right to sell nontaxable property to enforce payment of a poll tax under the Mississippi Constitution, declaring that such tax is a lien only upon taxable property, is denied, and the provision for poll taxes is said to be intended more as a clog upon the franchise than as a means of revenue. (Miss.) 472.

Municipalities.

Land within the limits of a town, although never divided into building lots, is held subject to municipal taxation when near railroad depots and shops, with convenient access to highways and only a short distance from the business portion of the town, so that it enjoys police protection and the other benefits of the town. (Ky.) 193.

A local option law providing that cities may, if they choose, adopt certain charter provisions, is held unconstitutional, under provisions prohibiting special laws as to cities and requiring laws as to them to be uniform throughout the state. (Minn.) 777.

A city contract for a water supply during the term of twenty-one years, made in the exercise of discretionary power given by the legislature, is held valid in Kansas. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 518.

The power of the court to cancel a contract for a municipal water supply because of the inadequacy of the stipulated source of supply is denied, but reformation of such a contract is held to be within the power of the court under the Pennsylvania statute. (Pa.) 92.

The right of a municipal corporation to erect waterworks of its own is held subject to an implied exception where it has contracted with a private corporation for a water supply, and in such case if it wishes to own a waterworks plant it is held necessary for it to proceed as the statute authorizes it to do to acquire that of the private company. (Pa.) 567.

Counties.

An act to incorporate a county is held void under a constitutional provision requiring a uniform system of county governments. (Nev.) 602.

Power to make county bonds payable in gold coin of the present standard, weight, and fineness, is held not to be included in the power conferred by statute to issue bonds without mentioning the kind of money in which they shall be paid. (Tenn.) 541.

The prohibition of county aid to any individual, association, company, or corporation is held inapplicable to aid given to the state or the United States for a public improvement (Wash.) 817.

A donation of county funds made to secure the location of a state institution for the feeble minded within the county is upheld against the claim that it was not for a public purpose and that it violated the rule of uniformity as to taxation. (Wis.) 181.

Township.

A township is held to be a municipal corporation within the meaning of a statute authorizing the refunding of indebtedness by the issue of bonds. (Kan.) 674.

Officers.

The next election of the people prescribed by the California Constitution for the expiration of commissions granted by the governor to fill a vacancy is held to mean the next election provided for filling the particular office vacant, and not necessarily the next succeeding general election. (Cal.) 41.

A statute to provide a bipartisan police board by giving each member of a common council the right to vote for but two of four members, and limiting the choice to persons belonging to the party having the highest or the next highest representation in the council, is held void. A majority of the judges agree that a minority of the council which is thus given power to choose half the commissioners is not a city authority, within a constitutional provision allowing the legislature to designate the authority which can appoint local officers. (N. Y.) 408.

The liability of a supervisor for public money lost by the failure of a bank in which he had deposited it is sustained on grounds of public policy, although he acted in good faith and without negligence. (N. Y.) 678.

Civil service rules.

A statute preferring veterans to all other persons except women in appointments in the civil service is sustained, although it gives them some advantage over other persons. (Mass.) 58.

Voters and elections.

Nominations made by a political club were refused recognition as those of a county convention when the participants did not regard themselves as a convention and had not been chosen as delegates or any of the usual steps been taken for a convention. (Mont.) 815.

In another similar case in the same state the attempt of twenty-one persons to form a new party and then at the same time successively hold a county convention and a state convention without any previous steps taken for a convention was held unavailing. (Mont.) 813.

Nominations of presidential electors, made by the chairman of the state committee of a political party with 100 associates by certificate, are held valid under the Wyoming statute when made in lieu of candidates previously named in the same manner who had declined, and when an objection is raised only by the committee of a different political party. (Wyo.) 845.

The attempt of a nonresident candidate for Vice President to prevent the use of his name on a state ticket for presidential electors nominated at a certain state convention in Kansas is held ineffectual, although the statute provides that a person named as a candidate may cause "his name to be withdrawn from nomination." In this case there was no attempt to decline the national nomination, or even to withdraw as a candidate within the state. (Kan.) 146.

A statute prescribing a property qualification for voters at city elections is sustained, in the absence of any constitutional provision to the contrary, although the Constitution provides no other qualification for any male citizen of full age than that of residence. (Md.) 55.

The addition of the party name after a candidate's name written on a ballot in the same way that such designations follow the printed names of candidates is held not to destroy the legality of the ballot when it was clearly not intended as a distinguishing mark. (Cal.) 45.

The power of the legislature to prevent the appearance of the name of any candidate for an office more than once upon an official ballot is sustained against the claim that it infringed the rights of electors. (Ohio) 498.

The two thirds of the voters voting at an election whose assent is necessary to authorize municipal indebtedness is held to mean two thirds of all the votes cast for any purpose at the election. (Ky.) 256.

The right to examine the records of the electoral board is held to be limited to so much of the records as relates to the appointment and removal of judges and commissioners of election and registers or the ordering of a new registration. (Va.) 144.

Courts.

Two of the three members of the Tennessee court of chancery appeals, in the absence of the other, are held to have authority to consider and decide cases, although there is no provision of law on the subject. The case seems to be without direct precedent. (Tenn.) 538.

A conflict between the rules of an appellate and a lower court is considered in a case which holds that a judgment rendered against a party in the absence of his counsel in accordance with a rule of the court, but when the court knows that the counsel is engaged in the supreme court in obedience to the rule of the latter court, is held invalid. (Pa.) 593.

An action for personal injuries the parties to which reside and the cause of which arose in another state is sustained under the Federal Constitution guaranteeing equal privileges and immunities to the citizens of the several states. (Wis.) 503.

Interstate commerce.

Overruling the prior decision in the same state, it is held that state laws prohibiting the running of railway trains on Sunday, if enacted in good faith in the exercise of the police power and without discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, do not violate the Federal Constitution. (Va.) 105.

Public highways and grounds.

A grant to a subway company of the right to lay a subway for electric wires under streets is held to be invalid because made for private business, where no obligation is shown as to who should be permitted to use it. (Mo.) 869.

The right of a city to permit a permanent freight house to be built by a railroad company on a public levee is denied because public grounds are held in trust for the public. (Minn.) 184.

The vacation of a part of a street at some distance from one's property is held, reviewing the authorities, not to give him any right of action, as the injury is common to the public, where ample means of access remain. (Ind.) 769.

Equitable estoppel is sustained against a claim to a public park by virtue of a dedication on a recorded plat where the original owner has always continued in possession without claim by the public except as it may be implied from failure to tax it for some years, after which he makes a new plat describing the land as his own, makes expenditures upon it, builds a sidewalk under order of the common council, and his second plat is expressly adopted in an act incorporating the city. (Wis.) 733.

Milk test.

The tuberculin test of cows from which milk is supplied to a city is held to be within the power of municipal authorities to provide by ordinance. (Minn.) 318.

Garbage.

An ordinance prohibiting the transportation of garbage without a license is sustained as an exercise of the police power, but held inapplicable to such rejected food as may be utilized for other purposes so long as they do not constitute a nuisance. (Conn.) 279.

Schools.

A reservation of the right to dismiss a school teacher, stamped across his contract of employment, is held ineffectual to give the directors power to dismiss him arbitrarily, where the statute gives power to dismiss for incompetence, improper conduct, or inattention. (Tenn.) 548.

State university.

The power of the legislature to designate where a department of the state university shall be located is denied under a constitutional provision giving the general supervision of the university to a board of regents. (Mich.) 150.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The performance of one's own contract which he has hesitated or refused to perform is held a sufficient consideration for a promise to him by a third person who will be benefited by the performance. (Mass.) 83.

34 L. R. A.

An agreement by the father of a bastard child to convey property to the mother in consideration of her release of her right to compel him to assist in maintaining the child is sustained against the contention that the promise is based solely on a past consideration. (Conn.) 360.

A contract not to engage in the same business in the locality, made by one who sells his business, is held to be broken by his taking stock in or helping to organize or manage a corporation to carry on such business. (N. C.) 389.

The generic term "money" is held to cover everything that by common consent represents property and passes as money in current business transactions; therefore the payment of a debt or judgment during the late civil war in confederate money, if accepted, is regarded as full settlement. The authority of an agent to receive it in such a case is upheld if it was then generally received in business transactions as the current money of the country. (Fla.) 268.

Bills and notes.

The fact that the president of a corporation who pledges its negotiable note for his own debt was the officer who signed it is not held to prevent the taker from being a bona fide holder, if the note was payable to a third person who had indorsed it. (N. Y.) 69.

The indorsement of a firm name on his own note to the firm, made by one partner who discounts it for his own benefit, is held to give notice of any lack of authority to make the indorsement. (Pa.) 728.

Bonds.

The bond of the cashier of a national bank "for and during all the time he shall hold the said office" is held to cover defaults in years subsequent to that in which it is given, although the by-laws of the bank provided for his election annually and he was in fact appointed by resolution every year. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 477.

The rule that a surety's responsibility is to be strictly interpreted is applied by a decision that sureties on a bond for a firm as agents are not responsible for misappropriation by one member after the dissolution of the firm and the retirement of the other party from the agency, even if the pledgee knew nothing of such dissolution. (N. D.) 861.

Banks.

The credit of checks and drafts by a bank to a correspondent after the latter has failed but before the other knows of that fact is held ineffectual to prejudice the rights of a depositor of such paper, when it was received fraudulently by the insolvent bank. But such credit before the actual failure of the bank was held to bar the depositor's right to reclaim the paper or its proceeds. (Tenn.) 532.

A credit by one bank to another of a draft made on the same day that the latter bank failed was presumed, in favor of the general creditors seeking a pro rata distribution of the assets of the insolvent bank and against the original depositor of the draft therein which was fraudulently received by the insolvent bank, to have been made before, and not after, the failure. (Tenn.) 536.

Insurance.

Gasolene constituting a part of the usual stock kept in a country store is held properly kept on insured premises notwithstanding a printed condition prohibiting it, where the written description of the insured property specifies such stock as is usually kept in such stores. (Cal.) 857.

A new question as to the right of the beneficiary of a certificate on the life of an insane person to notice of his failure to pay assessments is decided in favor of such right after notice of the condition of the insured and a request for such notice. (Pa.) 436.

A policy of insurance issued by a foreign company in another state is held to be within the scope of the New York statute giving a married woman the right to assign a policy of insurance on her husband's life, with his written consent, when it is issued for her benefit. (N. Y.) 175.

The intentional killing of an insured person by a third person without the former's connivance or foreknowledge is held to be an accident within the meaning of an insurance policy, and the omission of the word "death" from a clause excluding liability for intentional injuries inflicted by any other person, when it is used in other excepting clauses immediately contiguous, is held to leave the insurer liable in case of the murder of the insured. (Pa.) 801.

A decision respecting perpetual insurance holds that a provision making the company liable forever to the assured, his heirs, and assigns, and that any assignment of the policy shall be brought to the office of the company to be entered and allowed, does not give the company any right to refuse to enter and allow an assignment solely because it has decided not to consent to the transfer of old policies. (Pa.) 159.

An insurer against loss by reason of liability for rent under a lease while the building is untenable because of fire is held not to be relieved by the tenant's receiving from his landlord a part of the proceeds of the landlord's insurance, at least when the combined amounts will not wholly reimburse the tenant. (Pa.) 600.

Lease.

The washing away, by unprecedented ravages of a river, of land leased for a landing, so that only a mere fragment of the lot, unavailable for such use, was left, is held to extinguish the obligation to pay rent. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 550.

The lease of the roof and outside of a party wall on a building for the purpose of advertising by means of a stereopticon is construed in a case which holds that there is no eviction by reason of the fact that the value of the wall for advertising purposes is destroyed by the fact that the roof of the adjoining building is leased to another person and a screen erected thereon for advertising purposes. (Pa.) 575.

Carriers.

The relation of a steamboat company to a passenger occupying a stateroom is held to be that of an innkeeper, and the carrier is held liable as an insurer for money stolen from the passenger's clothing during the night while his stateroom door was locked and his windows fastened. (N. Y.) 682.

A constitutional provision that common carriers shall not contract for relief from their common-law liability is held to preclude a stipulation limiting the value of animals carried and requiring notice of injury before they are unloaded or mixed with others, in order to recover damages. (Ky.) 685.

(CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.)

The contract of a baggage transfer company to transport baggage from a residence to a railroad depot is held to be fully performed, so that the liability terminates, when the baggage is delivered to the agent of the railroad company at the depot. (Ala.) 187.

Telegrams.

Overruling an early decision in that state, a Missouri case now holds that a stipulation against liability for mistakes in unrepeatable telegrams is not valid so far as it applies to cases of negligence. (Mo.) 492.

A rule of a telegraph company not to deliver messages outside of a $\frac{1}{4}$ mile limit is held ineffectual to excuse the company for delay in delivering a message when the rule was not known to the sender or mentioned by the agent receiving the message about dark, who said it could be delivered that night. (Tenn.) 481.

Notice by letter.

Notice by registered letter, when authorized, is held complete by due registration, but not until the letter is numbered as required by postal regulations, although the postmaster may have received it properly addressed and stamped and given a receipt therefor. (Iowa) 466.

Law of place.

A contract to pay money to a loan association situated in another state at its place of business is held to be governed by the laws of that state, although it has an agency at the place where the borrower resides, through which the contract was made. (Pa.) 595.

See also infra, VII., as to place of remedy.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Authority to lease a railroad, given by the statutes of another state, is held ineffectual to sustain the lease of a railroad contrary to the policy of the state in which the road is situated. (Pa.) 577.

The foreclosure of a railroad mortgage, instituted in behalf of another company which had obtained a majority of the stock of the company and also of the mortgage bonds, was defeated by showing that the corporation buying the stock had obtained control of its affairs and rejected business which would have produced income, and diverted the income received to other purposes than the payment of interest on the mortgage, thereby causing a default. (N. Y.) 76.

Liability of a stockholder under statutes which make it contractual and not penal is held to be a part of the assets which go to a receiver of a corporation. (Pa.) 787.

The right to credit payments of dues in a building and loan association, made by a stockholder upon a loan which is tainted with usury, is denied on the ground that this would release such a shareholder from his portion of the losses. (Tenn.) 201.

The judgment of a sister state as to the assets, debts, and amount of assessments necessary in winding up a mutual insurance company is held to be conclusive on a stockholder in another state as to such assessments. (Mich.) 694, 701.

But an assessment on premium notes, made by a receiver of a mutual insurance company under a decree of the court, is held not to be an adjudication binding on the courts of another state as against the maker of such a note, who was not a party to the proceedings and who before the bankruptcy of the company had surrendered his policy and received back his note. (Iowa) 704.

Partnership.

The goodwill of a partnership business is held to belong to the surviving partners when, under the contract of partnership, the latter purchased the interest of the deceased at its inventoried and appraised value with the right to continue the business. (Cal.) 265.

Religious society.

An attempt by the majority of the members of an independent congregation of the "Disciples of Christ" who had been wrongfully dropped from the rolls to hold a meeting under direction of a tribunal of the elders of sister congregations and choose new officers is held ineffectual. (Pa.) 169.

Club.

The distribution of intoxicating liquors by an incorporated club to its members is held not to constitute a sale within the meaning of a license law when it is done without profit but on payment by each member for what he receives as he pays for other food and drink obtained there. (Pa.) 84.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

See also infra, IX.

A child by adoption is held to be "lawful issue" of the adopted parent within the meaning of a will making a gift to the latter with remainder to lawful issue, where the statute makes the adopted child a child for all purposes except to take property expressly limited to heirs of the body. (R. I.) 500.

Exceptions to the rule that a marriage valid in one place must be valid everywhere are considered in a case which holds that the general rule applies when mere matters of form or ceremony are in question. (Md.) 778.

The effect of intoxication to defeat a marriage is considered in a case which holds that the degree of intoxication must be such as to render the person non compos mentis and devoid of reason. (Fla.) 87.

Habitual intemperance which will authorize divorce is held not to be shown by the fact of intoxication about once in three weeks to such an extent that the person did not go as usual to work on the next morning, and that this had continued for about two years, if it had not caused any loss of his position nor produced want or suffering in his family. (Conn.) 449.

A divorce obtained in a suit brought by the guardian of an insane man is held absolutely void, although the wife is held estopped by her acquiescence therein and subsequent contract of marriage, from claiming the rights of a widow in the husband's estate. (Iowa) 161.

The right of a husband to claim alimony from his wife's separate estate on divorce is denied in the absence of a statutory provision therefor, and a provision allowing the wife to sue in her own name "as well as the husband" in a bill for divorce, alimony, and maintenance, is considered to be merely in respect to her right of action and not an enlargement of his right. (Neb.) 110.

The insanity of a husband is held insufficient to make a contract by his wife for his support in a hospital valid when it is not executed in the statutory mode. (Ala.) 223.

A renewal by a married woman of an accommodation indorsement made before marriage is held valid under a statute which excepts an accommodation indorsement from the contracts which she is allowed to make. (Pa.) 597.

The sale of laudanum to a married woman after repeated protests of her husband and knowing that it is destroying her mind and body is held to give a cause of action, although there is no direct precedent for it, to the husband. (N. C.) 803.

A husband's right of action for loss of his wife's society is held to be defeated where the injury results in her death and recovery therefor has been had for the benefit of her estate. (Ky.) 783.

V. PERSONAL CAPACITY.

The right of an incompetent person who executed a deed of trust for the preservation of his property to revoke it is denied except on condition that the court approves the revocation. (Pa.) 707.

The fact that an accommodation indorser of a note became mentally incompetent to do business before signing a renewal note, which was taken in good faith and the old note thereupon discharged, is held insufficient to release his estate from liability thereon. (Tenn.) 374.

See also infra, VII., Gift.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Fraud.

Fraud in inducing a man to marry a woman who is pregnant by another, by falsely representing that she is virtuous, is held to give the husband a right of action for damages notwithstanding the fact that no precedent for the action could be found. (N. Y.) 156.

Fright.

Recovery for miscarriage resulting from fright caused by negligence is held not to be allowable as the miscarriage is not the proximate result of the negligence. (N. Y.) 781.

Food.

For furnishing unwholesome food at a restaurant, by which a person is injured, it is held that the proprietor is liable only if it was done through carelessness or negligence, and the mere fact that a person is injured in that way does not make a prima facie case. (Ill.) 464.

Flooding land.

The grant of a right to flood a part of a farm by the erection of a dam is held to preclude the maintenance of an action for injuries caused by the dam to the remaining portion of the land. (S. C.) 222.

A recovery of damages for flooding lands by a dam is held to be obtainable under the eminent domain law and not by suit for nuisance, where the dam is built under a statute giving power to raise water of a river for the benefit of a public canal, and providing that the board shall have a right to acquire a right of way in the manner provided by law. (S. C.) 215.

Electric wires.

The utmost care, and not merely very great care, to have perfect insulation of electric wires which are dangerous is held necessary at 34 L. R. A.

places where persons may lawfully go for work, business, or pleasure, although very great care may be sufficient at other places. (Ky.) 812.

Unsafe premises.

Although the owner of a building is not an insurer against accident from its condition, he is bound to keep it in such condition that it will not injure any person rightfully in, around, or passing it, so far as he can do so by the exercise of ordinary care. (Minn.) 557.

The liability of a landlord to his tenant for the unsafe condition of the premises, which was known to or ought to have been known to the former, but not to the latter, is sustained, although the tenant examined the premises and did not discover the defects. (Tenn.) 823.

Likewise a boarder with a tenant is held entitled to recover damages from the landlord under the same conditions. (Tenn.) 615.

But the lessor of a building is held, in Louisiana, to be exempt from any liability to a guest of the lessee for injuries sustained by the fall of a gallery. (La.) 609.

Explosions.

For the explosion of a sewer caused by the formation of gases from oil that had been turned into the sewer during a conflagration, and which could not escape because the outlet was obstructed, and was there left for four days, a city was held liable. (Mo.) 118.

Failure to give warning of an intended blast in an excavation where such work has been going on for several weeks is held not to create a liability for injury to a blacksmith several hundred feet distant by the starting of a horse which he was shoeing when the blast went off. (Mich.) 182.

The explosion of the boiler of a railroad locomotive which was known to be defective is held to make the railroad company liable to a person near the railroad who was struck by a fragment of the boiler; and the court denies that any time for repairs could be claimed by the company after such notice, but that it was bound to discontinue the use of the locomotive. (Ind.) 293.

Injury by cars.

The fright of a mule, caused by the noise of an electric car, is held not to make the street railway company liable for the resulting damages, where it was only the usual and necessary noise of the car. (N. C.) 481.

The killing of a bicycle rider by an electric street car is held to result from the negligence of the rider, and the motorman is held justified in assuming up to the last moment that the rider would get out of the way. (Cal.) 851.

A railroad company permitting children to bring dinners to their fathers employed in a yard is held not to be liable for injury to a seven-year-old boy while on such an errand when he ran under a standing freight car to get a ball on request of one of several employees playing with it, when it was not necessary for him to go upon that track or under such cars. (Ga.) 459.

Injury to passenger or person on car.

To go from a car in which there is plenty of standing room to the lower step of a car platform in order to vomit is held such negligence on the part of a boy about fifteen years of age as to prevent recovery for his injuries when thrown off by a jerk of the train. (Ind.) 141.

A passenger thrown from a car platform while attempting to pass from one car to another while the train is in motion is held not to have been negligent as matter of law, and no presumption of negligence arises from the circumstances. (D. C.) 720.

Failure to stop a train on a sharp up-grade to remove from it a boy who catches on in violation of statute and of the engineer's orders, is held not to show wilful or wanton neglect of duty. (Ind.) 767.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS.

The right to transfer one's property in payment of a debt while he is solvent is held to be protected by the Constitution, and a statute making void any conveyance which would have the effect of preferring a creditor without limiting it to cases of insolvency is held void. (Tenn.) 445.

Covenant running with land.

A covenant that a house shall be forever restricted from having any building attached to the message of more than a certain height is held to run with the land and to apply to the premises, and not merely to the building then existing. (Pa.) 227.

Crops; fences.

An elaborate discussion of the nature of growing crops is made in a case which holds that they as well as fences are realty for the purpose of jurisdiction of an action for damages to them. (Ga.) 206.

Oil and gas.

A provision in an oil and gas lease that in case of default it shall be "null and void" and not binding on either party is held to create a forfeiture for the benefit of the lessor only and at his option. (Ohio) 62.

Trademark.

A trademark in the letters "P. C. W." generally arranged as script printed in a horizontal line upon a background of any suitable color, and which is described in the register as consisting in its essential features of the letters, is held not to be infringed by the letters "W. H. W." in script, in white, in a horizontal line upon a red background. (Pa.) 172.

Fraud on wife's rights.

The attempt of a man just before death to strip himself of all his property in order to defeat his wife's rights therein, by delivering deeds long before secretly prepared and giving a check for his money, is held to constitute fraud as against her. (Colo.) 49.

Gift.

A peculiar illustration of the protection of a donee is afforded where one placed in possession of land in anticipation of a devise is held entitled to retain it as against a guardian of the owner after the latter became a lunatic. (N. J.) 297.

Lien; mortgages.

An implied equitable lien in favor of the grantor of real estate for the unpaid purchase money after delivering an absolute deed and placing the grantee in possession is denied, after a considerable review of the authorities. (Or.) 690.

The lien of a mutual insurance company upon insured property of members for their shares of the losses and expenses is given precedence of the members' homestead rights. (S. C.) 806.

The contract price for building a railroad which was payable in bonds and stock is held for the purpose of determining the limit for which the aggregate of subcontractors' liens can be allowed to be the market value of such securities at the time when they were actually delivered under the contract, and payments to a subcontractor are held applicable first to that part of his claim which is not secured by his lien. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 625.

The fact that a person signs a supersedeas bond as surety of a railroad company and thereby prevents a levy, when there is a mortgage on the property but no default made upon it and the company is apparently solvent, is held to give him no preference to the mortgagees on the subsequent insolvency of the company and his enforced payment of the judgment. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 803.

A chattel mortgage obtained before an assignment for creditors is held valid if the mortgagee did not know of the mortgagor's contemplated assignment, however short a time may have elapsed before the assignment. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 620.

Wills.

The common-law rule that marriage without birth of issue is not sufficient to revoke a will is held still in force, although the wife is by statute given the right to inherit from the husband. (Minn.) 334.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

Survival of action.

The survival of the right to recover for pain and expense caused by personal injuries which subsequently resulted in death is denied under the Rhode Island statutes which give a right of action for death, as the court holds that the general provision for survival of actions for personal injuries must be limited to those which do not cause death. (R. I.) 797.

Place where remedy may be enforced.

A provision of the Mississippi Constitution precluding the defense of an employee's knowledge of defects in appliances by which he was injured is held self-executing, and is enforced by a Federal court in Tennessee, when the injury was received in Mississippi. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 393.

Jurisdiction to enforce in another state the liability of stockholders in a Kansas corporation is sustained in a Federal case. (C. C. App. 7th C.) 743.

But the statutory liability of a stockholder in an insolvent Kansas bank is held by the New York court to be one which comity does not require the New York courts to enforce. (N. Y.) 757.

The same in substance is decided in Illinois, reversing a prior decision on rehearing, although in the latter state special stress is laid on the fact that the remedy provided by the Kansas statutes is a special one. (Ill.) 750.

So, the liability of a stockholder for unpaid subscriptions under the Illinois statutes is held not to be a general contract liability which can be enforced by the courts of another state, but to be limited by the remedy provided in the statute which corresponds to garnishment. (Cal.) 747.

Limitations.

A statute excluding nonresidents who have become such after a cause of action has arisen in the state from the benefit of a statute of limitations is upheld as constitutional. (Pa.) 440.

Injunction.

An injunction to restrain the prosecution of actions for instalments on a contract which has been commenced by an assignee in another state is upheld, when it was done to avoid a statute of the state in which the contract was to be performed and in which all the parties resided. (Ind.) 333.

Replevin.

A licensee having the right to cut and remove timber for which he has paid is held entitled to maintain replevin against a trespasser who has cut the timber, but is required to reimburse the latter for the enhancement in value of the property by manufacturing it into lumber in order to recover the lumber or its value. (Wis.) 321.

34 L. R. A.

Attachment.

A false written statement as to one's financial ability in order to obtain credit is held not to constitute any basis for an attachment in favor of a person who did not rely upon such statement or know of it until after he had given credit. (N. Y.) 248.

Second appeal.

Elaborately reviewing the question how far an appellate court may re-examine its rulings on the former appeal, the Nebraska court holds that where the first decision merely remanded the case for a new trial the court has power on a second appeal to re-examine the doctrines previously declared. (Neb.) 321.

Exemptions.

A photographic lens owned and used by a photographer in prosecuting his business is held to be within a statutory exemption of implements of trade. (Conn.) 718.

Individual partners are not allowed to claim their statutory exemption out of the partnership property in case of insolvency, unless expressly authorized to do so by statute. (N. M.) 604.

Insolvency.

Partnership creditors are held entitled to vote on the question of the discharge of a single insolvent member of a firm which is solvent. (Mass.) 373.

Damages.

The loss to a child on account of its mother's death is held not to be any part of the damages recoverable in a suit by her husband as administrator under the Tennessee statute which prevents the extinguishment of the cause of action by death, but by failing to provide any beneficiary for the death of a married woman leaves the recovery to inure to the benefit of her surviving husband. (Tenn.) 443.

An instruction that plaintiff is "entitled" to exemplary damages in case of a malicious injury is held error, since at most such damages are allowed in the discretion of the jury. (Wis.) 205.

Evidence.

The measurement in the presence of the jury of a woman's foot and her leg 6 inches above the ankle in an action for injuries thereto, when the physicians on the respective sides give contradictory testimony as to such measurements, should not be rejected by the court,—at least if she does not object. (Iowa) 207.

The destruction by a servant of his employer's books after the latter's death is held insufficient to raise a presumption that they contain charges against the servant,—especially when they had already been examined and the servant claimed to have been executing his employer's orders. (Wyo.) 531.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

An invalid contract to dissolve a marriage is held not to be admissible in favor of the husband to show his good faith in contracting a later marriage on account of which he is charged with bigamy, where the statute does not require any other criminal intent than is involved in his entering into the prohibited marriage. (Nev.) 784.

The time when the fatal blow is struck is held to be the time of a murder so as to be governed by the laws then in force, although they are changed before death occurs. (Neb.) 851.

The strict rule as to indictments is illustrated by a decision that an indictment alleging an offer of a "bribe and money" by an agent whom the accused had procured "to offer a bribe and money of value" does not sufficiently allege that the money offered was of any value; also that an allegation of an attempt to bribe a jurymen with intent to influence his action and vote as a jurymen is not sufficient to show the knowledge of the accused that he was a jurymen and an intent to influence his action as juror. (Minn.) 178.

The constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt is held not to be violated by a statute making it a misdemeanor to obtain accommodations at an inn, hotel, or boarding house by fraud, or fraudulently to remove baggage or other property therefrom. (Tenn.) 656.

A constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt is held to be violated by a statute making it a misdemeanor to receive a deposit in an insolvent bank where the punishment is by fine of double the deposit, one half to go to the depositor, and payment to him is made a defense. (Ala.) 684.

Sending letters or circulars to a debtor threatening to advertise a claim against him for sale, which is in violation of a statute against threatening to injure credit or reputation, is held not to be within the constitutional rights of property or of free speech. (Mo.) 127.

A city ordinance prohibiting barbers from working on Sunday is held unconstitutional as class legislation. (Wash.) 68.

The constitutional power to pardon being conferred upon the governor and several associates, it is held that the legislature cannot restore a convict to competency as a witness. (Fla.) 251.

A statute denying the usual good-time allowance to a convict serving for his second offense is held not to be ex post facto as applied to the punishment of an offense subsequently committed merely because the first offense was before the statute. (Mich.) 98.

The validity of cumulative and successive sentences is sustained as an exercise of common-law powers, and no act of Congress is held necessary to authorize such sentences by a Federal court. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 509.

The employment of a convict upon the public roads by order of county commissioners and under control of a captain of the chain gang who is a public agent is held lawful against the contention that such order is in the nature of an additional sentence, and it is held not to constitute a hiring out for which an order of the court contained in the sentence is necessary. (N. C.) 392.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Action. See DEATH.

Admiralty; imprisonment under orders of court in, as imprisonment for debt 684

Alimony. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Amnesty. See PARDON.

Appeal; conclusiveness of prior decisions on subsequent appeals:—(a) Generally; (b) where the prior decision is erroneous; (c) as applied to matters after remanding a case; (d) as to evidence; (e) as to party; (f) as to matters necessarily involved; (g) as to matters of estoppel; (h) as to matters of jurisdiction; (i) as to defective appeals; (j) as to cross-appeals; (k) where prior decision is not final; (l) as to matters of pleading; (m) as to injunctions and interlocutory orders; (n) as to questions which might have been made on prior appeal; (o) as to excessive verdicts; (p) change of court; (q) as to effect of dicta; (r) where the questions are different; (s) as to ambiguous decisions; (t) as to limited decisions; (u) as to decisions by a divided court; (v) statute and Constitution changing the rule; (w) rule in intermediate courts 321

Baggage transfer. See CARRIERS.

Banks; trust in deposit in insolvent bank:—Receiving deposit when insolvent a fraud; how far trust exists; right to follow money; right to follow commercial paper 533

Bastardy; imprisonment under order in case of, as imprisonment for debt 667

Bills and notes; renewal of, by insane person 374

Buildings. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT

Individual liability for falling walls or buildings:—Liability of owner or occupier; building in possession of contractor; liability for injury to person in street; liability for injury to person on adjoining property; liability for injury to person on property; neglect to comply with covenants in lease; illegal building; liability of firemen; act of third person; vis major; fire, contributory negligence 557

Carriers; negligence of passenger in passing from one car to another:—The general rule; passenger assumes incidental risks; obedience to instructions; vestibuled trains; negligence in fact 720

Liability of baggage transfer companies:—(I.) As common carriers; (II.) when liable; (III.) limitation of liability; (IV.) the effect of custom 137

Conflict of laws; as to the enforcement of stockholders' liability outside of the state of incorporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Constitutional law; See CRIMINAL LAW; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT; PARDON.

Contracts; performance of existing contract obligation as consideration for new promise:—In general; payment of existing debt as consideration; promise to release joint debtor; payment of surety; promise not to sue; compliance with obligation to deliver papers or property; agreement to comply with lease; agreement to comply with marriage contract; promise to do duty; where there is breach on both sides; work already completed when additional promise made; waiver of conditions; acceptance of performance; promise of additional compensation for completing contract; promise to perform additional duty for same consideration; promise by stranger to the contract 39

Convicts. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Corporations; right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of the state of incorporation:—(I.) In action by corporation or its representative; (II.) in action by creditor or corporation: (a) remedy according to law of forum; (b) for unpaid subscriptions to stock: (1) in general; (2) by creditors' bill; (c) for statutory liability after stock is fully paid for: (1) in general; (2) nature of the liability; (3) liability absolute or distinct from statutory remedy; (4) constitutional liability; (5) exclusiveness of statutory remedy provided in state of incorporation; (6) conditions prescribed by statutes in state of incorporation; (7) action at law; (8) suit in equity; (d) remedies in Federal courts: (1) in general; (2) in equity; (3) at law; (III.) contribution between stockholders of foreign corporations 737

Effect of assessment on stockholders, made under order of court in another state as res adjudicata 694

Costs; as debts within constitutional provision as to imprisonment 665

Creditors' bill; for unpaid subscriptions to stock of foreign corporation 743

Criminal law; enhancing penalty of crimes when committed by habitual criminals or prior offenders:—(I.) Validity of statutes and ordinances: (a) in general; (b) ex post facto laws; (c) cruel and unusual punishment; (d) equal protection of the laws; (e) second punishment or jeopardy for the same offense; (II.) construction and effect of statutes: (a) in general; (b) third and subsequent offenses; (c) conditions as to prior conviction before commission of later offense; (d) conditions as to execution of or relief from prior sentence before commission of later offense, 875

- (e) effect of pardon of prior offense; (f) effect of appeal or writ of error to review prior conviction; (g) effect of prior conviction in other state or country; (h) what prior sentence must have been; (i) similarity or identity of prior and subsequent offenses; (j) procedure: (1) in general; (2) pleas and admissions; (3) order of trial; separating issues; (4) proof; (5) attacking validity of prior conviction; (6) verdict and judgment; (7) appeal or writ of error 398
- Reduction of prisoner's term by allowance for good behavior:—(I.) Constitutionality of statute providing therefor; (II.) construction and effect of statutes: (a) in general; (b) Federal cases 509
- Custom. See CARRIERS.
- Death; how many distinct causes of action arise from injuries resulting in death:—(I.) Alternative action for death or injury: (a) generally; (b) actions for death as affected by release: (1) by injured party; (2) by others; (3) by plaintiffs; (c) other actions as a bar: (1) actions for the injury; (2) other actions for the death; (d) multiplicity of actions for death; (e) bar of other actions by limitation; (f) for death of infants; (II.) concurrent actions for death and injury 738
- Debt. See IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.
- Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Dower; as affected by insanity of husband 224
- Drunkenness. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Electrical uses; grant of franchises to electrical subway companies 369
- Evidence; presumption against the destroyer (spoliator) of evidence:—(I.) Where a party fails to produce evidence after demand or notice by the party entitled to the production thereof; (II.) where a party fails to introduce documentary ("the best") evidence which would properly be a part of the case: (a) the rule stated; (b) the substituted evidence; (c) the rule and evidence in admiralty; (III.) where a party adversely interested destroys or withholds evidence to which the adversary is entitled: (a) the rule; (b) the proof; (c) the damages 581
- Execution; imprisonment on, see IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.
- Ex post facto laws; as to habitual criminals 399
- Fines; imprisonment for, as imprisonment for debt 551
- Former jeopardy; as to habitual criminals 400
- Fraud; imprisonment for debt in case of 642
- Fright. See STREET RAILWAYS.
- Gas. See MINES.
- Gift. See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.
- Good time. See CRIMINAL LAW.
- Habitual criminals. See CRIMINAL LAW.
- Highways. See ELECTRICAL USES.
- Homicide; time when deemed to be committed 551
- Husband and wife; effect of intoxication on marriage 87
- Insanity of husband as affecting wife's disability of coverture:—(I.) Generally, wife as head of family; (II.) as to separate property and rights of wife; (III.) as to dower rights; (IV.) as to community property; (V.) as to property and rights of husband 222
- Drunkenness as affecting divorce:—(I.) Drunkenness as a ground for divorce: (a) provisions for; (b) what constitutes drunkenness; (c) degree of drunkenness authorizing divorce; (d) pleadings and proof; (e) defenses; (f) incidents and effects; (II.) drunkenness as affecting cruel and inhuman treatment: (a) drunkenness as cruelty; (b) drunkenness connected with cruelty; (c) drunkenness as evidence of cruelty; (III.) drunkenness as affecting desertion 449
- Divorce when husband or wife becomes insane:—(I.) Insanity as a ground for divorce; (II.) insanity as affecting adultery: (a) as a ground for divorce; (b) as a defense to a claim for alimony; (III.) insanity as affecting abandonment and failure to support; (IV.) insanity as affecting cruelty; (V.) the defense; (VI.) actions on behalf of insane persons 161
- Allowance to husband from property held by the wife in divorce cases:—(I.) Permanent allowance; (II.) statutes; (III.) alimony pendente lite; (IV.) English cases 119
- Enforcing payment of alimony as imprisonment for debt 685
- Illegitimate children. See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.
- Imprisonment for debt; constitutionality of imprisonment for debt:—(I.) General extent and construction of constitutional provisions; (II.) what are debts: (a) meaning of the word "debt"; (b) in general; (c) breach of promise to marry; (III.) action founded on tort: (a) in general; (b) mesne profits; (c) trespass; (d) fraud; (IV.) fines and penalties as debts: (a) in general; (b) fine imposed by city authority; (V.) taxes as debts; (VI.) costs as debts: (a) debts in civil actions; (b) not debts in civil actions; (c) debts in criminal actions; (d) not debts in criminal actions; (VII.) statutory, criminal, or quasi-criminal cases; (VIII.) enforcing orders and decrees of court: (a) in general; (b) in decedents' estates; (c) in admiralty; (d) alimony; (e) in bastardy; (f) against officers of the court; (IX.) "due process of law"; (X.) us exat; (XI.) debts owing to the United States 684
- Incompetent person. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Renewal of obligations by 374
- Using lunatic's property to carry out his presumed wishes or to fulfil his equitable obligations in the absence of a legal authority:—(I.) Power generally; (II.) in support of his family; (III.) in support of illegitimate children, etc.; (IV.) for allowances to persons entitled to inheritance; (V.) for allowances to collateral relations; (VI.) for allowances to persons not related; (VII.) for charitable and religious purposes; (VIII.) to continue arrangements made while sane 207
- Judgment. See APPEAL; CORPORATIONS.
- Landlord and tenant. See also MINES.
- Liability of landlord for injury to tenant from defect in premises:—Landlord not

- bound to have premises safe; implied covenants; action for nonrepair; construction of covenant to repair; warranty or representations by landlord; fraud or deceit; concealment of defects; statutory liability; landlord actively negligent; contributory negligence; proximate cause; measure of damages; distinguishable cases 824
- Liability of landlord for injuries to tenant's guests and servants from defects in premises:—Duty the same toward tenant and tenant's guest or servant; landlord not generally liable; defect in premises when let; effect of concealment by landlord; effect of duty to repair; structure for use of public; liability of reversioner; contributory negligence; portion of building in landlord's possession; dangerous agency on adjoining premises 609
- Law of the case. See APPEAL.
- Legislature. See PARDON.
- Mines; effect of assignment of oil or gas lease:—(I.) Liability of assignor; (II.) liability of assignee 68
- Municipal corporations; municipal taxation of rural lands within the limits of the corporation:—(I.) Validity of exemption or discrimination in rates; (II.) construction of statutory exemption or discrimination; (III.) right to repeal exemptions; (IV.) validity of taxation of farm lands; (V.) power of courts; (VI.) what property is taxable; (VII.) power of municipality to exempt; (VIII.) original incorporation; (IX.) assessments; (X.) method of raising question 198
- Ne exeat; as imprisonment for debt 671
- Negligence. See BUILDINGS; LANDLORD AND TENANT.
- Oil. See MINES.
- Pardon; legislative power to grant pardon or amnesty:—(I.) After conviction; (II.) before conviction; (III.) incidental or implied pardon 251
- As affecting enhanced punishment for later offense 408
- Penalty; imprisonment for, as imprisonment for debt 651
- Presumption. See EVIDENCE.
- Punishment. See CRIMINAL LAW.
- Release; as affecting right of action for death 738
- Street railways; frightening of horse by street car:—(1) Generally; (2) by bells, gongs, and whistles; (3) by steam; (4) contributory negligence 481
- Subways. See ELECTRICAL USES.
- Taxes. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
- Imprisonment for nonpayment 654
- Telegraphs; limits for delivery of telegrams 481
- Trespass; imprisonment for debt in case of 641
- Trusts. See BANKS.
- Walls. See BUILDINGS.
- 34 L. R. A.

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACCIDENT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE, 10, 11.

ACCOUNT. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also DEATH, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A consolidation of several actions against different defendants cannot be made under Colo. Civ. Code, § 20, which authorizes consolidation of causes of action which might have been joined when they are in the same court and "between the same parties." Smith v. Smith (Colo.) 49

2. The assignee of a policy of a permanent insurance providing that the insurance company shall be "forever" liable to the assured and his assigns may maintain in his own name an action for damages resulting from the company's refusal to enter and allow the assignment of the policy as provided for therein. Marshall v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 159

ADMIRALTY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Admiralty; imprisonment under orders of court in, as imprisonment for debt. 664

ADOPTION. See PARENT AND CHILD, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ADULTERY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 18.

ALIMONY. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1, 2; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 15-17, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

AMNESTY. See PARDON, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. Alimony, counsel fees, and suit money may be allowed by an appellate court as essential to justice, and not as an exercise of original jurisdiction, when on appeal in a suit to annul a marriage the wife is destitute while the husband has means wherewith to live and to litigate. Prins v. Prins (Fla.) 87

2. Proof in an appellate court to obtain an allowance of alimony, counsel fees, and suit money, must be made in addition to the proof taken when a similar application was made to and granted by a lower court. Id.

34 L. R. A.

3. The suggestion that a foreign insurance company had no authority to do business in the state comes too late on appeal to prevent the enforcement of an assessment upon premium notes. Warner v. Delbridge & Co. (Mich.) 701

4. The unconstitutionality of a statute cannot be set up for the first time on appeal, as a ground of attack on instructions which were given on other issues. Ross v. Hawkeys Ins. Co. (Iowa) 466

5. Objections to the litigation of a question presented by the pleadings will not be considered when first made on appeal. Greene v. Greene (Neb.) 110

Bill of exceptions.

6. A certificate to the bill of exceptions stating that it contains all the evidence will not be conclusive against statements in the bill to the contrary. Id.

7. A longhand manuscript of alleged evidence cannot be regarded as a bill of exceptions on appeal. Pittsburgh, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Redding (Ind.) 767

Review of facts.

8. A finding of fact by a jury on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal. Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 207

9. A general finding of fact in a case tried by a United States court without the intervention of a jury cannot be reviewed by an appellate court. Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 7th C.) 742

10. Refusal to find facts material to sustain a defense, and which are established by undisputed evidence, is error. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 76

11. The evidence will not be examined on appeal to ascertain whether it was sufficient to support the decision, when it is not all contained in the bill of exceptions. Greene v. Greene (Neb.) 110

12. A decree as to the mental capacity of one who enters into a marriage contract, rendered on sufficient but conflicting evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal. Prins v. Prins (Fla.) 87

Grounds of reversal.

13. It cannot be assumed on appeal that answers of witnesses were prejudicial when they do not appear on the record. Jackson v. Jackson (Md.) 778

14. An erroneous instruction which could not have prejudiced the complaining party is not ground for reversal. Debney v. State (Neb.) 851

879

15. An instruction which was not influential because no finding was made on the point involved therein by the jury, which rendered a special verdict, is not ground for reversal. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 293

16. Applause at the conclusion of the address by the prosecuting attorney, which was not connived at by the prosecution, and was quickly suppressed and rebuked by the judge, is not ground for reversal where the record fails to show that it prejudiced the defendant. Debney v. State (Neb.) 851

17. The improper consolidation of several actions attacking deeds of a decedent is ground of reversal where the defendants therein were thereby deprived of the right to each other's testimony. Smith v. Smith (Colo.) 49

Second appeal.

18. An appellate court on a second appeal may re-examine and reverse its rulings on the first appeal, if the case was then remanded generally for a new trial. Hastings v. Foxworthy (Neb.) 831

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; conclusiveness of prior decisions on subsequent appeals:—(a) Generally; (b) where the prior decision is erroneous; (c) as applied to matters after remanding a case; (d) as to evidence; (e) as to party; (f) as to matters necessarily involved; (g) as to the matters of estoppel; (h) as to matters of jurisdiction; (i) as to defective appeals; (j) as to cross-appeals; (k) where prior decision is not final; (l) as to matters of pleading; (m) as to injunctions and interlocutory orders; (n) as to questions which might have been made on prior appeal; (o) as to excessive verdicts; (p) change of court; (q) as to effect of dicta; (r) where the questions are different; (s) as to ambiguous decisions; (t) as to limited decisions; (u) as to decisions by a divided court; (v) statute and Constitution changing the rule; (w) rule in intermediate courts. 821

ARMY AND NAVY. See CIVIL SERVICE.

ASSIGNMENT. See ACTION OR SUIT, 2; INSURANCE, 6, 7.

ATTACHMENT. See also STATUTES, 17.

The making of a false written statement as to financial ability, for the purpose of obtaining credit, does not make one liable to an attachment in favor of a creditor who had no knowledge of such statement until after the credit was given, under N. Y. Laws 1894, chap. 786, § 1, authorizing the granting of an attachment where defendant for the purpose of procuring credit makes a false statement in writing as to his financial responsibilities. Pennyroyer v. Kelsey (N. Y.) 248

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attachment; for false representations. 248

ATTORNEYS.

Although money made on execution can by the Florida statute be paid to an attorney. 34 L. R. A.

ney of record of the execution creditor, such attorney has no authority as such to authorize the clerk of the circuit court in his official capacity to accept money on a judgment. Hendry v. Bentlee (Fla.) 263

BAGGAGE TRANSFER COMPANY.

See CARRIERS, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BANKS. See also BONDS, 1, 2; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT, 1; NOTICE.

1. Checks and drafts fraudulently received by a bank after its officers know of its insolvency can be reclaimed if they can be found and are not yet collected and credited when the bank closes its doors. Bruner v. First Nat. Bank (Tenn.) 533

2. A cash deposit fraudulently received by an insolvent bank after its officers know of its insolvency cannot be reclaimed from its receiver, when it went into the general funds of the bank and cannot be identified and separated from other funds on hand when the receiver took charge. Id.

3. The identical proceeds of a check or draft fraudulently received on deposit by an insolvent bank are sufficiently traced by the depositor when it appears that they are included in a fund paid over to the receiver of the bank by a correspondent as the proceeds of credits made after the bank failed, but before notice thereof to the correspondent. Id.

4. Fraud in receiving a deposit of checks or drafts after bank officials know that it is insolvent will not give the depositor a preferential claim against assets in the hands of the receiver of the bank, if the bank before its failure had received the proceeds of such paper or credit therefor from a correspondent, although the bank had on hand when it failed and always after the deposits were made more than the amount thereof in cash. Id.

5. Crediting checks and drafts to a bank which has failed, although done by a correspondent which does not yet know of the failure, cannot prejudice the rights of persons who deposited such paper in the insolvent bank to recover back their paper or its proceeds, when the deposit was received after the officers of the bank knew it to be insolvent. Id.

6. A credit for a draft given by one bank to another on the same day that the latter failed will not be presumed, in the absence of proof, to have been given after the failure in order to entitle one who deposited the draft in the insolvent bank after its officers knew it was insolvent to reclaim the proceeds of the draft out of the assets in preference to other creditors who seek to have them distributed pro rata. Klepper v. Cox (Tenn.) 536

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; trust in deposit in insolvent bank:—Receiving deposit when insolvent a fraud; how far trust exists; right to follow money; right to follow commercial paper. 533

BARBERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11.

BASTARDY. See also CONTRACTS, 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bastardy; imprisonment under order in case of, as imprisonment for debt. 667

BICYCLE. See EVIDENCE, 8; STREET RAILWAYS, 1-3.

BIGAMY.

A man may be guilty of bigamy although he believes his former marriage is annulled, where a statute describes the offense as marrying again while a former husband or wife is living, without any specific provision as to criminal intent. State v. Zichfeld (Nev.) 784

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 6, 7.

BILLS AND NOTES. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6-8; INCOMPETENT PERSONS, 1.

1. A note by a stockholder, director, and creditor of a corporation, given to the maker of an accommodation note which the corporation had received the benefit of, in consideration of money furnished by the maker of the accommodation note to pay it, is not without consideration although the payee was bound to take up the other note. Abbott v. Doane (Mass.) 88

2. One who takes the negotiable note of a corporation from its president as collateral security for a loan to him or a firm to which he belongs is not precluded from claiming as a bona fide holder by reason of the fact that the note was signed by the president, where it was payable to a third person who had indorsed it. Cheever v. Pittsburgh, C. & L. E. R. Co. (N. Y.) 60

3. The indorsement of a firm name on a note to the firm from one partner, made in his handwriting, and his discount of the note to his own credit at a bank, are sufficient to put the banker upon inquiry and prevent him from being a bona fide holder, if the indorsement was unauthorized. Brown v. Pettit (Pa.) 728

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; renewal of, by insane person. 274

Notice of suspicious facts to purchaser. 728

Protection of bona fide holder; notice of suspicious facts. 69

BLACKMAIL. See THREATS.

BLASTING.

1. A provision in a contract for excavating a sewer trench, that blasts are to be carefully covered to effectually prevent injury to persons or property, refers to injury from flying debris, and not from noise of the explosion. Mitchell v. Prange (Mich.) 182

2. Failure to give warning of an intended blast in an excavation in which blasting had been going on for several weeks will not render the person discharging the blast liable for injury to a blacksmith injured by the starting, in consequence of the noise, of a horse which he was shoeing at a place several hundred feet distant from the excavation. Id.

BOILER. See EXPLOSIONS.

BONDS. See also ESTOPPEL, 2, 8; MORTGAGE, 1; STATUTES, 14; TAXES, 9-11; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 5, 6.

1. The bond of a cashier of a national bank for the faithful performance of his duties "for and during all the time he shall hold the said office" covers defaults in years subsequent to that in which it is given, notwithstanding the by-laws of the bank provide that the cashier shall be elected annually and a resolution appointing him to the office was passed in each year, as the act of Congress relating to national banks provides that the cashier may be dismissed at pleasure of the board of directors, and the first appointment under such act is for an unlimited term. Westervelt v. Mohrenstecher (C. C. App. 8th C.) 477

2. It is no defense to an action upon the bond of a cashier of a national bank for misappropriation of money and excessive loans, that the bank or its receiver has obtained judgments upon the notes taken by the cashier for such money and loans. Id.

3. Sureties on a bond for the fidelity of a firm as agents for the obligee are not liable for funds misappropriated by one member of such firm after its dissolution and the retirement of the other partner from the business of such agency, even if the obligee does not know of such dissolution. Standard Oil Co. v. Arnestad (N. D.) 861

4. Implied power to issue bonds is given to a county by authority to make a donation "of money or other securities" for the benefit of a state home for the feeble-minded. Lund v. Chippewa County (Wis.) 181

5. Power to issue bonds payable in gold coin of the United States of the present weight and fineness is not conferred upon a county by a statute authorizing the issue of bonds without prescribing the kind of money in which they may be paid. Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 541

6. A special election upon the question of issuing municipal bonds cannot be held where the Constitution provides that not more than one election shall be held in each year, but such question must be submitted at a general election. Belknap v. Louisville (Ky.) 256

7. The issuance of negotiable bonds by a township is authorized by Kan. Laws 1879, chap. 50, authorizing townships to refund their indebtedness. Rathbone v. Hopper (Kan.) 674

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; of cashier; duration and extent of liability. 477

To secure fidelity of a firm as agents. 861

BRIBERY. See INDICTMENT, 3, 4.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 7.

1. A mistaken declaration of the maturity of stock by a building and loan association, when the stock is in fact not matured, will not make the stockholder a creditor or put him in the position of a holder of matured stock in subsequently winding up the affairs of the association when insolvent. Post v. Mechanics' Bldg. & L. Assn. (Tenn.) 201

2. Payment of dues in advance under an agreement with a building and loan association for interest upon the advances until they are absorbed by dues does not entitle the stockholder in case of the insolvency of the association to be treated as a creditor with the right to repayment of his advances with interest,—especially when the agreement for interest thereon was not warranted by the charter. Id.

3. Payments of dues upon stock in a building and loan association cannot be credited upon an usurious loan to stockholders in winding up the affairs when the association is insolvent, since such credit would relieve the borrowing shareholders from their share of the losses and throw them all on the nonborrowing stockholders. Id.

4. Loans at fixed premiums without free and competitive bidding, as required by the Tennessee statutes (Mill. & V. Code, § 1751), cannot be lawfully made by a building and loan association, but are usurious, if the premium is more than lawful interest. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Building and loan associations; application of dues to mortgage debt. 201

BUILDINGS. See also NEGLIGENCE, 1-3; COVENANT, 2-4; EVIDENCE, 12, 13.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Buildings; individual liability for falling walls or buildings:—Liability of owner or occupier; building in possession of contractor; liability for injury to person in street; liability for injury to person on adjoining property; liability for injury to person on property; neglect to comply with covenants in lease; illegal building; liability of firemen; act of third person; vis major; fire, contributory negligence. 557

CARRIERS. See also COMMERCE; DAMAGES, 2; EVIDENCE, 11.

1. The relations between a steamboat company and a passenger occupying a stateroom are those that exist between an innkeeper and his guest. Adams v. New Jersey Steamboat Co. (N. Y.) 683

2. Theft of money from the clothing of a steamer passenger during the night while he is occupying a stateroom with door locked and windows fastened renders the carrier liable for the loss as an insurer and without any proof of negligence, if the sum lost was reasonable and proper for the passenger to carry on his person to defray the expenses of his journey. Id.

84 L. R. A.

3. Trainmen are not guilty of wilful or wanton neglect of duty in failing to stop a freight train running on a sharp up-grade at a speed of 8 miles an hour, to remove a boy eight years and five months old, who, in violation of the statutes as well as of the orders of the engineer caught hold of and hung to one of the cars in the moving train,—especially where it does not appear that the train could safely be stopped at that place. Pittsburgh, C. O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Redding (Ind.) 767

4. The act of crossing a car platform from one car to another while the train is in motion is not negligence as matter of law in the absence of any rule of the carrier prohibiting it or any attempt to prevent passengers from so doing. McAfee v. Huidekoper (D. C. App.) 720

5. The failure of a carrier to furnish a seat for a passenger does not justify him in going to a place of peril on the platform when there is plenty of standing room in the car. Cleveland, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun (Ind.) 141

6. Going from a car in which there is plenty of standing room to the lower step of the car platform in order to vomit, when the train is running at the rate of 25 miles per hour, constitutes such contributory negligence on the part of a boy fifteen years of age as to preclude any recovery from the carrier for his injuries when thrown off by a jerk of the train. Id.

7. The contract of a baggage transfer company to transport baggage from a residence to a railroad depot is fully performed so that its responsibility ceases when the baggage is delivered to the agent of the railroad company at the depot. Annisston Transfer Co. v. Gurley (Ala.) 137

8. Provisions in a carrier's contract that notice of injury to cattle must be given before they are unloaded or mixed with others, and that no animal shall be considered as worth more than a specified sum, conflict with a constitutional provision that common carriers shall not contract for relief from their common-law liability. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Taber (Ky.) 685

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

When person becomes a passenger. 783

Contributory negligence of passenger. 141

Negligence of passenger in passing from one car to another:—The general rule; passenger assumes incidental risks; obedience to instructions; vestibuled trains; negligence in fact. 720

Loss of money by passenger; carrier as insurer. 682

Contracts restricting liability. 685

Liability of baggage transfer companies:—(I.) As common carriers; (II.) when liable; (III.) limitation of liability; (IV.) the effect of custom. 137 CASE.

1. A direct precedent for the action is not necessary to give a right of action for a wrong. Kujek v. Goldman (N. Y.) 156

2. A man who induces another to marry a girl by false representations that she is virtnous when in fact she has been seduced by himself and has become pregnant is liable for damages in an action by the husband for fraud.

Id.

8. Loss of the comfort founded upon affection and respect derived from conjugal society is sufficient, irrespective of any pecuniary damages, to sustain an action by a husband against one who has fraudulently induced him to marry a woman who is pregnant by another.

Id.

CASES CERTIFIED AND REPORTED.

A question arising upon the pleadings which is certified to the supreme court for decision cannot be answered if the facts do not sufficiently appear in the pleadings to authorize a complete determination of it. Grand Island & N. W. R. Co. v. Baker (Wyo.) 885

CASHIER. See BONDS, 1, 2.

CIVIL SERVICE.

1. A preference of veterans over all other persons except women, given by Mass. Stat. 1896, § 2, when they have passed the civil service examination, is not unconstitutional. Re Opinion of the Justices (Mass.) 58

2. The discretion to appoint veterans to certain offices and employment without an examination, which is given by Mass. Stat. 1896, § 3, if in the opinion of the appointing power the public service requires this to be done, is not unconstitutional. Id.

3. The provision that civil service commissioners shall establish rules to secure the employment of veterans in the labor service of the commonwealth and its cities and towns in preference to all other persons except women which is made by Mass. Stat. 1896, § 6, if construed to mean that only those found competent shall be preferred, is within the constitutional power of the legislature. Id.

CLERKS. See ATTORNEYS; JUDGMENT, 5.

CLUB. See INJUNCTION, 1; INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

COLLEGE. See STATE UNIVERSITY.

COMMERCE.

1. Prohibiting common carriers from contracting to limit their common-law liability does not interfere with the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Taber (Ky.) 685

2. A train composed of empty coal cars, although destined for a point in another state to procure a load, is not engaged in transporting articles of interstate commerce so as to be beyond the control of state laws. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 105

3. State laws prohibiting the running of railway trains on Sunday, if enacted in good faith for the preservation and protection of the health and morals of the people, and without discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Id.

84 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; state regulation of Sunday trains. 105

CONFEDERATE MONEY. See EVIDENCE, 6; PAYMENT, 1.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. A marriage valid in the state in which it is contracted will be recognized as valid in another state if it does not contravene the declared policy of the positive law of the latter, although it may have been made without the form or ceremony required in the latter state. Jackson v. Jackson (Md.) 773

2. A contract made in Iowa for the transmission of a telegram from a place in that state to a place in Missouri is governed by the laws of Iowa making the proprietor of the telegraph liable for all mistakes in transmission. Reed v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Mo.) 492

3. The law of the forum prevails as to the form of the remedy, the conduct of the trial, and the rules of evidence in an action upon a transitory cause of action arising in another jurisdiction. Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. (Wis.) 508

4. The mere existence of a slight variance of view, not amounting to a fundamental difference of policy, between the state in which a cause of action under the common law arose and that in which it is sought to be enforced, does not deprive the court of the latter state of jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Id.

5. A Federal court in Tennessee will enforce the Mississippi Constitution precluding the defence to an action for an employee's injury that he knew of the defective or unsafe character of the machinery or appliances by which he was injured, when the injury was received in Mississippi, since this provision is simply a variation from, and not repugnant to, the law of Tennessee. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg (C. C. App. 6th C.) 898

6. The principles of comity do not apply to an action by a foreign receiver of a foreign mutual insurance company acting under a decree in the foreign jurisdiction making an assessment on premium notes, even if otherwise applicable, where the notes were taken for insurance on property in the state while the company was doing business within the state in violation of McClain's (Iowa) Code, § 1144, prohibiting foreign insurance companies from doing business without compliance with the conditions therein mentioned. Parker v. Lamb (Iowa) 704

7. A contract to pay money to a loan association situated in another state at its place of business, made by a resident of one state, who applied to become a member of the association as resident in the foreign state, is to be governed by the laws of its residence, although it had an agency at the place where the borrower resided through which the contract was made. Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Assn. (Pa.) 595

Liability of stockholders.

8. The Kansas statute providing remedies by execution or action to enforce the personal liability of stockholders which the state Constitution declares shall be secured, being construed by the state courts to create a personal liability against the stockholders severally in the nature of a contract obligation, the enforcement of such liability by action at law is not confined to the courts of that state, but may be had in a Federal court sitting in another state wherein a stockholder resides, when it has jurisdiction of the parties. Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 7th C.) 742

But see cases following.

9. The statutory liability of a stockholder in an insolvent bank is not primary and contractual so as to be enforceable in any jurisdiction where the stockholder may be found. Marshall v. Sherman (N. Y.) 757

10. The statutory liability of stockholders in foreign corporations cannot be enforced except at the domicile of the corporation when the law of the domicile provides the remedy. Id.

11. If, under any circumstances, an action to enforce a statutory liability against a stockholder of a foreign corporation could be enforced outside of the state of its creation, it must be by such modes of procedure as like liabilities created by the state where the suit is brought are enforced against its citizens. Id.

12. Particular provisions of a statute providing for the individual liability of stockholders in a foreign corporation will not be detached and given effect outside of the domicile of the corporation, if it would be impossible to enforce all the provisions of the statute there, and its whole scope indicates that it was intended to be enforced only where passed. Id.

13. A special remedy against stockholders of a corporation provided by the laws of the state where the corporation is domiciled will not, on the ground of comity, be enforced in the courts of another state which has a different and inconsistent method of procedure, where it will result in injustice to the citizens of the latter state. Tuttle v. National Bank of the Republic (Ill.) 750

14. The courts of a state of the domicile of an insolvent corporation must, by an appropriate proceeding, determine the relation of the corporation and its creditors and stockholders and the proportionate share of the corporate indebtedness to be borne by each solvent stockholder before relief can be had against a stockholder in the courts of another state. Id.

15. The courts of another state cannot enforce the stockholders' liability for unpaid subscriptions provided by the Illinois act of 1871-72, p. 299, § 8, as that is not a general contract liability but is to be enforced by the remedy corresponding to garnishment provided in that section. Russell v. Pacific R. Co. (Cal.) 747

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As to the enforcement of stockholder's liability outside of the state of incorporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Conflict of laws; as to marriage. 774

As to contract of foreign loan association. 595

As to life insurance policy. 175

84 L. R. A.

Transitory actions under laws of other states. 395

Remedy for injury in other state; statutory right of action. 504

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also CIVIL SERVICE; COURTS, 2-4; FREE SPEECH; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT; OFFICERS, 2-4; PARDON, 2; STATUTES, 1, 4; TRIAL, 1.

1. The recommendation of a constitutional convention, and the submission of a proposal therefor to popular vote, are properly made by the legislature in the form of a joint resolution, and not in that of an ordinary law. State, Wineman, v. Dahl (N. D.) 97

2. The submission to popular vote of a proposal to hold a constitutional convention is properly made by the legislature, although the legislature has the power to take the initiative with respect to the calling of such convention. Id.

3. An oppressive and unjust law is not void unless it contravenes some provision of the state or Federal Constitution. State v. Harrington (Vt.) 100

Self-executing provisions.

4. Whether or not a constitutional provision is self-executing is a question always of intention, to be determined by the language used and the surrounding circumstances. Illinois O. R. Co. v. Ithenberg (C. C. App. 6th C.) 393

5. A legislative adoption of the exact language of a constitutional provision, omitting only a clause as to the right of the legislature to make an extension of the provision, does not make a legislative construction of the article to the effect that it is not self-executing. Id.

6. A self-executing mandate is made by Miss. Const. § 198, providing that "knowledge by any employee injured, of the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, ways, or appliances, shall be no defense to an action for injury caused thereby," with an exception as to conductors or engineers. Id.

7. The provision of Kan. Const. art. 12, § 2, that dues from corporations shall be secured by individual liability of stockholders to an additional amount equal to the stock owned by each stockholder, and such "other means as shall be provided by law," is not self-executing. Tuttle v. National Bank of the Republic (Ill.) 750; Marshall v. Sherman (N. Y.) 757

Ex post facto or retrospective.

8. A statute denying to convicts under sentence for a second offense the same reductions from their sentence for good behavior that are allowed to other convicts is not ex post facto as applied to the punishment of an offense subsequently committed, although the offender had been convicted of his first offense before the passage of the act. Re Miller (Mich.) 396

9. A statute excluding nonresidents of the state from the benefit of a statute of limitations, when the cause of action arose in the state and the defendant subsequently ceased to be a resident thereof, is not unconstitutional as applied to pre-existing obligations. Bates v. Cullum (Pa.) 440

Delegation of power.

10. The legislature cannot delegate to a levee district the legislative power to levy a tax under Tenn. Const. art. 2, authorizing it to delegate such power to counties and incorporated towns, since this impliedly excludes delegation to any other agency. Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 725

Class legislation.

11. A city ordinance making it unlawful for barbers to pursue their calling on Sunday, without applying to other kinds of employment, is unconstitutional as class legislation. Tacoma v. Krech (Wash.) 68

Property rights; due process of law.

12. The constitutional rights of property do not include the right to send letters or circulars to a debtor threatening to advertise a claim against him for sale, which constitutes an offense under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1895, § 3782, as a threat to injure his credit or reputation. State v. McCabe (Mo.) 127

13. The right to transfer property in payment of a debt when solvent is within the constitutional protection of property rights and is valid by Tennessee Acts 1895, chap. 128, declaring that every transfer of property to prefer creditors or which "would have that effect" shall be void without limiting it to cases of insolvency. Third Nat. Bank v. Divine Grocery Co. (Tenn.) 445

14. Requiring itinerant vendors to deposit $500 with the state treasurer to be returned on the surrender of the license, less the amount of any fines and costs that may have been imposed, does not deprive the licensee of property without due process of law. State v. Harrington (Vt.) 100

Police power.

15. The state has authority to make extensive and varied regulations as to the time, mode, and circumstances in and under which parties shall assert, enjoy, or exercise their rights, without coming in conflict with any of those constitutional principles which are established for the protection of private rights or private property. Id.

16. The police power of the state is the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion, and is not limited to the protection of health, peace, morals, education, and good order, but comprehends all those general laws or internal regulations necessary to secure peace, good order, the health and comfort of society, and the regulation and protection of all property in the state. Id.

17. A statute requiring itinerant vendors who go from place to place and temporarily occupy rooms for the exhibition and sale of goods, to pay a state license of $25 and deposit $500 with the state treasurer as security, and then to pay in addition a local license fee in each place in which they sell goods, amounting to a tax on the value of their stock of goods according to the rate of the last preceding assessment of taxes in that place,—is not unconstitutional although it is oppressive. Id.

18. The police power of the state does not extend to the levying of special assessments on property benefited by a levee. Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 725
84 L. R. A.

19. Any occupation comes within the range of the police power, which is such as to be naturally liable to create a nuisance unless subjected to special regulations, whether it be so conducted as in fact to create a nuisance or not. State v. Orr (Conn.) 279

20. The fact that garbage is not a nuisance or detrimental to health does not exempt it from the police power or entitle a citizen to engage in its transportation without a license. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CRIMINAL LAW; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT; PARDON.

Constitutional law; self-executing provisions. 395

Class legislation by Sunday law. 68

Privilege of contracting; due process of law; monopoly of business. 279

As to right of contract. 467

Statute restricting conveyances to prefer creditors. 446

Annulment of defense under statute of limitations. 440

CONTINUANCE.

A judgment in a trial court against a party whose counsel is, to the knowledge of the court, at the time present in the supreme court in obedience to its rule will not be permitted by the latter court to stand. Peterson v. Atlantic City R. Co. (Pa.) 593

CONTRACTS. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2-6; PARTNERSHIP; SCHOOLS.

1. An instrument would be without consideration and therefore void if a default of the obligor could be held as satisfaction of the consideration. Woodland Oil Co. v. Crawford (Ohio) 62

2. The performance of a contract by a party who has hesitated or refused to complete it may constitute a good consideration for a promise by a third person who will be benefited by such performance. Abbott v. Doane (Mass.) 83

3. A relinquishment by the mother of a bastard child of her right to compel the father by legal proceedings to assist in the maintenance of the child and her support and education of the child at her own separate expense are a sufficient consideration for his promise to make a conveyance of real estate to her. Van Epps v. Redfield (Conn.) 360

4. A construction company becomes a subcontractor, and not an original contractor with a railroad company, when, with full knowledge that a contract company is unable to complete the work, it agrees with it to do so for an agreed sum in cash and bonds, with a provision that it shall have a "subcontractor's lien," although the railroad company has consented to the subletting of the contract and that the construction company shall have a contractor's lien. Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 325

5. A contract restricting persons from engaging in the milling business in the vicinity of a certain city after the completion of an agreement for the sale of their business, although it extends for their lives, is not illegal as in restraint of trade. Kramer v. Old (N. C.) 889

6. To take stock or help to organize or manage a corporation formed to carry on a business after one has agreed, on the sale of such a business, not to continue it in that locality, is a breach of his contract. Id.

7. There can be no recovery as between the parties on a contract made in violation of a statute, the violation of which is prohibited by a penalty, although the statute does not pronounce the contract void or expressly prohibit the same. Sandage v. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) 863

8. The tender back of letters patent by a buyer to the seller places the latter in statu quo so as to entitle the former to rescind the contract of sale on the ground that the letters were void for lack of novelty. Id.

9. The rescission of a written contract to convey land will be decreed in an action to compel specific performance where such performance is denied because of the purchaser's laches and the increased value of the property, although the vendor has obtained a judgment for the purchase price, which he offers to cancel. Hendry v. Benliss (Fla.) 288

10. The rule that the members of the legislative body of a city may not so act or contract as to deprive their successors of the unimpaired exercise of the legislative or governmental power does not apply to the exercise of the business or proprietary powers of the municipality,—such as the power to contract for waterworks, but in the exercise of such power the city is governed by the same rules as a private corporation or individual, and may contract for terms longer than the duration of the terms of office of the members of its legislative body. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) 518

11. The cancellation of a contract by a municipality for a water supply will not be made by a court of equity merely because of the inadequacy of the supply, for which the water company is not in fault, but which is due to the inadequate capacity of the springs which the contract requires the supply to be obtained from. Du Bois v. Du Bois City Waterworks Co. (Pa.) 92

12. A reformation of a contract for a municipal water supply, because of a mutual mistake of the parties as to the adequacy of the stipulated source of supply, is within the power of the court under Pa. act April 29, 1874, § 84, cl. 3, giving power, on a bill filed by any citizen, to make such order as may seem just and equitable for the correction of the alleged impurity or deficiency of the water supply. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contracts; sufficiency of consideration; immoral consideration. 860

Performance of existing contract obligation as consideration for new promise:—In general; payment of existing debt as consideration; 34 L. R. A.

promise to release joint debtor; payment of surety; promise not to sue; compliance with obligation to deliver papers or property; agreement to comply with lease; agreement to comply with marriage contract; promise to do duty; where there is breach on both sides; work already completed when additional promise made; waiver of conditions; acceptance of performance; promise of additional compensation for completing contract; promise to perform additional duty for same consideration; promise by stranger to the contract. 83

In restraint of trade. 890

Inability to perform or get benefit of. 575

Cancellation or rescission of. 93

CONVICTS. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 3, 4. NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The employment of a convict upon the public roads under supervision and control of a public agent by order of the county commissioners is not a "hiring out" of the convict which, by N. C. Code, § 3448, requires an order of court embodied in the sentence. State v. Yandle (N. C.) 893

2. An order of county commissioners for the employment of a convict upon the public roads, made under N. C. Code, § 3448, and without any provision therefor in the sentence or any order of court, is not void on the ground that it is in the nature of an additional judgment against the convict. Id.

CORPORATIONS. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 1, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8-15; CONTRACTS, 6; COUNTIES, 1; EVIDENCE, 5, 29; INSURANCE, 1; JUDGMENT, 2, 3; TAXES, 12.

1. It is a matter of common knowledge that where the ownership of a majority of the stock of a corporation changes, the board of directors usually changes, unless its members are already in harmony with the policy of its purchasers. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 76

2. A corporation purchasing a majority of the stock of another competing one cannot obtain control of its affairs, divert the income of its business, refuse business which would enable the defaulting company to pay its interest, and then institute an action in equity to enforce its obligations for the avowed purpose of obtaining entire control of its property to the injury of the minority stockholders. Id.

3. A corporation owning a majority of the stock of another company, and assuming control of its business through the control of its officers and directors, assumes the same trust relation toward the minority stockholders that a corporation itself usually bears to stockholders. Id.

4. The statutory right of a corporation to purchase stock of another company does not give it any right, as the owner of a majority of the stock and bonds of such company, to manage its affairs so as to cause a default on a mortgage and obtain control of the property by foreclosure at less than its value to the injury of the minority stockholders. Id.

5. The fact that a contract company dominates and controls a railroad company having the same stockholders will not make its engagements operate in legal effect as those of the railroad company with respect to one who is fully aware of the relations of the companies when making a contract with the former for work on the railroad. Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 625

6. A statute of a state in which a railroad company is organized can give it no authority to lease a railroad held by it in another state contrary to the policy of the latter state. Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. (Pa.) 577

7. One who becomes a member of a foreign corporation subjects himself to such laws of the government of its situs as affect its powers and obligations. Warner v. Delbridge & C. Co. (Mich.) 701

8. An assessment which will be binding on nonresident policy holders may be made under the Minnesota statutes upon the premium notes of the holders of mutual policies in an insurance company organized in that state to repay unearned premiums on cash policies issued by the company. Id.

9. An assessment on premium notes, made by a receiver of a mutual insurance company under a decree of the court, is not an adjudication binding on the courts of another state as against the maker of one of such notes who was not a party to the proceedings resulting in the assessment and who before the bankruptcy of the company had surrendered his policy and received back his note. Parker v. Lamb (Iowa) 704

10. A stockholder's liability, which is contractual under the statute, becomes a part of the assets which pass to a receiver for the payment of corporate debts. Cushing v. Perot (Pa.) 737

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; articles of, as contracts. 466

Owning stock of other companies; controlling other company. 78

Effect of assessment on stockholders made under order of court in another state as res judicata. 694

Right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of the state of incorporation:—(I.) In action by corporation or its representative; (II.) in action by creditor of corporation: (a) remedy according to law of forum; (b) for unpaid subscriptions to stock: (1) in general; (2) by creditor's bill; (c) for statutory liability after stock is fully paid for: (1) in general; (2) nature of the liability; (3) liability absolute or distinct from statutory remedy; (4) constitutional liability; (5) exclusiveness of statutory remedy provided in state of incorporation; (6) conditions prescribed by statutes in state of incorporation; (7) action at law; (8) suit in equity; (d) remedies in Federal courts: (1) in general; (2) in equity; (3) at law; (III.) contribution between stockholders of foreign corporations. 787

Foreign right of contract. 596

34 L. R. A.

COSTS AND FEES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Costs; as debts within constitutional provision as to imprisonment. 635

COUNTIES. See also BONDS, 4, 5; PUBLIC MONEY; STATUTES, 11-14, 20.

1. Counties are not included among the corporations referred to in Tenn. Const. art. 11, § 8, prohibiting the creation or increase of the power of corporations by special laws. Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 541

2. A county is not a municipal corporation in the full sense of the term, but only a quasi corporation, and possesses such powers and is subjected to only such liabilities as are especially provided for by law. Schweiss v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. (Nev.) 602

3. Counties are municipalities within the meaning of Wis. Laws 1895, chap. 188, authorizing municipalities to make donations to the state home for the feeble-minded. Lund v. Chippewa County (Wis.) 181

4. Donations by a county, made merely to secure a site for a state institution for the feeble-minded, and in no way affecting the efficiency and successful operation of the institution when established, are not against public policy. Id.

5. A prohibition of county aid to any individual, association, company, or corporation, does not apply to such aid to the state or United States. Lancey v. King County (Wash.) 817

6. A prohibition against county indebtedness for any other than strictly county purposes will not prevent indebtedness for a public canal through the county to connect two large public waterways with the ocean. Id.

7. In determining whether or not county indebtedness violates a constitutional provision that no county shall create any indebtedness exceeding 2 per cent upon the assessed value of the taxable property in it, compulsory obligations imposed by the legislature must be included. Grand Island & N. W. R. Co. v. Baker (Wyo.) 885

8. The fact that the validity of the debt on which a judgment against a county was rendered cannot be questioned in a proceeding to enforce a tax to pay it does not prevent a resistance of the tax on the ground that it was not authorized by law. Id.

9. Recourse to the claims upon which judgments against a county were rendered may be had to determine to what class they belong, and whether or not any limit is imposed upon taxation by which they may be enforced. Id.

10. A judgment against a county for a claim which should have been paid out of current revenue, but was not because the amount limited by the Constitution was exhausted, and which did not become valid county indebtedness because the constitutional limit of indebtedness had already been reached, or because it was not legally adopted by the people, is not "public debt" within the meaning of a provision of a Constitution limiting the tax rate except for public debt and interest thereon. Id.

11. The expense of maintaining the district court is a county purpose which must be provided for out of the fund raised by the limited tax levy authorized by Wyo. Const. art. 15, § 5. Grand Island & N. W. R. Co. v. Baker (Wyo.) 885

12. A board of county commissioners which can only act as a body in session cannot confess judgment against the county under a statute requiring defendant to personally appear in court in order to confess judgment. Id.

13. A power of attorney to confess judgment cannot be given by a board of county commissioners without statutory authority. Id.

14. Compensation to be made to a landowner for land taken by a county for the location of a public road must be paid out of the ordinary county revenue raised by the limited tax provided by Wyo. Const. art. 15, § 5. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Countries, as municipalities; incorporation of. 602

As municipalities; donations by, for public institution. 182

Power to issue bonds; issuing bonds payable in gold. 541

Limitation of indebtedness of. 885

COURTS. See also CONTINUANCE.

1. Two members of the Tennessee court of chancery appeals may hear, consider, confer together, and decide the causes before them, in the absence of the other member of the court from sickness or other reason, although the act creating the court makes no provision as to the number which may act or constitute a quorum, but Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 56, while not applicable to the court, provides generally that a majority of three or more officers to whom joint authority is given may exercise it, unless otherwise declared. Cowan v. Murch (Tenn.) 538

2. A citizen of one state may maintain in the courts of another state a transitory action arising at his residence against another citizen of the same state found in the other state under the provision of the United States Constitution guaranteeing to the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states which the courts of the latter state have no discretionary power to dismiss. Bingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. (Wis.) 508

3. The legislature must be the judge as to whether or not there is reason to apprehend fraud in the sale of goods by itinerant vendors, when it enacts a stringent license law for the prevention of fraud in such sales. State v. Harrington (Vt.) 100

4. The reasonableness of license fees in respect to their amount, when imposed, not by municipal ordinance without legislative authority, but by the state through legislative enactment, is conclusively established by the statute, and cannot be reviewed by the courts. Id.

5. A court cannot declare void a contract for the term of twenty-one years made by a city in the exercise of discretionary power given by the legislature to determine the length 84 L. R. A.

of the term of such contract. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) 518

6. In the construction of the statutes of a state which measure the powers and liabilities of its political organizations Federal courts uniformly follow the interpretation of the highest judicial tribunal of the state, where no question of general or commercial law or of right under the United States Constitution or laws is involved. Id.

7. The decisions of the highest court of a state upon the proper construction to be given to the constitutional and statutory provisions of that state are binding in Federal courts. Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 7th C.) 742

8. The courts of one state will adopt its own methods of construction on a constitutional provision of another state where the courts of the latter state have not construed it. Tuttle v. National Bank of the Republic (Ill.) 750

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; jurisdiction in action between non-residents. 504

Majority or quorum of. 538

COVENANT.

1. The test in equity to determine whether a covenant in a deed runs with the land is the intention of the parties. Landell v. Hamilton (Pa.) 237

2. A covenant that the "house" on a lot conveyed "shall be forever hereafter restricted from having any building or part of a building attached to the said messuage thereon erected more than 10 feet high is not limited to the house or building then existing on the land. Id.

3. A change in the use of premises from residence to business purposes after a covenant restricting erections thereon above a certain height is not sufficient to destroy the effect of the covenant. Id.

4. Building along the division line and partly on each lot a solid wall higher than a covenant requires the servient lot to remain unobstructed for the purpose of furnishing light and air to the dominant lot will prevent the dominant owner, who builds it, from enforcing the covenant in equity as to the space below the top of the wall, but will not absolutely terminate the covenant. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Covenant; running with land; restricting building. 227

CREDITORS' BILL.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

For unpaid subscriptions to stock of foreign corporation. 743

CRIMINAL LAW. See also BIGAMY; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8; CONVICTS; HABEAS CORPUS, 2; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

1. The laws in force when the fatal blow or wound is inflicted govern the crime of murder.

as it is regarded as committed at that time, although the death occurs on a subsequent date. Debney v. State (Neb.) 851

2. A consolidation of separate indictments charging definite offenses, for the purposes of trial, does not make them one offense so as to permit but one sentence. Howard v. United States (C. C. App. 6th C.) 509

3. Cumulative and successive sentences are within the power of a court to impose at common law, and they may be imposed by Federal courts without any express authority by act of Congress. Id.

4. The possibility of a deduction by good-time credits, although contingent on the conduct of the convict, does not render a sentence so indefinite or uncertain that a successive sentence to begin on the expiration of the former will be invalid. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; enhancing penalty of crimes when committed by habitual criminals or prior offenders:—(I.) Validity of statutes and ordinances: (a) in general; (b) ex post facto laws; (c) cruel and unusual punishment; (d) equal protection of the laws; (e) second punishment or jeopardy for the same offense; (II.) Construction and effect of statutes: (a) in general; (b) third and subsequent offenses; (c) conditions as to prior conviction before commission of later offense; (d) conditions as to execution of or relief from prior sentence before commission of later offense; (e) effect of pardon of prior offense; (f) effect of appeal or writ of error to review prior conviction; (g) effect of prior conviction in other state or country; (h) what prior sentence must have been; (i) similarity or identity of prior and subsequent offenses; (j) procedure: (1) in general; (2) pleas and admissions; (3) order of trial; separating issues; (4) proof; (5) attacking validity of prior conviction; (6) verdict and judgment; (7) appeal or writ of error. 898

Reduction of prisoner's term by allowance for good behavior:—(I.) Constitutionality of statute providing therefor; (II.) Construction and effect of statutes: (a) in general; (b) Federal cases. 509

CROPS. See EMBLEMENTS.

CUSTOM. See CARRIERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DAMAGES. See also TRIAL, 6.

1. Exemplary damages are recoverable for fraud in inducing a man to marry a woman who is pregnant by another. Kujek v. Goldman (N. Y.) 156

2. Exemplary damages cannot be recovered from a carrier for the malicious act of the conductor in ejecting a passenger unless his act is either authorized or ratified by the carrier. Robinson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. (Wis.) 205

3. The holder of a fire insurance policy insuring "forever" the insured and his assigns may, where the insurer wrongfully terminates the policy, secure a new policy in another company, and recover from the old company 34 L. R. A.

the costs thereof. Marshall v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 159

4. The difference between the actual market value of a lot and the price received by the measure of damages for a mistake in the transmission of a telegram which is not in cipher, to an agent by which a lower price is named to him than that stated by the principal, and in reliance upon which he executes the contract. Reed v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Mo.) 492

5. A verdict for $500 is not excessive as damages for the mental anguish suffered by a father on account of inexcusable delay in delivering a telegram to a minister of the gospel calling him to the bedside of a daughter who desired baptism and union with the church, where the result was that he failed to come until after she was dead. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robinson (Tenn.) 431

6. No recovery can be had for a miscarriage resulting from fright caused by the negligence of another. Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. (N. Y.) 781

7. Damages for the death of a married woman cannot include the loss to her minor child where the action is brought by her husband, under Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 3180, which provides that a right of action for injuries causing the death of any person shall not abate by reason of the death, but shall pass to his widow, or if none, to his children, or to his personal representative, for the benefit of the widow or next of kin, but fails to make any express provision as to the beneficiary in case of the death of a married woman, and leaves the recovery to go to the husband jure mariti, as it would have gone at common law but for its rule of abatement. Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Johnson (Tenn.) 442

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; exemplary, for act of carrier's servant. 205

DAMS.

1. A statute giving the trustees of a public canal power to raise the water in a river to a certain height by means of a dam, and providing that if in constructing the canal or developing the dam it becomes necessary to use private property, the board "shall have a right to acquire such right of way" in the manner now provided by law, requires the settlement of damages for flooding lands by the dam under the eminent domain law, and not by suit for nuisance. Leitseny v. Columbia Water Power Co. (S. C.) 215

2. Failure to object to the raising of water along abutting lands by a dam across a river constitutes permission to do so within the provision of a statute that in case any person permits entry upon his land for the construction of a public improvement without previous compensation he shall have a right to petition for the assessment of his damages, so that such remedy is exclusive. Id.

3. The grant of a right to flood a part of a farm by the erection of a dam will preclude the maintenance of an action for injuries caused by the dam to the remaining portion. Nuna-maker v. Columbia Water Power Co. (S. C.) 222

DEATH. See also DAMAGES, 7; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 10.

1. A surviving husband as such cannot maintain a suit for the wrongful killing of his wife, under Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 8180, preventing the abatement of the suit, although the recovery inures to his benefit, but he must bring the action as administrator. Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Johnson (Tenn.) - 443

2. The right of action for damages resulting from death is exclusive of an administrator's right of action to recover for the pain and expense suffered by the person of his intestate from the injuries which caused his death, under R. I. Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 176, creating a right of action for death, and also providing for the survival of actions of "trespass on the case for damages to the person" as the survival applies to cases of injuries not causing death. Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills (R. I.) 797

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; right of action for death of married woman. 442

How many distinct causes of action arise from injuries resulting in death:—(I.) Alternative action for death or injury: (a) generally; (b) actions for death as affected by release: (1) by injured party; (2) by others; (3) by plaintiffs; (c) other actions as a bar: (1) actions for the injury; (2) other actions for the death; (d) multiplicity of actions for death; (e) bar of other actions by limitation; (f) for death of infants; (II.) concurrent actions for death and injury. 788

DEBT. See IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18.

DEDICATION. See PUBLIC GROUNDS, 1, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dedication; acceptance of; nonuser; estoppel as to. 784

DEED. See DAMS, 8; EVIDENCE, 17; TRUSTS.

DEFINITIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 17; LIENS, 1; PARENT AND CHILD.

DELEGATION OF POWER. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION. See also ESTOPPEL, 6; PARENT AND CHILD.

A fraud upon the rights of a wife is committed when the husband strips himself of all his property just before death by delivering deeds of real estate that had been made some 34 L. R. A.

years before and giving a check for money which constituted all of his personal property in order to defeat his wife's rights as his heir, after obtaining the full benefit of the property up to the end of his own life. Smith v. Smith (Colo.) 49

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Descent; disposal of property in fraud of wife's rights. 50

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 11, 12, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DONATION. See BONDS, 4; COUNTIES, 4, 5; PUBLIC MONEY.

DOWER. See also DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dower; as affected by insanity of husband. 224

DRAINS AND SEWERS. See also OIL, TRIAL, 7.

The fact that a sewer blows up is entitled to consideration upon the question of care on the part of a municipality in respect to its management. Fuchs v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Drains; liability of city for dangerous sewers. 118

DRUNKENNESS. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4, 14, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

1. A man who comes in contact with an electric-light wire on the side of a building while climbing out of a window upon a cornice while at work painting the building is not guilty of contributory negligence, unless in so doing he fails to exercise the degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually exercise under such circumstances. McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. (Ky.) 812

2. The apparently proper insulation of electric-light wires on the side of a building is an invitation or inducement to persons painting the building to risk the consequences of contact with them,—especially in the middle of the day. Id.

3. The utmost care is necessary to keep the insulation of dangerous electric wires perfect at a place where people have the right to go for work, business, or pleasure, although very great care may be sufficient as to wires at other places. Id.

4. The fact that the insulation of dangerous electric wires is very expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for failure to make such insulation perfect at points where people have the right to go for work, business, or pleasure. Id.

5. The only power of regulation impliedly reserved by a city on giving to a telegraph company or other such corporation its consent that electric wires may be laid under the streets is such regulation as the safety and welfare of the public may demand, where the corporation derives its power to place wires underground from the state, subject only to the consent of the municipality. State, St. Louis Underground Service Co. v. Murphy (Mo.) 369

6. An ordinance granting to a subway company and its assigns the right to occupy space under any streets in the city for the period of fifty years, to the practical exclusion of all other public uses, with power to select its own patrons and dictate its own terms and elect which streets it will use, is void as an attempt to surrender the power to regulate the underground use of streets by wire-using companies. Id.

7. A city has no power to grant to a corporation the right to lay a subway for electric wires under all the city streets, without reserving the power of supervision and control, not only of the work of excavating in the streets, but of all matters incident to its location, construction, maintenance, and use, although the sole purpose of the subway may be that of leasing to public wire-using corporations. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Electrical uses; grant of franchises to electrical subway companies. 369

ELECTRIC RAILROADS. See STREET RAILWAYS, 1, 2, 4.

EMBLEMENTS.

Unmatured crops growing upon land belonging to the owner of the crops are part and parcel of the land for the purpose of jurisdiction of an action for damages to them. Bagley v. Columbus S. R. Co. (Ga.) 286

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also DAMS, 1, 2.

1. That title to a public improvement when it is completed is to be conveyed to the United States will not prevent the state from exercising its power of eminent domain to acquire the necessary land upon which to construct it. Lancey v. King County (Wash.) 817

2. A constitutional right to a remedy for injury to property does not include the right to recover for an injury not different in kind, but only in degree, from that suffered by the community in general from the vacation of a remote part of a street, though it causes depreciation in the value of property, but leaves ample means of access thereto. Danter v. Indianapolis U. R. Co. (Ind.) 769

3. A railroad chartered to extend from a certain town past a sawmill, through rough, mountainous, timbered, and sparsely settled country, to the middle of a certain section on lands of the United States, without going near any other town, city, or settlement or other railroad, but which has been built only from the sawmill about 2 miles from the town, for 5½ miles into the timbered region, and has no freight or passenger depots, passenger coaches, 34 L. R. A.

or freight cars, except trucks, and has never charged passengers any fare,—is a public way for which eminent domain may be exercised, where it is not shown that it was intended simply as a logging road, and everyone having occasion to use it as a passenger or for the transportation of freight has a right to require the service. Bridal Veil Lumbering Co. v. Johnson (Or.) 868

4. Payment into court of an award of view-ers from which an appeal is taken by the property owners is not sufficient to satisfy Pa. Const. art. 16, § 8, requiring just compensation to be "paid or secured before the taking, injury, or destruction" of property in eminent domain cases, and therefore the act of May 14, 1889, providing that on such payment into court the right to use the property shall vest in the corporation seeking to take it, and that the money shall remain in court to await the final judgment on appeal, is unconstitutional. Harrisburg, C. & C. Turnp. Road Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Elec. R. Co. (Pa.) 439

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; payment or security of just compensation. 439

ESTOPPEL.

1. No one may to the damage of another deny the truth of representations by which he has purposely or carelessly induced the latter to change his situation. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (O. C. App. 8th C.) 518

2. The payment of interest on town bonds which were void because issued without authority does not ratify them. Union Bank v. Oxford (N. C.) 487

3. A city is estopped to defeat a recovery for rent of hydrants as against bondholders who loaned money on a mortgage of the plant and income of waterworks built under the direction and accepted by formal resolution of the city council, and completed according to the terms of a defeated ordinance, where the city has paid rents without protest for fourteen months, either on the ground that there was no contract or that it had no power for the term mentioned in the ordinance or to grant the exclusive right to the use of its streets for water pipes. [Per Sanborn, J.] Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (O. C. App. 8th C.) 518

4. An equitable estoppel will preclude the public from claiming as a public park land so designated on a recorded plat, where it makes no claim to the land except by failing to assess it for taxes for many years, and then the owner files a new plat on which the land is described as his own property, after which he continues in possession as he always had done, takes down the old fence and makes a new one, expends money in other improvements upon it, pays taxes for a series of years upon it and builds a sidewalk along one side by order of the city authorities, and there is an express adoption of his new plat about seven years after it was filed by an act incorporating the city. Reuter v. Lawe (Wis.) 788

5. A state is not estopped from denying the validity of a contract made without authority because the contractor has in good faith performed services under it, since he must at his peril know the authority of those who seem to act for the state. Mullan v. State (Cal.) 262

6. A woman is estopped to claim a share in an estate as widow, although a divorce obtained from her in a suit brought by the guardian for her insane husband was absolutely void, where she has accepted alimony under the decree and contracted a subsequent marriage. Mohler v. Shank (Iowa) 161

7. Legatees of full age who demand and compel a distribution to them of the proceeds of a sale by an executor of the interest of a deceased partner, although protesting at the same time that they do not admit that this is all that is due, thereby ratify the sale, and cannot afterwards deny the executor's power to make it or claim anything additional on account of the goodwill of the business for which nothing was received. [Per Beatty, Ch. J., Henshaw and Temple, JJ.] Philbrook v. Newman (Cal.) 265

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also DEDICATION.

Estoppel; of state. 262

EVIDENCE. See also BANKS, 6.

Judicial notice.

1. The courts are charged with knowledge under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subs. 2, 3, of whatever is established by law, and of all public as well as private acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state. Mullan v. State (Cal.) 262

2. The court can judicially know that a certain town is one of the smaller towns of the state. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robinson (Tenn.) 481

3. It is a matter of common knowledge that a bicycle under a rider of ordinary strength and experience can attain a much higher rate of speed than that of an electric car running about 10 miles an hour, and by mere pressure of the hand can be instantly turned aside so as to leave a street-car track on which it is going. Eberett v. Los Angeles Consol. E. R. Co. (Cal.) 850

4. The fact that gases form from crude petroleum oil upon its subjection to heat will be judicially noticed by the courts. Fuchs v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118

Presumptions and burden of proof.

5. It will be presumed, in the absence of any decision to the contrary in a sister state, that the contractual liability of a stockholder in that state goes to a receiver as assets for the payment of corporate debts. Cushing v. Peot (Pa.) 787

6. An agent will be presumed, in the absence of directions to the contrary from a principal residing in the state, to have been authorized to receive Confederate money in payment of a debt or judgment, at a time and place when and where such money was generally received in business transactions and was 84 L. R. A.

the current money of the state. Hendry v. Bentiss (Fla.) 283

7. Destruction by a servant of his employer's books after the latter's death will not raise the presumption that they contained charges against the servant,—especially where they were not destroyed until after they had been examined and the servant claimed to have been executing his employer's orders. Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 581

8. An executor resisting payment of a claim for compensation for services rendered to the testator by a person not related to him on the ground that they were rendered in consideration of his maintenance, has the burden of showing that fact. Id.

9. A presumption that a girl became unconscious before a minister summoned by telegraph could have reached her does not arise from the averment that she became unconscious after sending the message and died before he arrived, where in the same action it is said that if the telegram had been promptly delivered he would have arrived in time to have administered to her spiritual wants. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robinson (Tenn.) 481

10. A mistake in the transmission of a telegram makes a prima facie case of negligence, and casts on the telegraph company the burden of disproving negligence. Read v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Mo.) 492

11. No presumption of negligence can arise from the mere fact that a passenger was injured while attempting to pass from one car to another while the train was in motion. McAfee v. Huidekoper (D. C. App.) 720

12. The burden of showing that a latent defect in the construction of a building might have been discovered and removed by the owner before the fall of the building by reason thereof rests upon the party asserting negligence in such respect, in the absence of evidence tending to connect such cause with the owner's negligence. Ryder v. Ksney (Minn.) 557

13. The falling of a building without any apparent cause, in the absence of explanatory circumstances, raises a presumption of failure by the owner to exercise ordinary care to keep it in a safe condition. Id.

14. Proof by one injured by eating unwholesome food at a public restaurant of the fact of eating the food and of consequent sickness is not sufficient to make a prima facie case in his favor against the restaurant keeper, nor to shift the burden upon the latter to establish due care. Sheffer v. Willoughby (Ill.) 464

Documents.

15. An invalid contract to dissolve a marriage between husband and wife is not admissible in his favor to show his good faith in contracting a later marriage, when charged with bigamy, under a statute which does not require any other criminal intent than is involved in entering into the prohibited marriage. State v. Zichfeld (Nev.) 784

16. A letter in which the writer refers to a man as her husband, and which is handed him to read, and which after he reads he incloses in an envelope and puts in his pocket with other letters apparently for the purpose of posting it, may be put in evidence as an admission on his part on an issue as to the fact of marriage. Re Hulett's Estate (Minn.) 384

17. Conveyances describing the grantor as a single man are inadmissible in evidence after his death against a person claiming to be his widow, in order to disprove the marriage. Id.

18. Memoranda of accounts not in regular account books are not admissible as secondary evidence in the absence of anything to show that the items had ever been entered in such books, or if so that they could not be produced. Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 581

19. Memoranda written by a deceased person upon dates on a calendar indicating payment of money to his creditor but not specifying the amounts, nor shown to have been made in regular course of business or to have been continuous, are not admissible as evidence that such payments were made. Id.

Physical examination.

20. The measurement in the presence of the jury of a woman's foot and her leg 6 inches above the ankle, in a suit for injuries to the foot and ankle, must be permitted by the court when there is a direct conflict as to such measurements by the medical men called by the respective parties,—at least if the witness herself does not object. Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 207

Oral, as to writings.

21. Parol evidence is inadmissible to extend the effect of a written contract to abrogate a prior agreement beyond the terms of such contract where it is complete and there is no apparent ambiguity therein that requires an explanation. Sandage v. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) 863

22. Oral evidence that a landlord agreed to put the leased premises in safe condition before the contract was made, or that at the time it was made he and his agent represented that they had been put in safe condition as promised, is admissible where the written contract relates only to the obligations and undertakings imposed upon the tenant, and does not in fact include all of these. Hines v. Wilcox (Tenn.) 824

Miscellaneous.

23. A lawyer of another state who declares that he is familiar with the law there may be allowed to prove such law as to the requisites of a valid marriage. Jackson v. Jackson (Md.) 778

24. The statute of limitations of the state in which a cause of action arose is not available in an action in another state for the enforcement of such cause of action, unless it is offered in evidence. Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. (Wis.) 508

25. What a conductor said after allowing a passenger to get back on the car because he had become convinced that he had paid his fare, although he had put the passenger off because he thought he had not paid the fare, is a part of the res gestæ of the ejection. Robinson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. (Wis.) 205

26. A witness cannot testify to the general reputation of a woman for chastity while living with an alleged husband from whom she has since separated in order to repudiate a presumption of marriage. Jackson v. Jackson (Md.) 778

27. A divided reputation in the community as to the marriage of persons cannot be proved. Id.

28. Evidence as to sparks thrown and fires set by unidentified engines is admissible in an action against a railroad company for fires charged to have been set by sparks, where there is evidence that the fire started while two trains were passing. Van Steuben v. Centra. R. Co. (Pa.) 577

29. Evidence that officers of a corporation, acting in the interest of another company which owned a majority of its stock, declined to accept business which would produce a fund with which to pay interest that was due, and diverted its income to other and improper purposes, whereby a default of the interest was occasioned, is admissible in defense of a foreclosure instituted on behalf of such other corporation as owner of a majority of the mortgage bonds. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. E. Co. (N. Y.) 76

30. A woman who authorizes her attorney to employ detectives to watch her husband, whom she suspects of infidelity, for the purpose of obtaining evidence which will entitle her to a divorce, and who goes with them at a time appointed to surprise him in a compromising position with a lewd woman employed by them for that purpose, may be found to have known that the woman's movements were governed by them, so as to show connivance on her part which will bar her right to divorce. Dennis v. Dennis (Conn.) 449

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; presumption against the destroyer (spoliator) of evidence:—(I.) Where a party fails to produce evidence after demand or notice by the party entitled to the production thereof; (II.) where a party fails to introduce documentary ("the best") evidence which would properly be a part of the case: (a) the rule stated; (b) the substituted evidence; (c) the rule and evidence in admiralty; (III.) where a party adversely interested destroys or withholds evidence to which the adversary is entitled: (a) the rule; (b) the proof; (c) the damages. 581

Of reputation of marriage. 774

Of mailing of paper. 487

Personal examination of injured party. 209

Of pedigree; declarations in course of business; res gestæ. 384

EXCAVATION. See HIGHWAYS, 1, 2.

EXECUTION. See also ATTORNEYS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Execution; imprisonment on, see IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Against railroad. 565

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See EVIDENCE, 8.EXPLOSION. See also BLASTING; OIL; TRIAL, 7, 8.

Time for repairs after notice of the unsafe condition of a locomotive boiler cannot be claimed by a railroad company, so as to excuse it from liability for injury to a person near the railroad, caused by an explosion of the boiler, if it could have avoided the explosion by discontinuing the use of the locomotive. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 298

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Explosion; liability for negligence in case of. 294

EXPORTS. See TAXES, 7.EX POST FACTO LAWS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As to habitual criminals. 399

FENCES.

Fences permanently affixed to land constitute a part of the realty for the purpose of jurisdiction of an action for damages to them. Bagley v. Columbus S. R. Co. (Ga.) 286

FINES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Imprisonment for, as imprisonment for debt. 651

FIRES. See EVIDENCE, 28; TRIAL, 9, 10.FOOD. See also EVIDENCE, 14; LICENSE, 2, 8.

A person injured by eating unwholesome food at a public restaurant must, in order to recover damages from the person keeping the restaurant, establish carelessness or negligence on his part. Sheffer v. Wiloughby (Ill.) 484

FORFEITURE. See MINES, 2.FORMER JEOPARDY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As to habitual criminals. 400

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES. See also ATTACHMENT; BANKS; CASE, 2, 8; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; STATUTES, 5, 18.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; in inducing marriage. 156
Imprisonment for debt in case of. 642

FREE SPEECH.

The constitutional guaranty of the right to speak, write, or publish on any subject, does not extend to the sending of letters or circulars to a debtor threatening to advertise a claim against him for sale, which is a threat to injure his credit or reputation in violation of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8782. State v. McCabe (Mo.) 127

FRIGHT. See also DAMAGES, 6; PROXIMATE CAUSE; STREET RAILWAYS, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also STREET RAILWAYS.

Fright; action for damages caused by. 782

GARBAGE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 19, 20.

1. An ordinance prohibiting the collection or transportation of garbage without a license therefor is authorized by a charter giving power to regulate by ordinance the collection and removal of garbage, although it makes no express provision for licenses. State v. Orr (Conn.) 279

2. The wrongful refusal to a person of a license for transportation of garbage does not entitle him to pursue the business without a license in violation of an ordinance, but his remedy is by mandamus. Id.

8. "Refuse matter" within the meaning of an ordinance prohibiting the transportation without a license of "such refuse matter as accumulates in the preparation of food for the table" includes only what is abandoned as worthless, but such materials as may be properly utilized for other purposes when they do not constitute a nuisance remain property which may be sold or otherwise disposed of at the will of the owner. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Garbage; validity of ordinance as to. 279

GAS. See EVIDENCE, 4; MINES, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.GIFT. See also INCOMPETENT PERSONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

One who is placed in possession of land by the owner in anticipation of a devise thereof in his will, and who makes improvements thereon, will be protected, after the owner has become a lunatic, against dispossession by his guardian. Potter v. Berry (N. J. Err. & App.) 297

GOLD. See BONDS, 5.GOOD TIME. See CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.GOODWILL. See PARTNERSHIP, 1.HABEAS CORPUS.

1. The question of error in an order consolidating indictments cannot be re-examined by writ of habeas corpus, as error in that respect would not make the judgment and sentence void as without jurisdiction and authority. Howard v. United States (C. C. App. 6th C.) 509

2. An omission in a copy of the mittimus furnished under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1028, by a marshal to the warden of a penitentiary, when it is a mere clerical error and no such omission exists in the original mittimus or sentence, does not entitle the prisoner to his release on habeas corpus. Id.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS. See CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 14.

HIGHWAYS. See also ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES, 5-7; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8; TRIAL, 4, 5.

1. A pedestrian's knowledge that the town is laying watermains is not sufficient to give notice of an excavation at a particular place near a crossing. Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 207

2. An unguarded and unlighted excavation in close proximity to a crosswalk may constitute negligence of a municipality, although the crosswalk itself is not defective. Id.

3. Depreciation in the value of property by the added inconvenience of access thereto, consequent on the vacation of a part of a street at a point some distance therefrom, is an injury not different in kind, but only in degree, from that suffered by the community in general, and will not sustain a right of action for damages. Dantzer v. Indianapolis U. R. Co. (Ind.) 769

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES.

Negligence as to crosswalk. 208

Lawful use of streets. 870

HOMESTEAD.

A pledge of property insured in a mutual insurance company as security for payment of the owner's share of the debts and liabilities of the company is a mortgage within the meaning of a statute restricting the modes of waiving homestead rights to alienation or mortgage of the property. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Assn. v. Burch (S. C.) 806

HOMICIDE. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homicide; time when deemed to be committed. 851

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 1, 2, 12; CASE, 2, 8; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; DAMAGES, 1; DEATH, 1; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; ESTOPPEL, 6; EVIDENCE, 15-17, 26, 27, 80.

1. A present agreement between competent parties is sufficient to make them husband and wife, without holding themselves out as such to the public, or acting upon it by professedly living together in that relation. Re Hulet's Estate (Minn.) 884

2. A marriage by contract between parties competent to enter into that relation with each other is valid under Nev. act November 23, 34 L. R. A.

1861 (Nev. Gen. Stat. chap. 4), making provisions as to licenses and the persons by whom marriages may be celebrated, but containing no express clause of nullity as to marriages otherwise contracted. State v. Zichfeld (Nev.) 784.

3. A marriage invalid for want of mental capacity of a party thereto may be made valid afterwards when the party is competent, by any acts or conduct which amount to a recognition of the marriage. Prine v. Prine (Fla.) 87

4. Intoxication to render one incompetent to enter into a marriage contract is such that the person is for the time non compos mentis, and does not know what he is doing, and is deprived of reason. Id.

Wife's contracts.

5. A contract by a married woman to pay for the support of her insane husband in an asylum, not made in the mode provided by statute, is not valid under Ala. Code, § 2346, giving a wife capacity to contract as if sole, "with the assent or concurrence of her husband expressed in writing," and § 2350, authorizing her to engage in trade or business without his consent if he is of unsound mind or has abandoned her. McAnally v. Alabama Insane Hospital (Ala.) 223

6. A statute excepting accommodation indorsement from the contracts which may be made by a married woman does not render invalid a renewal after marriage of such an indorsement made before marriage. Harrisburg Nat. Bank v. Bradshaw (Pa.) 597

7. A married woman may confirm the act of her attorney in renewing, in excess of his authority, her indorsement on a note given before marriage, if she could have conferred the power on him in the first instance. Id.

8. The facts that renewal notes are not made until after the old ones are overdue, and that the old ones are not protested for nonpayment, will not make the renewals new contracts beyond the power of a married woman to make if the original note was indorsed before her marriage and the renewals are in pursuance of a general understanding that they shall be made, and there was no intention that they should be new contracts. Id.

Actions.

9. The sale of laudanum as a beverage to a married woman, knowing that it is destroying her mind and body and causing loss to her husband, when continued after his repeated warnings and protest, renders the seller liable to him for the damages which he sustains on account of the loss of her services. Holleman v. Harward (N. C.) 808

10. A husband's right of action for the loss of his wife's society on account of injuries which result in her death is defeated by a recovery of judgment by her personal representative in an action for her death, brought under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 57, § 1, for the benefit of her estate, which is more advantageous to him than his common-law right of action for loss of her society. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain (Ky.) 788

Divorce.

11. Jurisdiction of a divorce suit cannot be obtained on a complaint by the guardian of an insane man, although the wife is properly served and appears to contest the jurisdiction. Mohler v. Shank (Iowa) 161

12. Courts will use their discretion to defeat any and all attempts to use the forms of the law of divorce to minister to the caprices of the fickle-minded, or to the revenges of the disappointed or vindictive, or to the passions of the incontinent. Dennis v. Dennis (Conn.) 449

13. The right to a divorce for adultery will be barred if plaintiff consented to the employment of a person to allure defendant into the offense for which the action is brought. Id.

14. Habitual intemperance, within the meaning of a statute authorizing a divorce for such cause, is not shown by the facts that defendant about once in three weeks became intoxicated during the evening to such an extent that the next morning he did not go as usual to his work, and had continued to do so for two years, if it had not caused loss of his position, nor produced want or suffering in the family. Id.

Alimony.

15. The power to grant alimony independent of statute belongs to a court of chancery in a suit to declare a marriage void ab initio. Prine v. Prine (Fla.) 87

16. A husband cannot recover alimony to be paid out of his divorced wife's separate estate unless it is allowed by statute, and it is not allowed by Neb. Comp. Stat. 1895, chap. 25, § 10, authorizing a petition or bill of divorce, alimony, and maintenance to be exhibited "by a wife in her own name as well as a husband." Greene v. Greene (Neb.) 110

17. Alimony is a sum ordered by the court to be paid to a wife by the husband for her support during the time she lives separate from him, or paid by him after divorce for her maintenance. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also FRAUD.

Common-law marriage.	884
Validity of common-law marriage.	784
Effect of intoxication on marriage.	87
Effect of marriage in other state; proof by reputation.	774
Husband's right of action for loss of service of wife.	804
Contracts by wife.	598
Insanity of husband as affecting wife's disability of coverture:—(I.) Generally,—wife as head of family; (II.) as to separate property and rights of wife; (III.) as to dower rights; (IV.) as to community property; (V.) as to property and rights of husband.	223

Allowance to husband from property held by the wife in divorce cases:—(I.) Permanent allowance; (II.) statutes; (III.) alimony pendente lite; (IV.) English cases. 110

Divorce when husband or wife becomes insane:—(I.) Insanity as a ground for divorce; (II.) insanity as affecting adultery: (a) as a ground for divorce; (b) as a defense to a claim for alimony; (III.) insanity as affecting abandonment and failure to support; (IV.) insanity 34 L. R. A.

as affecting cruelty; (V.) the defense; (VI.) actions on behalf of insane persons. 161

Drunkenness as affecting divorce:—(I.) Drunkenness as a ground for divorce: (a) provisions for; (b) what constitutes drunkenness; (c) degree of drunkenness authorizing divorce; (d) pleadings and proof; (e) defenses; (f) incidents and effects; (II.) drunkenness as affecting cruel and inhuman treatment: (a) drunkenness as cruelty; (b) drunkenness connected with cruelty; (c) drunkenness as evidence of cruelty; (III.) drunkenness as affecting desertion. 449

Enforcing payment of alimony as imprisonment for debt. 665

ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN. See INCOMPETENT PERSONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

1. A constitutional provision "that no persons shall be imprisoned for debt" is violated by Ala. act Dec. 12, 1893, making it a misdemeanor for a person engaged in banking to receive a deposit when insolvent, and punishing with a fine not less than double the amount of the deposit, one half of which shall go to the depositor, and providing that payment to him before conviction shall be a defense to prosecution. Carr v. State (Ala.) 634

2. Tenn. Laws 1895, chap. 67, providing that any person who fraudulently obtains accommodations at an inn, hotel, or boarding-house, or fraudulently removes his baggage or other property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished accordingly, does not violate Tenn. Const. art. 1, § 18, prohibiting the passage of any law authorizing imprisonment for debt. State v. Yardley (Tenn.) 656

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutionality of imprisonment for debt:—(I.) General extent and construction of constitutional provisions; (II.) what are debts: (a) meaning of the word "debt;" (b) in general; (c) breach of promise to marry; (III.) action founded on tort: (a) in general; (b) mesne profits; (c) trespass; (d) fraud; (IV.) fines and penalties as debts: (a) in general; (b) fines imposed by city authority; (V.) taxes as debts; (VI.) costs as debts: (a) debts in civil actions; (b) not debts in civil actions; (c) debts in criminal actions; (d) not debts in criminal actions; (VII.) statutory, criminal, or quasi-criminal cases; (VIII.) enforcing orders and decrees of court: (a) in general; (b) in decedent's estates; (c) in admiralty; (d) alimony; (e) in bastardy; (f) against officers of the court; (IX.) due process of law; (X.) ne exeat; (XI.) debts owing to the United States. 634

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 12; GIFT; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 8-5, 14; INSURANCE, 12.

1. The mental incompetency of an accommodation indorser at the time of signing a note in renewal of one which he indorsed when fully competent to do so does not prevent his estate from being liable on the renewal note, when the holder took it in good faith and thereupon extinguished and surrendered the old note, so that he cannot be restored to his original position. Memphis Nat. Bank v. Neely (Tenn.) 274

2. An incompetent person executing a deed of trust for the preservation of his property need not fully appreciate all the technical intricacies of the transaction to make the deed binding. It is sufficient if he is not deceived or misled by fear or favor. Neal v. Black (Pa.) 707

3. That a voluntary deed by an incompetent person to protect his property was made under advice of his uncle and the attorney for his guardian will not render it invalid, if they had no adverse interest in the estate and there is nothing in their relations to him and his estate to make them incompetent advisers. Id.

4. A voluntary deed by an incompetent person for the protection of his estate cannot be revoked as improvident if its general purpose is wise and proper, because it strips him of all his property, is irrevocable, leaves the portion to be expended by him at the discretion of the trustee, makes no provision for future contingencies, and does not require the trustee to give security, permits him to appoint a successor without security, while it gives him unlimited power as to conversion of investments, and does not require him to account to anybody. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Incompetent persons; renewal of obligations by. 274

Using lunatic's property to carry out his presumed wishes or to fulfil his equitable obligations in the absence of a legal authority:—(I.) Power generally; (II.) in support of his family; (III.) in support of illegitimate children, etc.; (IV.) for allowances to persons entitled to inheritance; (V.) for allowances to collateral relations; (VI.) for allowances to persons not related; (VII.) for charitable and religious purposes; (VIII.) to continue arrangements made while sane. 297

INDICTMENT. See also HABEAS CORPUS, 1.

1. An indictment which simply follows the words of a statute is not sufficient unless the statute sets forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense. State v. Howard (Minn.) 178

2. Neither a misnomer of a crime nor the omission to give it any name in the caption of the indictments affects the validity of an indictment. Id.

3. That the money offered was of value is not sufficiently shown in an indictment for bribery by alleging that the accused procured another "to offer a bribe and money of value" to a jurymen and that the agent did "offer the said bribe and money to the said jurymen." Id.

4. An intent to influence the action of a jury as such and the knowledge of the accused as to the fact that the person whom he attempts to bribe is a juror are not sufficiently shown by 34 L. R. A.

allegations in an indictment of an offer to bribe a jurymen serving on a jury with intent "to influence the action, vote, opinion, and decision of him, the said jurymen, E. O. as a jurymen . . . and to cause him . . . to hang the said jury." Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; for bribery; sufficiency of. 178

INJUNCTION.

1. An injunction against the sale of intoxicating liquors by an incorporated club to its members in pursuance of a resolution of the club may be granted in favor of a member whose property rights would be damaged thereby, if the sale would be illegal, although it might be punishable by indictment. Klein v. Livingston Club (Pa.) 94

2. An injunction to prevent a school teacher from attempting to teach in a schoolhouse after an ineffectual attempt to dismiss him arbitrarily will not be granted to school directors, although they have by statute the charge and control of the school property. Thompson v. Gibbs (Tenn.) 548

3. The right to an injunction to restrain the prosecution of several actions on a contract for the recovery of different instalments, commenced in the court of another state for the purpose of avoiding a statute of the state of the residence of the parties, affecting the validity of the contract, is not defeated by the fact that complainant has other legal defenses available in the foreign jurisdiction. Sandage v. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. (Ind.) 863

4. A party to a contract is entitled to an injunction restraining the prosecution of several actions for the recovery of different instalments thereunder, commenced by the assignee of the other party in the court of a foreign state for the purpose of avoiding a statute of the state in which the contract was made and to be performed, and in which both the parties and such assignee reside. Id.

INNKEEPERS. See IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT, 2; STATUTES, 5, 8, 9; TRIAL, 1.

INSOLVENCY. See also LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

1. A chattel mortgage executed and delivered, no matter how short a time before the making of an assignment for creditors, is not invalid although the mortgagor contemplated the making of the assignment, where the mortgagees acted in good faith in demanding and accepting the mortgage, and without knowledge of the mortgagor's purpose to make an assignment. Ottenberg v. Corner (C. C. App. 8th C.) 620

2. One creditor of an insolvent is not aggrieved by the refusal of the insolvency court to permit other creditors to withdraw their assent to the discharge of the insolvent. Clark v. Stanwood (Mass.) 878

3. Partnership creditors may vote in the choice of assignees and on the matter of the discharge of a single insolvent partner, although the firm is not insolvent. Id.

4. Firm debts can be proved against a single insolvent partner although the partnership is not insolvent or any proceedings taken against it. Clark v. Stanwood (Mass.) 378

5. A release of an insolvent is not "a thing of value" within the meaning of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 157, § 93, for obtaining which on credit and without intent to pay therefor he may be refused a discharge, and it does not constitute an asset in the debtor's estate. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insolvency; chattel mortgage as preference. 620

INSURANCE. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2; APPEAL AND ERROR, 8; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6; CORPORATIONS, 8, 9; DAMAGES, 8; HOMESTEAD; PLEADING, 5; SERVICE, 1.

1. McClain's (Iowa) Code, § 1144, absolutely prohibiting foreign insurance companies from taking risks or transacting insurance business in the state, unless possessed of $200,000 actual paid-up capital, and unless they comply with other conditions named therein, is not unconstitutional. Parker v. Lamb (Iowa) 704

2. The lien of a mutual insurance company upon insured property of members for their shares of the losses and expenses of the company takes precedence of the member's homestead rights under a by-law which provides that the insured buildings and the right, title, and interest of the assured to the lands on which they stand shall be pledged to the company, which shall have a lien against all persons interested during the continuance of the insurance as to all debts or liabilities incurred by the company. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Assn. v. Burch (S. C.) 806

3. Written parts of an insurance policy will control printed parts, and in case of repugnancy the latter must be disregarded. Yoch v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. (Cal.) 857

4. An "agreement indorsed," permitting otherwise prohibited articles to be kept on insured premises, is made where the articles are included in the written description of the property insured. Id.

5. Untrue answers to questions in an application for insurance do not constitute a concealment or misrepresentation by the insured which will make the policy void, where the misstatements were written by the insurance agent without any direction or knowledge of the insured. Id.

6. Stipulations in an insurance policy against assignment cannot avail an assignor when the insurer declines to take advantage of them and pays the money into court. Spencer v. Myers (N. Y.) 175

7. The right of a wife to assign a policy of insurance on the life of her husband, under N. Y. Laws 1879, chap. 248, when the policy is issued for her benefit and the husband gives his written consent, is not limited to policies issued or delivered within the state, but extends to those issued by a foreign company in another state. Id.

8. Gasolene kept as part of the usual stock of merchandise will not avoid a policy in which a written description of the property insured names such stock "as is usually kept in a country store," although a printed condition declares that the policy shall be void if certain articles, including gasolene, are kept, used, or allowed on the premises. Yoch v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. (Cal.) 857

9. An insurance company which issues a policy of "permanent insurance" by which it agrees to be and remain "forever" liable to the assured, his heirs and assigns, and which provides that any assignment of the policy shall be brought to the company's office to be entered and "allowed," cannot refuse to enter and allow an assignment solely because it has decided not to consent to the transfer of old policies. Marshall v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 159

10. Intentional killing by a third person, of an insured person without the latter's connivance or foreknowledge, is an accident within the meaning of an accident insurance policy. American Acci. Co. v. Carson (Ky.) 801

11. The omission of the word "death" from a clause in an accident policy providing that it shall not "extend to or cover intentional injuries inflicted" by "any other person," when it is used in other excepting clauses immediately contiguous, will make the insurer liable in case of the murder of the insured. Id.

12. The beneficiary in a certificate of insurance on the life of her father who is insane or incapable of attending to business is entitled to notice of his default in paying assessments before a forfeiture can be declared therefor after she has given notice to the company of his condition and requested a notice of any default on his part so that she might make an effort to pay the assessment if he did not. Buchanan v. Supreme Concordia I. O. of H. (Pa.) 436

13. Insurance against loss by reason of having to pay rent for a building under a lease while it is untenable by reason of fire will cover the time during which the landlord is in possession for the purpose of rebuilding the burned building under an agreement with the tenant that such possession shall not affect the tenant's liability for rent under the lease until the completion of the new building. Heller v. Royal Ins. Co. (Pa.) 600

14. An insurer against loss by reason of liability for rent under a lease while the building is untenable because of fire is not relieved from any part of his liability by the fact that the tenant receives from his landlord a sum derived from a policy insuring the landlord against loss of rent because of fire,—at least if the combined amounts will not wholly reimburse the tenant the rent he is compelled to pay under his contract while the building is untenable. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; right to assign. 159

Assignment of policy on husband's life. 175

Notice of member's default; effect of disability of member. 436

Effect of other remedy of insured. 600

Keeping prohibited articles on premises.

857

Lien of mutual company on property of members.

908

INTEREST.

1. An implied promise to pay interest after a specified date is made in a contract fixing the time of payment, but providing that until a later date specified it shall bear no interest. Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.)

625

2. Interest on overdue claims of subcontractors may be included in the amount of their liens, although the owner of the property is insolvent and the allowance of interest will diminish the fund applicable to inferior liens.

Id.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. See also INJUNCTION, 1.

The distribution of intoxicating liquors by an incorporated club to its members without any profit to the club, but on payment by each member for what he receives in the same way as he pays for any food or drink obtained there, does not constitute a sale within the meaning of the Pennsylvania license act of May 13, 1887. Klein v. Livingston Club (Pa.)

94

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intoxicating liquor; sale of, by club.

94

ITINERANT VENDORS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17; COURTS, 8.

JUDGMENT. See also CONTINUANCE; CORPORATIONS, 9; COUNTIES, 12, 13; RECEIVERS; STATUTES, 19; TAXES, 4.

1. A consent judgment entered into by town authorities cannot bind the town to a subscription to a railroad, unless the power to subscribe or donate has been legally granted by the legislature. Union Bank v. Orford (N. C.)

487

2. Judgment against a stockholder of a corporation, and execution levied on his real estate for an amount that exhausts his liability in the state where the corporation was created, are a bar to an action in another state on his liability as a stockholder. Cushing v. Perot (Pa.)

787

3. A decree in a sister state as to the amount of assets and debts of an insolvent mutual insurance company, and of the amount of assessments necessary to liquidate its liabilities, rendered by a court to which a statute has given entire jurisdiction in the matter without service upon or notice to the stockholders or members, is conclusive on a stockholder when sued upon a note which was a chose in action in possession of the company and under the control of the court which made the decree, although the court in which he is sued takes a different view of the case as to the assessments. Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co. (Mich.)

694

4. The receipt of money due on a judgment, by an officer authorized by law to accept it, satisfies the debt. Hendry v. Benliea (Fla.)

283

5. Clerks of the Florida circuit court were not authorized, in 1864, to receive payment of judgments or accept money thereon as paid into the registry of the court, without a judicial order for the purpose, and a payment to them without prior authority or subsequent ratification by the judgment creditor was invalid.

Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR; CORPORATIONS.

Judgment; conclusiveness of.

487

Conclusiveness of, in other states.

695, 701, 704

JUDICIAL SALE. See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 8.

JURY. See TRIAL, 1, 2.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. See also FENCES.

An action for damages to fences, pasture, and an unmatured crop of cotton growing in a field, is for damages to realty of which a justice's court has no jurisdiction. Bagley v. Columbus S. R. Co. (Ga.)

286

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Justice of the peace; limits of jurisdiction of.

287

LABEL. See TRADEMARK, 1.

LANDING. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2, 8.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See also EVIDENCE, 22; INSURANCE, 13, 14; MINES; NEGLIGENCE, 3.

1. Rentals which had matured and remained unpaid at the time of the assignment of a lease are assumed by the assignee when the assignment stipulates that he shall hold the lease under the terms thereof and subject to the rents and covenants therein on the part of the lessee, and he accepts such assignment. Woodland Oil Co. v. Crawford (Ohio)

62

2. The destruction of the property extinguishes the liability for rent under a lease of a river front and landing consisting of a narrow footing at the base of a bluff without any wharf, dock, or pier when the unprecedented ravages of the river effectually destroyed the use of the landing by washing away all but a shallow fragment of the lot,—especially when, with the lessor's consent and participation, works were constructed in front of the shore line which destroyed safe access to the landing. Wait v. O'Neil (C. C. App. 6th C.)

550

3. A lessee's agreement to keep in repair a roadway which is below highwater mark and is a mere incident to the right of mooring, loading, and unloading at a leased river front and so-called landing which has no wharf, dock, or pier, and to deliver the premises in "good order and repair," and "make good all damages to said premises except the usual wear and proper use thereof," does not obligate the lessee to protect the bank against an extraordinary peril from a sudden change in the current of the river, which washes away a bank that had stood in the same condition for centuries. Wait v. O'Neil (C. C. App. 6th C.) 550

4. One having the lease of the roof and outside of a party wall of a building projecting above the adjoining building, for the purpose of advertising thereon by means of a stereopticon, is not evicted by the destruction of the value of the wall for advertising purposes caused by the tenant of the adjoining building without any denial of the validity of the lease, by renting the roof of his building, with a screen erected thereon, to another advertising company. Oakford v. Nison (Pa.) 575

5. A lease of the roof and outside of a party wall of a building projecting above the adjoining building, for the purpose of advertising thereon by means of a stereopticon, does not become invalid for failure of consideration because the tenant in possession of the adjoining building, without questioning the validity of the lease, leases the roof of his building, with a screen erected thereon, to another advertising company, by means of which the value of the wall for advertising purposes is destroyed, where the lease contained no provision on that point. Id.

6. A landlord is liable to a boarder on premises leased for a boarding house for injuries sustained by reason of the unsafe and dangerous condition of the premises, which was known to, or might by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence have been known to, the landlord, but not to the boarder. Stenberg v. Wilcox (Tenn.) 615

7. A landlord is liable to his tenant for damages that may result from the unsafe and dangerous condition of the premises leased when that was known to, or with reasonable care and diligence might have been known to, the landlord, but not to the tenant, although the latter examined the premises and did not discover the defect. Hines v. Wilcox (Tenn.) 824

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MINES.

Liability of landlord for injury to tenant from defect in premises:—Landlord not bound to have premises safe; implied covenants; action for nonrepair; construction of covenant to repair; warranty or representations by landlord; fraud or deceit; concealment of defects; statutory liability; landlord actively negligent; contributory negligence; proximate cause; measure of damages; distinguishable cases. 824

Liability of landlord for injuries to tenant's guest and servant from defects in premises:—Duty the same toward tenant and tenant's guest or servant; landlord not generally liable; defect in premises when let; effect of concealment by landlord; effect of duty to repair; structure for use of public; liability of reversaloner; contributory negligence; portion of building in landlord's possession; dangerous agency on adjoining premises. 609

LAUDANUM. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 9.

LAW. See EVIDENCE, 23, 24; STATUTES, 4.
:4 L. R. A.

LAW OF THE CASE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LEGISLATURE. See COURTS, 8; PARDON, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LETTER. See EVIDENCE, 16.

LEVEES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10, 18; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 4; TAXES, 8.

1. A levee district created by special law is not within a constitutional prohibition against creating corporations by special law. Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 725

2. Taxation of property in a levee district for a levee to protect the property is for a public purpose because beneficial to a large community of people and also to the state. Id.

3. Delegation to a city of the "care, supervision, and control" of all public highways, streets, levees, etc., within the city limits does not authorize the council to grant to a railway company the right to construct and maintain a freight house on a public levee for its own exclusive use. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 184

4. The erection of a warehouse on land dedicated to public use as a levee is not necessarily a misuse of the property, as such a structure may be in aid of the use for which the dedication was made. Id.

5. The right to occupy a portion of a public levee as a site for a permanent freight house of a railroad company cannot be granted by the common council of a city under legislative authority to grant a right of way through highways, public grounds, or levees as that applies only to the right of trackage, nor by a provision that the city may agree with the railroad company on terms and conditions upon which a railroad may occupy, so far as necessary, any road, street, alley, or public way. Id.

6. The legislature may authorize the grant to a railroad company having traffic with craft navigating the water contiguous to land dedicated to the public use as a levee, of the exclusive use of so much of the levee as is reasonably necessary for its business with such craft, so long as it does not unreasonably interfere with the use of the levee by the public; but it cannot give any part of such levee as a permanent site for the general freight warehouse of a railroad company, without reference to its traffic with such craft. Id.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

1. Individual partners cannot claim their statutory exemption out of the partnership property in case of insolvency, in the absence of a statute expressly authorizing them to do so. Re Spitz Brothers' Assignment (N. M.) 604

2. A photographic lens owned and used by a photographer in the prosecution of his business is within a provision of a statute exempting from attachment implements of the debtor's trade. Davidson v. Hannon (Conn.) 718

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy; exemptions out of partnership assets.	604
Exemption of implements of trade.	718

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel; by threatening letters.	127
--------------------------------	-----

LICENSE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14, 17; COURTS, 4; GARBAGE, 2.

1. A license tax cannot be deemed unequal because it reaches one occupation only, if it reaches all who follow that occupation. State v. Harrington (Vt.) 100

2. A requirement in a city ordinance that an applicant for a license to sell milk within the city shall consent that the animals from which he obtains the milk shall be subjected to the "tuberculin test" is not unreasonable. State v. Nelson (Minn.) 318

3. A city ordinance requiring an applicant for a license to sell milk within the city to consent that the dairy herd from which he obtains his milk be inspected by the commissioner of health of the city, although such herd is kept outside the city limits, is authorized by Minn. Gen. Laws 1895, chap. 203, authorizing the city council of any city to provide by ordinance for the inspection of milk and dairy herds kept for the production of milk within the city limits, and to issue licenses for the sale of milk within such limits. Id.

LIENS. See also CONTRACTS, 4; INTEREST, 2; PAYMENT, 2; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. Legal or other services rendered in acquiring rights of way for a railroad do not constitute "services" within the meaning of a lien law. Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 625

2. Materials not actually used or delivered to a contractor are not "furnished" for the purpose of creating a subcontractor's lien, although they were worthless for any other purpose, and were prepared for the contractor under a contract which he broke by refusing to accept them. Id.

3. A lien for furnishing new material and replacing it in a bridge cannot be claimed by a subcontractor whose employees by negligence had made the new material and work necessary. Id.

4. Procuring rights of way for a railroad is not the furnishing of materials within the meaning of a lien law. Id.

5. The agreed contract price of railroad construction payable in bonds should be diminished, for the purpose of limiting the amount of subcontractors' liens, by the amount of unpaid interest which the contractor had agreed to pay on the railroad bonds in order to maintain the credit of the railroad company until after completion of the road. Id.

6. Money expended by a subcontractor in paying salaries of its corporate officers and office expenses and to secure a guaranty on its contract for purchase of material will not sustain a subcontractors' lien. Id.

7. Failure to file a statement of lien in "each county in which the labor was performed," as required by statute, will not prevent enforcing a lien for the proportionate part of the labor which was done in one county in which it was filed. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liens; what are.	472
Of subcontractors.	626

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. See OFFICERS, 1.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9; EVIDENCE, 24; TIME.

1. Regular payments for a period of time of a part of the monthly wages earned by a servant, who has been working for his employer for several years without a settlement, will make the account mutual for the purpose of determining whether any part is barred by the statute of limitations. Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 581

2. A statute providing that defendants "who shall have become nonresidents of the state" after a cause of action has arisen in the state shall not have the benefit of a statute of limitations is retrospective, at least as applied to the cause of action and residence of the defendant, and covers a case of one who had previously obtained the opening of a judgment to enable him to interpose the statute of limitations. Bates v. Cullum (Pa.) 440

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Limitation of actions; retroactive effect of statute; effect of absence from state. 440

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. See OFFICERS, 2.

LOCAL OPTION. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; STATUTES, 15, 16.

LOCOMOTIVE. See EXPLOSIONS.

MAIL. See SERVICE.

MAJORITY. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1; PARLIAMENTARY LAW, 2; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 5, 6.

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus will not lie to compel the secretary of the electoral board to permit memoranda to be taken from records in his possession which may be properly copied, until it is shown that such right has been denied. Gleaves v. Terry (Va.) 144

2. Mandamus to compel the state board of regents to comply with the provisions of a statute as to the location of a department of the state university does not lie at the suit of a private citizen who has not obtained permission from the court to apply for the writ.

Sterling v. Regents of the University of Michigan (Mich.) 150

8. Mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay a consent judgment entered into by town authorities will not be granted if it appears that there was no authority to issue the bonds for which the judgment was rendered. Union Bank v. Oxford (N. C.) 487

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5.

A "carpenter gang" whose duty it is to replace the planks about a machine called the "bloom rolls," after their removal for the purpose of attaching new rolls, are not fellow servants of one employed to oil the machine, and their negligence in replacing the planks is chargeable to the master. Kingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. (Wis.) 503

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Master and servant; duty as to dangerous machinery. 394

MAXIMS.

1. Actio personallis moritur cum persona. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain (Ky.) 788

2. Damnum absque injuria. Dantzer v. Indianapolis U. R. Co. (Ind.) 769

3. Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. P. C. Wiest Co. v. Weeks (Pa.) 172

4. Generalia specialibus non derogant. Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 541

5. Hæres legitimus est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. Jackson v. Jackson (Md.) 773

6. He who prevents a thing from being done shall not avail himself of the nonperformance he has occasioned. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 76

7. Mobilia personam sequuntur. Re Whiting's Estate (N. Y.) 232

8. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. State v. Harrington (Vt.) 100

MEMORANDA. See EVIDENCE, 18, 19.

MENTAL ANGUISH. See DAMAGES, 5; TELEGRAPHS, 3.

MILK. See LICENSE, 2, 3

MINES. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1.

1. A recovery of the agreed rental, and not merely of unliquidated damages, can be had by the lessor on failure to drill an oil or gas well as agreed by a lessee who promises that on such default he will pay a specified rental. Woodland Oil Co. v. Crawford (Ohio) 62

2. The forfeiture of an oil and gas lease is for the benefit of the lessor and at his option, although the lease provides that failure on the part of the lessee to complete a well or wells as specified or to pay the rental as provided "shall render this lease and agreement null and void, together with all rights and claims, and not binding on either party, and not to be revived without the consent of both parties hereto in writing." Id.

34 L. R. A.

3. A lease of land, oil, and gas for a limited time and purpose, and not merely a license, is made by an instrument which grants, demises, and lets "all the petroleum and gas in or under that certain tract of land, . . . and also all the said tract of land, for the purpose and with the exclusive right to drill and operate upon said premises for said petroleum and gas." Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; effect of assignment of oil or gas lease:—(I.) Liability of assignor; (II.) liability of assignee. 62

MISCARRIAGE. See DAMAGES, 6; PROXIMATE CAUSE.

MONEY. See also BONDS, 5; EVIDENCE, 6; PAYMENT, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Money; Making bonds payable in gold. 541

MORTGAGE. See also CORPORATIONS, 4; INSOLVENCY, 1; RECEIVERS.

1. A request to foreclose a mortgage, which must be made by the holders of $2,000,000 in amount of bonds, is not valid when made only by the holder of $1,700,000, who is not in fact the owner of them, but holds them subject to the order of another, and who claims to represent the owners of other bonds for which the party he represents had a mere contract to purchase. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 76

2. A stipulation in a mortgage that the mortgagor shall pay within the time prescribed by law all taxes upon the premises does not make the mortgagor liable for all taxes in case of the subsequent passage of a law requiring the mortgagor to pay those properly leviable against his interest. Fuller v. Kane (Mich.) 308

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; priority as to judgment for damages against railroad company. 303

Of chattels; by insolvent debtor. 630

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also BONDS, 6, 7; CONTRACTS, 10-12; COUNTIES, 2, 3; COURTS, 4, 5; DRAINS AND SEWERS; ESTOPPEL, 3, 4; GARBAGE, 1; HIGHWAYS, 2; LEASES, 5; LICENSES; OFFICERS, 2-4; PARLIAMENTARY LAW; PUBLIC GROUNDS, 2; STATUTES, 7; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 1, 2, 5, 6; WATERS, 2.

1. An ordinance which does not receive the votes of a majority of the members elect of a city council is defeated under Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, ¶ 765. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) 518

2. A contract may be made upon motion or by resolution by a city council, under statutes authorizing it to contract, but not requiring an ordinance therefor. Id.

3. The presentation to a city council in open session, by a private party named as grantee in a defeated ordinance, of a written acceptance of the terms of the ordinance and a bond to construct waterworks accordingly, the construction of the work and location of the hydrants by such grantee under direction of the city council, the actual acceptance and use of the works by the city when completed, and the passage by the council of a formal resolution accepting such works,—constitute a binding contract for the construction and operation of the works according to the terms of such ordinance between the city and the grantee therein. Id.

4. The remainder of a divisible contract of a municipal corporation may be enforced, although part of such contract is ultra vires, but neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum, unless it appears from a consideration of the entire agreement that it would not have been made independently of the part which is void. Id.

5. A city of the second class in Kansas has power to contract with a private party for the construction and operation of waterworks and for the payment of rent for the use of hydrants, and to grant to such a party the use, not exclusive, of its streets for the purpose of laying pipes to conduct the water. Id.

6. A city of the second class under the power given by Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, § 7185, to contract for and procure the construction of waterworks, may contract for such construction and lease of hydrants for a term exceeding the single year during which the members of its council hold office. Id.

7. A municipal corporation which has contracted with a private corporation for a water supply as authorized by Pa. act May 21, 1874, cannot subsequently proceed to erect a plant of its own, as it is authorized to do by another section of the act, but in case it wishes to own a waterworks plant it must proceed, under § 50 of the act, to acquire the one belonging to the other contracting party. White v. Headville (Pa.) 567

8. A municipal corporation has no proprietary rights in streets, levees, or other public grounds within its territorial limits, but whatever rights it has in them are held merely in trust for the public. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 184

9. Land within the limits of a town, although it has never been divided into building lots, is subject to municipal taxation if it is near railroad depots and shops, has convenient access to the highways, and lies only a short distance from the business portion of the town, so that it enjoys the police protection and other benefits of the town. Briggs v. Russellville (Ky.) 193

10. The presentment of a claim against a city for injury or damage to person or property, which by Neb. Comp. Stat. art. 2, chap. 14, § 84, must be in writing and verified, is a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action for such injury. Hastings v. Foxworthy (Neb.) 821

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; distinguished from towns and counties. 674
84 L. R. A.

Distinction between resolution and ordinance; contract for period of years. 523

Rules of parliamentary law in passing ordinance. 459

Validity of ordinance regulating business. 319

Delegation of power to; local option under constitutional provision against special laws. 777

Extent of police power; delegation of power; regulation of business by; creation of monopoly. 279

Grant of exclusive franchise by. 567

NE EXEAT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As imprisonment for debt. 671

Municipal taxation of rural lands within the limits of the corporation:—(I.) Validity of exemption or discrimination in rates; (II.) construction of statutory exemption or discrimination; (III.) right to repeal exemptions; (IV.) validity of taxation of farm lands; (V.) power of courts; (VI.) what property is taxable; (VII.) power of municipality to exempt; (VIII.) original incorporation; (IX.) assessments; (X.) method of raising question. 193

NEGLIGENCE. See also CARRIERS, 3-6; DAMAGES, 6; ELECTRICAL USKS AND APPLIANCES, 1-4; EVIDENCE, 10-14, 28; EXPLOSIONS; HIGHWAYS, 1, 2; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 6, 7; MASTER AND SERVANT; STREET RAILWAYS, 2-4; TELEGRAPHS, 1; TRIAL, 7-11, 15.

1. The owner of a building is bound, so far as the exercise of ordinary care will enable him to do so, to keep it in such condition that it will not, by any insecurity or insufficiency for the purpose to which it is put, injure any person rightfully in, around, or passing it, but he is not an insurer against accident from its condition. Ryder v. Kinsey (Minn.) 557

2. The liability of the owner of a building for damages occasioned by its ruin, declared by La. Rev. Civ. Code, § 2822, when caused by vice in its original construction or neglect to repair it, is limited by the terms of art. 670, which must be construed with the former section, and which names "the neighbors or passengers" as those to whom the owner must respond for injuries by the fall of the building or any portion of its materials, and injuries to occupants of the building or guests therein are excluded. McConnell v. Lemley (La.) 609

3. A member of a surprise party visiting the tenant of a building for the purpose of spending an evening in social amusement cannot, if injured by means of a falling gallery, recover damages of the lessor, under La. Rev. Civ. Code, arts. 670, 2822, but the remedy, if any could be allowed, would be against the tenant. Id.

4. A railway company permitting children to come into its yard at noon to bring dinners to their fathers employed there, and to cross a track for that purpose, does not become liable for injury to a seven-year-old boy who, while returning from such errand, ran under one of some standing freight cars to get a ball on request of one of several employees who were throwing and catching it and was hurt by the sudden moving of the cars, which were struck by an engine at some distance from the place where he was, while it does not appear that the employees in charge of the engine knew or had reason to know of his position, if there was a perfectly safe way for the children to pass and repass without going upon the tracks where the cars were standing, and no occasion for their going under the cars at all. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Waller (Ga.) 459

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BUILDINGS; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Negligence; in blasting. 183
In respect to locomotive or machinery. 294
As to trespasser or licensee in railroad yard. 460

NOTICE. See also SERVICE.

The knowledge of one member of the discount committee of a bank, who was not present when the renewal of a note was taken and had no part in the transaction, is not enough to charge the bank with notice of the fact, known to him, that the indorser of the note had become incompetent to do business. Memphis Nat. Bank v. Neely (Tenn.) 274

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notice; by newspaper publication. 486

OFFICERS. See also CIVIL SERVICE; STATUTES, 7.

1. One appointed by the governor to the office of lieutenant governor after the death of the original incumbent will hold for the remainder of the unexpired term, under Cal. Const. art. 5, § 15, providing that a lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time, place, and manner, and for the same term as the governor, and § 8 providing that when any office shall become vacant the governor may fill such vacancy by granting a commission to expire at the "next election by the people." People, Lynch, v. Budd (Cal.) 48

2. The right of local self-government is violated by N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 427, which prevents majority rule in the selection of local officers by providing that each member of the common council shall vote for but two of the four police commissioners to be chosen, and that no person shall be eligible to the office who does not belong to the political party having the highest or next highest representation in the council, and that in case the board cannot agree in continuing in office the present force before a certain date the police force shall cease to exist, except a certain person who was senior captain on a specified day, who shall be chief of police until the board shall agree. [Per Gray and O'Brien, JJ.] Rathbone v. Wirth (N. Y.) 408

3. The power to designate the local authority who shall appoint local officers, conferred on the legislature by N. Y. Const. art. 10, § 2, 84 L. R. A.

if the election or appointment of such officers is not provided for by that Constitution, does not authorize the enactment of N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 427, providing that the police board of the city of Albany shall consist of four commissioners of whom two shall belong to the political party having the highest representation in the common council, and the other two to the party having the next highest representation therein, and that each member of the council shall be entitled to vote for only two of such officers, since the minority which is thus given power to appoint two of the commissioners is not a city authority within the meaning of the Constitution. Id.

4. A statute making any person ineligible to appointment as police commissioner who did not belong to the party having the highest or next highest representation in the common council, which must appoint two from each of those parties, is in violation of N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 1, declaring that no member of the state shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers, and art. 13, § 1, prohibiting any oath, declaration, or test as a qualification for office. [Per O'Brien, J.] Id.

5. A supervisor is liable on grounds of public policy for public money lost by the failure of a firm of private bankers with whom he had deposited, although he acted in good faith and without negligence. Tillinghast v. Merrill (N. Y.) 678

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also PUBLIC MONIES.

Officers; vacancies; election to fill. 46
Provisions for appointment of; filling vacancies; constitutional restrictions of; membership in political party as a qualification. 409

OIL. See also EVIDENCE, 4. MINES, 1, 2.
NOTES AND BRIEFS; TRIAL, 7.

An oil company from whose premises crude petroleum escapes during a conflagration not shown to be due to its negligence is not liable for injuries caused by an explosion of a public sewer into which the oil was turned by the municipal authorities after it had left the premises of the oil company and without its knowledge, for the purpose of checking the spread of the conflagration. Fuchs v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118

OPIUM. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 9.

PARDON.

1. A restoration of competency to testify as a witness which was lost by conviction of a crime cannot be made by legislative act where the Constitution confers the pardoning power upon a board consisting of the governor and several associates. Singleton v. State (Fla.) 251

2. The power to pardon after conviction of crime which is conferred upon the governor and other specified officers by Fla. Const. art. 4, in all cases except impeachment and treason, is exclusive of the legislative power to grant a pardon by statute. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pardon; as affecting enhanced punishment for later offense. 402

Legislative power to grant pardon or amnesty:—(I.) After conviction; (II.) before conviction; (III.) incidental or implied pardon. 251

PARENT AND CHILD.

An adopted child is the "lawful issue" of a person within the meaning of a will making a gift to such person with remainder to his "lawful issue," under R. I. Pub. Laws 1866, chap. 627, making an adopted child for all purposes of inheritance and all other legal consequences and incidents a child of the parents by adoption the same as if born in lawful wedlock, except that he shall not take property expressly limited to "the heirs of the body or bodies" of such parents. Hartwell v. Tefft (R. I.) 500

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Rights of adopted child as "lawful issue." 500

PARKS AND SQUARES. See also ESTOPPEL, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parks; dedication of; nonuser; acceptance; estoppel to deny dedication. 784

PARLIAMENTARY LAW. See also STATUTES, 2, 3.

The indefinite postponement of the consideration of an ordinance to authorize a certain company to lay railway tracks in specified streets does not prevent the subsequent passage at the same session of another ordinance granting the same company the right to lay tracks on streets many of which are the same as were named in the prior ordinance but containing new provisions as to the connection of the new tracks with an existing system and various other provisions for a more efficient protection of the public interest, although a rule of procedure prohibits action during the session on the "same subject" after a question has been indefinitely postponed. Zeller v. Central R. Co. (Md.) 469

3. The two thirds of the members of a branch of a municipal government which are required by a rule of procedure in order to dispense with one of the regular readings of a proposed ordinance need not be two thirds of all the members of the body but only two thirds of the members voting, if they are not less than a majority, and the majority constitutes a quorum. Id.

PARTNERSHIP. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 3; BONDS, 3; INSOLVENCY, 3, 4; LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

1. The goodwill of the business passes to surviving partners upon their purchase of the interest of the deceased at its inventoried and appraised value, under a provision of articles of association giving them and their successors the right and privilege of continuing the business under the firm name. Philbrook v. Newman (Cal.) 265

2. A contract is not void as allowing surviving partners to fix their own purchase price of the interest of a deceased partner, when it permits a representative of his estate to participate in the inventory, fixes a definite amount for the value of store and office fixtures, and provides that the merchandise shall be taken at its actual value, not exceeding the original cost, and solvent debts be taken at their face value. Id.

3. The basis for fixing the purchase price of a deceased partner's interest is fixed by articles of partnership at the inventory and appraisal provided for therein to be taken annually as the basis of estimating profits, where the articles further provide that in the event of the death of one partner "the inventory provided for herein shall be taken as expeditiously as possible," allowing a representative of the estate to participate in the business until all is settled, and providing that the amount ascertained to be due the estate shall be paid in twelve equal monthly instalments, but giving the surviving partners an option to retain the estate in the partnership. [Court equally divided on this point.] Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.
See also BONDS.
Rights of firm creditors on insolvency of partner. 378

PARTY WALL. See COVENANT, 4.

PATENTS. See CONTRACTS, 8.

PAYMENT. See also EVIDENCE, 6.

1. A payment of a debt or judgment during the Rebellion, in Confederate money, was valid and settled the debt or judgment in full where it was accepted. Hendry v. Benliss (Fla.) 268

2. Payment in bonds under a contract by an embarrassed railroad contractor to pay a construction company for completing the contract $1 for each $1 expended and an equal amount in bonds of the railroad company, which were worth about 40 per cent of their face value when the contract was made, and greatly depreciated thereafter, will be applied ratably on the lienable and nonlienable expenditures, and the part applicable to the former, like other payments to subcontractors, will be applied on the excess of the claim over the security of the subcontractor's lien. Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. (O. C. App. 6th C.) 625

PEDDLERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17; COURTS, 3.

PENALTY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Penalty; imprisonment for, as imprisonment for debt. 651

PERMANENT INSURANCE. See ACTION OR SUIT, 2; INSURANCE, 9.

PHOTOGRAPHS. See LEVY AND SEIZURE, 2.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. See EVIDENCE, 20.

PLEADING.

1. An objection that an allegation is not sufficiently full, clear, and specific cannot be reached by demurrer, but requires a motion to make it more specific. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 293

2. A demurrer to a complaint against a grantee of one who erected a dam for injuring land by maintenance of the nuisance cannot be sustained for failure to state injury after notice to defendant of the nuisance, where the notice was given fifteen days before suit was brought, and the complaint alleged injury up to the time it was filed. Leitesey v. Columbia Water Power Co. (S. C.) 215

3. A complaint alleging an agreement and promise to convey real estate is not demurrable because it does not expressly allege that the contract was in writing. Van Epps v. Redfield (Conn.) 860

4. An agreement to convey real estate appraised at $3,800, in consideration of the release of the grantor from his liability with respect to a bastard child, when the amount of this burden does not appear, is not based on such an inadequate consideration that a bill for specific performance of the agreement to convey will be had on demurrer, but the sufficiency of the consideration will be left for determination at the trial. Id.

5. One suing for the full amount of an accident insurance policy which classifies risks and promises the full amount only when insured is engaged in certain business at the time of injury, must allege that he was employed in such business at the time of injury. American Acci. Co. v. Carson (Ky.) 801

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading; averments of negligence. 294

PLEDGE. See HOMESTEAD.

POLL TAXES. See TAXES, 5.

POSTOFFICE. See SERVICE.

PRESUMPTIONS. See EVIDENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. See BONDS, 8.

PROXIMATE CAUSE. See also STREET RAILWAYS, 8.

Miscarriage resulting from fright caused by the negligence of another is not the proximate result of the negligence. Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. (N. Y.) 781

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause of injury to passenger. 782

PUBLIC GROUNDS. See also LEVEES, 8-5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8; STATUTES, 6.

64 L. R. A.

1. The legislature has no power to divert land dedicated to a specific, limited, and definite public use to any other purpose inconsistent with such use. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 184

2. A city is authorized to grant to a railroad company such rights in public grounds as the legislature itself might have granted, and such only, by Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2680, authorizing the corporate authorities of any city to grant, sell, convey, or lease any public grounds within the corporate limits to any railroad corporation. Id.

3. Although a grant of special privileges on land dedicated to a particular public use is always subject to the implied condition that it may be revoked whenever the needs of the public require it, and the state or municipality has a large discretion in determining when such a condition arises, such a grant, when rightfully made and acted upon, cannot be revoked at the mere arbitrary pleasure of the state or the municipality. Id.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18.

1. Power to assess railroad real estate for local improvements is conferred by a statute for the equalization of the public burden, which provides that railroad property, with certain exceptions, shall be subject to "taxation by ordinances for city purposes." Philadelphia v. Philadelphia & E. R. Co. (Pa.) 564

2. A strip of land 1,500 feet wide along a river bank and used by a railroad company as a coal and ore terminal is not all exempt from taxation as roadbed although a large part of it is covered with tracks. Id.

3. A yard owned and used by a railroad company as a coal and ore terminal may be sold to satisfy a tax lien, but the purchaser will take subject to the easement of the company to operate its tracks over the property. Id.

4. A special tax on land in a levee district, which is especially benefited by a levee for which the tax is made, is a tax within Tenn. Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring taxes to be levied on all property, real, personal, and mixed, and levied according to value. Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 725

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; assessments on railroad property. 565

Taxation by corporation created for. 726

PUBLIC MONEYS. See also COUNTIES, 4, 5.

The use of county funds to make a donation to a state institution for the feeble-minded, in order to secure its location within that county, is for a public purpose and may be authorized by the legislature. Lund v. Chippewa County (Wis.) 181

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public moneys; liability of officer for; deposit in bank. 679

Public purposes for which it may be used. 818

PUNISHMENT. See CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

QUORUM. See COURTS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

RAILROADS. See also CARRIERS, 8; COMMERCE, 2, 3; CORPORATIONS, 5, 6; EMINENT DOMAIN, 3; EVIDENCE, 28; EXPLOSIONS; LEVEES, 8, 5, 6; LIENS, 4, 5; NEGLIGENCE, 4; PUBLIC GROUNDS, 2; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 1-3; RECEIVERS; TRIAL, 8-10.

1. A lease by a railroad company without clear and specific statutory authority is utterly void. Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. (Pa.) 577

2. Authority to a street-railway company to cross any railroad operated by steam or otherwise does not give power to cross elsewhere than at points where the railroad is crossed by a street or highway when other sections of the street-railway charter confine the adoption of its route to established streets and public highways. Northern C. R. Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Electric R. Co. (Pa.) 572

3. A railroad right of way is property which the company may protect from unlawful invasion by a street-railroad company which seeks to establish a crossing over it. Id.

4. Constructing a street railway on a viaduct 100 feet long and 22 feet high over a railroad company's right of way, and operating cars thereon, are such an invasion of the rights of the railroad company as will entitle it to maintain a suit to restrain it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also NEGLIGENCE; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Railroad; duty as to sounding whistles. 182

Right of street railway to cross. 573

Liability for injury caused by lessee. 577

RATIFICATION. See ESTOPPEL, 2.

RECEIVERS. See also BANKS, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6; CORPORATIONS, 10; EVIDENCE, 5.

Preference to railroad mortgagees is not gained by payment of a judgment against the railroad company for damages, when it is paid after its affirmance on appeal by the surety on a supersedeas bond who signed it when the mortgage was in existence and no default had been made upon it and when the railroad company was apparently solvent, although the bond may have benefited the mortgagees by preventing a levy on the railroad which might have worked detriment to them directly and indirectly as substantial owners of the property. Whitely v. Central Trust Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 808

RECORDS. See also MANDAMUS, 1; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 3, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Records; right of citizen to inspect. 144
84 L. R. A.

REGENTS. See MANDAMUS, 2; STATE UNIVERSITY.

REGISTERED LETTER. See SERVICE.
RELEASE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS

As affecting right of action for death. 788

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

1. A majority of the members of an absolutely independent congregation cannot exercise the authority to remove officers whose term is indefinite, except by acting in compliance with the rules and discipline of the church. Long v. Harvey (Pa.) 169

2. A meeting held by a majority of the members of an independent congregation of the "Disciples of Christ," which is presided over by a clergyman of another congregation and held under a call directed by a tribunal of the elders of sister congregations to whom the majority appealed, and which was held in front of the church because the elders belonging to the minority had closed and locked its doors, when the laws or rules of the church do not provide for such proceeding, is wholly without authority to depose the old officers or elect new ones, but their remedy is by assertion of their rights as members of the congregation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious societies; laws of; power of majority. 170

REPLEVIN.

1. For the enhancement by a trespasser of the value of timber which he manufactures into lumber, a licensee having the right to cut and remove the timber must repay him in order to recover the lumber or its value, since if he adopts or ratifies the trespasser's acts in severance of the timber he must adopt them in full. Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman (Wis.) 821

2. A licensee under an unrevoked license to cut and remove timber for which he has paid full value has sufficient title in the timber to support replevin for it when wrongfully cut by a trespasser. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Replevin; for timber, who may maintain. 821

REPUTATION. See EVIDENCE, 26, 27.

RES GESTÆ. See EVIDENCE, 25.

RESOLUTION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; STATUTES, 4, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

RESTAURANT. See EVIDENCE, 14; FOOD.

RESUME. For résumé of contents of book see 865

RIVER FRONT. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2.

ROOF. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 4, 5.

SALE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; recovering back purchase money for lack of consideration. 864
Implied warranty of food. 465

SCHOOLS. See also INJUNCTION, 2.

A reservation of the right to annul all contracts every fourth month, stamped across the face of a contract with a school teacher, does not entitle the school directors to dismiss him without charges, or notice, or testimony, under Mill. & V. (Tenn.) Code, § 1192, suba. 3, empowering them to dismiss a teacher "for incompetence, improper conduct, or inattention." Thompson v. Gibbs (Tenn.) 548

SERVICE.

1. Notice by a registered letter, provided for by Iowa Laws 1880, chap. 210, § 2, in case of notice precedent to forfeiture of insurance policies, is completed by due registration of the letter at the office from which it is to be sent. Ross v. Hawkeys Ins. Co. (Iowa) 466

2. A letter is not registered so as to complete service of notice by registered letter where such service is authorized, until it is numbered as required by the postal laws and regulations, although the postmaster has received it properly addressed and given a receipt therefor. Id.

SEWERS. See DRAINS AND SEWERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; OIL; TRIAL, 7.

SHIPPING. See CARRIERS, 1, 2.

SITUS. See TAXES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SOLDIERS. See CIVIL SERVICE.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See also CONTRACTS, 9; PLEADING, 4.

A contract to convey land to be paid for in three annual instalments will not be specifically enforced nearly forty years after its execution, where there has been no valid payment of the purchase money and the land has greatly increased in value and the purchasers have become insolvent, although the vendor ten years after the execution of the contract procured a judgment for the purchase money, on which an invalid payment in full was made to the clerk of the court. Handry v. Benlisa (Fla.) 288

STATE. See ESTOPPEL, 5.

STATE INSTITUTIONS. See COUNTIES, 4; PUBLIC MONEY.

STATE UNIVERSITY. See also MANDAMUS, 2.

Clauses in a Constitution providing for a board of regents to be elected by the people, and to have general supervision of the state university and the control of all expenditures 84 L. R. A.

from the university interest fund, will exclude the legislature from power to designate where departments of the university shall be located. Sterling v. Regents of the University of Michigan (Mich.) 150

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

State university; control of; power of legislature as to. 151

STATUTES.

1. Constitutional requirements as to the style of acts or the manner of their passage are mandatory, and not directory. Union Bank v. Oxford (N. C.) 487

2. Failure to enter the yeas and nays on legislative journals as required by N. C. Const. art. 2, § 14, on the second and third readings of an act authorizing the creation of indebtedness by a town, renders the act void. Id.

3. Certificates of speakers that an act was ratified, although conclusive of the fact that it was read three several times in each house and ratified, do not show that the act was read three several days in each house and that the yeas and nays were entered on the journal as required by N. C. Const. art. 2, § 14, when the act authorizes the creation of indebtedness by a town. Id.

4. A mere concurrent resolution of the legislature to which the executive approval is not affixed as in case of a statute, although it is passed upon the governor's recommendation to ratify his appointment of an agent for the state, and expressly directs him to allow a certain compensation, is not an "express authority of law" which can authorize a contract which will be the basis for a claim against the state, under Cal. Const. art. 4, § 82, requiring "express authority of law" therefor, and § 15 of the same article, providing that "no law shall be passed except by bill." Mullan v. State (Cal.) 262

5. Tenn. Acts 1895, chap. 67, providing that specified fraudulent acts to the prejudice of hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers, shall be misdemeanors, and declaring what shall constitute prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent in a prosecution for such acts, and authorizing the sale of baggage left by defaulting patrons,—is not unconstitutional on the ground that it embraces more than one subject. State v. Yardley (Tenn.) 656

Partly invalid.

6. Although Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2680, authorizing the common council of a city to sell, convey, or lease any public grounds within its corporate limits to any railroad corporation, is broad enough to authorize a city to divert lands held in trust for a particular purpose to another and inconsistent one, and is void to that extent, it is not necessarily void in toto. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 184

7. The unconstitutionality of a provision that each member of a common council may vote for but two of the four commissioners to be chosen, and that only members of the highest and the next highest political party represented in the council shall be eligible, is so essential a part of the scheme of N. Y. Laws

1896, chap. 427, the main purpose of which was to secure a bi-partisan police board, that the whole act must fall. Rathbone v. Wirth (N. Y.) 408

Title.

8. Tenn. Acts 1895, chap. 67, entitled "An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers," is not unconstitutional on the ground that the title embraces more than one subject. State v. Yardley (Tenn.) 656

9. The subject of Tenn. Laws 1895, chap. 67, providing for the protection of hotel, inn, and boarding-house keepers, is sufficiently embraced in the title "An Act to Protect Hotel, Inn, and Boarding-House Keepers," although the means or instrumentalities for such protection are not recited therein. Id.

10. A provision in a statute authorizing "townships" to refund their indebtedness is within the title "An Act to Enable . . . Municipal Corporations . . . to Refund Their Indebtedness." Rathbone v. Hopper (Kan.) 674

11. Provisions concerning the condemnation and disposal of land by counties in relation to public improvements undertaken by the state or the United States are sufficiently covered by a title "An Act to Grant to and Prescribe Powers of Counties Relative to Public Works Undertaken or Proposed by the State or the United States." Lancey v. King County (Wash.) 817

Special or local laws.

12. The prohibition against local and special acts regulating county business is violated by Nev. act March 15, 1895, which attempts to create Storey county into a municipal corporation, as it unquestionably attempted to regulate the business of that county. Schweiss v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. (Nev.) 602

13. The requirement of Nev. Const. art. 4, § 25, that the system of county governments shall be uniform throughout the state, means that all county governments must in all essential particulars be alike, and is violated by Nev. act March 15, 1895, attempting to confer upon Storey county the full powers of a municipal corporation. Id.

14. A statute giving a certain county power to issue bridge bonds and levy taxes to pay them does not violate Tenn. Const. art. 11, § 8, prohibiting the suspension of general laws for the benefit of a particular individual and the granting to any individual of special rights, privileges, immunities, or exemptions. Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 541

15. A local-option law granting charter power to all the cities of a certain class, to take effect in each city only upon the adoption of the same by such city, is in contravention of Minn. Const. art. 4, §§ 33, 34, prohibiting special legislation as to cities, and requiring all laws as to the same to be uniform in their operation throughout the state, although a local option law granting power to adopt a mere by-law or ordinance may be valid. State, Childs, v. Copeland (Minn.) 777

16. The right to repeal any existing special law, but not to amend, extend, or modify it, which is given by Minn. Const. art. 4, § 33 (amendment of 1891), does not include the right to make a partial repeal of a special law, either directly or by a local-option provision which would have that effect. Id.

Construction.

17. A statute authorizing the granting of a warrant of attachment against one who makes a false statement in writing to obtain credit will be strictly construed in favor of those against whom it may be employed, as it is in derogation of the common law. Penoyar v. Kelsey (N. Y.) 248

18. A provision exempting debts already contracted from the prohibition against transfers of property to prefer creditors is not embraced within the title of Tenn. Acts 1895, chap. 128, which indicates merely the prohibition of such preferences without anything to show that it permits any preferences. Third Nat. Bank v. Divine Grocery Co. (Tenn.) 445

19. A prohibition of judgments by default is not within the scope of Tenn. Acts 1895, chap. 128, indicating a prohibition of preferences by "confession of judgment." Id.

Repeal.

20. The limitation on the taxing power of counties by the general revenue law of Tennessee, passed at the extra session of 1895, does not repeal the provision of the special act of 1895, p. 122, chap. 80, relating to the power to tax to pay bridge bonds of Knox county. Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 541

21. A statute which does not expressly repeal, revive, or amend any former law, but states that "all laws and parts of laws in conflict" therewith are repealed, does not violate Tenn. Const. art. 2, § 17, requiring all acts which repeal, revive, or amend former laws to recite the title or substance of the law repealed, revived, or amended. State v. Yardley (Tenn.) 656

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; resolution distinguished from. 262
Power of court to look behind record of. 487
Intent of legislature. 248
Partial invalidity of. 410
Embracing more than one subject; defective title. 818

STREET RAILWAYS. See also RAILROADS, 2-4.

1. A person riding between the rails of an electric-street railway upon a bicycle has the duty to look out for and endeavor to avoid danger from the electric cars. Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. E. R. Co. (Cal.) 850

2. The motorman of an electric car seeing a bicycle rider going on the track in front of him may assume up to the last moment that the rider will get out of the way by increasing his speed or turning aside in time to avoid the danger. Id.

3. The negligence of a bicycle rider who continued to ride on the track of an electric car up to the very moment when he was struck when by the slightest care and effort on his part he could have put himself out of danger up to the last moment is a contributing and efficient cause of the injury, which precludes the conclusion that the negligence in managing the car was later in time and therefore the proximate cause of the injury. Rossett v. Los Angeles Consol. E. R. Co. (Cal.) 850

4. The fright of a mule caused by the unusual noise incident to running a street car by electricity, without any unnecessary noise made for the purpose of scaring the animal, does not make the street railway company liable for resulting damages. Doster v. Charlotte Street R. Co. (N. C.) 481

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; use of streets by; crossing railroad. 572

Negligence in striking person by street car; contributory negligence. 350

Frightening of horse by street car;—(1) Generally; (2) by bells, gongs, and whistles; (3) by steam; (4) contributory negligence. 481

SUBCONTRACTORS. See CONTRACTS, 4; INTEREST, 2; LIENS, 6.

SUBWAYS. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES, 6, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SUNDAY. See COMMERCE, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SUPERVISOR. See OFFICERS, 5.

SURVIVAL. See DEATH, 2.

TAXES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10; COUNTIES, 8; LEVIES, 2; MANDAMUS, 8; MORTGAGE, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 4; STATUTES, 14, 20.

1. The constitutional rule of uniformity in taxation is not violated by a statute authorizing a county to make a donation to secure the location of a state institution within the county, although that county as well as others will be taxed for its maintenance. Lund v. Chippewa County (Wis.) 181

2. A tax on any property in specie or by the acre is contrary to Tenn. Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring all property to be taxed according to its value. Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 725

3. A tax on land alone in a certain levee district, but excepting land under water, violates Tenn. Const. art. 2, § 28, requiring all property, real, personal, or mixed, to be taxed. Id.

4. The assessment and taxation of judgments rendered by the courts of a state in favor of and owned by citizens of other states is not authorized by Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, chap. 107, § 1, providing generally for the taxation of all property in the state and mentioning judgments among other classes of taxable personal property. Kingman County v. Leonard (Kan.) 810

5. Nontaxable property cannot be sold for the payment of a poll tax, under Miss. Const. § 243, which makes said tax "a lien only upon taxable property," as this section is a part of the article on franchise and is intended to be a clog upon the franchise more than a means of revenue. Ratliff v. Beale (Miss.) 472

34 L. R. A.

6. The average amount of live stock which cattle dealers have each week, although usually sold within one day after they are received, and most of them are brought from other states, constitutes property within the state which can be taxed under Md. Code, art. 81. Myers v. Baltimore County (Md.) 309

7. The intent of dealers in cattle to export part of them, and the fact that they do export about two thirds of all which they handle, do not prevent the taxation of such cattle to the average amount that they have on hand. Id.

8. Notice of a new assessment or of an increase of taxation required by Md. Code, art. 81, § 145, is necessary in order to sustain such new or increased tax. Id.

Transfer tax.

9. Bonds issued by the United States were not intended to be made subject to tax by the New York transfer tax act of 1892 as property over which the state "has any jurisdiction for the purposes of taxation." Re Whiting's Estate (N. Y.) 232

10. Bonds of a foreign corporation, as well as bonds and certificates of stock of domestic corporations, when deposited in a safe deposit vault within the state, although owned by a nonresident, are "property within the state," within the meaning of the New York transfer tax act of 1892. Id.

11. Bonds of a domestic corporation, which are in another state in possession of a nonresident owner, are "not property within the state," within the meaning of the New York transfer tax act of 1892, imposing a tax on the transfer from a nonresident decedent of property within the state. Re Bronson's Estate (N. Y.) 233

12. Shares of capital stock of a domestic corporation, although the certificates are in another state in possession of a nonresident owner, constitute "property within the state," within the meaning of the New York transfer tax act of 1892, taxing a transfer of property within the state from a nonresident decedent. Id.

13. Money of a nonresident deposited by him in a bank within the state, although commingled with trust funds in an account opened by him as trustee, constitute "property within the state," within the meaning of the New York transfer tax act of 1892, which includes property of a nonresident decedent if within the state. Houdayer's Estate (N. Y.) 235

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Taxes; uniformity of; delegation of power of. 726

Situs of personal property for; on personal property of nonresidents. 232, 236, 238, 810

On stock in trade; on property to be exported. 309

On mortgages. 306

Imprisonment for nonpayment. 654

TELEGRAPHS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; DAMAGES, 4, 5; EVIDENCE, 9.

1. A stipulation limiting the liability of a telegraph company for errors and mistakes in the transmission of an unrepeatable message is not valid so far as it applies to mistakes caused by negligence of the telegraph operators. Reed v. Western U. Tele. Co. (Mo.) 492

2. A rule of a telegraph company not to deliver messages outside a half mile limit cannot be set up to excuse a delay in delivering a message sent to a small town a few miles away, summoning a minister of the gospel to a person near death, when the rule was not known to the sender, and was not mentioned by the agent, who received the message about dark, stating that it could be delivered that night. Western U. Tele. Co. v. Robinson (Tenn.) 481

8. Mental anguish of a father caused by the failure of a minister to reach his daughter until after she was dead, when he had telegraphed for him because of her desire for baptism and union with the church, is not without foundation merely because complete church membership could not have been consummated during her life, but may be the basis of a cause of action against the telegraph company. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telegraphs; limits for delivery of telegrams. 481

Interstate business of; liability for mistakes; restricting liability. 492

THREATS. See also LIBEL AND SLANDER,
NOTES AND BRIEFS.

The name and signature of a claimant agency subscribed to threatening letters and circulars which are sent in violation of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8782, are entirely immaterial to the offense of the persons who sent them. State v. McCabe (Mo.) 127

TIMBER. See REFLEVIN.

TIME.

The disability of a plaintiff during a portion of the period allowed for the performance of a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action will not extend the time of performance, provided a reasonable time remains within that period after the removal of the disability. Hastings v. Foxworthy (Neb.) 821

TOWNS. See also BONDS, 7; EVIDENCE, 2; JUDGMENT, 1; STATUTES, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Towns; as municipalities; powers of. 674

TRADEMARK.

1. The use of the same names for varieties of candy by one who is charged with infringing a trademark on the boxes of which such names do not form a part does not sustain a charge of infringement of such trademark, but it can be complained of only as an attempt to represent the goods as those of the other party. P. O. West Co. v. Weeks (Pa.) 172

2. Similarity in the size and shape of boxes for confectionery which are obtained from box manufacturers and are sold to the trade without discrimination and known as "stock boxes" will not justify a finding in a trademark case that they were selected for an improper or fraudulent purpose. Id.
34 L. R. A.

3. The letters "W. H. W." printed in script, in white, in a horizontal line upon a red background, on boxes of confectionery, do not infringe a trademark which, as registered in the United States patent office, is described as the letters "P. C. W." generally arranged to appear as script, printed in a horizontal line upon a background of "any suitable color," distinctly stating that other forms of letters may be employed or that they may be differently arranged, and that the essential features are the letters "P. C. W." Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trademarks; infringement of label. 172

TRANSFER TAX. See TAXES, 9, 18.

TRESPASS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trespass; imprisonment for debt in case of. 641

TRIAL. See also WITNESSES, 1.

1. Tenn. Laws 1895, chap. 67, providing that proof of certain things enumerated shall be prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent in procuring accommodations at a hotel, inn, or boarding-house, which is made a misdemeanor, does not violate Tenn. Const. art. 1, §§ 6, 8, 9, guaranteeing the right of trial by an impartial jury. State v. Yardley (Tenn.) 656

2. A stockholder in a corporation which owns stock in another company is disqualified to act as juror in an action against the latter company. McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. (Ky.) 812

3. The question whether an entire contract was reduced to writing, or an independent collateral agreement was made, is one of fact for the jury where there is any evidence to sustain a contention upon the point. Hines v. Wilcox (Tenn.) 824

4. Whether a legal injury is pleaded by alleging the vacation of a part of a street at some distance from one's property is a question of law for the court, and not a question for the jury. Danteer v. Indianapolis U. R. Co. (Ind.) 709

5. An instruction as to the duty of a municipality in respect to a walk, which says it must be kept "in a safe condition" for public travel, ought to be changed to say that the duty in that respect is to use reasonable and ordinary care. Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 207

6. An instruction that plaintiff is "entitled" to exemplary or punitive damages if the injury was malicious is error, since such damages cannot be claimed as matter of law, but only in the discretion of the jury. Robinson v. Superior Rapid-Transit R. Co. (Wis.) 205

7. The jury must be permitted to pass upon the question of due care by a municipal corporation which in midsummer turns a large quantity of crude petroleum into a public sewer the natural outlet of which is obstructed.

and leaves it four days without taking any precautions to avoid a resulting explosion. Fuchs v. St. Louis (Mo.) 118

8. When the jury have found that defects existed in an engine of which the owner had knowledge a sufficient time to have remedied them before an explosion which injured a bystander, they need not find further facts which raise the inference that the accident arose from the want of some precaution which the owner of the engine ought to have taken, since the question of his duty to have avoided the injury becomes one of law. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 293

9. Evidence that a certain engine which passed at the time a fire started threw sparks to an unusual distance is sufficient to go to the jury, on the question whether or not such engine caused the fire, notwithstanding testimony that such engine was provided with a sufficient spark arrester. Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. (Pa.) 577

10. The testimony of a witness that she had seen the engine claimed to have set a fire on different occasions throw large coals should not be taken from the jury, notwithstanding she testifies on cross-examination that she was mistaken, where the reason she gives for her mistake is unsatisfactory. Id.

11. General instructions as to the ultimate conclusion of negligence are not proper where a special verdict is required. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 293

12. Instructions to a jury are sufficient if they properly state the law when considered as a whole and construed together. Debney v. State (Neb.) 851

13. Refusal to give an instruction that declarations by a creditor that any debt that had existed was discharged is prima facie evidence of payment is properly refused when the declarations in evidence may be referred as much to the question of the existence of the contract as to that of payment. Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 581

14. Facts gathered from several findings of a special verdict, although not stated in logical or consecutive order, must be considered as an entirety, and not in fragmentary parts. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 293

15. A verdict for plaintiff in an action to recover for injuries caused by negligence cannot be found upon grounds not alleged in the declaration. Mitchell v. Prange (Mich.) 182

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; sufficiency of evidence to go to jury. 577

TRUSTS. See also INCOMPETENT PERSONS, 2-4; TAXES, 13.

One who makes a voluntary deed for his own benefit cannot remove his act except subject to the approval of a court having jurisdiction of such matters. Neal v. Black (Pa.) 707

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BANKS.

Trust; revocation of; necessity of approval by court. 716

34 L. R. A.

TWO THIRDS. See PARLIAMENTARY LAW, 2; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 5, 6.

UNIVERSITY. See STATE UNIVERSITY.

USURY. See BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 3, 4.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. A grantor of real estate has no implied equitable lien thereon for the unpaid purchase money after he has delivered an absolute deed to the property and placed the grantee in possession. Frame v. Sliter (Or.) 690

2. An implied vendor's lien in favor of a judgment for damages for breach of indefinite, continuing covenants in a conveyance cannot arise under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 63, art. 1, § 24, denying a lien for unpaid purchase money unless the deed states what part of the consideration remains unpaid. Whiteley v. Central Trust Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 803

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

As to vendors' liens. 690

VETERANS. See CIVIL SERVICE.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS. See also BONDS, 6; MANDAMUS, 1.

1. The qualifications of voters at municipal elections may be prescribed by the legislature, as by requiring them to be taxpayers, in the absence of any constitutional provision to the contrary. Hanna v. Young (Md.) 55

2. The right to vote "at all elections," given by Md. Const. art. 1, § 1, to every male citizen of full age "who has been a resident of the state for one year and of the legislative district of Baltimore city, or of the county in which he may offer to vote, for six months," does not extend to municipal elections outside of the city of Baltimore. Id.

3. No citizen other than the proper officials has a right to inspect and take memoranda from so much of the records of the electoral board as relates to the preparation and printing of the official ballots, certification of the same and their distribution to the judges of election of the several precincts. Gleason v. Terry (Va.) 144

4. So much of the records of the electoral board as relates to the appointment and removal of judges and commissioners of election and registers or the ordering of a new registration may be inspected and copied by citizens. Id.

5. An ordinance providing for the submission to the voters of the question whether or not park bonds shall be issued, at a specified general election, and authorizing the issuance of the bonds "in the event that two thirds of those voting at said election shall vote in favor," requires a favorable vote of two thirds of all those voting at the general election. Belknap v. Louisville (Ky.) 256

6. Two thirds of the voters voting at an election to be held for that purpose, whose assent is necessary to authorize municipal indebtedness, means two thirds of all the votes cast for any purpose at the election, where but one election can be held during the year, at which all questions to be submitted to the voters must be decided. Id.

Ballots.

7. A statute prohibiting the name of any candidate for office from being placed on the official ballot more than once is within legislative discretion, and does not violate the constitutional rights of electors. State, Bateman, v. Bode (Ohio) 498

8. The name of a person as candidate for an elector of President and Vice President cannot appear in more than one place upon the official ballot, under Wyo. Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 104, which provides for no party headings or columns set apart for separate parties, but requires the ballot to name the party or principle represented by a candidate in connection with his name. State, Blydenburgh, v. Burdick (Wyo.) 845

9. The name of a candidate nominated by certificate of electors in place of a person previously nominated in the same way but who has declined should be given the same place upon the ballot that the prior nominee would have been entitled to. Id.

10. Adding his party designation, i. e., "Independent Democrat," to the name of a candidate written upon a ballot in the same way that party designations follow the names of candidates in the printed list as required by Cal. Pol. Code, § 1191, does not destroy the legality of the ballot when it was manifestly not intended as a distinguishing mark. Jennings v. Brown (Cal.) 45

11. The grouping of candidates for presidential electors is to be made by the county clerk, and not by the secretary of state, under Wyo. Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 104, providing that the names of such electors presented in one certificate shall be arranged in a separate group, but the secretary must so certify the names and description of the candidates as to convey to the clerk all knowledge requisite to such grouping. State, Blydenburgh, v. Burdick (Wyo.) 845

12. The protest of a nonresident candidate for Vice President against printing his name on a ticket of presidential electors named by a state convention, without attempting to decline the national nomination or even withdrawing as a candidate in that state, is not a withdrawal "from nomination" within the meaning of Kan. Sess. Laws 1893, chap. 78, § 8, and does not preclude the use of his name on such ballot. Breidenthal v. Edwards (Kan.) 146

Nominations.

13. Nominations cannot be made by a petition filed with a county clerk and recorder so as to entitle the names of the nominees to be placed upon an official ticket as candidates of a party. State, Russell, v. Tooker (Mont.) 315

14. Nominations by a self-constituted county committee of an alleged party cannot be made so as to appear on an official ticket when no power has been delegated to such committee by any convention of the party. Id.

15. A nomination by a political club cannot be recognized as that of a county convention when the participants did not consider themselves a convention, and the minutes kept were those of the club, and there had been no call or notice of a convention nor any election of delegates, and no primaries had been held. Id.

16. The validity of a nomination made by a chairman of the state committee of a political party with 100 associates, to fill vacancies in the list of presidential electors nominated in the same manner, when not in violation of statute, cannot be contested by the committee of an entirely distinct political party. Id.

17. The exclusion from the signers of a certificate of electors to nominate candidates by Wyo. Laws 1890, chap. 80, § 89, of those persons who have joined in a certificate nominating other candidates for the same office, does not apply to persons who have participated in the nomination of other persons through primaries, but only those who have joined in nominations by certificate. Id.

18. A county convention whose nominees will have a right to appear on an official ballot cannot be held by twenty-one persons coming from but one fourth of the precincts in the county, who met and assumed to form a new party without any credentials or election as delegates, or any call for a convention, or any notice except by word of mouth. State, McCall, v. Johnson (Mont.) 818

19. A state convention nominating candidates will not be recognized so as to permit the names of the nominees to appear on an official ballot when it was held by only twenty-one persons representing only one fourth of the precincts of a single county, who met without any call for a convention, or any notices given except by word of mouth, or any election as delegates, or any credentials, and immediately assumed to form a new party and organize themselves into a county convention and then on the same evening into a state convention. Id.

20. Neither the party appellation nor the names of the presidential and vice presidential candidates added thereto by authority of law and properly appearing in the certificate of nominations made under Kan. Sess. Laws 1893, chap. 78, § 6, can be omitted by the secretary of state from his certificate of such nominations to the county clerks under § 18. Breidenthal v. Edwards (Kan.) 146

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Validity of nominations; nominations by certificate or convention. 816

Restricting names on official ballot. 498

Right to vote at municipal election. 55

What constitutes majority; two thirds of voters. 256

WALLS. See BUILDINGS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

WAREHOUSEMEN. See LEVEES, 3-6

WATERS. See also CONTRACTS, 11, 12; DAMS, 1, 2; ESTOPPEL, 3; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5, 7.

1. No one who does not infringe or threaten to infringe the exclusiveness of a grant of the right to use the streets of a city for water pipes can be heard to allege its invalidity because of its exclusiveness, after the works have been constructed and the contract has been substantially performed by the grantee. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City (C. C. App. 8th C.) 518

2. The invalidity of the exclusive grant by a city of the right to use its streets to conduct water to its inhabitants is no defense to an action for rent which the city has promised to pay the grantee for the use of hydrants, after the works have been constructed according to the contract and have been accepted by the city. Id.

WILLS. See also PARENT AND CHILD.

A will is not revoked by subsequent marriage alone without the birth of issue, although the wife has been given by statute the right to inherit from her husband. Re Hullett's Estate (Minn.) 384

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; revocation of, by marriage. 335

Gift to "lawful issue;" right of adopted child. 500

34 L. R. A.

WIRE. See ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLICATIONS.

WITNESSES. See also PARDON, 1.

1. Leading questions may be permitted where the only objection is that they are irrelevant and immaterial. Yock v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. (Cal.) 857

2. A witness called by both parties may be impeached by the party first calling him by proof of his contradictory statements as to a matter to which he testified only when cross-examined as the witness of the other party. Hall v. Manson (Iowa) 207

3. An executor may call one who is suing on a claim against the estate as a witness and compel him to testify as to transactions with the testator, although the statute forbids the claimant to support his claim by his own testimony in the first instance. Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 581

YEAS AND NAYS. See STATUTES, 2, &

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 34 L. R. A.

34 L. R. A. 33, ABBOTT v. DOANE, 163 Mass. 433, 47 Am. St. Rep. 465, 40 N. E. 197.

New promise as to existing contract.

Cited in Monnahan v. Judd 165 Mass. 100, 42 N. E. 555, raising but not deciding, question whether agreement to pay back wages to servant employed by third person without authority, if servant would continue work, constituted independent promise; Wetherill Bros. v. Erwin & W. Co. 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 270, enforcing promise to pay rebate on sale of goods, where made on compromise of ambiguous executory contract; and referring particularly to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 33.

Cited in footnote to Olmstead v. Latimer, 43 L. R. A. 685, which holds invalid, extension of time to pay mortgage without new consideration.

34 L. R. A. 45, JENNINGS v. BROWN, 114 Cal. 307, 46 Pac. 77.

Election law.

Cited in Packwood v. Brownell, 121 Cal. 480, 53 Pac. 1079, holding that failure to open polls at sunrise in accordance with mandatory provision of statute does not invalidate precinct vote where substantial compliance is made in good faith.

— Distinguishing marks.

Cited in Parker v. Hughes, 64 Kan. 241, 56 L. R. A. 279, 91 Am. St. Rep. 216, 67 Pac. 637 (concurring opinion), majority upholding ballots on which same candidate's name, appearing in columns of two parties, was twice marked with cross; Patterson v. Hanley, 136 Cal. 269, 68 Pac. 821, holding that cross mark after words "no nomination" invalidates ballot.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 808, 841) on marking official ballot.

34 L. R. A. 46, PEOPLE ex rel. LYNCH v. BUDD, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060.

Duration of term of appointee to vacant elective office.

Cited in People ex rel. Murphy v. Col. 132 Cal. 337, 64 Pac. 477, holding that county auditor appointed until "next general election" holds office until next election of county officers, irrespective of intervening general election.

Distinguished in People ex rel. Webster v. Babcock, 123 Cal. 309, 55 Pac. 1017, holding appointee to position of school superintendent, until "next regular election," holds only until next general election, and not until expiration of term when office regularly filled.

L. R. A. AV.—VOL. IV.—20.

Sequence in executive authority.

Cited in State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 358, 47 Pac. 450, holding president pro tempore of senate follows lieutenant governor in case of vacancy of governor's chair.

34 L. R. A. 49, SMITH v. SMITH, 22 Colo. 480, 55 Am. St. Rep. 142, 46 Pac. 128.

Disposition of property to defeat wife's rights.

Cited in Smith v. Smith, 24 Colo. 528, 65 Am. St. Rep. 251, 52 Pac. 790, setting aside deeds by husband to children, withheld from record until his death, where he meanwhile enjoyed full use of property; Arnegard v. Arnegard, 7 N. D. 486. 41 L. R. A. 262, 75 N. W. 797, setting aside deed of homestead to son on eve of second marriage, where not recorded and wife ignorant thereof.

Distinguished in Phillips v. Phillips, 30 Colo. 519, 71 Pac. 363, holding delivery of deeds by husband to his daughters, gift not being in contemplation of death, valid as against wife.

34 L. R. A. 55, HANNA v. YOUNG, 84 Md. 179, 57 Am. St. Rep. 396, 35 Atl. 674.

Validity of election regulations.

Cited in State ex rel. Porter v. Crook, 126 Ala. 610, 28 So. 745, raising, but not deciding, question whether constitutional provisions relating to suffrage and elections refer exclusively to elections of public officers by the people.

34 L. R. A. 58, OPINION OF THE JUSTICES, 166 Mass. 589, 44 N. E. 625.

Preference of veterans in civil service.

Cited in People ex rel. Kenny v. Folks, 89 App. Div. 180, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1100 (concurring opinion), majority upholding statute forbidding removal of veteran from municipal office, except on notice and hearing; Goodrich v. Mitchell, 68 Kan. 771, 64 L. R. A. 947, footnote p. 945, 75 Pac. 1034, sustaining statute giving preference to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors.

34 L. R. A. 62, WOODLAND OIL CO. v. CRAWFORD, 55 Ohio St. 161, 44 N. E. 1093.

Oil and gas leases.

Cited in Brown v. Fowler, 65 Ohio St. 521, 63 N. E. 76, holding instrument granting land for purpose of operating thereon for oil and gas is lease, and not mere license; Harris v. Ohio Oil Co. 57 Ohio St. 129, 48 N. E. 502, holding vested interest in land held under oil lease not forfeited by breach of implied covenant reasonably to operate wells; Central Ohio Natural Gas & Fuel Co. v. Eckert, 70 Ohio St. 134, 71 N. E. 281, holding grant of oil, requiring payment of annual rental if well not drilled in specified time, to be lease at annual rental, at option of lessee, after expiration of time for drilling well.

Cited in footnote to Paul v. Cragnas, 47 L. R. A. 540, which holds lease, and not license, created by "lease" of undivided mine interest to party agreeing to work same on royalty.

— Forfeitures.

Cited in Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co. v. Browning, 15 Ohio C. C. 89, holding lessee entitled to reasonable time after expiration of period limited in lease, within which to drill well.

Cited in footnotes to Parish Fork Oil Co. v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 59 L. R. A. 566, which holds oil lease forfeited by abandonment of well, subsequently caving in for want of protection; Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. 62 L. R. A. 895, which holds that equity may enforce contract for right to explore for oil or gas on a tract of real estate, where it would be against equity to permit lessee longer to assert title.

— Options.

Cited in Bettman v. Shadle, 22 Ind. App. 548, 53 N. E. 662, holding payment of rent to time of surrender bars damages for failure to bore well, under lease giving lessee option.

Distinguished in Van Etten v. Kelly, 66 Ohio St. 611, 64 N. E. 560, denying right of action for rent to lessor on lease giving option to lessee to operate or pay rent under penalty of forfeiture, though no operations put into effect.

— Liability of assignee.

Cited in Thoms v. Meader, 6 Ohio N. P. 243, holding lessee's assignee for benefit of creditors cannot, by mere abandonment of premises, escape liability on lessee's covenants in oil lease, accepted as part of assets.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 847) on liability for rent on oil and gas lease.

Liability of assignee of leasehold for rent.

Cited in footnotes to Louisville Trust Co. v. Gaertner, 45 L. R. A. 513, which upholds statutory lien for rent on property of assignee of lease; Springer v. De Wolf, 56 L. R. A. 465, which denies assignee's power to absolve himself from liability to lessor for rent by assigning lease to third person.

34 L. R. A. 68, TACOMA v. KRECH, 15 Wash. 296, 46 Pac. 255.

Class legislation, and Sunday and holiday law.

Cited in Dennis v. Moses, 18 Wash. 574, 40 L. R. A. 309, 52 Pac. 333, denying constitutionality of statute limiting remedies on debt secured by mortgage to the property mortgaged; Denver v. Bach, 26 Colo. 533, 46 L. R. A. 850, 58 Pac. 1089, holding ordinance forbidding sales of clothes on Sunday, void.

Cited in footnotes to Watson v. Thomson, 59 L. R. A. 602, which denies city's power to prevent carrying on of lawful avocation on Christmas day; State v. Ray, 60 L. R. A. 634, which holds unauthorized, ordinance for closing stores at 7:30 P. M., except Saturdays; State ex rel. Hoffman v. Justus, 64 L. R. A. 510, which sustains statute prohibiting keeping butcher shops open on Sunday, though authorizing sale of confectionery and tobacco.

Distinguished in Morris v. Stout, 110 Iowa, 662, 50 L. R. A. 99, 78 N. W. 843, upholding statute making it misdemeanor to marry a woman to escape prosecution for seduction and thereafter desert her.

Disapproved in State v. Sopher, 25 Utah, 324, 60 L. R. A. 470, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, 71 Pac. 482, and Ex parte Northrup, 41 Or. 495, 69 Pac. 445, upholding act forbidding Sunday barbering.

Overruled in State v. Nichols, 28 Wash. 637, 69 Pac. 372, upholding statute forbidding, with certain exceptions, opening of offices or stores for business on Sunday.

34 L. R. A. 69, CHEEVER v. PITTSBURG, C. & L. E. R. CO. 150 N. Y. 59, 55 Am. St. Rep. 646, 44 N. E. 701.

Judgment for plaintiff on verdict in third trial affirmed in 50 App. Div. 423, 64 N. Y. Supp. 65.

Constructive notice; duty of inquiry.

Cited in Western Nat. Bank v. Faber, 29 Misc. 470, 62 N. Y. Supp. 82, upholding corporate note discounted for president by bank without inquiry, where proceeds received by corporation customarily making notes in such form; Buffalo Loan, Trust & S. D. Co. v. Medina Gas & Electric Light Co. 12 App. Div. 206, 42 N. Y. Supp. 781, holding failure of lender to secretary of corporation on faith of its bonds to inquire as to his authority to receive the money not fatal to recovery on the bonds if he had such authority; Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 53 App. Div. 636, 65 N. Y. Supp. 757, holding bad character of depositor and fact that account was opened as trustee insufficient to put bank on inquiry as to title to bonds deposited to secure loan; Union Nut & Bolt Co. v. Doherty, 32 Misc. 498, 66 N. Y. Supp. 405, holding inquiry showing makers of note given "for merchandise" to be in transportation business insufficient to inform taker that it was made outside scope of business; Ketcham v. Govin, 35 Misc. 376, 71 N. Y. Supp. 991, enforcing check taken by endorsee in course of business, though procured by payee by fraud, of which no notice chargeable to endorsee; Rochester & C. Turnp. Road Co. v. Paviour, 164 N. Y. 284, 52 L. R. A. 794, 58 N. E. 114, holding payee of corporate checks drawn by treasurer in payment of individual debt chargeable with knowledge of fraud; First Nat. Bank v. Weston, 25 App. Div. 418, 49 N. Y. Supp. 542, holding discount procured by payee of note bearing indorsement of firm by single member gives discounting bank notice of accommodation indorsement; Eldridge v. Husted, 24 Misc. 179, 52 N. Y. Supp. 681, holding evidence that principal did not receive proceeds of note admissible against party taking note without inquiry from agent pretending to have authority; Citizens' Bank v. Rung Furniture Co. 76 App. Div. 474, 78 N. Y. Supp. 604, holding purchaser of note charged with notice of its infirmity by circumstances sufficient to put him upon inquiry; Second Nat. Bank v. Weston, 172 N. Y. 255, 64 N. E. 949, holding makers of accommodation notes liable to discounting bank, which acted with due care and without notice.

Cited in footnote to Lamson v. Beard, 45 L. R. A. 822, which holds brokers taking from bank president drafts signed by him for individual debt not bona fide purchaser.

Questions for jury.

Cited in Cheever v. Pittsburgh, S. & L. E. R. Co. 28 App. Div. 88, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1067, holding notice and good faith of purchaser questions for jury, where face of paper and previous dealings of parties sufficient to put taker on inquiry; Wright v. Bartholomew, 66 App. Div. 362, 72 N. Y. Supp. 706, holding good faith of party purchasing from person of suspicious character, notes fraudulently obtained, question for jury; First Nat. Bank v. Weston, 24 App. Div. 233, 48 N. Y. Supp. 403, holding good faith of bank discounting accommodation note made by single member of partnership, question for jury, where evidence thereof given by plaintiff; Second Nat. Bank v. Weston, 161 N. Y. 525, 76 Am. St. Rep. 283, 55 N. E. 1080, Reversing 31 App. Div. 405, 52 N. Y. Supp. 315, holding constructive notice of accommodation not imputable as matter of law to discounting bank by notice that firm note, issued by one member, had been "renewed" to makers; Bank of Monongahela Valley v. Weston, 172 N. Y. 268, 64 N. E. 946, holding that rate of discount of note with accommodation indorsement cannot be submitted to jury to impeach good faith of bank discounting it; Valley Sav. Bank v. Mercer, 97 Md. 479, 55 Atl. 435, holding submission of question of good faith of purchaser of note to jury, after instruction that there was no evidence in case showing bad faith, erroneous.

Burden of proof.

Cited in Blair v. Hagemeyer, 26 App. Div. 224, 49 N. Y. Supp. 965, holding burden on maker to show notice to purchaser, in due course, of note alleged to have been diverted by payee; Perth Amboy Mut. Loan, Homestead & Bldg. Asso. v. Chapman, 80 App. Div. 562, 81 N. Y. Supp. 38, holding proof of circumstances tending to arouse suspicion of gross negligence insufficient, in absence of proof of bad faith, in action to recover bonds alleged to have been fraudulently obtained by defendant's vendor; Karsch v. Pottier & S. Mfg. & Improv. Co. 82 App. Div. 233, 81 N. Y. Supp. 782, holding burden of proving ultra vires is on business corporation, where note proved to have been executed by president and indorsed by authorized secretary.

34 L. R. A. 76, FARMERS' LOAN & T. CO. v. NEW YORK & N. R. CO. 150 N. Y. 410, 55 Am. St. Rep. 689, 44 N. E. 1043.

Motion for restitution on calendar denied in 168 N. Y. 668, 61 N. E. 1129.

Followed in later action in Federal court in DeNeufville v. New York & N. R. Co. 26 C. C. A. 307, 51 U. S. App. 374, 81 Fed. 11.

Injunction pendente lite against sale and issue of more bonds refused in DeNeufville v. New York & N. R. Co. 84 Fed. 391.

Control of one corporation by another.

Cited in Jacobus v. American Mineral Water Mach. Co. 38 Misc. 373, 77 N. Y. Supp. 898, holding minority stockholder entitled to equitable relief against competing company controlling stock and sacrificing business of plaintiff's company; McLeary v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 38 Misc. 8, 76 N. Y. Supp. 712, holding minority stockholder entitled to injunction against vote of majority stock controlled by different corporation, to repudiate dividend agreement; Hallenborg v. Greene, 66 App. Div. 596, 73 N. Y. Supp. 403, enjoining fulfillment of conspiracy of resident directors of foreign corporation to transfer its property without consideration to rival company; Sidell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 24 C. C. A. 219, 51 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. 727, holding rent under lease voted to itself by independent corporation owning majority stock, subject to claim of creditor of lessor corporation; Lange v. Burke, 69 Ark. 90, 61 S. W. 165, holding claims of corporation, majority of stock of which owned by majority stockholder of insolvent corporation, entitled to payment on equal basis with claims of other creditors out of latter's assets; Niles v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 176 N. Y. 126, 68 N. E. 142, Affirming 69 App. Div. 146, 74 N. Y. Supp. 617, Which Affirmed 35 Misc. 69, 71 N. Y. Supp. 271, holding action for damages against corporation obtaining control of majority stock in another, and fraudulently depreciating latter, not maintainable by stockholder not suffering special damage; United States v. Northern Securities Co. 120 Fed. 726, holding illegal, organization of corporation to purchase shares in, and control policy of, two competing railroad corporations.

Cited in footnote to Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 625, which holds that contracts of construction company controlling railroad company with same stockholders do not operate as those of latter company.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 792) on contracts between corporations having common directors or officers.

Distinguished in Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co. 64 N. J. Eq. 689, 53 Atl. 842, holding purchase of controlling interest in trust company by insurance company paying more than twice book value of the stock not authorized as "an investment."

Misuse of corporate property.

Distinguished in Lewisohn Bros. v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. 26 Misc. 628, 56 N. Y. Supp. 807, refusing to enjoin private sale of corporate property approved by directors and majority stockholders, where full value received though higher bid subsequently made; Rothchild v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 51 C. C. A. 315, 113 Fed. 481, refusing to set aside sale of corporate property to majority stockholder who does not control or mismanage its business for his own benefit; Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. 114 Fed. 494, refusing to enjoin dissolution of corporation pursuant to requisite two-third stock vote, at suit of minority stockholder; Luther v. C. J. Luther Co. 118 Wis. 123, 99 Am. St. Rep. 977, 94 N. W. 69, holding sale of unissued stock by minority faction of board of directors to confederate to carry out their policy, void.

Procedure.

Cited in Gray v. Fuller, 17 App. Div. 34, 44 N. Y. Supp. 883, holding action against directors, majority stockholders, and their agents to enjoin various individual acts forming single scheme to depreciate corporate property, not multifarious; Flynn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 158 N. Y. 508, 53 N. E. 520, holding action to annul fraudulent lease cannot be brought by stockholder in his own name without prior demand on corporation to annul same; Ryan v. Williams, 100 Fed. 174, refusing preliminary injunction against sale of stock, enabling consolidation with antagonistic corporation prior to proof of injury; Rosenbaum v. Rice, 36 Misc. 413, 73 N. Y. Supp. 714, permitting examination before trial of president and directors of corporation by minority stockholders in trust to prevent fraudulent transfer of corporate property, where failure to state sources of knowledge as to essential facts of complaint is due to exclusive knowledge by president.

Distinguished in Drake v. New York Suburban Water Co. 36 App. Div. 279, 55 N. Y. Supp. 225, refusing to set aside foreclosure sale of after-acquired property subjected to mortgage by consolidation agreement with independent corporation, where stockholder may intervene in foreclosure proceedings; Atlantic Trust Co. v. New York City Suburban Water Co. 75 App. Div. 359, 78 N. Y. Supp. 120, refusing to allow intervention of stockholder in foreclosure proceedings seven years after judgment, to contest lien of mortgage on after-acquired property.

Maturity of corporate mortgage.

Distinguished in Atlantic Trust Co. v. Crystal Water Co. 72 App. Div. 546, 76 N. Y. Supp. 647, holding demand of payments of interest coupons on portion of mortgage bonds matures principal debt, where demand by all bondholders not stipulated for.

Due process of law.

Cited in Williams v. Port Chester, 72 App. Div. 513, 76 N. Y. Supp. 631, denying constitutionality of statute relieving municipality from liability for injuries due to its negligence, except where claim presented within thirty days.

34 L. R. A. 87, PRINE v. PRINE, 36 Fla. 676, 18 So. 781.

Allowance of alimony.

Cited in Smith v. Smith, 51 S. C. 385, 29 S. E. 227, upholding interlocutory order for alimony pendente lite at chambers in action for permanent alimony; Hall v. Hall, 77 Miss. 744, 27 So. 636, allowing counsel fees to wife on husband's appeal from allowance of alimony pendente lite.

Marriage of party non compos mentis.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 740) on marriage of person when insane.

34 L. R. A. 92, DU BOIS v. DU BOIS CITY WATERWORKS CO. 176 Pa. 430, 53 Am. St. Rep. 678, 35 Atl. 248.

Rescission of contract.

Cited in Troy Water Co. v. Troy, 200 Pa. 457, 50 Atl. 259, enjoining borough from instalation of independent water plant after execution of contract with water company for supply, although supply inadequate; Petry v. Clark, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 538, refusing to cancel deed of trust by husband for benefit of wife, where not executed through fraud, accident, or mistake.

Cited in footnotes to West v. Bechtel, 51 L. R. A. 791, which holds contract not abandoned by purchaser's breach of agreement to pay for each shipment as received; Bigham v. Madison, 47 L. R. A. 267, which authorizes rescission for mutual mistake as to location of boundary lines pointed out by vendor.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 87) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Distinguished in United States Waterworks Co. v. Du Bois, 176 Pa. 443, 35 Atl. 251, holding quantum meruit at contract price recoverable for water used by borough after rescission of contract.

Statutory penalty for turning on water.

Cited in Tyrone Gas & Water Co. v. Burley, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 354, holding plumber and committee of borough council, forcibly turning on water supply, subject to statutory penalty, although acting under resolution of council.

Collateral attack on corporate existence.

Cited in Olyphant Sewage-Drainage Co. v. Olyphant, 196 Pa. 556, 46 Atl. 896, overruling defense attacking plaintiff's corporate existence, in suit to enjoin interference with construction of sewers.

Powers of municipal corporations.

Distinguished in Van Voorhis v. Pittsburg & C. Street R. Co. 34 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 154, denying power of municipal corporation to grant franchise to railroad company to lay tracks in streets not included in its charter.

34 L. R. A. 94, KLEIN v. LIVINGSTON CLUB, 177 Pa. 224, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606.

Sales of intoxicating liquor by club.

Cited in Com. v. Smith, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 485, denying violation of liquor law, where liquor obtained and paid for without profit at bona fide club; Com. v. Brem, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 109, sustaining indictment for unlicensed sale of liquor on Sunday under guise of club distribution; Com. v. Pefferman, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 205, holding proof of incorporation for club, and of distribution bona fide among members only, competent on trial for selling liquor without license.

Cited in footnotes to Mohrmann v. State, 43 L. R. A. 398, which holds social club in which liquor sold, within statute against tippling houses open on Sunday; State ex rel. Stevenson v. Law & Order Club, 62 L. R. A. 885, which denies right of social club, without license, to dispense liquors to members in exchange for checks given them on payment of special assessments.

Distinguished in United States v. Alexis Club, 98 Fed. 728, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 39, holding social club liable to Federal tax upon retail liquor dealers.

Right to impose conditions on granting of license.

Cited in Re Indiana County Licenses, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 363, imposing conditions on which license to sell liquor granted.

Injunction to prevent crime.

Cited in Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. M'Connell, 82 Fed. 78, enjoining sale of tickets by scalpers though such sale punishable as crime.

Cited in footnote to State v. O'Leary, 52 L. R. A. 299, which denies state's right to injunction to suppress gambling house.

34 L. R. A. 97, STATE ex rel. WINEMAN v. DAHL, 6 N. D. 81, 68 N. W. 418.

Constitutional amendments.

Cited in Hays v. Hays, 5 Idaho, 159, 47 Pac. 732, holding that amendment to Constitution may be proposed by joint resolution of legislature.

Cited in footnotes to State, Bott, Prosecutor, v. Wurts, 45 L. R. A. 251, which holds provision for counting uncanceled propositions for, and canceled propositions against, constitutional amendments sufficient submission to separate votes; Com. ex rel. Elkin v. Griest, 50 L. R. A. 568, which holds governor's approval of proposed constitutional amendment unnecessary.

Resolution distinguished from statute.

Cited in footnote to Mullan v. State, 34 L. R. A. 262, which holds concurrent resolution of legislature ratifying appointment by governor not "express authority of law."

Mandamus.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 855) on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus case.

34 L. R. A. 100, STATE v. HARRINGTON, 68 Vt. 622, 35 Atl. 515.

Validity of license taxes.

Cited in Hill v. Abbeville, 59 S. C. 428, 38 S. E. 11, holding unconstitutional, license tax discriminating between members of same class; State v. Bevius, 70 Vt. 579, 41 Atl. 655, denying validity of license charge so excessive as to amount to tax for revenue; Levy v. State, 161 Ind. 261, 68 N. E. 172, upholding act forbidding transaction of business by transient merchants, without a license; State v. Shedroi, 75 Vt. 283, 63 L. R. A. 181, 98 Am. St. Rep. 825, 54 Atl. 1081, holding discrimination in peddler's license act in favor of honorably discharged soldiers unconstitutional.

Cited in footnotes to Minnesota ex rel. Luria v. Wagener, 38 L. R. A. 677, which holds invalid, statute requiring license for peddling, which exempts persons following specified occupations who sell their own products; State v. Garbroski, 56 L. R. A. 570, which holds void, statute exempting veterans from requirement for peddling license; Com. use of Titusville v. Clark, 57 L. R. A. 348, which holds void, exemption from license tax of contractors and real-estate dealers, but not others, whose business less than $1,000; Bessette v. People, 56 L. R. A. 558, which holds void, requirement that horseshoers practise business for four years, submit to examination, and pay license fee; Harrodsburg v. Renfro, 51 L. R. A. 897, which holds void, ordinance imposing greater license tax for sale of liquors on main street of town than elsewhere; Morton v. Macon, 50 L. R. A. 485, which denies power to subject to prohibitory license tax, business of loaning money on household furniture; Banta v. Chicago, 40 L. R. A. 611, which requires uniformity of license taxes on occupations, only as to class on which it operates; Knisely v. Cotterel, 50 L. R. A. 87, which sustains statute fixing different rates of license for retailers, wholesalers, and sellers on board of trade; Rosenbloom v. State, 57 L. R. A. 923, which sustains license tax on peddlers, though vendors of own products exempt; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 35 L. R. A. 497, which sustains state statute requiring every company selling sewing machines in state to pay license tax; Stull v. De Mattos, 51 L. R. A. 892, which sustains license tax of $25 per day on sales of merchandise at auction; Price v. People, 55 L. R. A. 588, which sustains license fee on employment agencies; People ex rel. Valentine v. Coolidge, 50 L. R. A. 493, which holds void, act requiring large bond from merchants selling farm produce.

Limitations as to exercise of police power.

Cited in footnote to Bailey v. People, 54 L. R. A. 839, which holds void, restriction on number that lodging-house keepers may permit to occupy one room.

Cited in Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 161 Ind. 346, 67 N. E. 1033, upholding as valid exercise of police power, statute forbidding discrimination by express companies.

34 L. R. A. 105, NORFOLK & W. R. CO. v. COM. 93 Va. 749, 57 Am. St. Rep. 827, 24 S. E. 837.

Acts affecting interstate commerce.

Cited in Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 54 C. C. A. 518, 117 Fed. 472, holding moving of empty car in yards not moving interstate traffic, within act requiring equipment of cars with automatic couplers.

Cited in footnote to Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 213, which denies power of state to require delivery of interstate freight to connecting carrier within its borders to enable freight to reach particular depot.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 645) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause. Distinguished in Adkins v. Richmond, 98 Va. 103, 47 L. R. A. 588, 81 Am. St. Rep. 702, 34 S. E. 907, denying validity of license tax on broker selling by sample solely for nonresident owners.

Constitutionality of Sunday or holiday laws.

Cited in footnote to Watson v. Thomson, 59 L. R. A. 602, which denies city's power to prevent carrying on of lawful avocation on Christmas day.

34 L. R. A. 110, GREENE v. GREENE, 49 Neb. 546, 59 Am. St. Rep. 560, 68 N. W. 947.

Allowance of alimony to husband.

Cited in Groth v. Groth, 69 Ill. App. 69, holding husband not entitled to alimony in absence of statute.

Cited in footnote to Livingston v. County Superior Court, 38 L. R. A. 175, which holds enforceable in equity, order to compel support of husband out of wife's separate estate.

Cross-petition in divorce proceeding.

Cited in Berdolt v. Berdolt, 56 Neb. 796, 77 N. W. 399, sustaining cross-petition for divorce by defendant in divorce action.

Incorporation of evidence in bill of exceptions.

Cited in Dunn v. Eberly, 52 Neb. 469, 72 N. W. 485, refusing to set aside verdict on appeal, where record does not contain copies of material books of account; Davidson v. Gretna State Bank, 59 Neb. 66, 80 N. W. 256, and Alling v. Fisher, 55 Neb. 240, 75 N. W. 536, refusing to consider on appeal, exceptions to findings of trial court, where material evidence omitted from bill.

34 L. R. A. 118, FUCHS v. ST. LOUIS, 133 Mo. 168, 31 S. W. 115, 34 S. W. 508.

Liability for negligence.

Cited in Dammann v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 196, 53 S. W. 932, holding municipality liable for injuries caused by negligent construction of water main; Cobb v. St. Louis & H. R. Co. 149 Mo. 629, 50 S. W. 894, holding railway liable for injuries received by express messenger, due to washout of bridge by stream notably turbulent in rainy season; American Brewing Asso. v. Talbot, 141 Mo. 686, 64 Am. St. Rep. 538, 42 S. W. 679 (dissenting opinion), majority holding warehousemen not liable to bailors whose goods were injured by sinking of building, due to phenomenal rise of river; Sullivan v. Jefferson Ave. R. Co. 133 Mo. 8, 32 L. R. A. 168, 34 S. W. 566 (dissenting opinion), majority holding street car company not liable for injury to passenger through careless throwing of lighted match on dress by fellow passenger; Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 256, 56 L. R. A. 605, 88 N. W. 695, holding city not liable for death of employee engaged, without warning of danger, in rebuilding of smallpox hospital, where municipal obligation and duty statutory; Aldrich v. St. Louis Transit Co. 101 Mo. App. 91, 74 S. W. 141, holding carrier not liable for injury to one who, having time to cross track, hesitated, turned back, and was run down.

Cited in footnote to Langenbaugh v. Anderson, 62 L. R. A. 948, which denies liability of lessor of lot for production of oil or gas therefrom, for injury to adjoining owner's property through escape of oil by lessee's negligence.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 338, 356, 359) on liability for negligence in escape and explosion of gas.

Distinguished in King v. National Oil Co. 81 Mo. App. 163, holding oil company not liable to contractor repairing wagons, where notice of danger from oil gas given partner.

Cited as overruled in Graney v. St. Louis, I M. & S. R. Co. 157 Mo. 684, 50 L. R. A. 159, 57 S. W. 276, holding railway company not liable for injury to boy sucked under wheels by train moving at unlawful speed, where no evidence of defendant's knowledge of result of excessive speed.

Overruled on subsequent appeal in 167 Mo. 622, 57 L. R. A. 136, 67 S. W. 610, holding city not liable for injury by explosion of gas in sewer into which crude petroleum had escaped, though no provision for escape of gas made.

Act of God.

Cited in Epperson v. Postal Telegr. Cable Co. 155 Mo. 382, 50 S. W. 795, holding telegraph company not liable for injury due to overcharged wire, where caused by lightning.

Judicial notice.

Cited in Poor v. Watson, 92 Mo. App. 98, taking judicial notice of generation of gas in coal mines.

Municipal liability for sewers.

Cited in footnote to Nevins v. Fitchburg, 47 L. R. A. 312, which denies city's right to discharge sewer into private tailrace.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 697, 700) on duty and liability of municipality with respect to damage.

Ordinances relating to operation of railway.

Cited in Gebhardt v. St. Louis Transit Co. 97 Mo. App. 381, 71 S. W. 448, holding ordinance requiring motormen to keep a vigilant watch for vehicles and persons on tracks, to avoid collisions, reasonable.

Variance.

Cited in Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 263, 36 S. W. 654, refusing recovery on implied warranty where express warranty pleaded.

32 L. R. A. 127, STATE v. McCABE, 135 Mo. 450, 58 Am. St. Rep. 589, 37 S. W. 123.

Freedom of speech.

Cited in footnote to State v. McKee, 49 L. R. A. 542, which sustains statute against papers, etc., devoted to publication of story of crimes.

34 L. R. A. 131, LUND v. CHIPPEWA COUNTY, 93 Wis. 640, 67 N. W. 927.

Taxation and appropriations for "public purpose."

Cited in State ex rel. New Richmond v. Davidson, 114 Wis. 577, 58 L. R. A. 743, 90 N. W. 1067, upholding appropriation of general tax funds to relieve city from debt incurred in recovering from cyclone; Crafts v. Ray, 22 R. I. 187, 49 L. R. A. 606, 46 Atl. 1043, upholding tax temporarily exempting new manufacturing enterprises.

Distinguished in Wisconsin Keeley Institute v. Milwaukee County, 95 Wis. 160, 36 L. R. A. 58, 60 Am. St. Rep. 105, 70 N. W. 68, denying constitutionality of statute taxing county for expense of treating indigent drunkards at private institution; State ex rel. Garrett v. Froehlich, 118 Wis. 140, 61 L. R. A. 349, 99 Am. St. Rep. 985, 94 N. W. 50, refusing to compel appropriation to redeem warrants issued under law providing for treatment of inebriates at public expense.

Employment of private enterprise for public purpose.

Cited in Wisconsin Industrial School v. Clark County, 103 Wis. 661, 79 Pac. 422, permitting recovery by private industrial school against county for care of children sent to it by order of court.

Private aid to public enterprise.

Cited in State ex rel. Curtis v. Geneva, 107 Wis. 8, 82 N. W. 550, holding determination of commissioners as to location of road not vitiated by pledge of private aid in construction of altered road, where decision not affected thereby.

Municipality.

Cited in Wisconsin Industrial School v. Clark County, 103 Wis. 661, 79 N. W. 422, holding county "municipality" within meaning of statute charging same with expense of maintaining children committed to industrial school.

Nature of incorporated institutions belonging to state.

Cited in footnotes to Re Royer, 44 L. R. A. 364, which holds state university an entity capable of taking bequest; Watson Seminary v. County Court, 45 L. R. A. 675, which holds charter provisions of educational corporation changeable at will of legislature.

34 L. R. A. 137, ANNISTON TRANSFER CO. v. GURLEY, 107 Ala. 600, 13 So. 209.

Effect of custom on liability created by contract.

Cited in footnote to Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Naive, 64 L. R. A. 443, which upholds custom of carrier not to deliver perishable freight on July 4th.

34 L. R. A. 141, CLEVELAND, C. C. & ST. L. R. CO. v. MONEYHUN, 146 Ind. 147, 44 N. E. 1106.

Contributory negligence at crossing.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams, 20 Ind. App. 580, 51 N. E. 128, upholding submission of question of contributory negligence to jury where plaintiff stopped twice within 300 feet of crossing; Wabash R. Co. v. Biddle, 27 Ind. App. 165, 50 N. E. 284, upholding submission of contributory negligence to jury where plaintiff stopped twice within 100 feet of crossing; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Thomas, 155 Ind. 644, 58 N. E. 1040 (dissenting opinion), majority holding negligence established, as matter of law, by finding that deceased drove upon crossing from gully without looking for approaching trains.

Riding on platform.

Cited in Graham v. McNeill, 20 Wash. 475, 43 L. R. A. 303, footnote p. 300, 72 Am. St. Rep. 121, 55 N. E. 631, holding negligence of passenger riding on platform of crowded coach, for jury; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Revaloe, 17 Ind. App. 667, 46 N. E. 352, holding party thrown from platform by sudden start, while attempting to alight after train stops, not guilty of negligence because she went on platform before train stopped; Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric Street R. Co. v. Lohe, 68 Ohio St. 111, 67 N. E. 161, holding interurban electric railroad company not liable for killing of passenger on platform by derailment of car, where deceased was requested to take seat inside.

Cited in footnote to Benedict v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 639, which holds exposure of body beyond side of moving train by passenger on platform, negligence.

Special verdict.

Cited in Towers v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 687, 48 N. E. 1046, disregarding finding of freedom from contributory negligence where contrary appears, as matter of law, from finding of special verdict that plaintiff approached dangerous crossing at trot, without stopping; Krenzer v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 151 Ind. 602, 68 Am. St. Rep. 252, 52 N. E. 229 (dissenting opinion), majority holding general verdict for plaintiff overthrown by special finding that deceased, an intelligent boy of seven and one half years, went to sleep on railroad track at crossing; Hancock v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 15, 51 N. E. 369, disregarding general finding of freedom from contributory negligence, where special verdict shows failure to hear train and see signal was due to inattention; Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 585, 52 N. E. 1013, disregarding special verdict that child acted in manner usual for one of her age, where there was additional finding of sui juris and knowledge of danger of standing on tracks; Indiana Pipe Line & Ref. Co. v. Neusbaum, 21 Ind. App. 369, 52 N. E. 471, holding conflict between general and special findings to interrogatories insufficient to require reversal where all material points not covered by interrogatories; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cheek, 152 Ind. 677, 53 N. E. 641, upholding general verdict for plaintiff where special findings inconclusive as to contributory negligence.

Presumptions in support of judgment.

Cited in Hill v. Swihart, 148 Ind. 323, 47 N. E. 705, holding no presumption on appeal that judgments claim to be superior lien on real estate were rendered in county in which realty situated, where special finding does not reveal forum.

Action by guardian.

Cited in Kinsley v. Kinsley, 150 Ind. 71, 49 N. E. 819, upholding action by guardian in his own name to enjoin injury to ward's estate.

34 L. R. A. 144, GLEAVES v. TERRY, 93 Va. 491, 25 S. E. 552.

Public inspection of election records.

Cited in Keller v. Stone, 96 Va. 668, 32 S. E. 454, issuing mandamus to compel custodian of poll books to permit inspection thereof.

34 L. R. A. 146, BREIDENTHAL v. EDWARDS, 57 Kan. 332, 46 Pac. 469.

Jurisdiction in mandamus proceeding.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 843, 867) on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus case.

34 L. R. A. 150, STERLING v. UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN, 110 Mich. 369, 68 N. W. 253.

Right of private party to mandamus.

Cited in Brophy v. Schindler, 126 Mich. 347, 85 N. W. 1114, holding owners of farm whose houses are separated from schoolhouse by river, have sufficient interest to support petition for mandamus to compel reconstruction of bridge.

Construction of charter.

Cited in Farr v. Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 101, 70 N. W. 411, denying implied authority to raise bonded loan to meet expense of constructing authorized electric light works, under charter denying authority to incur debt against city except by vote of electors.

Legislative control of constitutional offices.

Cited in Sunderlin v. Ionia County, 119 Mich. 539, 78 N. W. 651, upholding statute providing for filing of security for costs or order of prosecuting attorney with justice of peace as condition to jurisdiction of justice of peace in criminal actions.

Nature of incorporated institution belonging to state.

Cited in footnotes to Re Royer, 44 L. R. A. 364, which holds state university an entity entitled to take bequest; Trevett v. Prison Asso. 50 L. R. A. 564, which holds prison association not controlled by state not a public corporation exempt from liability for its torts; Moody v. State's Prison, 53 L. R. A. 855, which denies liability of state to prison guard for injuries caused by defective ladder; Watson Seminary v. County Court, 45 L. R. A. 675, which holds charter provisions of educational corporation changeable at will of legislature; Oklahoma Agri. & Mechanical College v. Willis, 40 L. R. A. 677, which denies power to sue agricultural and mechanical college created by and existing under statute; Maia v. Eastern State Hospital, 47 L. R. A. 577, which denies liability of state hospital for injuries to inmate from negligence or misconduct of persons in charge; Overholser v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 62 L. R. A. 937, which holds national home for disabled soldiers a part of United States government, not subject to action sounding in tort.

34 L. R. A. 156, KUJEK v. GOLDMAN, 150 N. Y. 176, 55 Am. St. Rep. 670, 44 N. E. 773.

Novelty as affecting right of action.

Cited in Conley v. Blinebry, 29 Misc. 373, 60 N. Y. Supp. 531, upholding action in tort by grantor against grantee for depriving former of mortgage security by resale of property and record of deed before recording of mortgage; Graham v. Wallace, 50 App. Div. 107, 63 N. Y. Supp. 372, holding action for damages maintainable by female ward after reaching majority, against guardian of her person for seduction by him while she was under age of consent.

Cited in footnote to Holleman v. Harward, 34 L. R. A. 803, which holds one selling laudanum as beverage to married woman liable to husband.

Effect of fraud upon marriage contract.

Cited in Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 174 N. Y. 472, 63 L. R. A. 94, 95 Am. St. Rep. 609, 67 N. E. 63, Reversing 71 App. Div. 518, 75 N. Y. Supp. 878, Reversed in 34 Misc. 692, 70 N. Y. Supp. 1012, annulling marriage induced by fraudulent representation of birth of child to plaintiff; Svenson v. Svenson, 178 N. Y. 58, 70 N. E. 120, holding venereal disease existing at time of marriage and fraudulently concealed sufficient ground for annulment, where marriage not consummated.

Actions for alienation of affections.

Cited in Weston v. Weston, 86 App. Div. 161, 83 N. Y. Supp. 528, holding pith of action for alienation of wife's affections to be loss of her society without justifiable reasons; Servis v. Servis, 172 N. Y. 444, 65 N. E. 270 (dissenting opinion), as to right of wife to conjugal society of her husband.

34 L. R. A. 159, MARSHALL v. FRANKLIN F. INS. CO. 176 Pa. 628, 35 Atl. 204.

Rescission of insurance contract.

Cited in Kerns v. Prudential Ins. Co. 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 213, holding insured entitled to recover total premiums on refusal of insurer to accept those due; Black v. Supreme Council, A. L. of H. 120 Fed. 583, holding member of benefit society which arbitrarily reduced value of his certificate entitled to recover amount paid by him thereon.

34 L. R. A. 161, MOHLER v. SHANK, 93 Iowa, 273, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274, 61 N. W. 981.

Effect of insanity on right to divorce.

Cited in footnote to Iago v. Iago, 39 L. R. A. 115, which holds maintenance of writ of error from decree against defendant in divorce suit not prevented by his insanity.

Marriage of person when insane.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 746) on marriage of person when insane.

Estoppel to deny divorce.

Cited in Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 160, 52 Am. St. Rep. 586, 63 N. W. 484, holding husband estopped to assert invalidity of wife's divorce in order to share in her property, where he has remarried on strength thereof; Hamill v. Talbott, 81 Mo. App. 218, holding husband accepting void decree of divorce in favor of wife, by remarrying, estopped to deny validity to escape payment of alimony.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 595) on right to contest validity of divorce decree after death of one or both of parties; (60 L. R. A. 305) on right of party obtaining or consenting to divorce, to contest its validity.

Estoppel by void agreement.

Cited in Baird v. Connell, 121 Iowa, 287, 96 N. W. 863, holding wife estopped, while retaining consideration, from reclaiming property transferred under void separation agreement.

34 L. R. A. 169, LONG v. HARVEY, 177 Pa. 473, 35 Atl. 169.

Jurisdiction of equity to compel surrender of church property.

Distinguished in Dayton v. Carter, 206 Pa. 497, 56 Atl. 30, holding bill in equity to compel surrender and control of church property not proper remedy when real controversy is validity of election of elders.

34 L. R. A. 172, P. C. WIEST CO. v. WEEKS, 177 Pa. 412, 35 Atl. 693.

Infringement of tradenames and devices.

Cited in Tygert-Allen Fertilizer Co. v. J. E. Tygert Co. 191 Pa. 338, 43 Atl. 224, Affirming 7 Pa. Dist. R. 434, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 198, refusing to enjoin use of name by party selling to another right to use same "so far as necessary," where products of vendee sold under another name.

Distinguished in Clark & S. Co. v. Scott, 4 Lack. Legal News, 162, enjoining use of tobacco wrappers bearing fraudulent resemblance to those used by complainant.

34 L. R. A. 175, SPENCER v. MYERS, 150 N. Y. 269, 55 Am. St. Rep. 675, 44 N. E. 942.

Validity of contracts of insurance.

Cited in Sanguinito v. Goldey, 88 App. Div. 80, 84 N. Y. Supp. 989, holding questions as to validity of policy and designation of beneficiary eliminated by payment of amount of policy into court by company interpleading beneficiary.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 843, 858) on conflict of laws as to contracts of insurance.

Provision against assignment of policy.

Cited in Dannhauser v. Wallenstein, 28 Misc. 692, 60 N. Y. Supp. 50, refusing to permit wife to repudiate assignment of policy to husband on ground that there was no "written consent" thereto, as required by policy.

Construction of statutes and ordinances.

Cited in People ex rel. Cumisky v. Wurster, 14 App. Div. 559, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1088, disregarding manifestly erroneous reference to section of charter in ordinance; Miller v. Maujer, 82 App. Div. 421, 81 N. Y. Supp. 575, holding right of next of kin to contest will, under Code, limited to such as would be entitled to participate in distribution of personal estate, were will set aside; Kent v. Binghamton, 40 Misc. 5, 81 N. Y. Supp. 198, denying that distinction should be made between words "consolidated with" and "consolidated into."

34 L. R. A. 178, STATE v. HOWARD, 66 Minn. 309, 61 Am. St. Rep. 403, 68 N. W. 1096.

Sufficiency of indictment or information.

Cited in State v. Bradford, 78 Minn. 393, 47 L. R. A. 147, 81 N. W. 202, holding indictment for injury to bicycle path insufficient where not alleged to be public way; State v. Clements, 82 Minn. 451, 85 N. W. 234, dismissing indictment for larceny in obtaining deposits while conducting "unlawful" banking business, without setting out facts constituting illegality; State v. Dankwardt, 107 Iowa, 709, 77 N. W. 495 (dissenting opinion), majority holding scienter sufficiently charged by allegation that accused attempted to influence "another as a juror, with intent to influence finding;" Banks v. State, 157 Ind. 197, 60 N. E. 1087, holding information on charge of bribery of election judge insufficient where it does not state who designated the judge for appointment and the authority therefor.

Cited in footnote to Haughn v. State, 59 L. R. A. 789, which holds indictment for bunco steering which follows statutory language, insufficient.

Distinguished in State v. O'Neil, 71 Minn. 402, 73 N. W. 1091, upholding indictment for robbery charging taking of property from person by force, although fear of immediate injury not alleged; Kruse v. People, 84 Ill. App. 622, upholding indictment charging embezzlement of "$16" without stating value of same; Towne v. People, 89 Ill. App. 277, upholding indictment charging conspiracy by false representations to shareholders to induce them to join in petition for receiver of corporation, with malicious intent to injure business of corporation.

Variance between indictment and proof.

Cited in State v. Meysenburg, 171 Mo. 29, 71 S. W. 229, holding allegation that $9,000 was received as bribe, and proof that accused received cashier's check for that amount, not fatal variance.

34 L. R. A. 182, MITCHELL v. PRANGE, 110 Mich. 78, 64 Am. St. Rep. 329, 67 N. W. 1096.

Negligence in blasting.

Cited in Cary Bros. & Hannon v. Morrison, 63 C. C. A. 270, 129 Fed. 180, holding blasting to be proper method in sparsely settled country, of removing ledges and rocks in grading for railroad.

Cited in footnotes to Belleville Stone Co. v. Mooney, 39 L. R. A. 834, which holds foreman's failure to give warning of blast in quarry not negligence of fellow servant of men working therein; Sullivan v. Dunham, 47 L. R. A. 715, which holds liable as trespasser, one firing blast on own land by which wood thrown on traveler in highway.

34 L. R. A. 184, ST. PAUL v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. 63 Minn. 330, 63 N. W. 267, 65 N. W. 649, 68 N. W. 458.

Municipal control over land devoted to public use.

Cited in footnotes to Louisiana Constr. & Improv. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 37 L. R. A. 661, which denies city's authority to grant exclusive right of occupation of batture to railroad company for ninety-nine years; Reighard v. Flinn, 43 L. R. A. 502, which holds invalid, lease by city of part of public landing to private person.

Cited in notes (48 L. R. A. 493) on power of legislature to impose burdens on municipalities and to control their local administration and property; (58 L. R. A. 761) on levees as public improvements.

Distinguished in Manson v. South Bound R. Co. 64 S. C. 122, 41 S. E. 832, refusing to enjoin taking of public park for railway terminal at suit of nonabutting property owners; Cleveland v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 93 Fed. 137, holding no rights reserved to city in street condemned by railway under grant of constitutional right of eminent domain.

Impairment of right obtained under ordinance.

Cited in Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Minneapolis, 81 Minn. 146, 53 L. R. A. 183, 83 N. W. 527, holding ordinance arbitrarily compelling placing of telephone wires under ground at enormous expense, violation of rights acquired on construction of overhead wires under prior ordinance; Alexandria v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 109 La. 58, 33 So. 65, denying right of city to revoke, without notice, railroad company's franchise to occupy street, over which cars had been run for years.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 148) on privilege of using streets as a contract within constitutional provision against impairing obligation of contracts.

Meaning of term "levee."

Cited in McAlpine v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 68 Kan. 212, 64 L. R. A. 88, 75 Pac. 73, upholding right to use as street, strips of land dedicated to city as "levee."

34 L. R. A. 193, BRIGGS v. RUSSELLVILLE, 99 Ky. 515, 36 S. W. 358.

Municipal taxation.

Cited in Board of Councilmen v. Scott, 101 Ky. 621, 42 S. W. 104, upholding taxation of rural property within city limits, at same rate as other property.

Cited in footnotes to Kimball v. Grantsville City, 45 L. R. A. 628, which upholds municipal tax on rural property within city; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Clark, 47 L. R. A. 77, which holds void, fire tax to which railroad property subject without being entitled to any of benefits; Kaysville v. Ellison, 43 L. R.

A. 81, which denies validity of city tax on business or property incapable of benefit from municipality.

34 L. R. A. 201, POST v. MECHANICS' BLDG. & L. ASSO. 97 Tenn. 408, 37 S. W. 216.

Accounting between member and building association on latter's insolvency.

Cited in Hale v. Cairns, 8 N. D. 151, 44 L. R. A. 263, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhilamy, 81 Miss. 85, 59 L. R. A. 746, 32 So. 1001; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 121 Mich. 355, 80 N. W. 120; Hall v. Stowell, 75 App. Div. 23, 77 N. Y. Supp. 953; Woerheide v. Johnston, 81 Mo. App. 201; Columbia Finance & T. Co. v. Tharp, 24 Ind. App. 86, 56 N. E. 265; Young v. Improvement Loan Bldg. Asso. 48 W. Va. 524, 38 S. E. 670; Hale v. Kline, 113 Iowa, 527, 85 N. W. 814, — holding that dues on collateral stock pledged by borrowing member cannot be credited against premiums on loan on foreclosure of mortgage by receiver of corporation; Hale v. Gullick, 13 S. D. 647, 84 N. W. 196 (dissenting opinion), majority holding borrowing member entitled to credit dues, interest, and premiums against loan, on surrender of stock at winding up of association; Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Johnson, 49 C. C. A. 522, 111 Fed. 662, holding that dues on stock advanced as fixed premium on loan may be credited by borrowing member against loan on insolvency of corporation; Boice v. Rabb, 24 Ind. App. 373, 55 N. E. 880, holding dividends paid on stock chargeable as lien against such stock on insolvency of association, where there were no profits from which they could have been declared; Clarke v. Olson, 9 N. D. 373, 83 N. W. 519, holding that mortgage to secure payment of dues cannot be foreclosed for face amount of bond on insolvency of company, where dues paid; Carpenter v. Richardson, 101 Tenn. 178, 46 S. W. 452, holding principal and interest of loan, but not fines, recoverable by receiver of insolvent association, subject to deductions for payments of interest, premiums, etc., with interest thereon; Breed v. Ruoff, 54 App. Div. 150, 66 N. Y. Supp. 422, holding borrowing member entitled to credit interest paid and stock dues after insolvency of association, but not fines nor stock dues paid prior to insolvency; Swope v. Jordan, 107 Tenn. 183, 64 S. W. 52, holding account against member forfeiting while association going concern, properly made up as of that date and not as of date of subsequent insolvency; Roberts v. Cronk, 94 App. Div. 176, 88 N. Y. Supp. 103, denying right of borrowing member of insolvent association to have premium and dues credited on amount due on foreclosure of mortgage; Anselme v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 63 Neb. 528, 88 N. W. 665, denying right of borrowing member to credit dues paid on stock, upon insolvency of association.

Cited in footnotes to Hale v. Cairns, 44 L. R. A. 261, which denies right to apply dues paid on stock, on mortgage to insolvent loan association; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhillamy, 59 L. R. A. 743, which requires stock payments of borrowing member to share losses and expenses of winding up loan association.

Effect of notice of withdrawal.

Cited in Cook v. Emmet Perpetual & Mut. Bldg. Asso. 90 Md. 291, 44 Atl. 1022, holding general creditor entitled to preference over shareholders giving notice of withdrawal prior to adjudication of insolvency of association; Wilson v. Parvin, 56 C. C. A. 275, 119 Fed. 659, and Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso.

110 Fed. 279, holding member who gives notice of withdrawal, maturing prior to insolvency of corporation, not entitled to preference over other members in distribution of assets; Reitz v. Hayward, 100 Mo. App. 224, 73 S. W. 374, holding borrowing member withdrawing before insolvency of association entitled to be credited with value of pledged stock and dividends declared at time of withdrawal; Walker v. Terry, 138 Ala. 432, 35 So. 466, denying that certificate of withdrawal entitles member of insolvent loan association to be declared a creditor thereof.

Usurious loans.

Cited in Carpenter v. Lewis, 60 S. C. 36, 38 S. E. 244, holding loan at fixed premium, secured by bond and mortgage together with principal debt, usurious where legal interest exceeded; Edinger v. Missouri Guarantee Sav. & Bldg. Assn. 83 Mo. App. 625, holding loan at premium fixed by agent of association usurious where premium and interest exceed lawful rate; McIlwaine v. Iseley, 96 Fed. 67; McIlwaine v. Ellington, 55 L. R. A. 953, 49 C. C. A. 450, 111 Fed. 582; Douglass v. Kavanaugh, 33 C. C. A. 109, 82 U. S. App. 38, 90 Fed. 374,—holding private loan at fixed premium in addition to legal interest, usurious.

Cited in footnotes to National Mut. Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Brahan, 57 L. R. A. 793, which holds usury in loan by foreign loan association to resident, secured by mortgage on land in state, determined by local law; Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. 54 L. R. A. 536, which holds contract with foreign loan association not within exemption of domestic associations as to usury, unless in conformity to local law; Borrowers' & I. Bldg. Assn. v. Eklund, 52 L. R. A. 637, which holds loan effected by loan association by private contract not exempt from usury law, where statute requires it to be made in open meeting; Smoot v. People's Perpetual Loan & Bldg. Assn. 41 L. R. A. 589, which sustains retroactive statute relieving from usury all contracts with loan associations.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 244) on fixed premiums or fixed minimum of premiums in building and loan associations.

Distinguished in Star Sav. & L. Assn. v. Woods, 100 Tenn. 123, 42 S. W. 872, holding amount paid in excess of legal interest on loan at fixed premium not recoverable by borrowing member receiving full withdrawal value of shares paid up by him; Deitch v. Staub, 53 C. C. A. 144, 115 Fed. 316, holding that purchaser of property burdened with usurious mortgage assumed by him cannot set up usury to defeat foreclosure of mortgage by receiver of insolvent association.

34 L. R. A. 205, ROBINSON v. SUPERIOR RAPID TRANSIT R. CO. 94 Wis. 345, 59 Am. St. Rep. 896, 68 N. W. 961.

Res geste.

Cited in Sample v. Consolidated Light & R. Co. 50 W. Va. 479, 57 L. R. A. 190, footnote p. 186, 40 S. E. 597, holding declaration of motorman while car still on child run down, that he thought he could pass it, admissible as res geste; Union P. R. Co. v. Elliott, 54 Neb. 304, 74 N. W. 627, holding statement of engineer, made to party injured as soon as engine stopped and he could alight, admissible.

Exemplary damages.

Cited in Gatzow v. Buening, 106 Wis. 18, 49 L. R. A. 482, 80 Am. St. Rep. 17, 81 N. W. 1003, holding secretary of liverymen's association liable for exemplary damages in withdrawal of hearse from use at funeral, pursuant to by-law of association aimed against patrons of nonunion labor; Rueping v. Chicago & N. W. R.

Co. 116 Wis. 630, 96 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 93 N. W. 843, holding passenger not entitled to recover punitive damages from carrier for injuries suffered in collision; Eggett v. Allen, 119 Wis. 633, 96 N. W. 803, holding punitive damages recoverable from one commencing, authorizing, or participating in malicious prosecution.

Ratification of tort.

Cited in Cobb v. Simon, 119 Wis. 606, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909, 97 N. W. 276, holding retention of servant after notice to principal of tort committed by servant, evidence of ratification.

34 L. R. A. 207, HALL v. MANSON, 99 Iowa, 698, 68 N. W. 922.

Liability of municipality for condition of streets.

Cited in Goucher v. Sioux City, 115 Iowa, 640, 89 N. W. 24, holding negligence of municipality in permitting gutter ditch by side of walk to remain unprotected for long time, for jury.

Cited in footnote to Watertown v. Greaves, 56 L. R. A. 865, which holds question of defect in difference of 3 inches in height of concrete sidewalk and adjoining gravel one, for jury.

Physical examination of plaintiff.

Cited in South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 426, 54 L. R. A. 400, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200, 60 N. E. 271, holding refusal of court to order physical examination of injured child reversible error, where defendant had no other means of determining extent of injury and examination could be made without pain or danger.

Cited in footnotes to Wanek v. Winona, 46 L. R. A. 448, which sustains court's power to order physical examination of plaintiff under penalty of dismissal of action; Lane v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 153, which sustains power of court to order physical examination of woman by experts in action for personal injuries; Bagwell v. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 486, which holds action for injury to minor daughter should not be dismissed for her refusal, after attaining majority, to submit to physical examination; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Huddleston, 36 L. R. A. 681, which holds that production of plaintiff's urine for examination should be required where he claims to be suffering from albumen and sugar in urine as result of injury; O'Brien v. La Crosse. 40 L. R. A. 831, which denies power of court to order examination as to condition of plaintiff's bladder, under evidence that it might be dangerous; Stack v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 52 L. R. A. 328, which denies power of court to compel plaintiff to submit to physical examination; State v. Height, 59 L. R. A. 438, which holds unlawful, disclosures by physicians of knowledge as to venereal disease, obtained by examination against his will of one accused of rape; Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, 64 L. R. A. 494, which denies power, in absence of statutory authority, to require plaintiff to submit to physical examination; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Palmore, 64 L. R. A. 90, which holds that timely request for physical examination of injured eyes should be granted, though involving use of drugs for dilating pupils.

Distinguished in Vierling v. Binder, 113 Iowa, 342, 85 N. W. 621, upholding refusal to require physical examination of plaintiff where defendant only pleads her disease as tending to show nonexistence of marriage contract for breach of which action is brought.

Exhibition of injuries to jury.

Cited in Faivre v. Mandercheid, 117 Iowa, 731, 90 N. W. 76, upholding right of one injured to exhibit his hands and feet to jury to show extent of injury to them.

34 L. R. A. 215, LEITZSEY v. COLUMBIA WATER POWER CO. 47 S. C. 464, 25 S. E. 744.

Liability of grantee for grantor's nuisance.

Cited in De Laney v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 58 S. C. 360, 79 Am. St. Rep. 843, 36 S. E. 699, holding lessee liable for private nuisance erected by grantor, only after notice and demand of removal; Townes v. Augusta, 52 S. C. 404, 29 S. E. 851, holding party entitled to damages for continuance of dam by grantee of constructor, rendering plaintiff's land unfit for cultivation.

Distinguished in Jones v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 67 S. C. 194, 196, 45 S. E. 188, holding consolidated railroad company liable for continuance of nuisance created by preceding company, without notice or demand of removal.

Exclusiveness of statutory remedies.

Cited in Garraux v. Greenville, 53 S. C. 579, 31 S. E. 597, holding compensation for damage from change of grade of street recoverable only in statutory proceeding before commissioners; Rankin v. Sievern & K. R. Co. 58 S. C. 544, 36 S. E. 997, holding compensation under condemnation statutes only remedy available for injury to property by construction of railway, where no objection in statutory manner made to its entry on the land.

Estoppel.

Cited in footnote to Nunamaker v. Columbia Water Power Co. 34 L. R. A. 222, which holds grant of right to flood part of farm by dam precludes action for injuries to remaining land.

Damage to property by construction or use of land.

Cited in Jones v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 67 S. C. 194, 45 S. E. 188, holding that grant of right of way contemplates only such damages as would result from skilful and proper construction of road.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 858, 859) on injury by construction and operation of canals.

What term "lands" includes.

Cited in South Bound R. Co. v. Burton, 67 S. C. 523, 46 S. E. 340, holding that term "lands," used in condemnation statute, embraces "all rights and easements growing thereout."

34 L. R. A. 222, NUNAMAKER v. COLUMBIA WATER POWER CO. 47 S. C. 465, 58 Am. St. Rep. 905, 25 S. E. 751.

Damages for flooding lands.

Cited in footnote to Leitzsey v. Columbia Water Power Co. 34 L. R. A. 215, which holds damages for flooding lands by dam recoverable under eminent domain law, not by suit for nuisance.

Damages included in grant of right of way.

Cited in Jones v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 67 S. C. 194, 45 S. E. 188, holding that grant of right of way contemplates only such damages as would result from skilful and proper construction of road.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 858) on injury by construction and operation of canals.

34 L. R. A. 223, McANALLY v. ALABAMA INSANE HOSPITAL, 109 Ala. 109, 55 Am. St. Rep. 923, 19 So. 492.

Right of feme covert to contract.

Cited in Cowan v. Motley, 125 Ala. 372, 28 So. 70, holding contract for attorney's fees not invalid where entered into without statutory written consent of husband.

34 L. R. A. 227, LANDELL v. HAMILTON, 175 Pa. 327, 34 Atl. 663.

Covenants running with land.

Cited in Hansell v. Downing, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 238, holding provision against erection of building on portion of granted premises and against overlooking windows on remainder, creates covenant running with granted premises in favor of adjoining land of grantor; Kelly v. Nypano R. Co. 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 186, holding grantee of railroad bound by its covenant in deed of right of way to construct fence; Allen v. Hamilton, 175 Pa. 339, 34 Atl. 667, holding land burdened with restriction defined by provision against erection of buildings attached to messuage "now" thereon erected; Roth v. Jung, 79 App. Div. 4, 79 N. Y. Supp. 822, refusing to enjoin erection of flat at street line, although covenant required erection of building at least 20 feet from street; Bangor & P. R. Co. v. American Bangor Slate Co. 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 157, refusing to decree specific performance of covenant to ship products of covenantor by railway of covenantee as against lessee of former; Frantz v. Weaver, 20 Lanc. L. Rev. 335, holding erection of one-story brick church not prevented by condition in deed forbidding erection of buildings "of a less character than a two-story brick house."

Cited in footnote to Doty v. Chattanooga Union R. Co. 48 L. R. A. 160, which holds covenant for running certain trains binding on subsequent purchaser of railroad.

Privity.

Cited in Stone v. Marshall Oil Co. 188 Pa. 610, 41 Atl. 748, holding covenant in gas lease to pay lessor one quarter of produce of well runs against assignee of lessee.

Who entitled to enforce.

Cited in Vetter v. Flaherty, 4 Lack. Legal News, 184, holding adjoining owners entitled to enforce restriction as to yard and bay windows, imposed by common grantor.

Enforcement of negative covenant in equity.

Cited in Electric City Land & Improv. Co. v. West Ridge Coal Co. 187 Pa. 512, 41 Atl. 458, holding proviso in deed reserving to grantor minerals lying under tract conveyed for subdivision into building lots, that shaft to obtain same shall not be opened from surface, enforceable in equity against purchaser of mineral rights acquiring several lots; Landell v. Hamilton, 177 Pa. 24, 38 W. N. C. 357, 35 Atl. 242, refusing to enjoin erection of building on lot owing servitude of light and air to adjoining lots, where solid side walls erected by adjoining owners; Jones v. Pittsburgh, M. & Y. R. Co. 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 206, refusing to enjoin grading of street crossing to meet improvement of railway, as violation of covenant in grant of easement "not to interfere with roadway."

34 L. R. A. 232, Re WHITING, 150 N. Y. 27, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 715.

Transfer tax on "property within the state."

Cited in Re Morgan, 150 N. Y. 36, 44 N. E. 1126, Affirming 74 N. Y. S. R. 35, 38 N. Y. Supp. 378, holding foreign registered bonds, owned by nonresident but kept on deposit in domestic bank, taxable; Re Blackstone, 69 App. Div. 129, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508, holding proceeds of sale of stock in foreign corporation as well as running bank account, deposited by nonresident owner in domestic bank, taxable; Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 590, 37 L. R. A. 387, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. E. 647, holding funds of nonresident, employed in loans, mortgages, etc., through resident agent, subject to tax, where notes not in hands of attorney merely temporarily for collection; Re Chabot, 44 App. Div. 342, 60 N. Y. Supp. 927, holding property passing to daughter on day of death under execution of power in will admitted to probate that day, subject to tax on transfer under will of daughter; Re Gibbes, 84 App. Div. 513, 83 N. Y. Supp. 53, Reversing 40 Misc. 582, holding foreign bonds of foreign testator, passing to nonresident, not subject to inheritance tax; Western Assur. Co. v. Halliday, 61 C. C. A. 273, 126 Fed. 259, holding bonds deposited with superintendent of insurance by foreign insurance company taxable under Ohio statute.

Cited in footnotes to Re Houdayer, 34 L. R. A. 235, which holds nonresident's money mingled with trust funds in bank, subject to transfer tax; Re Bronson, 34 L. R. A. 238, which holds stock, but not bonds, of domestic corporation in possession of nonresident decedent subject to transfer tax.

Distinguished in Re Horn, 39 Misc. 135, 78 N. Y. Supp. 979, holding amount due nonresident by domestic life insurance company, as well as open account, not taxable; Augusta v. Kimball, 91 Me. 609, 41 L. R. A. 477, 40 Atl. 666, holding nonresident trustees to whom property of decedent transferred and held in another state not subject to direct tax, though they have qualified in local probate court and beneficiaries of trust are resident; Ruckgaber v. Moore, 104 Fed. 950; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 587, 46 L. ed. 703, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515, holding bonds owned by nonresident alien, passing to nonresident alien son by will and foreign intestate laws, not subject to war tax of 1898, though held by local depositary.

On United States bonds.

Cited in Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 5, 46 N. E. 1032, holding United States bonds owned by resident decedent exempted from transfer by Laws 1892, chap. 399, § 22; Re Coogan, 27 Misc. 565, 59 N. Y. Supp. 111, issuing mandamus to comptroller to procure refund of invalid tax on transfer of United States bonds; Re Hoople, 93 App. Div. 488, 77 N. Y. Supp. 842, holding bonds of United States government exempt from taxation under transfer tax law.

Distinguished in Re Plummer, 30 Misc. 20, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1024, holding transfer of United States bonds after going into effect of Laws 1898, chap. 88, taxable; People ex rel. United States Aluminium Printing Plate Co. v. Knight, 174 N. Y. 482, 63 L. R. A. 90, 67 N. E. 65, holding capital of domestic corporation invested in United States letters patent subject to franchise tax.

Situs of stocks and bonds.

Cited in Simpson v. Jersey City Contracting Co. 165 N. Y. 198, 55 L. R. A. 803, 58 N. E. 896, Affirming 47 App. Div. 22, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1033, holding shares of stock in foreign corporation pledged by nonresident owner with domestic creditor subject to attachment; Page v. Boggess 41 Misc. 50, 83 N. Y. Supp. 569, upholding right of domestic pledgee to have lien declared on foreign corporation stock deposited as collateral, and sale of same ordered.

34 L. R. A. 235, Re HOUDAYER, 150 N. Y. 37, 55 Am. St. Rep. 642, 44 N. E. 718. Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction in Scudder v. Coler, 175 U. S. 34, 31 L. ed. 63, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26.

Succession tax.

Cited in Re Embury, 19 App. Div. 219, 79 N. Y. S. R. 885, 45 N. Y. Supp. 881. holding estate of nonresident not chargeable with collateral inheritance tax made effective after removal of decedent's property from state, since not a tax on right of succession as to nonresidents.

— Property subject to.

Cited in Re Morgan, 150 N. Y. 36, 44 N. E. 1126, holding registered bonds of foreign corporation owned by nonresident decedent, taxable; Re Newcomb, 71 App. Div. 608, 76 N. Y. Supp. 222, holding interest in stock of domestic corporation, purchased by broker in his own name, assigned in blank and held by nonresident owner at domicil, taxable; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 205, 47 L. ed. 445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, Affirming 171 N. Y. 683, 64 N. E. 1118, Which Affirmed 69 App. Div. 129, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508, holding proceeds of sale of stock deposited for nonresident, and balance of deposit account, subject to local tax, though taxed once at owner's domicil; Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 598, 51 N. E. 176, holding real estate, cash on hand, corporate, municipal, and United States bonds transferable by delivery, belonging to nonresident decedent and not held within forum, taxable; Re King, 30 Misc. 577, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1100, holding share of nonresident partner in local firm assets subject to tax; Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 590, 37 L. R. A. 387, 45 N. E. 647, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, holding funds of nonresident employed in loans, mortgages, etc., through resident agent, subject to tax, where notes not in hands of attorney merely temporarily for collection; Re Chabot, 44 App. Div. 346, 60 N. Y. Supp. 927 (dissenting opinion), majority holding right of legatee of daughter dying before administration of mother's estate in her favor not taxable as property right; People ex rel. Kursheedt Mfg. Co. v. Feitner, 32 Misc. 87, 66 N. Y. Supp. 179, holding permanent deposit by resident decedent in foreign bank to defray foreign expenses not taxable; Re Gibbes, 84 App. Div. 513, 83 N. Y. Supp. 53, holding foreign bonds of foreign testator, passing to nonresident, not subject to transfer tax; Re Probst, 40 Misc. 432, 82 N. Y. Supp. 396, holding profits allowed to remain on deposit with partnership, taxable.

Cited in footnotes to Re Whiting, 34 L. R. A. 232, which holds bonds of foreign corporation within state, though owned by nonresident, subject to transfer tax; Re Bronson, 34 L. R. A. 238, which holds stock, but not bonds, of domestic corporation in possession of nonresident decedent subject to transfer tax.

Distinguished in Re Horn, 39 Misc. 134, 78 N. Y. Supp. 979, holding debt on open account to nonresident decedent, not subject to tax; Augusta v. Kimball, 91 Me. 609, 41 L. R. A. 477, 40 Atl. 666, holding nonresident trustees to whom property of decedent transferred and held in another state not subject to direct tax, though they have qualified in local probate court and beneficiaries of trust are residents; Re Bentley, 31 Misc. 658, 66 N. Y. Supp. 95, holding claim of nonresi-dent decedent against nonresident doing local banking business, not taxable because balance appears in favor of decedent in debtor's books, where claim payable at residence; Ruckgaber v. Moore, 104 Fed. 950; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 587, 46 L. ed. 702, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515, holding bonds owned by nonresident alien and passing to alien nonresident son by will and foreign intestate laws not subject to war tax though held by local depository.

Effect of franchise tax as to foreign corporations.

Cited in People ex rel. A. J. Johnson Co. v. Roberts, 159 N. Y. 85, 45 L. R. A. 130, 53 N. E. 685, holding good will of foreign corporation operating wholly within state, subject to franchise tax as capital employed within state.

34 L. R. A. 238, Re BRONSON, 150 N. Y. 1, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707.

Tax on "property within state."

Cited in Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 33, 34 L. R. A. 234, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 715, holding bonds, but not stock, of foreign corporation deposited in state by nonresident decedent, taxable; Re Fitch, 39 App. Div. 611, 57 N. Y. Supp. 786, Affirming 26 Misc. 354, 57 N. Y. Supp. 212, holding stock in domestic corporation held by nonresident decedent taxable, though ancillary letters of administration for former not taken out, estate administered and foreign tax paid; Re Newcomb, 71 App. Div. 607, 76 N. Y. Supp. 222, holding interest of nonresident in stock of domestic corporation purchased in name of brokers, assigned in blank and held by owner at domicil, taxable; Re Bushnell, 73 App. Div. 327, 77 N. Y. Supp. 4, holding interest of nonresident legatee, subject to life estate, in stock of domestic corporation held at domicil, taxable on transfer before termination of life estate; Re Blackstone, 69 App. Div. 129, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508, holding proceeds of sale of stock of foreign corporation deposited in trust company to credit of nonresident owner, taxable in same manner as balance of deposit account; Re Kennedy, 20 Misc. 531, 46 N. Y. Supp. 906, holding foreign legacy tax on devise of stock in domestic corporation by nonresident not to be deducted from appraisal for local taxation; Re Houdayer, 150 N. Y. 41, 34 L. R. A. 238, 55 Am. St. Rep. 642, 44 N. E. 718, holding trust deposit by nonresident trustee decedent, taxable; Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 590, 37 L. R. A. 387, 45 N. E. 647, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, holding notes and mortgages owned by nonresident doing loan and investment business through local agent in whose possession they are, taxable; Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 208, 53 N. E. 372, holding stock in domestic corporation and national banks, located in state taxable therein, though owned by nonresident decedent and transferred by his foreign administrator before qualification in state; Re Fitch, 160 N. Y. 90, 54 N. E. 701, holding stock of domestic corporation held by nonresident decedent taxable in county where corporate property situated; Re Gibbes, 84 App. Div. 513, 83 N. Y. Supp. 53, holding foreign bonds of foreign testator, passing to nonresident, not subject to transfer tax; Re Cushing, 40 Misc. 505, 82 N. Y. Supp. 795, holding domestic bank stock owned by nonresident subject to transfer tax; Re Hellman, 77 App. Div. 360, 79 N. Y. Supp. 201 (dissenting opinion), majority holding right to seat in New York stock exchange, passing to personal representatives of deceased member, not subject to transfer tax.

Distinguished in Re Embury, 19 App. Div. 217, 79 N. Y. S. R. 885, 45 N. Y. Supp. 881, holding succession to stock of domestic corporation and local bank deposits, by legatees of nonresident owner, not taxable where property removed before tax imposed by court; Re Pullman, 46 App. Div. 577, 62 N. Y. Supp. 395, holding domestic debts of nonresident decedent properly offset against bonds and stock in domestic corporations held by creditors as collateral, for purpose of taxation; Re Crerar, 56 App. Div. 483, 67 N. Y. Supp. 795, refusing to permit appraisal of stock in domestic corporations owned by nonresident decedent, where judgment remitting same unquestioned for six years; Re Horn, 39 Misc. 134, 78 N. Y. Supp. 979, holding debt due on open account to nonresident creditor not taxable; Re Preston, 75 App. Div. 251, 78 N. Y. Supp. 91, Affirming 37 Misc. 236, 75 N. Y. Supp. 251, holding bonds secured by local mortgages not taxable where held by nonresident owner at domicil; Re Abbett, 29 Misc. 570, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1067, holding insurance policy issued by domestic company on life of nonresident, and not within state at time of his death, not taxable; Ruckgaber v. Moore, 104 Fed. 949, and Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 587, 46 L. ed. 702, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515, holding bonds owned by nonresident decedent, passing to nonresident by will and operation of foreign intestate laws, not subject to Federal war tax of 1898.

— Burden of proof.

Cited in Re Thorne, 44 App. Div. 10, 60 N. Y. Supp. 419, holding property received by grantee under agreement to care for grantor during life not taxable in absence of evidence clearly establishing intent of grantor to reserve beneficial use.

— United States bonds.

Cited in Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 125, 44 L. ed. 1004, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, Affirming 30 Misc. 21, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1024, holding local transfer of nontaxable United States bonds, taxable.

Property taxable as personalty.

Cited in Re Jones, 172 N. Y. 584, 60 L. R. A. 479, 65 N. E. 570, holding shares in joint stock association owning real estate, taxable as personalty.

Situs of debts.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 486, 41 L. R. A. 332, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181, 23 So. 825, denying jurisdiction of garnishment of debt due nonresident at domicil, in absence of personal service within state or voluntary appearance; Simpson v. Jersey City Contracting Co. 165 N. Y. 198, 55 L. R. A. 804, 58 N. E. 896, holding interest of nonresident owner of stock in foreign corporation pledged to domestic creditor, subject to attachment.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 797) on attachment of shares of stock in foreign corporation.

Right of life tenant to stock dividends.

Cited in Lowry v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 172 N. Y. 144, 64 N. E. 796, holding life tenant entitled to stock dividend based upon accumulation of earnings or profits.

34 L. R. A. 248, PENNYAR v. KELSEY, 150 N. Y. 77, 44 N. E. 788.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in People ex rel. Hannan v. Board of Health, 153 N. Y. 518, 47 N. E. 785, construing statute forbidding summary removal of veteran "holding a position" in civil service, to apply only in cases of legal appointment.

— Attachment law.

Cited in Courtney v. Eighth Ward Bank, 154 N. Y. 691, 49 N. E. 54, holding statutory requirement of service of certified copy of attachment not satisfied by exact copy not certified to as such, though marked "copy" and signed by sheriff; Robinson v. Columbia Spinning Co. 31 App. Div. 241, 52 N. Y. Supp. 751, holding "actual custody" of property not taken where certified copies of attachment papers not served, and warehouseman's lien for charges not released nor goods actually delivered; People v. St. Nicholas Bank, 44 App. Div. 317, 60 N. Y. Supp. 719, holding verified complaint incompetent as affidavit to show existence of cause of action warranting issuance of attachment, where nothing in record to show its consideration by court; Reedy Elevator Co. v. American Grocery Co. 24 Misc. 682, 53 N. Y. Supp. 989, holding general statement of compliance with foreign corporation law insufficient for maintenance of attachment, where obtaining of receipt for license fee within thirteen months after beginning to do business not affirmatively shown; Tausend v. Handlear, 33 Misc. 590, 68 N. Y. Supp. 77, holding warrant directing marshal to attach property "within city" invalid where city includes territory beyond jurisdiction of marshal.

Distinguished in Rosenzweig v. Wood, 30 Misc. 298, 63 N. Y. Supp. 447, holding party having abode within state, "resident" within attachment statute, though legal domicile elsewhere; Thorn v. Alvord, 32 Misc. 462, 66 N. Y. Supp. 587, refusing to set aside attachment for irregularities in affidavit as to unessential matters.

34 L. R. A. 251, SINGLETON v. STATE, 38 Fla. 297, 56 Am. St. Rep. 177, 21 So. 21.

Conviction on new trial affirmed in 39 Fla. 521, 22 So. 876.

Power to pardon.

Cited in footnotes to Territory v. Richardson, 49 L. R. A. 440, which holds invalid, statutory limitations on pardoning power of governor; People v. Marsh, 51 L. R. A. 461, which sustains pardon granted while case pending on bill of exceptions.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 705) on power of public prosecutor to dismiss prosecution.

34 L. R. A. 256, BELKNAP v. LOUISVILLE, 99 Ky. 474, 59 Am. St. Rep. 573, 36 S. W. 1118.

Validity of election to authorize bond issue.

Cited in Ashland v. Culbertson, 103 Ky. 162, 44 S. W. 441, upholding favorable vote by four fifths of electors for issue of bonds for erection of school building at general municipal elections.

Sufficiency of vote.

Cited in Re Denny, 156 Ind. 119, 51 L. R. A. 728, footnote p. 722, 59 N. E. 359, holding constitutional requirement for adoption of constitutional amendment by majority of electors not satisfied by majority of those voting thereon, where not majority of all votes cast at election.

Cited in footnotes to Bryan v. Stephenson, 35 L. R. A. 752, which requires majority of all votes cast at election to authorize issue of bonds; State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 48 L. R. A. 652, which requires majority of all electors voting at election for any purpose, to adopt constitutional amendment; De Soto Parish v. Williams, 37 L. R. A. 761, which holds only majority of taxpayers actually voting at election necessary to authorize increase of taxes.

Distinguished in Davis v. Brown, 46 W. Va. 719, 34 S. E. 839, holding three fifths of votes upon question of relocation of county seat sufficient to authorize same, though not three fifths of "all votes cast."

Overruled in part in Montgomery County Fiscal Court v. Trimble, 104 Ky. 639, 42 L. R. A. 742, footnote p. 738, 47 S. W. 773, holding vote of two thirds of those voting upon issue of bonds sufficient to authorize issue.

Stare decisis.

Cited in Pratt v. Breckinridge, 112 Ky. 27, 65 S. W. 136, holding court of appeals not bound to adhere to an erroneous decision by it.

34 L. R. A. 262, MULLAN v. STATE, 114 Cal. 578, 46 Pac. 670.

Amendment of Constitution.

Distinguished in People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Curry, 130 Cal. 90, 62 Pac. 516, holding amendment proposed at regular session of legislature not superseded by one proposed at subsequent special session, where not included in proclamation convening it.

34 L. R. A. 265, PHILBROOK v. NEWMAN, 114 Cal. 635, 46 Pac. 742.

Assignment of claim by foreign executrix.

Cited in Bovard v. Dickenson, 131 Cal. 164, 63 Pac. 162, holding title by assignment from foreign executrix not established in absence of proof of foreign law or order of court approving transfer.

34 L. R. A. 274, MEMPHIS NAT. BANK v. NEELY, 97 Tenn. 120, 56 Am. St. Rep. 788, 36 S. W. 716.

Obligation of contract by party non compos mentis.

Cited in Flach v. Gottschalk Co. 88 Md. 375, 42 L. R. A. 748, 71 Am. St. Rep. 418, 41 Atl. 908, enforcing contract where lunatic has had benefit of consideration and good-faith obligor cannot be placed in statu quo.

Cited in footnote to American Trust & Bkg. Co. v. Boone, 40 L. R. A. 250, which holds bank liable for paying check of one judged insane in other state, though insanity not known to bank.

Imputed notice.

Cited in Curtice v. Crawford County Bank, 110 Fed. 844, holding bank president's knowledge in individual capacity of pledge of stock of stockholder not imputable to bank so as to defeat statutory loan subsequently made thereon without his knowledge.

Contracts by married women.

Cited in footnote to Harrisburg Nat. Bank v. Bradshaw, 34 L. R. A. 597, which sustains renewal by married woman of accommodation indorsement made before marriage.

34 L. R. A. 279, STATE v. ORR, 68 Conn. 101, 35 Atl. 770.

Police regulations.

Cited in Dupont v. District of Columbia, 20 App. D. C. 487, upholding ordinance forbidding removal of garbage for feeding to pigs or use as fertilizer, though rights valuable; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 61 C. C. A. 98, 126 Fed. 36, holding grant of exclusive franchise to remove garbage for period of fifty years valid under police power.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Moriarity v. McMahon, 38 L. R. A. 675, which holds business of scavenger within control of city having power to make ordinances for protection of health; State v. Hill, 50 L. R. A. 473, which holds void, ordinance requiring license for scavenger work and empowering health board to decide who are competent bidders; Iler v. Ross, 57 L. R. A. 895, which denies city's right to grant monopoly by contract for removal of ashes, etc.; State ex rel. Beek v. Wagener, 46 L. R. A. 442, which sustains statute regulating business of commission merchants handling agricultural products.

Cited in notes (38 L. R. A. 314) on municipal power over nuisances affecting safety, health, and personal comfort; (38 L. R. A. 642) on municipal power over nuisances relating to trade or business.

34 L. R. A. 283, HENDRY v. BENLISA, 37 Fla. 609, 20 So. 800.

Delay as affecting right to specific performance.

Cited in footnote to Reid v. Mix, 55 L. R. A. 706, which requires one seeking to rescind contract for delay to show such wilful delay as to evince other party's intent to treat contract at end.

34 L. R. A. 286, BAGLEY v. COLUMBUS SOUTHERN R. CO. 98 Ga. 626, 58 Am. St. Rep. 335, 25 S. E. 638.

Fences as part of realty.

Cited in Bagley v. Rose Hill Sugar Co. 111 La. 278, 35 So. 539, holding that plantation fences pass with title to the land.

Crops as personalty.

Cited in Knight v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 93 Tex. 418, 55 S. W. 558, holding action for burning grass transitory and maintainable in another county than that in which injury inflicted.

34 L. R. A. 293, LOUISVILLE, N. A. & C. R. CO. v. LYNCH, 147 Ind. 165, 44 N. E. 997, 46 N. E. 471.

Presumption of negligence.

Cited in Bishop v. Brown, 14 Colo. App. 548, 61 Pac. 50, and Omaha Packing Co. v. Murray, 112 Ill. App. 239, holding negligence not presumed from mere fact of boiler explosion.

General findings and special verdict.

Cited in Huntington County v. Bonebrake, 146 Ind. 317, 45 N. E. 470, holding general interrogatory as to negligence improperly submitted to jury finding special verdict; Boswell v. Wakley, 149 Ind. 69, 48 N. E. 637, disregarding as conclusion of law, jury's answer to interrogatory as to plaintiff's "negligence;" Roller v. Kling, 150 Ind. 162, 49 N. E. 948, and Bower v. Bower, 146 Ind. 398, 45 N. E. 595, holding general instructions covering law of case improper where special verdict to be found on all issues; Alexandria v. Young, 20 Ind. App. 677, 51 N. E. 109, holding absence of general finding of negligence does not invalidate judgment based on special verdict in case involving negligence.

Boiler explosions, generally.

Cited in footnotes to Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Kendall, 51 L. R. A. 781, which holds damages which purchaser of boiler is compelled to pay for injuries to employee by its explosion, recoverable against maker as damages for breach of warranty; Vieth v. Hope Salt & Coal Co. 57 L. R. A. 410, which denies liability for injury to neighbor by explosion of steam boiler operated on own premises with care and skill.

Allegation of negligence.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 218) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

34 L. R. A. 297, POTTER v. BERRY, 53 N. J. Eq. 151, 51 Am. St. Rep. 626, 32 Atl. 259.

34 L. R. A. 301, AMERICAN ACCL. CO. v. CARSON, 99 Ky. 441, 59 Am. St. Rep. 473, 36 S. W. 169.

"Accidental" death.

Cited in Railway Officials & E. Acci. Asso. v. Drummond, 56 Neb. 242, 76 N. W. 562, upholding recovery for injury inflicted by shot from robber, which jury finds unintentional; Campbell v. Fidelity & C. Co. 109 Ky. 670, 60 S. W. 492, holding death of insured, killed while making an assault on policeman, accidental, within policy.

Distinguished in Butero v. Travelers' Acci. Ins. Co. 96 Wis. 541, 65 Am. St. Rep. 61, 71 N. W. 811, holding death from wounds intentionally inflicted by another not "accidental," though unanticipated by insured; Carnes v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 106 Iowa, 286, 68 Am. St. Rep. 306, 76 N. W. 683, holding burden on plaintiff to establish that death accidental where caused by morphine intentionally taken.

Conditions in policy, as matter of defense.

Distinguished in Ætna Ins. Co. v. Glasgow Electric Light & Power Co. 107 Ky. 82, 52 S. W. 975, holding that condition in policies relieving insurer from liability for loss from fire caused by electric current need not be negated by insurer suing on policies.

34 L. R. A. 303, WHITELEY v. CENTRAL TRUST CO. 22 C. C. A. 67, 43 U. S. App. 643, 76 Fed. 74.

Priority of railroad mortgage.

Cited in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 24 C. C. A. 512, 48 U. S. App. 324, 79 Fed. 227, holding mortgage takes precedence over subsequent judgment, based on negligence of company; Columbus, S. & H. R. Co.'s Appeals, 109 Fed. 196, holding creditors not given lien superior to mortgage by assumption agreement providing for payment of debts out of proceeds of bonds secured by mortgage.

Cited in footnote to Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Doud, 52 L. R. A. 481, which holds claim for money loaned to pay interest on mortgage debt inferior to lien of prior mortgage.

34 L. R. A. 308, FULLER v. KANE, 110 Mich. 549, 64 Am. St. Rep. 362, 68 N. W. 267.

Taxation of judgments.

Cited in footnote to Hamilton v. Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 238, which holds void, statute for taxation of personal judgments with specified exceptions.

34 L. R. A. 309, MYERS v. BALTIMORE COUNTY, 83 Md. 385, 55 Am. St. Rep. 349, 35 Atl. 144.

Property subject to taxation.

Cited in Kelley v. Rhoads, 9 Wyo. 363, 87 Am. St. Rep. 959, 63 Pac. 935, holding herds of sheep feeding on public plains while in transit to another state, subject to local taxation.

Cited in footnotes to Kelley v. Rhodes, 39 L. R. A. 594, which holds right to tax sheep driven through state dependent on purpose to obtain grazing for them; Winkley v. Newton, 35 L. R. A. 756, which holds ice stored in ice houses taxable to nonresident owner.

Notice and hearing.

Cited in Monticello Distilling Co. v. Baltimore, 90 Md. 428, 45 Atl. 210, holding statute authorizing assessment without notice to owner or opportunity for hearing, unconstitutional; Western Ranches v. Custer County, 28 Mont. 281, 72 Pac. 659, holding assessors without jurisdiction to increase assessment where statutory notice to taxpayer not given.

34 L. R. A. 313, STATE ex rel. METCALF v. JOHNSON, 18 Mont. 548, 46 Pac. 533.

Validity of nomination.

Followed on substantially same facts in State ex rel. McLaughlin v. Bailey, 18 Mont. 555, 46 Pac. 1116.

Cited in State ex rel. Clarke v. Moran, 24 Mont. 445, 63 Pac. 390, holding nominations by rival conventions of delegates not selected at regular party call, invalid; State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan, 24 Mont. 392, 62 Pac. 583, holding nominations by state convention in which delegates illegally appointed at mass meeting held without notice, immediately after adjournment of regular county convention, invalid.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Russell v. Tooker, 34 L. R. A. 315, which denies right to recognize nomination by political club.

Injunction to protect political rights.

Cited in State ex rel. Clarke v. Moran, 24 Mont. 437, 63 Pac. 390, restraining by injunction printing of ticket nominated by convention irregularly called.

Power of supreme court as to certiorari.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Court, 24 Mont. 561, 63 Pac. 395, holding authority of supreme court on certiorari to vacate discharge of prisoner in habeas corpus proceedings not granted by authorization to issue certiorari as original writ.

34 L. R. A. 315, STATE ex rel. RUSSELL v. TOOKER, 18 Mont. 540, 46 Pac. 530.

Validity of nomination.

Cited in State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan, 24 Mont. 392, 62 Pac. 583, holding nominations by state convention in which delegates illegally appointed at mass meeting, held without notice immediately after adjournment of regular county convention, invalid; State ex rel. Clarke v. Moran, 24 Mont. 445, 63 Pac. 390, holding nominations by rival conventions of delegates not selected at regular party call, invalid; Whipple v. Owen, 24 Colo. 321, 50 Pac. 861, holding nomination by convention of delegates attempting to assume by petition, name of existing party, invalid; State ex rel. Brooks v. Fransham, 19 Mont. 285, 48 Pac. 1, holding erroneous placing of candidate's name on ballot, where nominated only by petition, not available to defeat election where objection not made before; State ex rel. Wolfe v. Falley, 9 N. D. 456, 83 N. W. 860, upholding nominee by delegate elected under direction of county central committee as against nominee of delegates elected in manner directed by judicial district committee.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Metcalf v. Johnson, 34 L. R. A. 313, which holds unavailing, attempt of twenty-one persons to form new political party.

Injunction to protect political rights.

Cited in State ex rel. Clarke v. Moran, 24 Mont. 437, 63 Pac. 390, restraining by injunction printing of parties nominated by convention irregularly called.

Power of supreme court as to certiorari.

Cited in State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Court, 24 Mont. 561, 63 Pac. 395, holding authority of supreme court on certiorari to vacate discharge of prisoner in habeas corpus proceedings not granted by authorization to issue certiorari as original writ.

Equity practice.

Cited in State ex rel. Metcalf v. Johnson, 18 Mont. 553, 34 L. R. A. 315, 46 Pac. 533, holding judgment in equity not controlled by prayer for relief.

34 L. R. A. 318, STATE v. NELSON, 66 Minn. 166, 61 Am. St. Rep. 399, 68 N. W. 1066.

Municipal police regulations.

Cited in Norfolk v. Flynn, 101 Va. 476, 62 L. R. A. 773, footnote p. 771, 99 Am. St. Rep. 918, 44 S. E. 717, sustaining ordinance requiring inspection of milk sold within city limits and providing for licensing of vendors.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Zeno, 48 L. R. A. 88, which sustains requirement of license for barber; State v. Crescent Creamery Co. 54 L. R. A. 466, which sustains statute against selling cream containing less than 20 per cent of fat; People v. Biesecker, 57 L. R. A. 178, which denies legislative power to prohibit sale of certain preservatives or of dairy products containing same; State v. Layton, 62 L. R. A. 164, which sustains statutory prohibition against manufacture or sale of baking powder containing alum; St. Louis v. Fischer, 64 L. R. A. 679, which sustains ordinance prohibiting maintenance of dairy within city limits.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 261) on legal restrictions on department stores.

Distinguished in St. Paul v. Peck, 78 Minn. 498, 81 N. W. 389, denying validity of ordinance requiring local dairyman to pay fee for inspection of cattle:

State v. Elofson, 86 Minn. 105, 90 N. W. 309, holding ordinance requiring inspection of cattle kept outside municipal limits, "without expense to city," invalid.

34 L. R. A. 321, HASTINGS v. FOXWORTHY, 45 Neb. 676, 63 N. W. 955.

Statement of unliquidated claim against municipality.

Limited in Dovey v. Plattsmouth, 52 Neb. 645, 73 N. W. 11, holding filing of detailed statement not condition precedent, except in action based on negligence.

Decision on former hearing as res judicata.

Cited in Fuller v. Cunningham, 48 Neb. 859, 67 N. W. 879, refusing to consider correctness of instruction given by trial court on second trial in accordance with judgment on first appeal; State ex rel. Seth Thomas Clock Co. v. Cass County, 60 Neb. 573, 83 N. W. 733, holding construction of contract on first appeal governs second appeal in absence of manifest error; Smith v. Neufeld, 61 Neb. 701, 85 N. W. 898, holding evidence of fraud in sale of exempt property properly excluded where held immaterial on former appeal; First Nat. Bank v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 2 Herdman (Neb.) 115, 95 N. W. 1062, holding that doctrine of "law of the case" should be restricted to such questions as have been presented and decided at a former hearing of the same cause.

Cited in footnote to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Benz, 58 L. R. A. 690, which holds ruling on reversal of judgment and remanding of action which had been removed to Federal court not law of case if action dismissed and new one begun in other county.

Annotation in 34 L. R. A. 321, referred to with approval in Jones v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 65 S. C. 420, 43 S. E. 884, holding principles of law decided on first appeal, res judicata on later appeal; Bridges v. McAlister, 106 Ky. 802, 45 L. R. A. 804, 90 Am. St. Rep. 267, 51 S. W. 603, holding dicta of court on point not in issue on former trial not conclusive on subsequent trial of issue raised by amended pleadings.

Effect of general demurrer.

Cited in Barr v. Little, 54 Neb. 556, 74 N. W. 850, overthrowing complaint on demurrer to answer.

34 L. R. A. 350, EVERETT v. LOS ANGELES CONSOL. ELECTRIC R. CO. 115 Cal. 105, 46 Pac. 889, 43 Pac. 207.

Liability for injury to person on street railway track.

Cited in Cawley v. La Crosse City R. Co. 101 Wis. 151, 77 N. W. 179, holding railway not liable for injury to driver of wagon turning onto railway tracks without looking or listening or heeding warning signals given; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 218, 35 Atl. 1126, holding railway not liable for injury to wagon by car, approach of which apprehended but not avoided as it might reasonably have been; Wahlgren v. Market Street R. Co. 132 Cal. 664, 62 Pac. 308, holding question of contributory negligence for jury where pedestrian injured at night by car switching backward across sidewalk into barn, without light or signals; Ames v. Waterloo & C. F. Rapid Transit Co. 120 Iowa, 643, 95 N. W. 161, denying right of recovery for death of person stepping directly upon street car track from behind covered wagon, without looking for car; Harrington v. Los Angeles R. Co. 140 Cal. 523, 63 L. R. A. 242, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85, 74 Pac. 15, holding railway liable for death due to reckless collision of car with bicycle rider racing in violation of ordinance.

Distinguished in Abrahams v. Los Angeles Traction Co. 124 Cal. 413, 57 Pac. 216, holding railway liable for injury due to reckless collision of car with sprinkling cart, rightfully on car tracks; Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 280, 55 Pac. 908, holding party driving wagon across tracks in front of approaching car not negligent where car not seen until wagon almost on tracks, and car still sufficiently distant to have been stopped; Schneider v. Market Street R. Co. 134 Cal. 491, 66 Pac. 734, upholding verdict for pedestrian struck at public crossing by electric car approaching at excessive speed without signal.

Proximate cause.

Cited in footnote to Rider v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 125, which holds proximate cause that which, in natural sequence, unbroken by new cause, produced event.

Negligence in riding bicycle.

Cited in footnote to Moore v. District of Columbia, 41 L. R. A. 208, which holds reasonableness of ordinance prohibiting riding bicycle with handle bars more than 4 inches below saddle a question of fact.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 303) on bicycle law.

34 L. R. A. 360, VAN EPPS v. REDFIELD, 68 Conn. 39, 35 Atl. 809.

Presumption on demurrer.

Cited in Francis v. Earle, 77 Fed. 713, holding agreement alleged in defense of action on note not presumed oral on demurrer.

Specific performance of agreement.

Second appeal in Van Epps v. Redfield, 69 Conn. 114, 36 Atl. 1011, holding fact of occupancy of premises without payment of rent insufficient evidence of oral agreement to justify decree of specific performance; Clowes v. Miller, 74 Conn. 296, 50 Atl. 728, holding that specific performance of contract will not be decreed where it would defeat primary object of the agreement.

34 L. R. A. 363, SANDAGE v. STUDEBAKER BROS. MFG. CO. 142 Ind. 148, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165, 41 N. E. 380.

Actions relating to patent rights.

Cited in Eclipse Wind Engine Co. v. Zimmerman Mfg. Co. 16 Ind. App. 500, 44 N. E. 1115, enforcing notes given for right to use patented appliance, though not marked "given for patent right;" Mason v. McLeod, 57 Kan. 109, 41 L. R. A. 550, 57 Am. St. Rep. 327, 45 Pac. 76, holding vendee entitled to recover consideration paid to vendor of patent right who fails to conform to statutory requirements of sale.

Contracts in violation of statutes.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery, 152 Ind. 21, 71 Am. St. Rep. 301, 49 N. E. 582, holding acceptance of benefits under contract stipulating release thereby of all claims for damages, not a compromise, but a release made void by employers liability act.

Injunction against foreign action.

Cited in footnote to Miller v. Gittings, 37 L. R. A. 654, which enjoins oppressive action in another state, brought to evade local laws.

Distribution of insolvent's estate.

Cited in Combs v. Union Trust Co. 146 Ind. 691, 46 N. E. 16, holding foreign creditor attaching insolvent debtor's property in his jurisdiction accountable for proceeds before sharing pro rata in general assignment.

34 L. R. A. 368, BRIDAL VEIL LUMBERING CO. v. JOHNSON, 30 Or. 205, 60 Am. St. Rep. 818, 46 Pac. 790.

"Public use" within eminent domain law.

Cited in Fanning v. Gilliland, 37 Or. 374, 82 Am. St. Rep. 758, 61 Pac. 636, holding condemnation of land for public road, public use though only single family thereby benefited; Lake Koen Nav. Reservoir & Irrig. Co. v. Klein, 63 Kan. 497, 65 Pac. 684, upholding exercise of eminent domain by private corporation organized for distribution of waters for irrigation; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 13, 56 L. R. A. 245, footnote p. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849, upholding condemnation of property for open track, though but single industry thereby benefited; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 590, 66 L. R. A. 393, 57 Atl. 1001, upholding right of railroad company to condemn land for branch track to quarry.

Cited in footnotes to Kansas & T. Coal R. Co. v. Northwestern Coal & Min. Co. 51 L. R. A. 936, which holds railroad company entitled to exercise of eminent domain, though railroad short and built chiefly to transport coal of particular company; Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 63 L. R. A. 821, which denies power to acquire easement over land for transportation to market of logs of private owner.

Distinguished in Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 32 Or. 587, 62 L. R. A. 517, 52 Pac. 573, holding skidway for logs, beginning and terminating in land of private corporation and not connecting with public road, not subject to exercise of eminent domain.

34 L. R. A. 369, STATE ex rel. ST. LOUIS UNDERGROUND SERVICE CO. v. MURPHY, 134 Mo. 548, 56 Am. St. Rep. 515, 31 S. W. 784, 34 S. W. 51, 35 S. W. 1132.

Municipal powers and liabilities as to streets and water.

Cited in Pikes Peak Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 44 C. C. A. 340, 105 Fed. 8, upholding ordinance granting right to use city water for electric light plant in consideration of furnishing certain lights free of charge, and conferring other benefits upon city; McWethy v. Aurora Electric Light & P. Co. 202 Ill. 226, 67 N. E. 9, upholding right of municipal corporation owning fee of street to authorize erection of electric light poles therein; Pettit v. Grand Junction, 119 Iowa, 358, 93 N. W. 381, holding abutting owner entitled to abatement of nuisance caused by erection of public buildings in dedicated street.

Cited in footnotes to Prince v. Crocker, 32 L. R. A. 610, which holds right to enter on public garden in Boston to make suitable connection between surface tracks and subway implied from rights given by statute; State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 42 L. R. A. 113, which sustains right of subway company under ordinance consenting to underground conduit.

Cited in notes (38 L. R. A. 311) on municipal power over nuisances affecting safety, health, and personal comfort; (39 L. R. A. 621) on municipal control over public nuisances on public streets and highways, created by street railroads and other electric companies.

Overruled in State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 565, 42 L. R. A. 118, 46 S. W. 981, upholding power of municipality to compel telegraph company, constructing underground conduit under valid ordinance, to permit other telegraph company to use same.

Ultra vires act.

Cited in State ex rel. Kansas City v. East Fifth Street R. Co. 140 Mo. 556, 33 L. R. A. 223, 62 Am. St. Rep. 742, 41 S. W. 955, holding forfeiture of franchise not prevented by ultra vires ordinance declaring nonuser should not work forfeiture; Unionville v. Martin, 95 Mo. App. 38, 68 S. W. 605, upholding action by municipality to recover money paid under ultra vires contract for digging well unauthorized by ordinance.

Distinguished in Chenoweth v. Pacific Exp. Co. 93 Mo. App. 195, holding annuity contract by railroad superintendent with injured express messenger enforceable, though ultra vires, provided contract not forbidden by law.

— Estoppel.

Cited in Wheeler v. Poplar Bluff, 149 Mo. 46, 49 S. W. 1088, holding city not estopped to deny liability on contract to grade streets, made without authorizing ordinance, though contract fulfilled; Noel v. San Antonio, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 586, 33 S. W. 263, holding city not estopped to deny liability on notes issued pursuant to unconstitutional contract, though latter performed and benefits received; Macon Consol. Street R. Co. v. Macon, 112 Ga. 787, 38 S. E. 60, holding ultra vires agreement of mayor and council not to compel change of tracks cannot be used as estoppel to prevent enforcement of subsequent ordinance requiring such change; Simpson v. Stoddard County, 173 Mo. 491, 73 S. W. 700 (dissenting opinion), majority holding county estopped from questioning sale of swamp lands after acquiescing therein for thirty years; Stealey v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 407, 78 S. W. 599, holding city not estopped by ultra vires ordinance from denying that defective sidewalk was within limits of city.

Liabilities of quasi public corporations.

Distinguished in Rockingham County Light & Power Co. v. Hobbs, 72 N. H. 533, 66 L. R. A. 586, 58 Atl. 46, holding electric company with power to exercise right of eminent domain bound to supply electricity at reasonable rates to public.

34 L. R. A. 378, CLARK v. STANWOOD, 166 Mass. 379, 44 N. E. 537.

Liability of partner's property for firm debts.

Cited in Priesing v. Crampton, 181 Mass. 493, 63 N. E. 936, holding retiring partner liable to firm creditor, though debt proved against insolvent estate of continuing partner assuming firm debts; Very v. Clarke, 177 Mass. 53, 83 Am. St. Rep. 260, 58 N. E. 151, holding that partnership debt cannot be set off against individual claim of member against third person; Re Beck, 110 Fed. 140, holding that trustee should be appointed by individual and not firm creditors on bankruptcy of individual partner.

Cited in footnote to McCord-Brady Co. v. Mills, 46 L. R. A. 737, which holds individual property not necessarily included in assignment for creditors by partners.

34 L. R. A. 384, Re HULETT, 66 Minn. 327, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419, 69 N. W. 31.

Revocation of will by marriage.

Cited in Kelly v. Stevenson, 85 Minn. 249, 56 L. R. A. 756, footnote p. 754, 89

Am. St. Rep. 545, 88 N. W. 739, holding wife's antenuptial will not revoked by marriage.

Cited in footnotes to Ingersoll v. Hopkins, 40 L. R. A. 191, which holds will giving testator's property to woman made executor, revoked by testator's subsequent marriage to her; Glascott v. Bragg, 56 L. R. A. 258, which holds will in favor of third person revoked by marriage and adoption of child; Hudnall v. Ham, 48 L. R. A. 557, which holds widow precluded by antenuptial contract agreeing to release all interest in his estate, from contesting husband's will, on ground that it was revoked by marriage.

Validity of secret marriage.

Cited in Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah, 139, 58 L. R. A. 728, 95 Am. St. Rep. 821, 69 Pac. 660, holding party "sealed" to another under law of Mormon church entitled to inherit as widow.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 449) on entries in family Bible or other religious book as evidence.

Distinguished in Heminway v. Miller, 87 Minn. 128, 91 N. W. 428, holding no presumption of marriage arises from secret cohabitation and concealed relationship.

Admissibility of party's testimony as to conversation with deceased.

Distinguished in Lowe v. Lowe, 83 Minn. 209, 86 N. W. 11, excluding oral testimony of conversation between appellant and deceased relating to contents of letter tending to show contract alleged, where deceased not shown to have read letter.

34 L. R. A. 389; KRAMER v. OLD, 119 N. C. 1, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, 25 S. E. 813.

Contracts in restraint of trade.

Cited in Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L. R. A. 919, 53 C. C. A. 489, 116 Fed. 309, enjoining employee from violating agreement not to become interested in rival concern within radius of 1500 miles of specified city, during term of his employment; Shute v. Heath, 131 N. C. 282, 42 S. E. 704, holding contract of one selling business, not to engage in same business in any territory in which he had secured patronage, void; Teague v. Schaub, 133 N. C. 465, 45 S. E. 762 (dissenting opinion), majority holding contract of physician with another to locate elsewhere at specified time, if "the field is not larger," void; Disosway v. Edwards, 134 N. C. 257, 46 S. E. 501, holding contract not to engage in liquor business in specified city for twenty years, valid; Robinson v. Suburban Brick Co. 62 C. C. A. 487, 127 Fed. 807, upholding contract not to engage in specified business within radius of 50 miles from specified place, for ten years.

Cited in footnotes to Clark v. Needham, 51 L. R. A. 785, which holds void, lease of manufacturing machinery with agreement against lessor engaging in business for five years; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co. 64 L. R. A. 298, which sustains contract by one selling right to manufacture and sell machine invented by him, to make, or transfer to others right to make, such machines.

— Duration.

Cited in Hauser v. Harding, 126 N. C. 299, 35 S. E. 586, holding physician's valid contract to refrain from practice enforceable during entire lifetime in absence of limitation.

— Breach.

Cited in Jefferson v. Markert, 112 Ga. 505, 37 S. E. 758, holding contract void lated by taking exclusive management of competitive business organized under sham arrangement; Love v. Stidham, 18 App. D. C. 315, 53 L. R. A. 401, holding sales by single member of partnership in violation of restrictive agreement by firm renders all liable for breach.

34 L. R. A. 392, STATE v. YANDLE, 119 N. C. 874, 25 S. E. 796.

Right to compel prisoners to labor.

Cited in State v. Nelson, 119 N. C. 801, 25 S. E. 863, holding sentence to twelve months' hard labor excessive, where prisoner in default for only $60 fine and allowance in bastardy proceeding; Herring v. Dixon, 122 N. C. 425, 29 S. E. 363, holding statute authorizing county commissioners to employ convicts on roads, constitutional; State v. White, 125 N. C. 683, 34 S. E. 532 (dissenting opinion), majority holding bastardy prisoner relieved from fine and allowance by taking insolvent debtor's oath.

34 L. R. A. 393, ILLINOIS C. R. CO. v. IHLENBERG, 21 C. C. A. 546, 43 U. S. App. 726, 75 Fed. Rep. 873.

Self-executing laws.

Cited in Adams v. Kuykendall, 83 Miss. 589, 35 So. 830, holding constitutional provision that property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules, self-executing.

Cited in footnote to State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which holds self-operating constitutional amendment for criminal prosecution by indictment or information only.

Distinguished in State v. Bradford, 12 S. D. 215, 80 N. W. 143, holding appropriate legislation necessary to render effectual, constitutional amendment providing for state control of liquor traffic.

Conflict of laws as to liability for negligence.

Cited in Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Thiebaud, 52 C. C. A. 542, 114 Fed. 922, holding liability for injury through negligence of fellow servant governed by law of place where accident happened; Dormidy v. Sharon Boiler Works, 127 Fed. 485, 34 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 237, holding that Federal court will adopt construction of fellow servant statute by courts of state where injury occurs.

Cited in footnotes to Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Rouse, 44 L. R. A. 410, which holds master's liability for fellow servant's act governed by law of place where cause of action arises; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Becker, 46 L. R. A. 814, which holds servant's assumption of risks from fellow servant's negligence governed by laws of state where injury occurs; Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 640, which holds statute of state where railroad employee injured, as to presumptive evidence of employer's knowledge of defect in appliance, does not govern in action in other state; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Read, 56 L. R. A. 468, which denies right to recover in another state for injury from fellow servant's negligence in state where no remedy given.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 221) on conflict of laws as to action for death or bodily injuries.

34 L. R. A. 398, Re MILLER, 110 Mich. 676, 64 Am. St. Rep. 376, 68 N. W. 90.

Ex post facto legislation.

Cited in Judd v. Judd, 125 Mich. 234, 84 N. W. 134, enforcing payment of alimony by punishment for contempt under statute passed after decree awarding alimony.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which sustains statute authorizing prosecution by information of crimes already committed; State v. Martijn, 43 L. R. A. 94, which holds that imprisonment for felony, terminated by unconditional pardon, is not to be counted as former imprisonment in determining whether accused an habitual criminal.

What constitutes jeopardy.

Cited in footnote to Re Ascher, 57 L. R. A. 806, which holds accused not put in jeopardy by discharge of jury after trial commenced, because jurors prejudiced in his favor.

34 L. R. A. 408, RATHBONE v. WIRTH, 150 N. Y. 459, 45 N. E. 15.

Local self government.

Cited in Re Brenner, 170 N. Y. 190, 63 N. E. 133, Affirming 35 Misc. 308, 71 N. Y. Supp. 44, holding statute authorizing appointment of county commissioner of jurors by judges of supreme court, void; People ex rel. Balcom v. Mosher, 163 N. Y. 41, 79 Am. St. Rep. 552, 57 N. E. 88, Affirming 45 App. Div. 73, 61 N. Y. Supp. 452, holding statute requiring appointment of party standing highest in civil service list, void; O'Connor v. Fond du Lac, 109 Wis. 265, 53 L. R. A. 836, 85 N. W. 327; People ex rel. Lovett v. Randall, 151 N. Y. 500, 45 N. E. 841; People ex rel. Eldred v. Palmer, 21 App. Div. 106, 47 N. Y. Supp. 403,—holding extension of term of elective office by statute void as to existing incumbent; Lexington v. Thompson, 113 Ky. 551, 57 L. R. A. 778, 68 S. W. 477, denying validity of statute fixing salary of municipal firemen; State ex rel. Geake v. Fox, 158 Ind. 132, 56 L. R. A. 896, 63 N. E. 19, holding statute creating municipal board of safety, void; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Moores, 55 Neb. 492, 41 L. R. A. 628, footnote p. 624, 76 N. W. 175, holding statute authorizing governor to appoint municipal fire and police commissioners, void; People v. Dooley, 69 App. Div. 533, 75 N. Y. Supp. 350, concurring opinion as to proposition that statute providing for election of city magistrates in one borough, and appointment in another, is void; Re Haase, 41 Misc. 118, 83 N. Y. Supp. 932, holding act enlarging term of city chamberlain and depriving common council of right to fill vacancy, unconstitutional; Corscadden v. Haswell, 41 Misc. 63, 82 N. Y. Supp. 347, holding act relating to Albany penitentiary to be local bill, embracing more than one subject.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. McCausland v. Freeman, 47 L. R. A. 67, which sustains statute arbitrarily establishing high school and requiring its maintenance by people of county.

Cited in notes (48 L. R. A. 481, 483) on power of legislature to impose burdens on municipalities and to control their local administration and property; (50 L. R. A. 333) on local self-government in Rhode Island.

Distinguished in Newport v. Horton, 22 R. I. 207, 50 L. R. A. 338, 47 Atl. 312, upholding appointment of chief of police by board of municipal police commissioners, established by statute; Pearce v. Stephens, 18 App. Div. 105, 79 N. Y. S. R. 425, 45 N. Y. Supp. 422, upholding statute requiring that police commissioners shall not be of same political party; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 114, 65 N. E. 956, upholding statute abolishing municipal board of police commissioners and chief of police; People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 446, 63 L. R. A. 894, 67 N. E. 69, Reversing 79 App. Div. 188, 80 N. Y. Supp. 85; upholding special franchise tax, although tangible property connected therewith is thereby transferred from municipal to state board of assessors.

Disapproved in Americus v. Perry, 114 Ga. 879, 57 L. R. A. 234, 40 S. E. 1004, upholding authority of municipal police board created by statute in derogation of charter rights.

Actions by and against taxpayers.

Cited in Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 383, 37 L. R. A. 821, 46 N. E. 857, Reversing 14 App. Div. 487, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1035 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that taxpayer cannot maintain action to restrain payment of salaries to officers alleged to have been appointed in violation of Constitution.

Distinguished in Rogers v. O'Brien, 153 N. Y. 362, 47 N. E. 456, refusing to enjoin eviction of taxpayer from municipal property by dock department merely because in excess of department's authority.

Implied prohibitions in statute.

Cited in Adirondack R. Co. v. Indian River Co. 27 App. Div. 334, 50 N. Y. Supp. 245, enjoining conveyance of forest land to preserve board subject to railway easement, where board empowered to take subject to ten-year leases only; Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 387, 37 L. R. A. 823, 46 N. E. 857 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding appointments without examination to competitive position, where no method of examination provided by legislature; People ex rel. Burby v. Howland, 155 N. Y. 277, 41 L. R. A. 840, 49 N. E. 775, Affirming 17 App. Div. 169, 45 N. Y. Supp. 347, holding statute nullifying constitutional office of justice of peace as criminal court, by depriving it of compensation, void.

Representative character of elective office.

Cited in People v. Dooley, 171 N. Y. 88, 63 N. E. 815 (concurring opinion), to proposition that statute authorizing election of city magistrates by congressional districts is void.

Eligibility to office.

Cited in People ex rel. Price v. Woodbury, 38 Misc. 196, 77 N. Y. Supp. 241, holding charter provision for noneligibility of pensioners to municipal offices unconstitutional.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Goodell v. McGeary, 44 L. R. A. 446, which holds building and furnishing new house with intention of living in same does not make owner elector of ward, so as to be eligible to office of alderman.

Jurisdiction to try title to office.

Distinguished in People ex rel. Corscadden v. Howe, 177 N. Y. 508, 66 L. R. A. 664, 69 N. E. 1114, holding that determination of title to office belongs exclusively to courts of law.

34 L. R. A. 431, WESTERN U. TELEG. CO. v. ROBINSON, 97 Tenn. 638, 37 S. W. 545.

Damages for mental anguish.

Cited in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 172, 58 S. W. 118, holding telegraph company liable for mental anguish of father, due to failure to deliver message announcing son's death; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 79, 54 L. R. A. 851, footnote p. 846, 60 N. E. 1080 (dissenting opinion), majority holding damages for mental anguish alone not maintainable by sendee for failure to deliver message informing of grandmother's death and funeral.

Cited in footnotes to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crocker, 59 L. R. A. 398, which sustains recovery for mental anguish for failure to promptly deliver telegram announcing serious illness of grandchild; Simmons v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 L. R. A. 607, which sustains statute rendering telegraph companies liable for delay in delivering messages; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 L. R. A. 540, which holds that mental anguish will sustain action for breach of contract to promptly transmit telegram.

Disapproved in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Arnold, 96 Tex. 496, 73 S. W. 1043, holding telegraph company not liable for mental anguish of relatives of deceased, caused by not securing clergyman desired through failure of company to deliver message.

Unknown rules as part of contract.

Cited in Hendricks v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 126 N. C. 311, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658, 35 S. E. 543, holding company not relieved from duty to deliver by unknown regulation requiring extra charge for delivery outside "free limits."

34 L. R. A. 436, BUCHANAN v. SUPREME CONCLAVE I. O. OF H. 178 Pa. 465, 56 Am. St. Rep. 774, 35 Atl. 873.

Necessity of giving notice.

Cited in footnote to Matthews v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 39 L. R. A. 433, which denies right to maintain action on fire policy for loss occurring after death of insured and before appointment of representative, for failure to give notice and proofs of loss and bring suit within prescribed time.

Notice of forfeiture for nonpayment of premium.

Cited in footnotes to McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 56 L. R. A. 233, which holds forfeiture of policy waived by retaining payment made after default, without notice of any condition affixed; Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 50 L. R. A. 99, which holds necessity of giving notice before forfeiting policy for nonpayment of premium dispensed with by converting life policy into nonforfeitable policy for fixed term of years; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 49 L. R. A. 127, which requires notice of accrual of premium before forfeiting policy for nonpayment.

34 L. R. A. 439, HARRISBURG, C. & C. TURNP. ROAD CO. v. HARRISBURG & M. ELECTRIC R. CO. 177 Pa. 585, 35 Atl. 850.

Security for compensation under eminent domain law.

Cited in Zanziger v. Wayne Electric Light Co. 7 Del. Co. Rep. 12, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 578, imposing penal bond to cover damage sustained by owner on whose property electric light poles erected; Philadelphia, M. & S. Street R. Co.'s Petition, 203 Pa. 355, 53 Atl. 191, holding act giving street railway company right to use portion of another company's tracks unconstitutional because not providing adequate security for damages.

Cited in footnote to Steinhart v. Superior Court, 59 L. R. A. 404, which holds payment into court of sufficient to compensate landowner not payment authorizing giving possession of land sought to be condemned.

34 L. R. A. 440, BATES v. CULLUM, 177 Pa. 633, 52 Am. St. Rep. 753. 35 Atl. 861.

Vested rights under statute of limitation.

Cited in Com. v. Geary, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 219, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 542, holding extension of limitation period on constable's bond not retroactive; Philadelphia v. Armstrong, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 58, holding that retroactive statute making effective, if valid, municipal lien filed too late, does not dispense with proof of ordinance authorizing work on which lien founded.

Cited in footnotes to Osborne v. Lindstrom, 46 L. R. A. 715, which holds invalid, statute shortening period of limitation without leaving reasonable time to sue; Gilbert v. Ackerman, 45 L. R. A. 118, which denies validity of statute shortening limitation period without providing reasonable time for bringing action after act goes into effect; Hogg v. Hartley, 54 L. R. A. 215, which holds personal judgment against one previously leaving state not excused from statute of limitations by absence.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 613) on vested right in defense of statute of limitations.

34 L. R. A. 442, CHATTANOOGA ELECTRIC R. CO. v. JOHNSON, 97 Tenn. 667, 37 S. W. 558.

Statutes affecting rights of action.

Cited in Whaley v. Catlett, 103 Tenn. 354, 53 S. W. 131, holding statute of limitations runs from date of injury and not from date of deceased's death; Hooper v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 107 Tenn. 719, 65 S. W. 405, holding action not barred by amendment substituting another beneficiary after period of limitations, where action begun before; Elliott v. Felton, 56 C. C. A. 79, 119 Fed. 275, holding state decision in action under statute, that party is vice principal, not binding upon Federal court on transfer of cause; Davidson Benedict Co. v. Severson, 109 Tenn. 602, 72 S. W. 967, holding damages for wrongful injury to deceased himself, and damages suffered by his widow and children or next of kin, recoverable under statutes in single action.

Distinguished in Watson v. St. Paul City R. Co. 70 Minn. 518, 73 N. W. 400, holding husband not "next of kin" of wife under statute providing for survival of actions for death by wrongful act.

— Action by administrator.

Cited as obiter in D'Arcy v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 108 Tenn. 580, 69 S. W. 768, holding husband entitled to sue on policy taken out by third person in wife's favor, where wife dies before insured.

34 L. R. A. 445, THIRD NAT. BANK v. DIVINE GROCERY CO. 97 Tenn. 603, 37 S. W. 390.

Regulation of contracts.

Cited in Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 103 Tenn. 611, 53 S. W. 970, and Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 430, 56 L. R. A. 318, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, upholding statute requiring redemption of store orders in cash on any regular pay day, where given as wages; Neas v. Borches, 109 Tenn. 404, 97 Am. St. Rep. 851, 71 S. W. 50 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding act providing that sales of merchandise in bulk shall be presumed fraudulent, unless seller and buyer comply with certain statutory requirements.

Cited in note (36 L. R. A. 335, 338) on right of creditor to buy property from his debtor in satisfaction of debt.

Sufficiency of title of statute.

Distinguished in Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 129, 45 L. R. A. 309, 50 S. W. 744, upholding provisions empowering contracting railroads to guarantee bonds of terminal company in statute purporting to amend act to provide for organization of railroad terminal corporation and to define powers, duties, and liabilities thereof; Carroll v. Alsup, 107 Tenn. 267, 64 S. W. 193, upholding discriminating assessment of corporations under statute enacted "to provide more just and equitable laws for assessment and collection of revenue for state, county, and municipal purposes;" State ex rel. Astor v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 104 Tenn. 729, 78 Am. St. Rep. 941, 59 S. W. 1033, upholding exclusion of certain articles from operation of statute purporting to regulate all trusts.

34 L. R. A. 449, DENNIS v. DENNIS, 68 Conn. 186, 57 Am. St. Rep. 95, 36 Atl. 37.

Grounds for divorce.

Cited in Allen v. Allen, 73 Conn. 55, 49 L. R. A. 143, 84 Am. St. Rep. 135, 46 Atl. 242, holding evidence of intemperate habits of husband pending action for divorce, admissible; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 427, 39 Atl. 516, granting divorce on ground of cruel treatment of wife by husband having infectious disease; Tirrell v. Tirrell, 72 Conn. 569, 47 L. R. A. 751, 45 Atl. 153, holding regular payment of money by husband to wife under order of court does not prevent granting of divorce for wilful desertion and "total neglect of duty."

Connivance in securing evidence of infidelity.

Cited in Torlotting v. Torlotting, 82 Mo. App. 203, refusing divorce to husband employing agent to secure ocular proof of wife's infidelity, where agent himself participated in act of adultery.

34 L. R. A. 459, SAVANNAH, F. & W. R. CO. v. WALLER, 97 Ga. 164, 25 S. E. 823.

Contributory negligence of children.

Cited in footnote to Gleason v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 622, which denies liability for injury by collision with team, to twelve-year-old boy using street as playground.

Duty to trespassing children.

Cited in footnote to Ashworth v. Southern R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 502, which holds company liable for injury to young child while riding on running board of engine according to known custom of children.

34 L. R. A. 464, SHEFFER v. WILLOUGHBY, 163 Ill. 518, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483, 45 N. E. 253.

Liability for negligent supply of unwholesome food.

Distinguished in Wiedeman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 99, 49 N. E. 210, holding retail meat dealer liable on implied warranty of wholesomeness of meat sold, whether aware of its condition or not.

34 L. R. A. 466, ROSS v. HAWKEYE INS. CO. 93 Iowa, 222, 61 N. W. 852.

Objections first urged on appeal.

Cited in Chase v. Wright, 116 Iowa, 557, 90 N. W. 357, holding that objection to judgment because rendered on same day that motion to strike out portion of answer was sustained not available where made for first time on appeal.

34 L. R. A. 469, ZEILER v. CENTRAL R. CO. 84 Md. 304, 35 Atl. 932.

Validity of ordinance passed by "majority" vote.

Cited in North Platte v. North Platte Waterworks Co. 56 Neb. 410, 76 N. W. 906, upholding suspension of rule requiring reading of ordinance on successive days, where ordered by four councilmen, being all in attendance out of total of six.

34 L. R. A. 472, RATLIFF v. BEALE, 74 Miss. 247, 20 So. 865.

Liability of exempt property for taxes.

Distinguished in White v. Martin, 75 Miss. 650, 65 Am. St. Rep. 616, 23 So. 289, holding laborer's wages subject to tax sale though exempt from creditor's garnishment.

Discrimination against negroes.

Cited in Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 222, 42 L. ed. 1015, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583, upholding educational qualifications for franchise imposed by Mississippi Constitution.

Poll taxes generally.

Cited in footnote to Russell v. Ayer, 37 L. R. A. 246, which holds constitutional provision for levying capitation tax equal to tax on property valued at $300 not self-executing.

34 L. R. A. 477, WESTERVELT v. MOHRENSTECHER, 22 C. C. A. 93, 40 U. S. App. 221, 76 Fed. 118.

Report of second appeal in 30 C. C. A. 587, 57 U. S. App. 618, 87 Fed. 160.

Construction of contract.

Cited in Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith, 40 L. R. A. 655, 29 C. C. A. 225, 56 U. S. App. 393, 85 Fed. 403, holding notice by beneficiary, of insured's death sufficient under policy requiring immediate notice of accident or death, though no notice of accident given.

— Bonds.

Cited in North St. Louis Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Obert, 169 Mo. 515, 69 S. W. 1044, holding surety bound on "renewal bond" from date of expiration of previous term, and not only for balance of new term remaining after payment of renewal premium; Meads v. United States, 26 C. C. A. 237, 54 U. S. App. 150, 81 Fed. 692, holding sureties on bond of receiver of land district liable for moneys paid by settlers before due, under regulations of Interior Department.

Cited in footnotes to First Nat. Bank v. Briggs, 37 L. R. A. 845, which holds cashier's bond conditioned for faithful discharge of duties as long as position occupied extends only over year for which elected; Lieberman v. First Nat. Bank, 48 L. R. A. 514, which denies release of surety on bank teller's bond for unauthorized statements by cashier.

34 L. R. A. 481, DOSTER v. CHARLOTTE STREET R. CO. 117 N. C. 651, 23 S. E. 449.

Liability for injuries caused by frightening horses.

Cited in Terre Haute Electric R. Co. v. Yant, 21 Ind. App. 489, 69 Am. St. Rep. 376, 51 N. E. 732, holding street railway not liable for injury caused by fright of horse at car properly run; Everett v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 121 N. C. 522, 27 S. E. 991, upholding charge that railway liable for injuries caused by frightening horses by "negligently, wantonly, or maliciously" blowing engine whistle.

Cited in footnotes to Oates v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 447, which holds company liable for motorman sounding gong or ringing bell after seeing horse is frightened; McCann v. Consolidated Traction Co. 38 L. R. A. 236, which holds running tank car on street railway track, with black coats waving from it, frightening horse, negligence.

When negligence question for jury.

Distinguished in Moore v. Charlotte Electric Street R. Co. 128 N. C. 458, 39 S. E. 57, holding question of negligence for jury where carriage struck between squares while crossing to watering trough, by car running at excessive speed without signal.

Assumption of risk and contributory negligence.

Cited in Rittenhouse v. Wilmington Street R. Co. 120 N. C. 546, 26 S. E. 922, holding voluntary assumption of risk included in instruction submitting "contributory negligence" to jury.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 60) on contributory negligence in entering or remaining in employment.

Jurisdiction of justice of peace.

Cited in Malloy v. Fayetteville, 122 N. C. 484, 29 S. E. 880, upholding jurisdiction of justice in action for damages laid in amount not exceeding $50, though property injured of greater value.

34 L. R. A. 487, UNION BANK v. OXFORD, 119 N. C. 214, 25 S. E. 966.

Followed by Federal court on removal thereto in 37 C. C. A. 493, 96 Fed. 295, Reversing 90 Fed. 8.

Validity of municipal indebtedness.

Cited in Mays v. Washington, 122 N. C. 12, 40 L. R. A. 166, 29 S. E. 343, enjoining issue of bonds in purchase of electric light plant prior to authorizing statute and favorable vote of majority of qualified voters; Glenn v. Wray, 126 N. C. 732, 36 S. E. 167, holding amendment of charter unnecessary to empower town to vote issue of auxiliary bonds, where authorized by provision in railway charter; Graves v. Moore County, 135 N. C. 52, 47 S. E. 134, holding bonds issued under authority of invalid statute, void.

Distinguished in Stanly County v. Coler & Co. 190 U. S. 442, 47 L. ed. 1131, 23

Sup. Ct. Rep. 811, holding bona fide purchasers of bonds to aid in construction of railroad entitled to rely on recitals therein that they were issued in compliance with Code.

— Entry of yeas and nays on passage of enabling statute.

Cited in Stanly County v. Snuggs, 121 N. C. 398, 39 L. R. A. 440, footnote p. 439, 28 S. E. 539, holding statute imposing tax void where yeas and nays on second and third readings not entered in journal; Rodman v. Washington, 122 N. C. 41, 30 S. E. 118, holding statute providing for tax in excess of constitutional limit to support public schools void where yeas and nays not entered; Buncombe County v. Payne, 123 N. C. 487, 31 S. E. 711; Wilkes County v. Call, 123 N. C. 310, 44 L. R. A. 253, 31 S. E. 481; Charlotte v. Shepard, 122 N. C. 605, 29 S. E. 842,—holding issue of municipal bonds under statute impliedly authorizing same, void, where yeas and nays not entered on journal; Wilkes County v. Coler, 180 U. S. 513, 45 L. ed. 648, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 458, Same case in 51 C. C. A. 400, 113 Fed. 726, holding county bonds void in hands of purchasers for value without actual notice, where yea and nay vote on enabling statute not entered in journal; Debnam v. Chitty, 131 N. C. 677, 43 S. E. 3, holding constitutional provision commanding entry of yeas and nays in journal on second and third reading of bill, mandatory; Graves v. Moore County, 135 N. C. 54, 47 S. E. 134, holding invalid, act authorizing township to issue bonds to raise money for purchase of railroad stock, passed without recording names of representatives voting therefor on journals.

Cited in footnote to Cohn v. Kingsley, 38 L. R. A. 74, which requires journals to show compliance with mandatory provision as to enacting bills by yea and nay vote after three several readings.

— Speaker's certificate of ratification.

Cited in Smathers v. Madison County, 125 N. C. 486, 34 S. E. 554, denying validity of bonds issued under enabling statute not properly passed, where certificate of speaker shows ratification, but not compliance with mandatory provision for entry of yeas and nays; Rodman-Heath Cotton Mills v. Waxhaw, 130 N. C. 294, 41 S. E. 488, holding municipal tax imposed under charter certified to have been regularly passed and ratified, invalid where yeas and nays not taken as provided in Constitution; Brown v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 362, 46 S. E. 741, raising, but not deciding, question as to admissibility of journals or other evidence to invalidate certificates of presiding officers as to compliance with Constitution in passage of bill.

— Evidence.

Cited in New Hanover County v. De Rosset, 129 N. C. 279, 40 S. E. 43, holding transcript, denoting by asterisks names of parties voting, insufficient to show entry thereof in journal; New Hanover County v. Armour Packing Co. 135 N. C. 67, 47 S. E. 411, holding journals of assembly to be conclusive evidence of passage of act; Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 621, 45 S. E. 1023, holding that journal of legislature may be examined by court to determine whether yeas and nays have been duly entered.

— Conclusiveness of enrolled bill.

Cited in footnotes to People v. Dettenthaler, 44 L. R. A. 164, which holds bill in which enacting clause added without authority by clerk of one branch of legislature void; Montgomery Beer Bottling Works v. Gaston, 51 L. R. A. 396, which holds permanent record delivered to secretary of state, to be legislative journal;

State ex rel. Cheyenne v. Swan, 40 L. R. A. 195, which sustains court's right to examine journals to determine whether alleged statutes passed.

— Presumptions and burden of proof.

Cited in Slocomb v. Fayetteville, 125 N. C. 365, 34 S. E. 436, refusing to enjoin issue of municipal bonds in purchase of electric light plant, where pleadings do not show invalidity of enabling statute.

Validity of ultra vires consent judgment.

Cited in McLeod v. Williams, 122 N. C. 454, 30 S. E. 129, setting aside on her motion, consent judgment entered against feme covert on husband's debt.

Attempt to cure defective statute.

Cited in Russell v. Ayer, 120 N. C. 211, 37 L. R. A. 254, 27 S. E. 133 (dissenting opinion), majority holding statute imposing tax failing to meet constitutional requirements cannot be upheld by altering amount laid thereby.

34 L. R. A. 492, REED v. WESTERN U. TELEG. CO. 135 Mo. 661, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 37 S. W. 904.

Telegraph company as common carrier.

Cited in State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 575, 42 L. R. A. 123, 46 S. W. 981, upholding ordinance granting, without reservation, right to lay wire conduit under street, since power impliedly reserved to compel admission of other wires thereto.

Liability for negligence in transmission of message.

Cited in footnote to Coit v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 53 L. R. A. 678, which holds transmission of telegram while wires working badly not gross negligence if wires working well when actually sent.

Distinguished in Reynolds v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 81 Mo. App. 231, denying right of recovery for loss by sale in low market, due to delay in delivery of telegram, where vendor might have averted same by telegram to agent.

— Presumption.

Cited in Hughes v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Mo. App. 137, holding telegraph company presumptively negligent in transmitting word "invitation" for plainly written "irritation" in cipher message.

— Conflict of laws.

Cited in Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 108 Tenn. 47, 56 L. R. A. 309, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706, 64 S. W. 1063, holding sender of message may recover for mental anguish due to negligent delay in delivery in forum, where recoverable under local law, though not under lex loci celebrationis; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cooper, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 593, 69 S. W. 427, and Bryan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 607, 45 S. E. 938, holding telegraph contract governed by laws of state where message is delivered to company for transmission.

Cited in footnote to Shaw v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 56 L. R. A. 486, which denies power to enforce in another state, liability for mistakes in transmitting cipher telegram, without payment of additional fee required to insure against mistakes.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 525, 532) on conflict of laws as to carrier's contracts.

Duty to lessen damages.

Cited in Hasbrouck v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 Iowa, 167, 70 Am. St. Rep. 181, 77 N. W. 1034, holding principal under no obligation to rescind settlement made in reliance upon telegram erroneously transmitted.

34 L. R. A. 498, STATE ex rel. BATEMAN v. BODE, 55 Ohio St. 224, 60 Am. St. Rep. 696, 45 N. E. 195.

Limitation of candidate to one place on official ballot.

Cited in State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 533, 42 L. R. A. 243, 76 N. W. 482, refusing to order candidate's name to be printed second time on ballot under statute providing for its placement under column of political party first nominating him.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Blydenburgh v. Burdick, 34 L. R. A. 845, which denies right to have name of candidate for elector of president appear on ballot more than once.

Disapproved in Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 481, 59 L. R. A. 98, footnote p. 97, 70 Pac. 461, holding statute requiring candidate to choose party column under which he will appear, unconstitutional.

34 L. R. A. 500, HARTWELL v. TEFFT, 19 R. I. 644, 35 Atl. 882.

Status of adopted child.

Cited in New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Viele, 161 N. Y. 18, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238, 55 N. E. 311, Affirming 22 App. Div. 86, 47 N. Y. Supp. 841, holding status immaterial where contest is under will excluding adopted child from participation; Re Winchester, 140 Cal. 469, 74 Pac. 10, holding that children of adopted child take by inheritance as issue of the adopting father.

Cited in footnotes to Butterfield v. Sawyer, 52 L. R. A. 75, which holds adopted child within deed to woman for life, with remainder to her "child," if any, otherwise to her "heirs generally;" Clarkson v. Hatton, 39 L. R. A. 748, which holds adopted child not within statute giving remainder to children or heirs of life tenant; Glascott v. Bragg, 56 L. R. A. 258, which holds will in favor of third person revoked by marriage and adoption of child.

Devise to "issue."

Cited in Ridley v. McPherson, 100 Tenn. 409, 43 S. W. 772, holding grandchildren take per capita with children, under unlimited devise to "issue."

34 L. R. A. 503, EINGARTNER v. ILLINOIS STEEL CO. 94 Wis. 70, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 68 N. W. 664.

Liability of master for injury to servant.

Cited in Jarnek v. Manitowoc Coal & Dock Co. 97 Wis. 540, 73 N. W. 62, holding employer liable for injury to coal heaver by fall of beam negligently attached by carpenters under direction of foreman.

Who are vice principals.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 80) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Transitory actions.

Cited in MacCarthy v. Whitcomb, 110 Wis. 123, 85 N. W. 707, holding action for injuries due to negligence of fellow servants in another state triable in forum where employer found; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 82, 41 C. C. A.

28, 100 Fed. 744, sustaining jurisdiction of state court in action by passenger against foreign railway company for injuries sustained in collision in another state, where agent served in forum; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lawrence, 74 Miss. 800, 22 So. 53, upholding jurisdiction of tort action between nonresidents for injury inflicted in foreign state; Thoen v. Harnstrom, 98 Wis. 233, 73 N. W. 1011, holding nonresident creditor entitled to bring action against nonresident debtor in forum with collateral garnishment proceedings; Williams v. Pope Mfg. Co. 52 La. Ann. 1432, 50 L. R. A. 822, 78 Am. St. Rep. 390, 27 So. 851, holding married woman domiciled in foreign state, by laws of which she is entitled to maintain separate action, may maintain action against foreign corporation for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment in forum.

Cited in footnote to Jones v. Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 640, which holds that statute of state where railroad employee injured, as to presumptive evidence of employer's knowledge of defect in appliance, does not govern in action in another state.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 202, 218, 220) on conflict of laws as to actions for death or bodily injury.

Master's duty to provide safe place to work.

Cited in The Pioneer, 78 Fed. 608, holding duty not discharged by ordering employee to give warnings of danger, where such employee has other duties preventing giving of proper warnings.

Conflict of laws as to contracts.

Cited in Second Nat. Bank v. Smith, 118 Wis. 26, 94 N. W. 664, holding that law of state where note made controls as to days of grace and manner of giving notice of dishonor, while law of forum controls as to evidence necessary to prove notice.

Validity of assignment statutes.

Cited in Duryea v. Muse, 117 Wis. 407, 94 N. W. 365, upholding act declaring voluntary assignments void, unless assignee be resident of state.

34 L. R. A. 509, HOWARD v. UNITED STATES, 21 C. C. A. 586, 43 U. S. App. 678, 75 Fed. 986.

Multifariousness.

Cited in Tingle v. United States, 30 C. C. A. 670, 58 U. S. App. 140, 87 Fed. 324, holding consolidation of separate indictments for distinct offenses not multifarious.

Consideration of assignments of error in habeas corpus proceedings.

Cited in De Bara v. United States, 40 C. C. A. 197, 99 Fed. 944, refusing to consider in habeas corpus proceeding, assignment of error as to consolidation of indictments.

Validity of sentence.

Cited in footnote to People v. Burns, 60 L. R. A. 270, which holds void for uncertainty as to offense punishable with life imprisonment, statute making penalty for attempt, half that for offense.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 254) on legislative power to grant pardon or amnesty. Distinguished in Hanley v. United States, 61 C. C. A. 669, 126 Fed. 945, Reaffirming on Rehearing, 59 C. C. A. 157, 123 Fed. 853, holding that court can only impose one sentence upon conviction of prisoner on consolidation of three indictments charging each a separate offense.
L. R. A. AU.—VOL. IV.—23.

When rules of common law govern.

Cited in Withaup v. United States, 62 C. C. A. 332, 127 Fed. 534, raising, but not deciding, question whether, in absence of Federal or state statute, rules of evidence of common law would govern in United States court.

34 L. R. A. 518, ILLINOIS TRUST & SAV. BANK v. ARKANSAS CITY, 22 C. C. A. 171, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 271.

Municipal "business" contracts.

Cited in Ouray County v. Geer, 47 C. C. A. 453, 108 Fed. 481, holding interest coupons from municipal bonds bear statutory interest after maturity, like obligations of any debtor; State ex rel. Godard v. Topeka Water Co. 61 Kan. 561, 60 Pac. 337, holding right to occupy street with water pipes granted to corporation by municipal ordinance, subject to mortgage; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 10, 43 L. ed. 346, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77, holding Federal question as to power to impair contract obligation raised by ordinance authorizing construction of municipal water works, where prior contract for supply from private corporation exists; Muncie Natural Gas Co. v. Muncie, 160 Ind. 103, 60 L. R. A. 827. 66 N. E. 436, upholding power of municipality in contract permitting gas company to pipe streets, to stipulate as to maximum rates for gas; Westminster Water Co. v. Westminster, 98 Md. 563, 64 L. R. A. 636, footnote p. 630, 56 Atl. 990, denying city's power to contract to pay water company specified percentage of assessed valuation in perpetuity for water supply.

Cited in footnote to Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 63 L. R. A. 870, which sustains municipality's power to incur expense of owning and operating water and electric light plants without submitting proposition to voters.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 65, 69, 70, 71, 80) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Distinguished in Boise City Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boise City, 59 C. C. A. 241, 123 Fed. 237, holding city contracting and paying for water from year to year not bound to continue such annual payments beyond term of contract.

— Manner of execution.

Cited in Ogden City v. Weaver, 47 C. C. A. 490, 108 Fed. 569, holding municipality bound by contract for water supply adopted only by resolution, where ordinance not required by statute; Crebs v. Lebanon, 98 Fed. 551, enforcing valid contract with water company, though submitted to popular vote by resolution instead of by ordinance, where essentials of latter embodied in resolution; Centerville v. Fidelity Trust & Guaranty Co. 55 C. C. A. 352, 118 Fed. 336, holding formal acceptance of ordinances by water company thereby authorized to construct and operate system, not essential to validity of contract where put into execution; Morgan v. Johnson, 45 C. C. A. 426, 106 Fed. 457, upholding authorization of deed by adoption of motion directing conveyance, where manner of exercise of power of disposition not prescribed; Denver v. Webber, 15 Colo. App. 517, 63 Pac. 804, holding appointment of special counsel by majority of council present, ratified by subsequent vote of majority of all members of council elected, ordering payment of costs or fees in case conducted by him.

Cited in footnote to Pollasky v. Schmid, 55 L. R. A. 614, which requires two-thirds majority of all members elected to council to pass ordinance over veto, though some seats vacant.

Distinguished in Morristown v. East Tennessee Teleph. Co. 53 C. C. A. 135, 115 Fed. 307, holding amendment of franchise to telephone company, by resolution, invalid where city authorized to grant same only "by ordinance."

— Validity.

Cited in Cunningham v. Cleveland, 39 C. C. A. 218, 98 Fed. 663, upholding validity of contract with water company extending over number of years; Little Falls Electric & Water Co. v. Little Falls, 102 Fed. 665, upholding thirty-year contract with water company at rates not unreasonable at time of contract, where no fraud practised and contract executed by company; Reed v. Anoka, 85 Minn. 298, 88 N. W. 981, upholding municipal contract with private corporation for construction and operation of water works for period of thirty-one years; Pikes Peak Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 44 C. C. A. 342, 105 Fed. 10, holding succeeding councils bound by contract for enlargement and operation of water-works system by private corporation; State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 572, 42 L. R. A. 122, 46 S. W. 981, upholding grant of right to construct telegraph wire conduit under street; Bartholomew v. Austin, 29 C. C. A. 578, 52 U. S. App. 512, 85 Fed. 368, upholding exemption from taxation "in consideration of" free use of water for municipal purposes; Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 88 Fed. 730, holding ordinance reducing water rates below minimum provided for by contract with supplying company, void; Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 103 Fed. 730, holding ordinance reducing rates below minimum provided for by contract the term of which had expired, but which is kept in force by continued demands of municipality in conformity therewith, void; Riverside & A. R. Co. v. Riverside, 118 Fed. 741, enjoining city from shutting off electricity from street railway to which it was under contract obligation to furnish same; State ex rel. White v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 104, 57 L. R. A. 250, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222, 89 N. W. 204, denying authority of state to deprive appointees of municipality of control of municipal water works; Denver v. Hubbard, 17 Colo. App. 368, 68 Pac. 993, upholding contract of city with electric light company as legitimate exercise of business powers of municipality.

Distinguished in Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 107 Tenn. 679, 61 L. R. A. 897, 64 S. W. 1075, upholding regulation of water rates by municipality, where company's charter provides therefor, although different schedule previously established.

— "Exclusive" contracts.

Cited in State ex rel. Great Falls Waterworks v. Great Falls, 19 Mont. 533, 49 Pac. 15, compelling levy of water tax to meet fixed rentals due under exclusive contract for supply for fifteen years; Westerly Waterworks Co. v. Westerly, 80 Fed. 617, holding town not excluded from erection of competing water-works system, by contract providing for town supply of water and eventual sale of works by private corporation; Monroe Waterworks Co. v. Monroe, 110 Wis. 17, 85 N. W. 685, permitting recovery of taxes levied and collected from water company in violation of contract, though latter void in so far as it grants exclusive franchise.

Cited in footnote to Thrift v. Elizabeth, 44 L. R. A. 427, which holds invalid, grant of exclusive privilege for thirty years to maintain water works within city limits.

Enforcement of divisible contracts.

Cited in Greenville v. Greenville Waterworks Co. 125 Ala. 640, 27 So. 764, holding municipal contract for rental of hydrants enforceable, though grant of franchise and lease by same ordinance invalid; Raton Waterworks Co. v. Raton, 9 N. M. 94, 49 Pac. 898, holding contract for water supply at rental above amount allowable under law, enforceable only to legal amount; McGillivray v. Joint School Dist. No. 1, 112 Wis. 359, 58 L. R. A. 102, 88 Am. St. Rep. 969, 98 N. W. 310, enforcing payment up to constitutional limit for materials furnished under contract calling for amount in excess thereof; Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. v. Allen, 27 C. C. A. 92, 49 U. S. App. 498, 82 Fed. 153, holding agreement of creditor to surrender collateral and accept partial payment in full satisfaction enforceable as to former on debtor's performance, though void as to latter provision; Coit v. Grand Rapids, 115 Mich. 496, 73 N. W. 811, upholding contract exempting property owners granting right of way for sewer, from assessment for construction, though void as to exemption from assessment for maintenance.

Estoppel.

Cited in Newton v. Levis, 25 C. C. A. 163, 49 U. S. App. 266, 79 Fed. 717, upholding preliminary injunction against municipality to prevent destruction of electric poles and wires erected by private company in reliance on ordinance, repealed only after eight years' recognition of validity; Speer v. Kearney County, 32 C. C. A. 110, 60 U. S. App. 38, 88 Fed. 758, holding municipality estopped to assert invalidity of bonds regular on face, against innocent purchasers for value; Independent School Dist. v. Rew, 55 L. R. A. 369, 49 C. C. A. 202, 111 Fed. 5, holding municipality estopped against bona fide purchaser to assert invalidity of indebtedness which bonds purchased recite they were issued to refund; Willis v. Wyandotte County, 30 C. C. A. 450, 58 U. S. App. 665, 86 Fed. 876, holding municipality estopped to refuse payment of money collected to meet certificates issued to contractor in payment for construction of road under unconstitutional contract; United States v. Northern P. R. Co. 37 C. C. A. 306, 95 Fed. 880, refusing to revoke patent to public lands, though route and terminus selected and completed after expiration of time limited, where accepted by government; Davenport v. Buffington, 46 L. R. A. 380, 38 C. C. A. 457, 97 Fed. 238, holding Indian Nation estopped from revoking dedication of property as park, where lots sold and improvements made by taxpayers in reliance thereon; Pacific Mill & Min. Co. v. Leete, 36 C. C. A. 594, 94 Fed. 975, holding vendor estopped by acquiescence in vendee's claim of right to recover entry payment on cancelation of public land claim, to retain money afterwards collected by it on account thereof; Given v. Times-Republican Printing Co. 52 C. C. A. 43, 114 Fed. 95, holding sole stockholders in corporation estopped by silence as to its indebtedness to him, to assert same as against party induced thereby to purchase stock; Mohrenstecher v. Westervelt, 30 C. C. A. 592, 57 U. S. App. 618, 87 Fed. 165, holding bank estopped on cashier's insolvency, to deny officers' statements to cashier's sureties, that purchases made for its benefit; Daniels v. Benedict, 33 C. C. A. 607, 97 Fed. 382, refusing to set aside separation agreement and restore wife to rights of inheritance, where benefits thereof accepted and retained by her during husband's life; Valparaiso v. Valparaiso City Water Co. 30 Ind. App. 328, 65 N. E. 1063, holding that city cannot plead ultra vires in defense to action against it to recover rentals for hydrants.

Determination of entire controversy in equity.

Cited in Springfield Mill. Co. v. Barnard & L. Mfg. Co. 26 C. C. A. 394, 49 U. S. App. 438, 81 Fed. 266, upholding in bill to foreclose lien, cross-bill for waste of mill property.

Necessary parties to action.

Cited in City Water Supply Co. v. Ottumwa, 120 Fed. 311, holding foreign corporations not necessary parties in action to restrain city from entering into illegal contract with them.

Jurisdiction of equity to determine title.

Cited in Re Leeds Woolen Mills, 129 Fed. 928, upholding jurisdiction of equity to determine ownership of property surrendered without authority to adverse claimant, by trustee in bankruptcy.

34 L. R. A. 532, BRUNER v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 97 Tenn. 540, 37 S. W. 286.

Deposit in insolvent bank.

Cited in State v. Eifert, 102 Iowa, 205, 38 L. R. A. 490, 63 Am. St. Rep. 433, 71 N. W. 248 (dissenting opinion), majority holding banker criminally liable where receipt of deposit by teller after known insolvency not repudiated, but amount included in general assignment; and referring particularly to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 532.

— Right to follow as trust fund.

Cited in Williams v. Cox, 99 Tenn. 404, 42 S. W. 3, holding depositor entitled to recover from receiver proceeds of check received by it after known insolvency, and not collected until after failure.

Cited in footnotes to Richardson v. New Orleans Debenture Redemption Co. 52 L. R. A. 67, which sustains right to recover from receiver deposit received while bank insolvent; Shute v. Hinman, 47 L. R. A. 265, which holds identity of trust funds destroyed by general deposit in bank by administrator, and drawing of checks thereon; Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. v. Morrison, 57 L. R. A. 885, which holds cestui que trust entitled to preference only to extent trustee's estate shown to have been increased by misappropriation of trust property; Richardson v. Olivier, 53 L. R. A. 113, which sustains shareholder's right to recover back deposit fraudulently taken while bank insolvent.

Distinguished in Union Nat. Bank v. Citizens Bank, 153 Ind. 49, 54 N. E. 97, holding collecting bank not trustee for forwarding bank where draft on correspondent solvent debtor bank for amount of collection accepted and forwarded for payment.

34 L. R. A. 536, KLEPPER v. COX, 97 Tenn. 534, 56 Am. St. Rep. 823, 37 S. W. 284.

Collections by insolvent bank.

Cited in Union Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Bank, 153 Ind. 54, 54 N. E. 97, holding collecting bank not trustee for forwarding bank where draft on correspondent solvent debtor bank for amount of collection is accepted and forwarded for payment.

34 L. R. A. 538, COWAN v. MURCH, 97 Tenn. 590, 37 S. W. 393.

Power of majority.

Cited in Carroll v. Alsop, 107 Tenn. 271, 64 S. W. 193, upholding valuations concurrent in by two of three members of state board of equalization; Re Schuylkill Haven Nominations, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 420, holding change of place of ward caucus by vote of minority of borough committee, void.

Cited in footnote to Harroun v. Brush Electric Light Co. 38 L. R. A. 615, which holds decision unanimous, so as to require leave to appeal therefrom when all judges sitting, agree.

Code definitions.

Cited in Union Bank & T. Co. v. Wright (Tenn. Ch. App.) 52 L. R. A. 471, 58 S. W. 755, upholding power of corporation to act as administrator under charter authorizing executorship.

34 L. R. A. 541, BURNETT v. MALONEY, 97 Tenn. 697, 37 S. W. 689.

Special tax.

Cited in Felton v. Hamilton County, 38 C. C. A. 433, 97 Fed. 824, holding special tax for centennial purposes not authorized by statute authorizing "appropriations" of money by counties.

— Repeal.

Cited in Zickler v. Union Bank & T. Co. 104 Tenn. 295, 57 S. W. 341, holding special inheritance tax not impliedly repealed by subsequent general revenue tax not mentioning same.

Validity of classification.

Cited in State v. Frost, 103 Tenn. 696, 54 S. W. 986, upholding statute applying 4-mile liquor law to municipalities not exceeding 2,000 inhabitants.

Contract for payment in gold coin.

Cited in footnotes to Murphy v. San Luis Obispo, 39 L. R. A. 444, which sustains power of city to issue bonds payable in gold coin only; Dennis v. Moses 40 L. R. A. 302, which denies power to take away right to contract for payment in gold coin.

34 L. R. A. 548, THOMPSON v. GIBBS, 97 Tenn. 489, 37 S. W. 277.

Removal of school teachers.

Cited in footnote to Freeman v. Bourne, 39 L. R. A. 510, which holds dismissal of school superintendent justified by indictment for, and conviction of, adultery.

34 L. R. A. 550, WAIT v. O'NEIL, 22 C. C. A. 248, 47 U. S. App. 19, 76 Fed. 408.

Construction of contracts.

Cited in Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 26 C. C. A. 152, 47 U. S. App. 91, 80 Fed. 772, construing fidelity insurance contract most favorably to insured, like indemnity bond.

Lease of landing place.

Cited in footnote to California Nav. & Improv. Co. v. Union Transportation Co. 46 L. R. A. 825, which holds public use as landing place of shore of navigable waters outside municipality not included in dedication for highway.

Liability for cost of rebuilding structures on leased premises.

Distinguished in Felton v. Cincinnati, 37 C. C. A. 92, 95 Fed. 341, holding lessor of railroad not chargeable with cost of rebuilding bridges.

Waiver by answer.

Cited in Ryder v. Bateman, 93 Fed. 22, questioning whether lack of possession by complainant on bill to remove cloud from title is waived by filing of answer.

Jurisdiction of equity.

Cited in Chelsea Sav. Bank v. Ironwood, 130 Fed. 414, upholding jurisdiction of equity in action by bondholders against city and receiver to enforce equitable rights of bondholders in judgment against city in favor of receiver, for amount paid for invalid bonds.

34 L. R. A. 557, RYDER v. KINSEY, 62 Minn. 85, 54 Am. St. Rep. 623, 64 N. W. 94.

Presumptive negligence.

Cited in Isherwood v. H. L. Jenkins Lumber Co. 84 Minn. 425, 87 N. W. 931, holding fall of pile of scantling, piled without cross sticks and bulging near bottom, prima facie evidence of want of care; Lowe v. Salt Lake City, 13 Utah, 97, 57 Am. St. Rep. 708, 44 Pac. 1050, holding owner liable for injuries to one lawfully on premises, caused by fall into unprotected and unlighted hatchway beside path, on way to outhouse at night.

Cited in footnotes to Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 43 L. R. A. 435, which holds bursting of water main for third time under ordinary pressure, evidence of negligence; Wolf v. Downey, 51 L. R. A. 242, which denies liability of contractor for either carpenter or mason work for injury from fall of brick from unknown cause.

Distinguished in Kletschka v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 241, 83 N. W. 133, holding negligence not presumable where injury results from unexpected fall of earth from side of ditch where employee is working.

Liability for falling walls.

Cited in footnotes to Lauer v. Palms, 58 L. R. A. 67, which holds owner liable for injury by fall of walls left standing after fire; Waterhouse v. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. 48 L. R. A. 157, which holds liable, purchaser continuing to use, or permit use of, negligently constructed building; Ainsworth v. Lakin, 57 L. R. A. 132, which denies obligation of owner to remove or protect walls left standing after fire until after reasonable time to investigate.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 616) on liability of landlord for injuries to tenant's guests and servants from defect in premises.

Distinguished in Kitchen v. Carter, 47 Neb. 782, 66 N. W. 855, reversing verdict for plaintiff where injury was caused during fire by fall of walls sufficient to maintain building in usual condition.

34 L. R. A. 564, PHILADELPHIA USE OF McCANN v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. CO. 177 Pa. 292, 35 Atl. 610.

Liability of right of way to assessment.

Followed without opinion in Philadelphia use of Pugh v. Philadelphia & R. Co. 177 Pa. 300, 35 Atl. 1133.

Cited in footnotes to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Ottumwa, 51 L. R. A. 763, which denies liability of railroad running alongside of street to street-paving assessment; Cincinnati, L. & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 49 L. R. A. 566, which denies right to assess entire cost of land taken for highway, on remaining land of same owner; Storrie v. Houston City Street R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 716, which holds street railway company required to pave between rails and 6 inches each side.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 47) on taxation of corporate franchises in United States; (58 L. R. A. 382) on who is liable for expense of drainage.

Power to compel railroad company to pave street.

Cited in Mt. Joy v. Harrisburg, P. & Mt. J. & L. R. Co. 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 250, 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 218, upholding power of borough to compel railroad company to pave street in front of its property.

34 L. R. A. 567, WHITE v. MEADVILLE, 177 Pa. 643, 35 Atl. 693.

Municipal water works and lighting plants — Power to construct.

Cited in Hughes v. Parnassus, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 201, upholding power of borough to construct waterworks under general borough law, though not expressly authorized.

— Effect of supply by private company.

Cited in Metzger v. Beaver Falls, 178 Pa. 4, 35 Atl. 1134, enjoining erection of water works by borough already supplied under contract with company organized for that purpose; Tyrone Gas & Water Co. v. Tyrone, 195 Pa. 578, 46 Atl. 134, restraining erection of plant by borough where contract with water company implied from acceptance of its supply and levy of water tax to meet charges; Troy Water Co. v. Troy, 200 Pa. 456, 50 Atl. 259, holding that failure of company to supply in accordance with contract does not give borough right to erect independent works; Carlisle Gas & Water Co. v. Carlisle Water Co. 188 Pa. 53 43 W. N. C. 110, 41 Atl. 321, holding contract by borough with second water company for supply void though stock and management of first relinquished; Bennett Water Co. v. Millvale, 200 Pa. 617, 50 Atl. 155, holding company holding contract for supply of water to borough entitled to damages against latter for building and operating independent works; Southwest Missouri Light Co. v. Joplin, 101 Fed. 29, enjoining municipality from operating public electric light plant in competition with private plant previously erected under franchise granted by city; Carlisle Gas & Water Co. v. Carlisle Water Co. 182 Pa. 20, 37 Atl. 821, enjoining corporation organized under general incorporation law from operating in borough already supplied by water company under special contract; Baily v. Philadelphia, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 180, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 732, holding lease granting exclusive right to supply gas to municipality not void in toto, whether exclusive feature valid or not; Schroeder v. Scranton Gas & Water Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 258, denying power of municipal corporation, under statute, to regulate water rates of private company.

Cited in footnotes to North Springs Water Co. v. Tacoma, 47 L. R. A. 214, which sustains city's right to build own water works after granting franchise to water company; Helena Consolidated Water Co. v. Steele, 37 L. R. A. 412, which holds statute allowing city to acquire water plant only by purchase from private parties void.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 145) on privilege of using streets as a contract within constitutional provision against impairing obligation of contracts; (61 L. R. A. 34, 38) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Distinguished in Boyertown Water Co. v. Boyertown, 200 Pa. 404, 50 Atl. 189, and Centre Hall Water Co. v. Centre Hall, 186 Pa. 81, 40 Atl. 153, refusing to enjoin construction of water works by borough previously supplied by company, but not under contract with borough; Philipsburg Water Co. v. Citizens' Water Co. 189 Pa. 31, 41 Atl. 979, holding corporation organized under general corporation law, supplying borough without special contract, not entitled to injunction against rival corporation, where 8 per cent dividends earned for five years; Skaneateles Waterworks Co. v. Skaneateles, 184 U. S. 366, 46 L. ed. 591, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400; Colby University v. Canandaigua, 96 Fed. 453; Thomas v. Grand Junction, 13 Colo. App. 89, 56 Pac. 665; North Springs Water Co. v. Tacoma, 21 Wash. 531, 47 L. R. A. 220, 58 Pac. 773,—holding municipality granting to private family franchise not exclusive not estopped from thereafter constructing municipal water works; Bienville Water Supply Co. v. Mobile, 95 Fed. 542, refusing to enjoin erection of municipal water works by town not refusing to pay stipulated rent under prior nonexclusive contract with private company; Philipsburg Water Co. v. Philipsburg, 203 Pa. 565, 53 Atl. 347, upholding right of borough upon expiration of contract with water company, to contract with another company for supply, where first company had forfeited right of exclusive privilege.

— Remedies available to municipality for breach of contract.

Cited in Tyrone Gas & Water Co. v. Burley, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 354, holding members of borough committee turning on water from plugs of private water company, illegally and by force, liable for statutory penalty.

Construction of contemporary statutes.

Cited in Sprague v. Baldwin, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 572, dictum that compulsory education act and act for compulsory vaccination of school children should be harmoniously construed; Brooke v. Kaufman, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 514, construing statutes of May 4 and 23, 1889, to impose lien for two years after levy and assessment of taxes, and thereafter until paid, if necessary steps of entry and revival taken.

34 L. R. A. 572, NORTHERN C. R. CO. v. HARRISBURG & M. ELECTRIC R. CO. 177 Pa. 142, 35 Atl. 624.

Remittitur for issuance of injunction in 180 Pa. 11, 36 Atl. 321.

Right to cross railway.

Cited in Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Electric R. Co. 177 Pa. 158, 35 Atl. 1133, enjoining construction of street railway beneath superstructure of steam railway without consent, at point not public highway; Speese v. Schuylkill River East Side R. Co. 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 22, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 587, 44 W. N. C. 497, enjoining construction of overhead bridge without consent by grantor of right of way, for purpose of access to premises; Trenton Cut-Off R. Co. & Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Newtown Electric Street R. Co. 8 Pa. Dist. R. 551, denying right of electric railway company to take land of railway company on each side of actual crossing, without its consent, although it is used as public highway; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Glenwood & D. Electric Street R. Co. 41 W. N. C. 444, holding steam railway company estopped to enjoin construction of overhead crossing by electric railway, where grade crossing objected to and purchase of land for bridge encouraged.

Cited in footnotes to Chester Traction Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 269, which holds imperious necessity for additional street railway crossing over railroad not shown by increase of traffic preventing quick movement of cars: Southern R. Co. v. Atlanta R. & Power Co. 51 L. R. A. 125, which sustains right of street railway to cross steam railroad tracks; General Electric Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 231, which sustains right of railroad company to injunction against construction under invalid ordinance, of street railway which would specially injure former company.

Distinguished in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Inland Traction Co. 18 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 135, denying right of steam railroad company to prevent trolley company from laying tracks on highway in front of its property and under its overhead bridge.

— Interest in right of way.

Cited in Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Philadelphia & B. Pass. R. Co. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 578, holding interest of railway in land covered by its right of way sufficient to support action against party obstructing access thereto from nighway.

Grade crossing; cost of construction.

Cited in Perkiomen R. Co. v. Collegeville Electric Street R. Co. 14 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 21, authorizing trolley railway crossing at grade over steam railroad track where cost of other crossing would prevent its construction.

34 L. R. A. 575, OAKFORD v. NIXON, 177 Pa. 76, 35 Atl. 588.

Eviction.

Cited in Walters v. Transue, 6 Northampton Co. Rep. 408, holding eviction question for jury where landlord erects fence excluding tenant from portion of leased premises.

34 L. R. A. 577, VAN STEUBEN v. CENTRAL R. CO. 178 Pa. 367, 35 Atl. 992.

Judgment for plaintiff affirmed on second appeal in 185 Pa. 293, 39 Atl. 1118.

Validity of railroad leases.

Cited in Hanlon v. Philadelphia & W. C. Turnp. Road Co. 182 Pa. 121, 40 W. N. C. 523, 37 Atl. 943, holding exemption of lessor of railroad by lessee, from liability for injuries, unavailing as defense in absence of statutory authority for such contract.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 739, 742) on liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using road under lease, license, or other contract.

Distinguished in Pinkerton v. Pennsylvania Traction Co. 193 Pa. 235, 44 Atl. 284, Affirming 16 Lanc. L. Rev. 118, upholding implied statutory power of traction railway companies to lease to motor power companies; Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Altoona & B. C. R. Co. 196 Pa. 466, 46 Atl. 431, refusing to declare lease void as ultra vires between parties, where executed and lessor received profits thereof.

Public policy.

Cited in Northern C. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. 215, 44 Atl. 253, holding purchase of noncompeting road by railway corporation not against public policy; Com. ex rel. Luden v. Kutz, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 574, holding auctioneer's licenses issuable by county treasurers and not by governor, under P. L. 1874, chap. 332.

Class legislation.

Cited in Com. v. Morton, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 387, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 133, upholding statute relating only to use of trademarks or trade labels by labor unions.

Fires caused by sparks from engine.

Cited in Thomas v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. 182 Pa. 542, 41 W. N. C. 146, 38 Atl. 413, admitting evidence of other fires set same day by same locomotive; Matthews v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 15, holding negligence for jury where evidence tends to show fire caused by sparks from engine, though sufficient spark arrester provided.

34 L. R. A. 581, HAY v. PETERSON, 6 Wyo. 419, 45 Pac. 1073.

Account books as evidence.

Cited in notes (52 L. R. A. 552, 573, 576) on party's books of account as evidence in his own favor; (52 L. R. A. 710) on what is provable by books of account.

Presumption from spoliation of evidence.

Cited in footnotes to Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison, 40 L. R. A. 84, which holds request to charge that production of defendant's employee in court for examination by plaintiff overcomes any presumption from defendant's failure to introduce him, properly refused; McHugh v. McHugh, 41 L. R. A. 805, which holds attempt to procure false testimony or corrupt jurors admissible to raise presumption against guilty parties.

Burden of proof.

Cited in footnote to Tucker v. State, 46 L. R. A. 181, which holds person wrongfully killing another with deadly weapon has burden of proving justification or legal excuse in action for damages.

34 L. R. A. 593, PETERSON v. ATLANTIC CITY R. CO. 177 Pa. 335, 35 Atl. 621.

Review of exercise of discretion.

Cited in Smith v. Times Pub. Co. 178 Pa. 511, 35 L. R. A. 834, 36 Atl. 296, reversing for excessive damages where motion for new trial denied in lower court; Re Huntingdon County Line, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 394, overruling action of trial court in ordering hearing on exceptions alleging matters of fact, on same day presented, without opportunity to meet new facts by testimony.

34 L. R. A. 595, BENNETT v. EASTERN BLDG. & L. ASSO. 177 Pa. 233, 55 Am. St. Rep. 723, 35 Atl. 684.

Law governing contract with nonresident.

Cited in Elmira Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Wahoo Tribe No. 119, I. O. R. M. 9 Kulp, 489, and People's Bldg. & L. & Sav. Asso. v. Berlin, 201 Pa. 4, 88 Am. St. Rep. 764, 50 Atl. 308, holding foreign usury laws control loan through agent to resident debtor on property situated in forum, where debt payable at foreign office; Mutual Guarantee Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Fallen, 4 Lack. Legal News, 352, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 618, holding loan by corporation organized under foreign laws, but doing principal business in forum, governed by foreign usury laws, where so stipulated in bond; Russell v. Pierce, 121 Mich. 212, 80 N. W. 118, and United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 141, 77 N. W. 1006, foreclosing mortgage securing loan by foreign association to resident secured on local property, where not usurious under foreign law expressly stipulated to govern; Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Titlow, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 521, enforcing premium and interest on loan by foreign building association to resident, where made payable at foreign office and foreign law permits charge; Neal v. New Orleans Loan, Bldg. & Sav. Asso. 100 Tenn. 614, 46 S. W. 755, refusing to cancel unmatured mortgage to secure loan by foreign association, payable at foreign office, though loan and lawful interest under laws of forum repaid; Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Alexander, 96 Fed. 873, foreclosing mortgage on property in forum given to secure loan by foreign association, where not usurious under foreign law where payable; Manship v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 859, holding foreign law governs usury of fixed premium on loan by foreign association to domestic debtor, where payable at foreign office though payment to local agents permitted for convenience; McKean v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 459, holding member of foreign building association not entitled to attachment for nonpayment of stock maturing at fixed time, where foreign law provides for maturity only when earnings bring stock to par; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Beckley, 137 Ala. 122, 62 L. R. A. 40, 97 Am. St. Rep. 19, 33 So. 934, holding note and mortgage given to foreign loan association to be contracts of state where such mortgage resides.

Cited in footnotes to National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Braham, 57 L. R. A. 793, which holds usury in loan by foreign loan association to resident, secured by mortgage on land in state, determined by local law; Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 58 L. R. A. 816, which holds contract treated as domestic, where application for loan made to association doing business in state, through resident agent, secured by mortgage on land in state, where money also used.

Cited in notes (55 L. R. A. 950) on whether lex rei sitæ with respect to interest and usury necessarily controls in action to foreclose real estate mortgage; (62 L. R. A. 65, 71) on conflict of laws as to interest and usury.

Distinguished in Beso v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 226, holding mortgage of property situated in forum, executed by resident as security for loan by foreign building association, governed by domestic law; Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. 49 W. Va. 344, 54 L. R. A. 543, footnote p. 536, 87 Am. St. Rep. 805, 38 S. E. 653, enjoining foreclosure sale under mortgage to foreign association where premium on loan not definite and certain at inception as required by domestic law, though loan payable at foreign office.

Usury in loans by building association.

Cited in Peoples' Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Backus, 2 Herdman (Neb.) 464, 89 N. W. 315, holding foreign law as to usury, where not pleaded nor proved, presumed to be same as that of forum.

Cited in footnotes to Gray v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 54 L. R. A. 217, which holds percentage payable to loan association indefinitely usurious, though called "premium;" Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 58 L. R. A. 816, which holds exaction of monthly premium which, with interest, exceeds legal rate, unauthorized; Pacific States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Hill, 56 L. R. A. 163, which holds requirement that borrower bid for stock and pay dues on same, device to cover usury.

34 L. R. A. 597, HARRISBURG NAT. BANK v. BRADSHAW, 178 Pa. 180, 35 Atl. 629.

Confession of judgment by married woman.

Cited in Stahr v. Brewer, 186 Pa. 625, 42 W. N. C. 357, 65 Am. St. Rep. 883, 40 Atl. 1016, holding that judgment against married woman on her judgment note, should not be stricken off where no defects appear of record.

Married woman's liability in relation to negotiable paper.

Cited in footnote to Kitchen v. Chapin, 57 L. R. A. 914, which holds married woman liable on her guaranty of note owned by her and payable to her order.

34 L. R. A. 600, HELLER v. ROYAL INS. CO. 177 Pa. 262, 35 Atl. 726.

34 L. R. A. 602, SCHWEISS v. DISTRICT COURT, 23 Nev. 226, 45 Pac. 289.

34 L. R. A. 604, Re SPITZ BROS. 8 N. M. 622, 45 Pac. 1122.

34 L. R. A. 609, McCONNELL v. LEMLEY, 48 La. Ann. 1433, 55 Am. St. Rep. 319, 20 So. 887.

Liability of landlord for injuries through defect of premises.

Followed without discussion in Prechter v. Lemley, 48 La. Ann. 1440, 20 So. 1019.

Cited in Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & Paper Co. 91 Me. 309, 40 L. R. A. 380, 64 Am. St. Rep. 229, 39 Atl. 1032, holding lessor of pulp mill not liable to employee of lessee for injuries received through defective digester not dangerous unless used.

Cited in footnotes to Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming, 44 L. R. A. 279, which denies liability of landlord for injury to persons stepping out of unguarded door opening into space, while lessee in possession; Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 772, which denies landlord's liability for injury to subtenant's child from defective balustrade on porch; Henson v. Beckwith, 38 L. R. A. 716, which denies landlord's liability for injury to one delivering goods to tenant, by falling into elevator well which tenant had covenanted to repair; Towne v. Thompson, 46 L. R. A. 748, which denies boarding-house lessor's liability to tenant's boarders for illness from unsanitary condition of premises; Barman v. Spencer, 44 L. R. A. 815, which holds landlord liable to guest of tenant for leaving well open and unguarded; Brady v. Klein, 62 L. R. A. 909, which denies right of action by licensee of tenant on landlord's covenant to repair, for injury due to defective condition of premises.

Cited in notes (34 L. R. A. 825, 832) on liability of landlord for injury to tenant from defect in premises; (34 L. R. A. 562) on individual liability for falling walls or buildings.

Liability of third persons for injuries to servants.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 83) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties.

Liability of lessor for negligence of lessee.

Cited in Muntz v. Algiers & G. R. Co. 111 La. 428, 64 L. R. A. 227, 100 Am. St. Rep. 495, 35 So. 624, holding railroad company leasing road liable for negligence of lessee.

34 L. R. A. 615, STENBERG v. WILLCOX, 96 Tenn. 163, 33 S. W. 917.

Rehearing denied in 96 Tenn. 328, 34 L. R. A. 832, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823, 33 S. W. 914.

Liability of landlord for injuries due to defects in premises.

Cited in Willcox v. Hines, 100 Tenn. 539, 41 L. R. A. 278, 66 Am. St. Rep. 770, 46 S. W. 207, upholding recovery by guest of lessee against landlord for injury due to defective condition of porch, of which latter could have been aware by exercise of reasonable diligence; Schwalbach v. Shinkle, W. & K. Co. 97 Fed. 484, holding landlord not liable for injury to lessee's employee, due to defective condition of warehouse of which lessee had notice at time of lease.

Cited in footnotes to Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming, 44 L. R. A. 279, which denies liability of landlord for injury to persons stepping out of unguarded door opening into space while lessee in possession; Towne v. Thompson, 46 L. R. A. 748, which denies boarding-house lessor's liability to tenant's boarders for illness from unsanitary condition of premises; Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 772, which denies landlord's liability for injury to subtenant's child from defective balustrade on porch; Brady v. Klein, 62 L. R. A. 909, which denies right of action by licensee of tenant on landlord's covenant to repair, for injury due to defective condition of premises.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 609) on landlord's liability for injury to tenant's guests and servants from defect in premises.

Disapproved in Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & Paper Co. 91 Me. 308, 40 L. R. A. 380, 64 Am. St. Rep. 229, 39 Atl. 1032, holding owner not liable to employee of lessee for injury due to defective pulp digester, not dangerous unless used, and referring with approval to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 615.

Parol evidence of contract.

Cited in Lewis v. Turnley, 97 Tenn. 202, 36 S. W. 872, admitting evidence of contemporary parol contract for transfer of insurance policies to vendee, where purposely omitted from deed.

34 L. R. A. 620, OTTENBERG v. CORNER, 22 C. C. A. 163, 40 U. S. App. 320, 76 Fed. 263.

Effect of state decisions in Federal courts.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Glass, 25 C. C. A. 154, 49 U. S. App. 228, 79 Fed. 709, following construction of Kansas homestead and exemption laws by state court; Union P. R. Co. v. Reed, 25 C. C. A. 394, 49 U. S. App. 233, 80 Fed. 239, following state decisions on admissibility of records of deeds under state registration laws.

Findings of fact by trial court.

Cited in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Ristine, 23 C. C. A. 14, 40 U. S. App. 579, 77 Fed. 59, sustaining finding of trial court as to existence and terms of oral contract, in absence of obvious error in law or serious mistake in consideration of evidence.

34 L. R. A. 625, RICHMOND & I. CONSTR. CO. v. RICHMOND, N. I. & B. R. CO. 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 105.

Subsequent appeal by intervener in Central Trust Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 45 C. C. A. 61, 105 Fed. 804.

Identity of corporations.

Cited in White v. Pecos Land & Water Co. 18 Tex. Civ. App. 637, 45 S. W. 207.

holding land and water company and irrigation company not identical though organized by same parties and operated in same interest; Chase v. Michigan Teleph. Co. 121 Mich. 634, 80 N. W. 717, holding company purchasing and operating plant of similar company not liable for injury to employee of latter where not made so by statute or purchase agreement; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 23 Utah; 481, 90 Am. St. Rep. 705, 65 Pac. 735, holding corporation de facto under local laws entitled to local condemnation statutes though foreign corporation controls stock; United Mines Co. v. Hatcher, 25 C. C. A. 47, 49 U. S. App. 139, 79 Fed. 519, holding lessor of mining property not liable for debts of lessee as same party, though lessee by agreement organized corporation, stock of which taken entirely by lessor.

Lien law.

Cited in Re West Norfolk Lumber Co. 112 Fed. 766, holding lien for supplies furnished to lumber company engaged in buying and selling lumber incidentally to principal business of preparing rough lumber for use, enforceable under Federal bankruptcy act of 1898.

34 L. R. A. 634, CARR v. STATE, 106 Ala. 35, 54 Am. St. Rep. 17, 17 So. 350.

Imprisonment for debt.

Cited in footnote to Second Nat. Bank v. Becker, 51 L. R. A. 860, which denies right to imprison sureties for refusal to pay judgment against principal.

Criminal liability for fraud.

Cited in footnote to State v. Eifert, 38 L. R. A. 485, which holds guilty, banker failing to repudiate son's reception of deposit after bank's insolvency known.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 124) on criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank, knowing of its insolvency.

Distinguished in Chauncey v. State, 130 Ala. 73, 89 Am. St. Rep. 17, 30 So. 403, upholding statute making it criminal offense to obtain board by fraud.

Contempt of court.

Cited in McKissack v. Voorhees, 119 Ala. 105, 24 So. 523, denying right to imprison party for failure to pay over money charged to be fraudulently withheld from creditors, where not shown to be in his possession or fraudulently disposed of after suit, to avoid court's anticipated order.

34 L. R. A. 656, STATE v. YARDLEY, 95 Tenn. 546, 32 S. W. 481.

Construction of statute.

Cited in Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 99 Tenn. 704, 53 L. R. A. 929, 43 S. W. 115, and Henley v. State, 98 Tenn. 706, 39 L. R. A. 132, 41 S. W. 352, holding that construction of statute which will uphold it will be favored.

Plurality of subjects in statute.

Cited in State ex rel. Astor v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 104 Tenn. 727, 78 Am. St. Rep. 941, 59 S. W. 1033, holding anti-trust law valid, though dealing with both domestic and imported goods; State v. McMinnville, 106 Tenn. 389, 61 S. W. 785, upholding provision for dismissal of pending, and prohibition against similar, actions in future in statute relieving state from costs of litigation, collection of which in police court neglected; Carroll v. Alsup, 107 Tenn. 267, 64 S. W. 193, upholding statute not void as embracing more than one subject because it provides for assessment of certain corporate property and the exemption of certain other property; State v. Brown, 103 Tenn. 456, 53 S. W. 727, upholding provision for punishment of aiders and abettors in statute to "prevent" unlawful carnal knowledge of infant females.

Sufficiency of title of statute.

Cited in Quinlan v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 89 Tex. 371, 34 S. W. 738, holding statute extending operation of previous act to new subjects not void for reference to prior act merely by title; Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 127, 45 L. R. A. 309, 50 S. W. 744, upholding authorization of railroads to own stock and guarantee bonds of terminal company in statute to amend act providing for organization and defining powers of terminal companies; State ex rel. Smith v. State Dental Examiners, 31 Wash. 499, 72 Pac. 110, holding title of act "to regulate practice of dentistry" broad enough to include provision for penalty.

Repeal of statute.

Cited in Memphis v. American Exp. Co. 102 Tenn. 341, 52 S. W. 172, holding general repealing clause of no effect where laws repealed thereby not recited in caption or body of act; Bailey v. Drane, 96 Tenn. 19, 33 S. W. 573, holding tax upon inheritance of estate from brother or sister impliedly repealed by statute expressly exempting such transfer.

Validity of statute prescribing rules of evidence.

Cited in footnotes to Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Read, 56 L. R. A. 468, which holds void, statute preventing railroad company from setting up, in defense of suit for injury to employee, decisions of state where injury occurred; Missouri. K. & T. R. Co. v. Simonson, 57 L. R. A. 765, which holds void, statute making specifications of weights in bills of lading conclusive.

Imprisonment for debt.

Cited in footnote to State v. Cook, 58 L. R. A. 625, which holds decree for alimony not within prohibition against imprisonment for debt.

34 L. R. A. 674, RATHBONE v. HOPPER, 57 Kan. 240, 45 Pac. 610.

What constitutes a municipality.

Cited in State v. Wilson, 65 Kan. 238, 69 Pac. 172, holding school district a "municipality" within meaning of "eight hour" law.

Sufficiency of title to statute.

Cited in Otto Gas-Engine Works v. Hare, 64 Kan. 81, 67 Pac. 444, upholding, in act to "regulate" conditional sales, provision for making and preserving record thereof.

Unauthorized bond issues.

Cited in Edminson v. Abilene, 7 Kan. App. 307, 54 Pac. 568, holding municipal funding bonds issued under authority of resolution instead of ordinance, void in hands of innocent purchaser.

Cited in footnote to Wilkes County v. Call, 44 L. R. A. 252, which holds void, county bonds issued under authority of unconstitutional statute.

34 L. R. A. 678, TILLINGHAST v. MERRILL, 151 N. Y. 135, 56 Am. St. Rep. 612, 45 N. E. 375.

Liability of public officers for loss of public moneys.

Cited in Gartley v. People, 24 Colo. 160, 49 Pac. 272, and Van Trees v. Territory, 7 Okla. 364, 54 Pac. 495, holding county treasurer liable for loss of public money through failure of bank in which deposited, though without negligence; Johnstown v. Rodgers, 20 Misc. 265, 45 N. Y. Supp. 661, holding city chamberlain liable for public moneys stolen from safe provided by municipality for preservation thereof; Lamb v. Dart, 108 Ga. 613, 34 S. E. 160, holding liability of county treasurer for loss of public moneys through failure of bank of deposit, enforceable against his estate; People ex rel. Pennell v. Treanor, 15 App. Div. 510, 44 N. Y. Supp. 528, compelling by mandamus payment of municipal bonds by town commissioner, proceeds of which lost through failure of broker by whom negotiated; Mercer v. Floyd, 24 Misc. 165, 53 N. Y. Supp. 433, holding tax to relieve tax collector from loss through failure of bank of deposit void; Kilby v. First Nat. Bank, 32 Misc. 374, 66 N. Y. Supp. 579, holding guarantor of bank of deposit entitled to set off amount due from bank to creditors on insolvency, against bank's claim upon lien.

Cited in footnotes to Thomssen v. Hall County, 57 L. R. A. 303, which holds county treasurer liable on bond for loss of money by bank failure; Maloy v. Bernalillo County, 52 L. R. A. 126, which holds county liability on bond, absolute, except for overruling necessity.

Disapproved in State v. Gramm, 7 Wyo. 354, 40 L. R. A. 698, 52 Pac. 533, holding county treasurer not liable for public moneys lost through failure of bank in which deposited in good faith and in exercise of due care.

Town supervisor.

Cited in People ex rel. Bowers v. Allen, 19 Misc. 469, 44 N. Y. Supp. 566, refusing mandamus to compel payment of public money to school district by town supervisor.

Positions of confidence.

Cited in Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 361, 37 L. R. A. 814, 46 N. E. 857, holding that public officers and their subordinates, for whose honesty, superior is responsible, hold positions of confidence within exception of civil service law; People ex rel. Tate v. Dalton, 24 Misc. 11, 53 N. Y. Supp. 108, holding office of "water registrar" confidential within exception of veterans' law; People ex rel. Letts v. Collier, 78 App. Div. 624, 79 N. Y. Supp. 671, holding certain positions in registrar's office, on fidelity of incumbent of which registrar's protection defends, confidential within civil service law.

Limited in People ex rel. Speight v. Coler, 31 App. Div. 526, 52 N. Y. Supp. 197, holding collector of fees at public market not within exception of veterans' law.

34 L. R. A. 682, ADAMS v. NEW JERSEY S. B. CO. 151 N. Y. 163, 56 Am. St. Rep. 616, 45 N. E. 369.

Liability of innkeeper.

Cited in Briggs v. Todd, 28 Misc. 211, 59 N. Y. Supp. 23, holding hotel keeper liable for theft of silver cutlery and gold watch, from locked trunk placed in guest's locked room; Wies v. Hoffman House, 28 Misc. 228, 59 N. Y. Supp. 38, holding hotel keeper liable for theft from locked room of silver mounted traveling bag containing suit of clothes.

— Carrier as innkeeper.

Cited in Lincoln v. New York & C. Mail S. S. Co. 30 Misc. 753, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1085, holding steamship company liable for loss of money from locked traveling bag placed in stateroom while passenger went for key.

Distinguished in Whicher v. Boston & A. R. Co. 176 Mass. 277, 79 Am. St. Rep. 314, 57 N. E. 601, denying right of recovery to passenger leaving satchel unprotected in sleeping car, while he was in smoking car.

34 L. R. A. 685, OHIO & M. R. CO. v. TABER, 98 Ky. 503, 32 S. W. 168, 36 S. W. 18.

Validity of carrier's stipulations against liability for negligence.

Cited in Brown v. Illinois C. R. Co. 100 Ky. 527, 38 S. W. 862, holding stipulation for written notice within ten days of loss ineffective to relieve carrier from liability for injury by negligence not reported; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 605, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068, 36 L. R. A. 715, denying validity of stipulation exempting telegraph company from liability for negligence in transmission of cipher message; Pittman v. Pacific Exp. Co. 24 Tex. Civ. App. 598, 59 S. W. 949, denying validity of limitation of liability irrespective of value of goods, where prohibited by law of state where made, though shipment without state.

Cited in footnotes to Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 884, which authorizes carrier to stipulate for exemption from liability for wet; Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 248, which sustains carrier's right to secure entire exemption from liability as insurer for loss not due to negligence or misfeasance; Rosenthal v. Weir, 57 L. R. A. 527, which holds failure to comply with agreement for stoppage in transitu not within contract limiting liability to specified amount; Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. 41 L. R. A. 511, which sustains state statute making initial carrier liable for whole distance in absence of written contract to contrary.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 529, 534) on conflict of laws as to carrier's contracts.

Distinguished in Grieve v. Illinois C. R. Co. 104 Iowa, 662, 74 N. W. 192, holding burden on shipper undertaking to care for stock during transportation to show injury is due, not to his own omission, but to negligence of carrier; Teumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 108 Ky. 577, 49 L. R. A. 560, 57 S. W. 9, upholding provision for exemption from liability by fire in contract made in another state by domestic corporation for transportation between points wholly outside state.

Error not available on appeal.

Cited in Morrill v. Hershfield, 19 Mont. 248, 47 Pac. 997, holding appellant not in condition to complain of harm done him by improper hypothetical question as to value of services, where verdict otherwise supported by uncontradicted testimony of witnesses having knowledge of the facts.

34 L. R. A. 690, FRAME v. SLITER, 29 Or. 121, 54 Am. St. Rep. 781, 45 Pac. 290.
Vendor's lien.

Cited in Smith v. Allen, 18 Wash. 7, 39 L. R. A. 84, 63 Am. St. Rep. 864, 50 Pac. 783, holding action to recover unpaid portion of purchase money of land, transitory, since no vendor's lien exists in absence of statute.

Cited in footnote to Doty v. Deposit Bldg. & L. Asso. 43 L. R. A. 551, which holds vendor's lien enforceable against realty for entire amount remaining unpaid on sale for gross amount of realty and personalty.

34 L. R. A. 694, MUTUAL F. INS. CO. v. PHOENIX FURNITURE CO. 108 Mich. 170, 62 Am. St. Rep. 693, 66 N. W. 1095.

Assessment in insolvency as res judicata.

Cited in Mallen v. Langworthy, 70 Ill. App. 377, denying right of stockholder in mutual insurance company to question assessment imposed by court in proceedings by receiver to which stockholder not party; Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Hayden Bros. 60 Neb. 639, 83 N. W. 922, and Straw & E. Mfg. Co. v. L. D. Kilbourne Boot & Shoe Co. 80 Minn. 134, 83 N. W. 36, holding absent stockholders bound by court's assessment on unpaid stock in insolvent building association, though not parties thereto, the latter case referring with approval to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 694; Warner v. Delbridge & C. Co. 110 Mich. 593, 34 L. R. A. 702, 64 Am. St. Rep. 367, 68 N. W. 283, enforcing assessment against nonresident policy holders if in mutual insurance company where valid under laws of latter's domicile.

Cited in footnote to Parker v. C. Lamb & Sons, 34 L. R. A. 704, which holds assessment on premium notes by receiver of mutual company not binding on courts of another state.

Cited in notes (32 L. R. A. 487, 504) on liability of members of mutual life insurance company; (34 L. R. A. 740) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of state of incorporation; (45 L. R. A. 647) on assessments on paid-up stock.

Right to enforce stockholder's liability outside state of incorporation.

Cited in footnote to Bank of China v. Morse, 56 L. R. A. 139, which holds that English judgment against resident of United States on service here does not bind defendant personally or property here.

Conclusiveness of foreign judgments.

Cited in American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 17, 64 N. E. 525, holding foreign judgment of court having jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter conclusive on the merits until reversed.

34 L. R. A. 701, WARNER v. DELBRIDGE & C. CO. 110 Mich. 590, 64 Am. St. Rep. 367, 68 N. W. 283.

Assessment against nonresident stockholders.

Cited in Straw & E. Mfg. Co. v. L. D. Kilbourne Boot & Shoe Co. 80 Minn. 134, 83 N. W. 36, holding absent stockholders bound by court's assessment on unpaid stock in insolvent building association though not parties thereto.

Cited in notes (63 L. R. A. 853) on laws of state of incorporation as limitation on powers of insurance company; (34 L. R. A. 701) on effect of assessment on stockholders made under order of court in another state as res judicata.

34 L. R. A. 704, PARKER v. C. LAMB & SONS, 99 Iowa, 265, 68 N. W. 686.

Authority of foreign receiver.

Cited in State Bank v. McElroy, 106 Iowa, 261, 76 N. W. 715, sustaining refusal to permit receiver of nonresident corporation to open default judgment entered by assignee thereof, voluntarily appearing on service of summons by publication; Wyman v. Eaton, 107 Iowa, 219, 43 L. R. A. 698, 70 Am. St. Rep. 193, 77 N. W. 865, refusing to permit foreign receiver to sue on inequitable claims, in derogation of right of citizens of forum; Spinney v. Miller, 114 Iowa, 216, 89 Am. St. Rep. 351, 86 N. W. 317, holding mortgagor to insolvent building association not concluded by adjudication of Federal court appointing receiver, as to manner of settlement.

Cited in footnote to Castleman v. Templeman, 41 L. R. A. 367, which denies receiver's power to consent to decree in other state for payment of assessments by stockholders to creditors.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 701) on effect of assessment on stockholders made under order of court in another state as res judicata.

Distinguished in Hale v. Harris, 112 Iowa, 373, 83 N. W. 1046, holding foreign receiver entitled to foreclose mortgage on property within forum, assigned to him after appointment.

Restrictions on business of foreign insurance company.

Cited in footnotes to Bankers' L. Ins. Co. v. Howland, 57 L. R. A. 374, which denies insurance commissioners' power to question foreign company's mode of computing reserve set forth in statement for license; People ex rel. Traders' F. Ins. Co. v. Van Cleave, 47 L. R. A. 795, which sustains right to license of foreign insurance company complying with requirements, regardless of similarity of name to that of domestic corporation.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 851) on conflict of laws as to contracts of insurance.

34 L. R. A. 707, NEAL v. BLACK, 177 Pa. 83, 35 Atl. 561.

Validity of deed by weak-minded grantor.

Cited in Coleman's Estate, 193 Pa. 611, 44 Atl. 1085, sustaining as against his subsequent wife, deed of spendthrift son to mother conveying all his property in consideration of payment of large annual income.

Irrevocable trusts.

Cited in Chestnut Street Nat. Bank v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 42 W. N. C. 317, Reversing 7 Pa. Dist. R. 110, holding property conveyed in absolute trust for son, subsequently protected by spendthrift trust on his insolvency, not subject to garnishment on parent's death confirming trust by will.

Cited in footnotes to Wilson v. Anderson, 44 L. R. A. 542, which holds trust by intemperate to pay income during life, without power of revocation, irrevocable; Neisler v. Pearsall, 52 L. R. A. 874, holding trust expressly made irrevocable not revoked by release by beneficiaries and conveyance by trustee to settlor.

Distinguished in Steeley v. Steeley, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 611, holding entire principal subject to immediate order of settlor where collected by trustee on judgments transferred for collection, and payable to settlor on demand, any balance remaining on death of settlor to go to trustee.

34 L. R. A. 718, DAVIDSON v. HANNON, 67 Conn. 312, 52 Am. St. Rep. 282, 34 Atl. 770.

Exemptions from execution.

Cited in footnotes to Terry v. McDaniel, 46 L. R. A. 559, which holds barber's chair and looking-glass exempt; Re Klemp, 39 L. R. A. 340, which holds combined harvester of farmer exempt from execution.

34 L. R. A. 720, McAFEE v. HUIDEKOPER, 9 App. D. C. 36.

Passenger's contributory negligence.

Cited in Harbison v. Metropolitan R. Co. 9 App. D. C. 69, holding contributory negligence not established, as matter of law, by fact that passenger remained on running-board of car next adjoining track; Brightwood R. Co. v. Carter, 12 App. D. C. 160, upholding instruction for defendant if handle bar on open electric car was constructed merely to aid passengers in entering or alighting and was strong enough for such purpose, though it gave away while plaintiff was holding thereto during passage.

Cited in footnotes to Piper v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 724, which holds experienced traveler negligent in stepping out of vestibule door of sleeping car by mistake, while attempting to enter water closet; Gannon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 43 L. R. A. 833, which holds carrier liable for injury to passenger while impulsively trying to escape from car in which oil lamp caught fire.

Presumption of carrier's negligence from accident.

Cited in footnotes to Springer v. Ford, 52 L. R. A. 930, which sustains presumption of negligence from injury to passenger by unexplained breaking of elevator appliance; Harrison v. Sutter Street R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 608, which denies presumption of negligence from injury to street car passenger by collision of car with vehicle.

34 L. R. A. 723, BROWN v. PETTIT, 178 Pa. 17, 56 Am. St. Rep. 742, 35 Atl. 865.

Discount of firm paper for individual credit.

Cited in footnote to Lamson v. Beard, 45 L. R. A. 822, which holds brokers taking from bank president drafts signed by him for individual debt not bona fide purchaser.

Liability of bank for misappropriated proceeds of paper paid by it.

Distinguished in First Nat. Bank v. G. V. B. Min. Co. 89 Fed. 445, denying liability of bank for funds drawn upon in regular course of business by proper agent, but misappropriated, where not party to fraud.

34 L. R. A. 725, REELFOOT LAKE LEVEE DISTRICT v. DAWSON, 97 Tenn. 151, 36 S. W. 1041.

Equal and uniform taxation.

Cited in Jones v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 192, 47 S. W. 136, holding statute exempting newly added portion of city from taxation for current expense for which remaining portion is still taxable, unconstitutional; Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 99 Tenn. 702, 53 L. R. A. 928, 43 S. W. 115, holding that exemption of railroad from ad valorem tax does not relieve it from liability for privilege tax; Taylor v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 C. C. A. 551, 60 U. S. App. 166, 88 Fed. 363 and Railroad & Teleph. Cos. v. Board of Equalizers, 85 Fed. 317, restraining enforcement of tax based upon assessment of telephone and railroad property at real value, where other property in state assessed for less; Pryor v. Bryan, 11 Okla. 365, 66 Pac. 348, upholding power of legislature to tax for territorial and court funds only, Indian reservation attached to organized county.

— Self-executing provision.

Cited in Railroad & Teleph. Cos. & Board of Equalizers, 85 Fed. 306, holding provision of Constitution for uniform taxation mandatory and self-executing.

Assessment.

Distinguished in Carroll v. Alsop, 107 Tenn. 289, 64 S. W. 193, holding actual cash value at fair sale constitutional basis of assessment for taxation.

Classification of municipalities.

Cited in State v. Frost, 103 Tenn. 696, 54 S. W. 986, upholding statute applying four-mile liquor law to municipalities of less than 2,000 inhabitants created thereafter.

Taxation of property in specie.

Cited in footnote to Pingree v. Dix, 44 L. R. A. 679, which holds void, taxation of telephone lines at average rate of taxes levied throughout state during previous year.

Legislative policy.

Cited in Henley v. State, 98 Tenn. 683, 39 L. R. A. 132, 41 S. W. 352, upholding statute requiring attendance of witnesses residing within certain distance from court, without compensation, where violation of no express constitutional provision; Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 511, 48 L. R. A. 169, 53 S. W. 962, upholding "uniform text book act" as valid exercise of legislative discretion; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wells, 104 Tenn. 710, 59 S. W. 1041, refusing to consider wisdom or policy of statute creating attorney's lien for fees on cause of action; Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 441, 56 L. R. A. 320, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, and Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 103 Tenn. 613, 53 S. W. 970, refusing to overthrow statute compelling payment by corporations of "nontransferable" store orders, etc., in hands of transferees, for infringement of natural equity, where no constitutional right impaired; Memphis v. American Exp. Co. 102 Tenn. 340, 52 S. W. 172, holding statute taxing privileges for state revenue impliedly repeals municipal and county taxes thereon.

Police regulation and taxation for revenue.

Cited in Blaufield v. State, 103 Tenn. 601, 53 S. W. 1090, holding statute forbidding under penalty, sale of cigarettes, not impliedly repealed by tax on sale thereof "not in violation of criminal law."

Taxation for "public purpose."

Cited in footnotes to Pritchard v. Magoun, 46 L. R. A. 381, which authorizes taxes to aid in building for highway and railway purposes, toll bridge owned by private corporation; Dodge v. Mission Twp. 54 L. R. A. 242, which holds promotion of construction and operation of sugar mills a private purpose not authorizing taxation; Bush v. Orange County, 45 L. R. A. 556, which holds void, statute authorizing counties to raise by taxation money to pay drafted men or their heirs.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 758, 759, 761) on levees as public improvements.

Statutes void in part.

Cited in State v. Scott, 98 Tenn. 262, 36 L. R. A. 463, 39 S. W. 1, holding entire revenue act not invalidated by single unconstitutional provision taxing interstate commerce; Edwards v. Bruorton, 184 Mass. 531, 69 N. E. 328, holding statute authorizing laying out of street not invalidated by unconstitutional provision directing assessment upon abutters.

Distinguished in Weaver v. Davidson County, 104 Tenn. 333, 59 S. W. 1105, holding entire "Estes fee bill" avoided by invalidity of section making vicious classification, on which statute rests.

34 L. R. A. 733, REUTER v. LAWE, 94 Wis. 300, 59 Am. St. Rep. 891, 68 N. W. 955.

Estoppel to assert dedication.

Cited in Ashland v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 105 Wis. 403, 80 N. W. 1101, holding city not estopped to assert dedication of street, where ordinance vacating dedication repealed before action by former owners, other than payment of taxes.

Cited in footnote to Davenport v. Buffington, 46 L. R. A. 377, which holds municipality estopped to revoke dedication of public park after property rights acquired in reliance thereon.

Distinguished in Davis v. Appleton, 109 Wis. 588, 85 N. W. 515, holding that survey and establishment of street on supposed line of dedication does not work estoppel on city to claim additional strip against abutting owner who has made no improvements in reliance on former street line.

34 L. R. A. 737, CUSHING v. PEROT, 175 Pa. 66, 52 Am. St. Rep. 835, 34 Atl. 447.

Enforcement of stockholder's liability.

Cited in Whitman v. Oxford Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 568, 44 L. ed. 592, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, and Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 45, 42 L. R. A. 401, footnote p. 396, 70 Am. St. Rep. 232, 51 N. E. 207, enforcing liability of resident stockholder in Kansas corporation in action by judgment creditor; Remington Paper Co. v. Darling, 9 Kulp, 377 and Ball v. Anderson, 196 Pa. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 693, 46 Atl. 366, upholding individual creditor's right to pursue statutory remedy directly against single resident stockholder in Kansas corporation where right accrued prior to Kansas statute abolishing same; Warrington v. Ball, 33 C. C. A. 610, 62 U. S. App. 413, 90 Fed. 466, holding fraud in judgment upon which action against resident stockholder in Kansas corporation based, available as defense without suit in equity to annul; Love v. Pusey & J. Co. 3 Penn. (Del.) 579, 52 Atl. 542, holding stockholder's individual liability enforceable under Kansas statute in any state where personal service is had on stockholders.

Cited in footnotes to Kirtley v. Holmes, 52 L. R. A. 738, which sustains right to enforce stockholder's liability in courts of his domicile; Howarth v. Lombard, 49 L. R. A. 301, which authorizes suit to enforce stockholders' liability in foreign jurisdiction; Bell v. Farwell, 42 L. R. A. 804, which holds action to enforce stockholder's liability maintainable in other states; Ferguson v. Sherman, 37 L. R. A. 622, which authorizes action to enforce stockholder's liability in any state where personal service obtainable; Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Mechanic's Sav. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 228, which holds stockholder's liability enforceable in Federal court, or any court where personal service obtainable; Blair v. Newbegin, 58 L. R. A. 644, which sustains right to enforce stockholder's liability in other state, without making corporation a party; Crippen, L. & Co. v. Loughton, 46 L. R. A. 467, which denies enforceability of stockholder's liability in other state; Finney v. Guy, 49 L. R. A. 486, which holds action to enforce stockholder's liability not maintainable out of state; Bank of China v. Morse, 56 L. R. A. 139, which holds assessment under English statute in proceeding to wind up corporation will not be enforced here against resident.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 255) on effect of transfers of shares of stock on liability for unpaid subscription.

Distinguished in Bates v. Day, 198 Pa. 516, 82 Am. St. Rep. 811, 48 Atl. 407, denying right of portion of creditors of Colorado corporation to enforce statutory liability of stockholder in equitable proceeding in which he is only stockholder defendant, and corporation not party.

— By receiver or assignee.

Cited in Barton Nat. Bank v. Atkins, 72 Vt. 42, 47 Atl. 176, holding receiver proper party to enforce stockholder's liability in equity under Vermont statute; Childs v. Cleaves, 95 Me. 509, 50 Atl. 714, holding liability of local stockholder for assessment of foreign court in suit by receiver of insolvent corporation there domiciled, enforceable by such receiver; Hale v. Haddon, 37 C. C. A. 244, 95 Fed. 751, upholding appointment of receiver in another jurisdiction to enforce at law, equitable contribution of local stockholders in insolvent Minnesota corporation; Lewis v. Clark, 129 Fed. 574, upholding as matter of comity, action in Idaho by Wisconsin receiver of Minnesota corporation specially appointed to foreclose securities deposited in Wisconsin to authorize corporation to do business there.

Cited in footnotes to Stoddard v. Lum, 45 L. R. A. 551, which authorizes action in New York by Illinois assignee for creditors of Illinois corporation to enforce liability of all domestic stockholders; Howarth v. Angle, 47 L. R. A. 725, which sustains foreign receiver's right of action against stockholder in foreign corporation; Runner v. Dwiggins, 36 L. R. A. 645, which denies right of bank assignee to enforce stockholder's liability.

Distinguished in Colton v. Mayer, 90 Md. 718, 47 L. R. A. 621, footnote p. 617, 78 Am. St. Rep. 456, 45 Atl. 874, and McLaughlin v. Kimball, 20 Utah, 263, 77 Am. St. Rep. 908, 58 Pac. 685, holding creditor, but not receiver, either general or special, entitled to enforce statutory liability of stockholder.

Presumption as to foreign law.

Cited in footnote to Aslanian v. Dostumian, 47 L. R. A. 495, which denies presumption that law merchant as to protest of draft prevails in Asiatic Turkey.

34 L. R. A. 742, RHODES v. UNITED STATES NAT. BANK, 13 C. C. A. 612, 24 U. S. App. 607, 66 Fed. Rep. 512.

Enforcement of stockholder's personal liability.

Cited in Whitman v. Oxford Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 568, 44 L. ed. 592, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, Affirming 28 C. C. A. 411, 83 Fed. 295; Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 673, 76 N. W. 105; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 44, 42 L. R. A. 400, 70 Am. St. Rep. 232, 51 N. E. 207; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 175, 37 L. R. A. 625, 47 Pac. 1023,—upholding action by judgment creditor to enforce statutory liability of local stockholders in Kansas corporation; Dexter v. Edmands, 89 Fed. 469, and McVickar v. Jones, 70 Fed. 756, upholding action in Federal court corresponding in form to mode of enforcement under Kansas procedure; Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Mechanic's Sav. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 230, 38 C. C.

A. 196, 97 Fed. 299, Affirming 87 Fed. 116, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 367, holding stockholder or his estate individually liable in action by single creditor of insolvent Kansas corporation, although receiver appointed; Hutchings v. Lamson, 37 C. C. A. 565, 96 Fed. 720, holding statute of limitations of forum controls right to maintain action to enforce stockholder's liability under Kansas statute; American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. v. Woodworth, 79 Fed. 952, holding allegation of judgment against Kansas corporation, without stating original debt on which based, sufficient in proceeding in Federal court sitting in New York to enforce local stockholder's liability; Lamson v. Hutchings, 55 C. C. A. 246, 118 Fed. 322, holding plaintiff entitled to prove in action at law to enforce liability, that transfer of stock averred in defense was fraudulent and void; Western Nat. Bank v. Reckless, 96 Fed. 73, holding statute of another state preventing enforcement of creditor's statutory remedy against individual stockholder in Kansas corporation, resident in such state, unconstitutional; Howarth v. Lombard, 175 Mass. 580, 49 L. R. A. 307, 56 N. E. 888, sustaining action by receiver of Washington corporation there appointed, to enforce statutory liability of stockholders resident in forum; Hale v. Hardon, 37 C. C. A. 244, 95 Fed. 751, upholding appointment of ancillary receiver in another jurisdiction to enforce at law, equitable contribution of local stockholders in insolvent Minnesota corporation; Lewis v. Clark, 129 Fed. 574, upholding, as matter of comity, action in Idaho by Wisconsin receiver of Minnesota corporation specially appointed to foreclose securities deposited in Wisconsin to authorize corporation to do business there.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 763) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside state of incorporation.

Findings by court without jury.

Cited in O'Hara v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 514, 40 U. S. App. 471, 76 Fed. 720, holding general finding on trial by court without jury precludes consideration on appeal of errors other than in admission of evidence.

34 L. R. A. 747, RUSSELL v. PACIFIC R. CO. 113 Cal. 258, 45 Pac. 323.

Enforcement of stockholder's personal liability.

Cited in Stoddard v. Lum, 32 App. Div. 569, 53 N. Y. Supp. 607, holding method prescribed for enforcement of stockholder's liability at domicile of corporation precludes use of any other by creditor suing in foreign jurisdiction.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 743, 755) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside state of incorporation.

34 L. R. A. 750, TUTTLE v. NATIONAL BANK, 161 Ill. 497, 44 N. E. 984.

Enforcement of statutory liability of stockholder outside state of incorporation.

Cited in Mead v. Davies, 84 Ill. App. 562, refusing to dissolve foreign corporation and enforce special remedy against stockholder available under law of its domicile, prior to dissolution proceedings there; Warrington v. Ball, 33 C. C. A. 610, 62 U. S. App. 413, 90 Fed. 466, holding defense of fraud in foreign judgment upon statutory liability available in action thereon in Federal court sitting in another state; National Bank v. Zinser, 55 Ill. App. 517, holding constitutional provision in Kansas for stockholders' liability, self-executing and enforceable in forum in action of assumpsit; James H. Rice Co. v. Libbey, 85 Fed. 824, holding corporation necessary party to equitable proceeding to determine officer's statutory liability for excess of debts over capital stock.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 743, 755) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside state of incorporation.

Distinguished in Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 493, 42 L. R. A. 806, 68 Am. St. Rep. 194, 54 N. E. 346, enforcing statutory liability of stockholder under Kansas law in action of assumpsit where contractual nature admitted by demurrer; Woodworth v. Bowles, 61 Kan. 575, 60 Pac. 331, dismissing petition in equity by creditor in behalf of himself and other creditors, as not in conformity to individual right of each creditor to enforce stockholder's liability under Kansas law.

Disapproved in Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 674, 76 N. W. 105, holding constitutional liability of stockholder in Kansas corporation self-executing and enforceable at law in foreign state in action of assumpsit; Whitman v. National Bank, 28 C. C. A. 411, 51 U. S. App. 536, 83 Fed. 295, and Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 45, 42 L. R. A. 401, 70 Am. St. Rep. 232, 51 N. E. 207, holding statutory liability of stockholder in Kansas corporation transitory and enforceable wherever service may be properly made.

34 L. R. A. 757, MARSHALL v. SHERMAN, 148 N. Y. 9, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654, 42 N. E. 419.

Motion for reargument denied, 148 N. Y. 755, 43 N. E. 988.

Enforcement of stockholder's statutory liability.

Cited in Crippen v. Loughton, 69 N. H. 551, 46 L. R. A. 473, 76 Am. St. Rep. 192, 44 Atl. 538; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 20 R. I. 469, 40 Atl. 341; Brookman v. Merchants' Sav. Bank, 31 Misc. 193, 65 N. Y. Supp. 54; Tuttle v. National Bank, 161 Ill. 503, 34 L. R. A. 753, 44 N. E. 984,—holding that individual creditor cannot maintain action to enforce statutory liability of local stockholder in Kansas corporation; Bank of China v. Morse, 168 N. Y. 482, 56 L. R. A. 148, 35 Am. St. Rep. 676, 61 N. E. 774, refusing to enforce against domestic stockholder, assessment under foreign statute in dissolution proceeding of which no notice given and to which stockholder not party; Finney v. Guy, 106 Wis. 267, 49 L. R. A. 491, 82 N. W. 595, holding liability not enforceable in forum, where laws of Minnesota where corporation domiciled provide for single action against all stockholders and corporation in favor of all creditors; Warrington v. Ball, 33 C. C. A. 610, 62 U. S. App. 413, 90 Fed. 466, holding defense of fraud in foreign judgment upon statutory liability available in action thereon in Federal court sitting in another state; Woodworth v. Bowles, 61 Kan. 575, 60 Pac. 331, holding individual creditor's right to maintain action against individual stockholder not affected by subsequent statute taking away such right; Lang v. Lutz, 83 App. Div. 537, 82 N. Y. Supp. 319, denying right of creditor to enforce for his benefit alone, liability of stockholder for amount unpaid on stock; Hutchinson v. Stadler, 85 App. Div. 430, 83 N. Y. Supp. 509, enforcing liability, under statute, against director of foreign corporation paying dividends out of capital of corporation in violation of statute.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 741) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside state of incorporation.

Distinguished in Stoddard v. Lum, 159 N. Y. 273, 45 L. R. A. 554, 70 Am. St. Rep. 541, 53 N. E. 1108, Reversing 32 App. Div. 569, 53 N. Y. Supp. 607, sustaining equitable action by foreign assignee for creditors of foreign corporation to collect unpaid subscriptions to stock from all local stockholders thereon; Howarth

v. Lombard, 175 Mass. 580, 49 L. R. A. 308, 56 N. E. 888, and Howarth v. Angle, 162 N. Y. 189, 47 L. R. A. 730, 56 N. E. 489, Affirming 39 App. Div. 161, 57 N. Y. Supp. 187, Which Affirms 25 Misc. 554, 55 N. Y. Supp. 1108, sustaining action by foreign receiver to collect assessment imposed by court at domicil of foreign corporation upon stockholders thereof; Thompson v. Nicolai, 21 Misc. 709, 49 N. Y. Supp. 422, sustaining action by assignee of creditor of insolvent business corporation to recover debt from individual stockholder of unpaid stock, where debt does not exceed par value of stock, without joining other parties; Persons v. Gardner, 42 App. Div. 500, 59 N. Y. Supp. 463, holding that receiver of bank may enforce liability of stockholders imposed by statute enacted subsequent to insolvency; Hale v. Hardon, 37 C. C. A. 245, 95 Fed. 751, upholding appointment of receiver in another jurisdiction to enforce at law, equitable contribution of local stockholders in insolvent Minnesota corporation; Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 493, 42 L. R. A. 806, 68 Am. St. Rep. 194, 54 N. E. 346, enforcing contractual liability of local stockholders in Kansas corporation in action at law by single creditor, where admitted by demurrer; Latimer v. Citizens State Bank, 102 Iowa, 165, 71 N. W. 225, enforcing liability of local stockholder in South Dakota corporation at suit of individual creditor; Stieffel v. Tolhurst, 67 App. Div. 526, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1034, holding directors liable for statutory penalty for failure to file annual report, irrespective of insolvency of corporation; Worthington v. Griesser, 77 App. Div. 208, 79 N. Y. Supp. 52, holding obligation created by contract enforceable against directors of pretended foreign corporation.

Disapproved in Whitman v. National Bank, 28 C. C. A. 411, 51 U. S. App. 536, 83 Fed. 295, Affirming 76 Fed. 698; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 45, 42 L. R. A. 401, 70 Am. St. Rep. 232, 51 N. E. 207; Kulp v. Fleming, 65 Ohio, 340, 87 Am. St. Rep. 611, 62 N. E. 334; Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 674, 76 N. W. 105,—holding liability enforceable by individual creditor against individual resident stockholder in insolvent Kansas corporation; Pfaff v. Gruen, 92 Mo. App. 572, upholding action by creditor in behalf of all against all resident stockholders in Ohio corporation to collect assessment imposed by Ohio court; Love v. Pusey & J. Co. 3 Penn. (Del.) 578, 52 Atl. 542, holding action maintainable in Delaware to enforce, under Kansas statute, individual liability of Delaware stockholder of Kansas corporation.

— Equitable nature of proceeding.

Cited in Hirshfeld v. Fitzgerald, 157 N. Y. 179, 46 L. R. A. 846, 51 N. E. 997, holding creditor bringing action on behalf of himself and other creditors, entitled to settle and discontinue same at any time prior to joinder therein of other creditors; Marsh v. Kaye, 44 App. Div. 79, 60 N. Y. Supp. 439 (dissenting opinion), majority denying right of creditor proceeding in equity in behalf of all, to enjoin actions by other creditors at law to enforce statutory liability of directors of charitable corporation; Hallett v. Metropolitan Messenger Co. 69 App. Div. 263, 74 N. Y. Supp. 639, holding creditor not entitled to personal judgment against all stockholders in equitable proceeding in behalf of all creditors, where it appears that there are other creditors in same position.

— Necessary parties.

Cited in Milson Rendering & Fertilizer Co. v. Baker, 16 App. Div. 586, 44 N. Y. Supp. 999, holding corporation and all its directors necessary parties to action to enforce statutory liability for creation of debt in excess of paid-up capital stock; Hirshfeld v. Bopp, 39 App. Div. 616, 57 N. Y. Supp. 699, refusing to permit action by creditors against portion only of stockholders of insolvent corporation in forum; James H. Rice Co. v. Libbey, 85 Fed. 824, holding corporation necessary party to equitable proceeding to determine officer's statutory liability for excess of debts over capital stock.

Extraterritorial force of state statutes and decisions.

Cited in People v. Martin, 38 Misc. 70, 76 N. Y. Supp. 953, refusing to convict notary public of perjury for false oath, where oath not required by domestic laws, though authorized by law of foreign jurisdiction in a proceeding under which it was taken; Bath Gaslight Co. v. Rowland, 84 App. Div. 568, 82 N. Y. Supp. 841, refusing to hold surety liable on lease declared to be ultra vires in state where made; Hilliker v. Hale, 54 C. C. A. 257, 117 Fed. 225, holding action not maintainable in foreign jurisdiction by a receiver who is a mere agent of court in winding up corporation.

34 L. R. A. 767, PITTSBURGH, C. C. & ST. L. R. CO. v. REDDING, 140 Ind. 101, 39 N. E. 921.

Liability for injuries to trespassers.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adair, 12 Ind. App. 594, 40 N. E. 822, holding railway company liable only for wilful injury of boy walking on tracks at place where no regular crossing, though commonly used as footpath.

Right to eject passengers.

Cited in footnote to Randall v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 666, which denies implied authority of brakeman to eject passenger from freight train.

34 L. R. A. 769, DANTZER v. INDIANAPOLIS UNION R. CO. 141 Ind. 604, 50 Am. St. Rep. 343, 39 N. E. 223.

Obstruction of access to property.

Cited in Newton v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 72 Conn. 428, 44 Atl. 813, holding railway company not liable for depreciation in value through circuitry of access, caused by removal of grade crossing; Cram v. Laconia, 71 N. H. 47, 57 L. R. A. 285, 51 Atl. 635, holding discontinuance of portion of street, resulting in diversion of trade, not ground of action where access exists by longer route; O'Brien v. Central Iron & Steel Co. 158 Ind. 221, 57 L. R. A. 509, 92 Am. St. Rep. 305, 63 N. E. 302, holding construction of building wholly obstructing street entitles property owner, whose access to business portion of city thereby cut off, to maintain action for special damages; Strunk v. Pritchett, 27 Ind. App. 586, 61 N. E. 973, holding obstruction of alley special injury where only mode of access to rear of lot; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsgar, 148 Ind. 109, 47 N. E. 332, holding abutting owner entitled to recover for obstruction of access by switch, materially interrupting same; Long v. Wilson, 119 Iowa, 273, 60 L. R. A. 722, footnote p. 720, 97 Am. St. Rep. 315, 93 N. W. 282, holding judgment establishing boundary of highway in suit against owner on one side not conclusive on opposite owner whose access to property interfered with by boundary established; Hall v. Lebanon, 31 Ind. App. 269, 67 N. C. 703, holding owner of property not abutting on portion of street sought to be vacated not entitled to injunctive relief, where not suffering special damages.

34 L. R. A. 773, JACKSON v. JACKSON, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317.

Record of error on appeal.

Cited in Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 303, 47 L. R. A. 388, 45 Atl. 459, holding erroneous admission of question on examination of witness not ground for reversal where record does not disclose that answer given.

Validity of marriage.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 156, 159, 161, 169) on conflict of laws as to validity of marriage.

Evidence of character.

Cited in footnote to Daniels v. State, 54 L. R. A. 286, which requires evidence of good character to be weighed by jury according to weight of testimony by which supported.

34 L. R. A. 777, STATE ex rel. CHILDS v. COPELAND, 66 Minn. 315, 61 Am. St. Rep. 410, 69 N. W. 27.

Uniformity of operation of statutes.

Cited in Robert J. Boyd Paving & Contracting Co. v. Ward, 28 C. C. A. 676, 55 U. S. App. 730, 85 Fed. 36, and Owen v. Baer, 154 Mo. 443, 55 S. W. 644, holding statute giving municipalities of fourth class power to tax for sewers, on adoption of provision by two-thirds vote, unconstitutional as special in operation.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Anderson v. Sullivan, 72 Minn. 133, 75 N. W. 8, upholding statute making identical provisions for operation in counties of same class, though, by reason of discretion exercisable thereunder by county commissioners, salaries may differ for same office in different counties.

Disapproved in Adams v. Beloit, 105 Wis. 374, 47 L. R. A. 446, footnote p. 441, 81 N. W. 869, upholding statute general in terms, though operating to affect but single municipality.

Office of commissioner of public works.

Cited in State ex rel. St. Paul v. District Court, 72 Minn. 227, 71 Am. St. Rep. 480, 75 N. W. 224, holding assessment levied for improvements ordered by one holding office of commissioner of public works under unconstitutional statute, void.

34 L. R. A. 781, MITCHELL v. ROCHESTER R. CO. 151 N. Y. 107, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354.

Liability for injuries caused by fright.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. St. L. R. Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ind. App. 381, 56 N. E. 917, denying damage for nervous shock due to fright at peril of daughter, caused by negligence of railway company; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 290, 38 L. R. A. 514, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, holding nervous shock due to fright at scuffle in removal of disorderly passenger by conductor not ground of recovery; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 212, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343, 47 N. E. 694, holding fright at danger in which person is placed by runaway caused by negligent dropping of gate on horse and buggy not ground for recovery; Ward v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. 65 N. J. L. 384, 47 Atl. 561, holding that paralysis from fear at danger in which one is placed by negligent gateman will not support action; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bragg, 69 Ark. 405, 86 Am. St. Rep. 206, 64 S. W. 226, refusing recovery for nervous prostration caused by fright at having to cross cattle-guard with children at night, through failure to stop train at sta-by creditors against portion of forum; James H. Rice Co. v. party to equitable proceedings of debts over capital stock.

Extraterritorial force

Cited in People v. Ma
notary public of perjurer though authorized by was taken; Bath G refusing to hold s made; Hilliker v. able in foreign j up corporation

34 L. R. A.

39 N.

Liability

Cited App. 52, holding nervous shock due to violent, angry speech intiff, while prostrated from child-birth, not ground of recovery;
822, 122 Mich. 467, 80 Am. St. Rep. 577, 81 N. W. 335, denying trae' miscarriage caused by fright at man dressed in woman clothes; Prince 32 Misc. 667, 66 N. Y. Supp. 454, refusing damage for shame and suffer-
R' used by mere solicitation to illicit intercourse; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 86 Am. St. Rep. 379, 85 N. W. 618, refusing recovery of value of horse whose death was caused by rupture of blood vessel of heart through fright at negligently operated street roller; Nason v. West, 31 Misc. 585, 65 N. Y. Supp. 651, holding allowance of damage for propensity of horse to subsequent fright erroneous in action for damages to animal by automobile; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Sklar, 61
C. C. A. 287, 126 Fed. 301, holding damages for mental suffering due to delay in delivery of telegram not recoverable; Wood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 83 App.
Div. 607, 82 N. Y. Supp. 160, holding carrier liable for negligence causing injury, due to shock and muscular strain not produced by fright.

Cited in footnotes to Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 512, which denies right to recover for fright, etc., unaccompanied by physical injuries; Sanderson v.
Northern P. R. Co. 60 L. R. A. 403, which denies right to recover for fright resulting in physical injury, but without contemporaneous injury, unless fright proximate result of legal wrong; Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 47 L. R. A. 323, which denies recovery for sickness due to fright caused by grossly negligent act of one knowing such result would follow; Kline v. Kline, 58 L. R. A. 397, which sustains right to damages for mental suffering for assault by pointing gun with threat to shoot unless house abandoned; Watson v. Dilts, 57 L. R. A. 559, which holds one liable for frightening woman, causing nervous prostration, by stealthily entering her home in nighttime; Homans v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 291, which holds carrier liable for nervous shock to passenger from jar to nervous system accompanying blow; Reed v. Maley, 62 L. R. A. 900, which holds that merely soliciting woman to sexual intercourse gives her no right of action by reason of mental distress suffered thereby.

Distinguished in Jones v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 23 App. Div. 143, 48 N. Y.
Supp. 914, allowing damages for fright accompanying injury by fall of light from

C. A. 546, 55 U. S. App. 427.

inal damages are recoverable error where incorporated of injury not due

392, 74 N. Y.

ries re

on co.

verdict in

cted to give damages

v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 77, 54 L. A.

U. Teleg. Co. 13 App. Div. 254, 42

ery for mental suffering caused by delay death of relative. Mahoney v. Dankwart, 106 recovery for permanent nervous disorder caused on adjoining lot; Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 413, 42 adding fright and shock caused by negligent and violent collection of rent insufficient to support action for damages;

App. 52, holding nervous shock due to violent, angry speech

intiff, while prostrated from child-birth, not ground of recovery;

ford, 122 Mich. 467, 80 Am. St. Rep. 577, 81 N. W. 335, denying miscarriage caused by fright at man dressed in woman clothes; Prince

32 Misc. 667, 66 N. Y. Supp. 454, refusing damage for shame and suffer-used by mere solicitation to illicit intercourse; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 86 Am. St. Rep. 379, 85 N. W. 618, refusing recovery of value of horse whose death was caused by rupture of blood vessel of heart through fright at negligently operated street roller; Nason v. West, 31 Misc. 585, 65 N. Y. Supp. 651, holding allowance of damage for propensity of horse to subsequent fright erroneous in action for damages to animal by automobile; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Sklar, 61

C. C. A. 287, 126 Fed. 301, holding damages for mental suffering due to delay in delivery of telegram not recoverable; Wood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 83 App.

Div. 607, 82 N. Y. Supp. 160, holding carrier liable for negligence causing injury, due to shock and muscular strain not produced by fright.

roof of car; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 52 S. C. 332, 40 L. R. A. 683, footnote p. 679, 68 Am. St. Rep. 913, 29 S. E. 905, permitting recovery for injury to youth whose mind unbalanced by fright at proximity to train killing mule which he was leading; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter, 93 Tex. 242, 47 L. R. A. 326, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, 54 S. W. 944, holding railway company liable for nervous shock proximately caused by fright at collision; Buckbee v. Third Avenue R. Co. 64 App. Div. 364, 72 N. Y. Supp. 217, holding plaintiff entitled to damages for injury due to electric shock while leaving car in terror at flames from controller box; Watkins v. Kaolin Mfg. Co. 131 N. C. 543, 60 L. R. A. 620, footnote p. 617, 42 S. E. 983, permitting recovery for nervous disorders of woman caused by fright at negligent blasting upon adjoining land; Preiser v. Wielandt, 48 App. Div. 572, 62 N. Y. Supp. 890, holding landlord liable for death of tenant's wife where he wilfully tears down house immediately on expiration of lease, though notified of her pregnancy and heart disease; Hickey v. Welch, 91 Mo. App. 11, holding landlord liable for nervous prostration caused by fright at his abuse and threatening attitude with gun; Ford v. Schliessman, 107 Wis. 483, 83 N. W. 761, holding woman entitled to damage for fright caused by actions of trespasser on premises, though no assault actually made; Williams v. Underhill, 63 App. Div. 226, 71 N. Y. Supp. 291, allowing damages for mental derangement following actual assault; Koch v. Fox, 71 App. Div. 298, 75 N. Y. Supp. 913, holding party responsible for negligent injury causing insanity liable for death proximately resulting therefrom; Powell v. Hudson Valley R. Co. 88 App. Div. 137, 84 N. Y. Supp. 337, holding carrier liable for consequences of physical injury to passenger, due to its negligence, although condition partly produced by shock and fright.

Disapproved in Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 122 Iowa, 382, 64 L. R. A. 549, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281, holding damages recoverable for mental pain and suffering due to negligence in transmission of telegram.

34 L. R. A. 784, STATE v. ZICHFELD, 23 Nev. 304, 62 Am. St. Rep. 800, 46 Pac. 802.

Validity of common-law marriage.

Cited in University of Michigan v. McGuckin, 62 Neb. 493, 57 L. R. A. 919, footnote p. 917, 87 N. W. 180, holding lawful marriage shown between persons whose cohabitation originally meretricious, by continued cohabitation after disability removed, and birth of children baptized as legitimate.

Cited in footnote to Hilton v. Roylance, 58 L. R. A. 723, which sustains sealing for time and eternity under Mormon marriage ceremony.

34 L. R. A. 788, LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. McELWAIN, 98 Ky. 700, 56 Am. St. Rep. 385, 34 S. W. 236.

Right of actions for injuries resulting in death.

Cited in Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Barclay, 102 Ky. 28, 43 S. W. 177, holding husband required to elect between statutory action for physical and mental suffering of deceased wife and common-law action for negligent killing; Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 117 Mich. 338, 43 L. R. A. 571, footnote p. 568, 75 N. W. 1066, holding but single action survives under statute providing for action by administrator for pain and suffering of deceased and for action for pecuniary loss to heirs by reason of death; United States Electric Lighting Co. v. Sullivan, 22 App.

D. C. 130, holding that father has no cause of action, independent of statute, for negligent killing of minor son.

Cited in footnotes to Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 579, which holds cause of action for personal injuries which survives death, distinct from right of action for death; Broughel v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 49 L. R. A. 404, which holds substantial damages recoverable for instantaneous death by wrongful act; Re Meekin, 51 L. R. A. 235, which holds action for death by administrator, who is also father and sole beneficiary of deceased, survives father's death; Worcester & S. Street R. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 57 L. R. A. 629, which holds cases of instantaneous death not covered by policy insuring railroad company against loss from liability to persons sustaining "personal injuries."

Distinguished in Foreman v. Taylor Coal Co. 112 Ky. 851, 57 L. R. A. 450, 66 S. W. 1044, holding that cause of action against employer for failure to protect nonunion laborer against violence of strikers does not survive.

— Effect of release.

Cited in Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cassin, 111 Ga. 580, 50 L. R. A. 697, footnote p. 694, 36 S. E. 881, holding voluntary settlement by deceased with tortfeasor for injury precludes statutory action in favor of survivors.

Cited in footnote to Hill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 196, which holds right of action for subsequent death precluded by release of damages for personal injuries.

— Measure of damages.

Distinguished in Lines v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 91 Fed. 968, holding earning power of deceased is measure of damages in statutory action by personal representative.

34 L. R. A. 797, LUBRANO v. ATLANTIC MILLS, 19 R. I. 129, 32 Atl. 205.

Right of actions for negligent injury causing death.

Cited in Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 117 Mich. 339, 43 L. R. A. 572, 75 N. W. 1066, holding but single action survives under statutes providing for action by administrator for pain and suffering of deceased, and for action for pecuniary loss to heirs by reason of death; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cassin, 111 Ga. 579, 50 L. R. A. 696, 36 S. E. 881, holding settlement by deceased with tortfeasor bars statutory action in favor of heirs.

Cited in footnote to Broughel v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 49 L. R. A. 404, which holds substantial damages recoverable for instantaneous death by wrongful act.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 788) on how many distinct causes of action arise from injuries resulting in death.

Distinguished in Letson v. Brown, 11 Colo. App. 19, 52 Pac. 287, holding action for negligent injury does not survive against estate of wrongdoer.

Disapproved in Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 102 Wis. 147, 44 L. R. A. 584, 77 N. W. 748, holding action by administrator for suffering of deceased distinct from that by heirs for pecuniary loss.

34 L. R. A. 803, HOLLEMAN v. HARWARD, 119 N. C. 150, 56 Am. St. Rep. 672, 25 S. E. 972.

Deprivation of services.

Cited in Whitaker v. Hamilton, 126 N. C. 464, 35 S. E. 815, holding loss of daughter's services during infancy, through lawful marriage, damnum absque injuria.

Husband's right of action for injuries.

Cited in footnote to Kelley v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 631, which sustains husband's common-law right of action for loss of consortium through injury to wife.

Liability for death from effect of liquor sold husband.

Cited in footnote to Riden v. Grimm Bros. 35 L. R. A. 587, which sustains wife's right of action for husband's death from effects of liquor furnished in violation of statute.

34 L. R. A. 806, FARMERS' MUT. INS. ASSO. v. BURCH, 47 S. C. 453, 58 Am. St. Rep. 899, 25 S. E. 211.

Nature of proceeding to recover assessments.

Cited in Farmers' Mut. Ins. Asso. v. Berry, 53 S. C. 130, 31 S. E. 53, holding jury trial not demandable as matter of right in action equitable in nature.

34 L. R. A. 810, KINGMAN COUNTY v. LEONARD, 57 Kan. 531, 57 Am. St. Rep. 347, 46 Pac. 960.

Situs of personality for taxation.

Cited in Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 595, 37 L. R. A. 388, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, 47 N. E. 8, holding notes and mortgages owned by nonresident, but kept in forum by resident agent managing local loan business, subject to taxation; Mecartney v. Caskey, 66 Kan. 414, 71 Pac. 832, holding tax sale certificates held by nonresidents not subject to taxation.

Cited in footnote to Allen v. National State Bank, 52 L. R. A. 760, which sustains right of state to tax nonresident mortgagee's interest in land within state.

34 L. R. A. 812, McLAUGHLIN v. LOUISVILLE ELECTRIC-LIGHT CO. 100 Ky. 173, 37 S. W. 851.

Negligence as to electric wires.

Cited in Thomas v. Maysville Gas Co. 108 Ky. 229, 53 L. R. A. 149, 56 S. W. 153, holding company supplying electricity to railway liable jointly with latter, for injury due to negligent failure properly to insulate wires; Macon v. Paducah Street R. Co. 110 Ky. 689, 62 S. W. 496, holding that railway company must exercise highest degree of care in use of electricity, for protection of all persons in all places where such persons have right to be; Geismann v. Missouri-Edison Electric Co. 173 Mo. 674, 73 S. W. 654, holding lighting company liable for death of sign hanger receiving shock due to contact of wire he was holding with uninsulated wire maintained by company; Will v. Edison Electric Light Co. 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 338, holding electric lighting company liable for death of painter, caused by his coming in contact with uninsulated live wire while painting building; Rucker v. Sherman Oil & Cotton Co. 29 Tex. Civ. App. 419, 68 S. W. 818, holding evidence of customary use of awning admissible in action for death of lineman killed by coming in contact with uninsulated wire while at work on such awning; Cole v. Parker, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 566, 66 S. W. 135, holding owners of electric lighting plant liable for failure to exercise due care in discovery of defect in construction of plant, by reason of which boy is killed; Perham v. Portland Electric Co. 33 Or.

475, 40 L. R. A. 809, footnote p. 799, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730, 53 Pac. 14, which holds it negligent to string over bridge dangerous electric wires with which employee must come in contact when making repairs.

Cited in footnotes to Moran v. Corliss Steam-Engine Co. 45 L. R. A. 267, which holds employer using defectively insulated wire with slight current liable for injury to employee due to outside contact with dangerous current; Griffith v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 52 L. R. A. 919, which requires telephone company to exercise care to prevent accident by conducting lightning into house over wires; Brown v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 46 L. R. A. 745, which holds prima facie presumption of negligence arises from injury to boy by contact with exposed point of charged wire within few inches of small roof just below second-story window; Boyd v. Portland General Electric Co. 52 L. R. A. 509, which holds want of sufficient assistance to promptly replace wires broken by severe storm not excuse, as matter of law, for delay; Anderson v. Inland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 41 L. R. A. 410, which holds telephone lineman negligent in touching span wire in contact with trolley wire, insulation of which broken; Brush Electric Light & Power Co. v. Lefevre, 49 L. R. A. 771, which denies liability for death by uninsulated electric light wire running above awning 16 feet above street; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Martin, 63 L. R. A. 469, which denies liability of telephone company, negligently stretching inadequately insulated wire over roof of store porch, to passerby, while taking refuge under roof from storm, killed by lightning escaping from wire.

Disqualification of jurors.

Cited in footnote to Reed v. Peacock, 49 L. R. A. 423, which holds Odd Fellow not disqualified as juror in action by Odd Fellow of other lodge.

34 L. R. A. 817, LANCEY v. KING COUNTY, 15 Wash. 9, 45 Pac. 645.

Singleness of subject in statute.

Cited in Merritt v. Corey, 22 Wash. 448, 61 Pac. 171, upholding act "concerning actions to enjoin collection of taxes, and actions to recover property sold for taxes."

Sufficiency of title to act.

Cited in Seattle v. Barto, 31 Wash. 146, 71 Pac. 735, holding title of ordinance "to regulate certain trades and occupations" broad enough to authorize provision for licensing pawnbrokers; State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 194, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737, holding title to act "to regulate the practice of barbering" etc. broad enough to authorize provision for board of examiners, and their duties and compensation.

Taxation for "public purpose."

Cited in footnotes to Pritchard v. Magoun, 46 L. R. A. 381, which authorizes taxes to aid in building for highway and railway purposes, toll bridge owned by private corporation; Dodge v. Mission Twp. 54 L. R. A. 242, which holds promotion of construction and operation of sugar mills a private purpose not authorizing taxation.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 833) on construction and operation of canals.

34 L. R. A. 821, KEYSTONE LUMBER CO. v. KOLMAN, 94 Wis. 465, 59 Am. St. Rep. 904, 69 N. W. 165.

Reaffirmed on second appeal in 103 Wis. 302, 79 N. W. 224.

Who may maintain replevin.

Cited in footnote to Mitchell v. Georgia & A. R. Co. 51 L. R. A. 622, which holds possession of property as agent does not authorize action for its conversion.

Timber as realty.

Cited in Fluharty v. Mills, 49 W. Va. 451, 38 S. E. 521, holding oral sale of standing timber merely license to enter for purpose of cutting.

34 L. R. A. 824, HINES v. WILLCOX, 96 Tenn. 148, 328, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823, 33 S. W. 914, 34 S. W. 420.

Liability of landlord for injuries due to defects in premises.

Reaffirmed on second appeal in 100 Tenn. 540, 41 L. R. A. 278, 66 Am. St. Rep. 770, 46 S. W. 297, holding landlord liable for injury to tenant from fall of porch, known by him to have drawn away from house, and which he negligently left unsafe after repairing, and referring particularly to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 824.

Cited in Stenberg v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 164, 34 L. R. A. 617, 33 S. W. 917, holding guest of lessee entitled to recover for injuries due to defective balcony, condition of which at time of lease could have been known by landlord by use of reasonable diligence.

Cited in footnotes to Moore v. Parker, 53 L. R. A. 778, which holds landlord liable for failure to inform tenant of known defect or dangerous condition; Railton v. Taylor, 39 L. R. A. 246, which holds landlord not exempt by lease from liability for damage resulting from negligence in use of heating apparatus remaining under his own control; Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 772, which denies landlord's liability for injury to subtenant's child from defective balustrade on porch; Stillwell v. South Louisville Land Co. 52 L. R. A. 325, which holds contributory negligence not shown by tenant entering premises on landlord's agreement to at once repair unprotected cistern.

Cited in notes (34 L. R. A. 612) on landlord's liability for injuries to tenant's guests and servants from defects in premises; (33 L. R. A. 455) on implied covenant in lease as to fitness of property for purpose intended.

Distinguished in Schmalzried v. White, 97 Tenn. 41, 32 L. R. A. 783, 36 S. W. 393, holding landlord not liable for injuries due to hidden defects in leased premises of which he could not have been aware by use of reasonable diligence.

Disapproved in O'Malley v. Twenty-five Associates, 178 Mass. 559, 60 N. E. 387, holding landlord not liable to tenant for injury due to breaking of crane hook, defect in which not known; Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & Paper Co. 91 Me. 308, 40 L. R. A. 380, 64 Am. St. Rep. 229, 39 Atl. 1032, holding landlord not liable for injury due to defective pulp digester in leased mill, where not dangerous unless used, and referring with approval to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 824; Shinkle, W. & K. Co. v. Birney, 68 Ohio St. 335, 67 N. E. 715, holding lessor, in absence of warranty or deceit, not liable to lessee for injury due to defective condition of warehouse; Franklin v. Tracey (Ky.) 63 L. R. A. 652, footnote p. 649, 77 S. W. 1113, holding owner not required to exercise care to discover latent defects for benefit of intending lessees, and referring with approval to annotation in 34 L. R. A. 824.

Annotation in 34 L. R. A. 824, referred to particularly in Hanson v. Cruse, 155 Ind. 178, 57 N. E. 904, holding landlord not liable for injuries to health, due to obvious defects in house known to tenant, though former promising to repair same; Thompson v. Clemens, 96 Md. 207, 60 L. R. A. 583, footnote p. 581, 53 Atl.

919, denying landlord's liability for injury to member of tenant's family from failure to keep agreement to make repairs.

Parol evidence of contract.

Cited in Lewis v. Turnley, 97 Tenn. 202, 36 S. W. 872, upholding admission of parol evidence to prove independent collateral agreement for transfer to vendee of insurance on premises by vendor in action on purchase money note; Quigley v. Shedd, 104 Tenn. 565, 58 S. W. 266, holding parol evidence competent to prove agreement that contemporary payment not to be credited on written obligation then executed; Lyons v. Stills, 97 Tenn. 517, 37 S. W. 280, admitting evidence of agreement to take pony for period of probation, in action on absolute purchase note given at time.

34 L. R. A. 835, GRAND ISLAND & N. W. R. CO. v. BAKER, 6 Wyo. 369, 71 Am. St. Rep. 926, 45 Pac. 494.

Consideration of reserved questions by supreme court.

Cited in Foot v. Smith, 8 Wyo. 511, 58 Pac. 898, refusing to consider reserved questions where action properly dismissed by plaintiff in district court; State ex rel. Perkins v. Sheridan County, 7 Wyo. 164, 51 Pac. 204, refusing to consider merits of case on appeal from ruling on motion for judgment on pleadings, where answer denies material allegations of complaint.

Collateral attack upon judgment.

Cited in Re Fremont & B. H. Counties, 8 Wyo. 38, 54 Pac. 1073, holding judgment against original county conclusive against new county embracing same territory in subsequent resubdivision of state, in proceeding to apportion indebtedness between new counties; Lake County v. Platt, 25 C. C. A. 92, 49 U. S. App. 216, 79 Fed. 573, holding county estopped to assert excess of debt limit by debt forming basis of default judgment in payment of which, bonds sued upon were issued; Holt County v. National L. Ins. Co. 25 C. C. A. 473, 49 U. S. App. 376, 80 Fed. 690, enforcing judgment in mandamus to levy tax to meet judgment against school district, although levy urged to be in excess of constitutional powers of county officers; McEntire v. Williamson, 63 Kan. 283, 65 Pac. 244, holding taxpayer concluded by judgment against city on all questions that might have been litigated in action, until judgment impeached for fraud or collusion.

County tax limit.

Cited in Dawson County v. Clark, 58 Neb. 766, 79 N. W. 822, holding tax levied by school district to meet judgment, void where constitutional maximum previously levied; Eaton v. Mimunaugh, 43 Or. 471, 73 Pac. 754, holding statute directing county to incur indebtedness beyond constitutional limit, void.

Distinguished in State v. Laramie County, 8 Wyo. 121, 55 Pac. 451, holding liability of county for deficiency due upon state levy not chargeable against proceeds of tax for county revenue.

Power to confess judgment.

Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Hitchcock County, 60 Neb. 726, 84 N. W. 97, holding waiver of issuance and service of summons against village, by chairman of board of trustees, void; Custer County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 62 Neb. 661, 87 N. W. 341, holding confession of judgment against county by county attorney acting under resolution of county board, void.

34 L. R. A. 845, STATE ex rel. BLYDENBURGH v. BURDICK, 6 Wyo. 448, 46 Pac. 854.

34 L. R. A. 851, DEBNEY v. STATE, 45 Neb. 856, 64 N. W. 446.

Prejudice by conduct of trial.

Cited in McMahon v. State, 46 Neb. 167, 64 N. W. 694, sustaining refusal of new trial on ground of prejudicial statements by prosecuting attorney, where not harmful when taken with evidence; Lindsay v. State, 46 Neb. 182, 64 N. W. 716, upholding refusal of new trial for prejudice by unexpected accusation of defendant in courtroom by mother of deceased, where removed immediately by court at request of both prosecution and defense.

Error in instructions.

Cited in Whitney v. State, 53 Neb. 299, 73 N. W. 696, refusing to reverse conviction for embezzlement on ground of prejudicial instruction, where not harmful when taken with balance of charge; Ferguson v. State, 52 Neb. 434, 66 Am. St. Rep. 512, 72 N. W. 590, refusing to reverse conviction for erroneous inclusion in charge, of matter not in evidence, where rights of prisoner not prejudiced thereby; Welsh v. State, 60 Neb. 115, 82 N. W. 368, upholding instruction embodying collateral matter, evidence of which not contradicted; Henry v. State, 51 Neb. 155, 66 Am. St. Rep. 450, 70 N. W. 924, holding it reversible error to discredit defense of alibi in charge, as easily fabricated.

Defense of intoxication.

Cited in Latimer v. State, 55 Neb. 617, 70 Am. St. Rep. 403, 76 N. W. 207, holding defense of intoxication competent on trial for robbery, though insanity or loss of reason not produced thereby.

34 L. R. A. 857, YOCH v. HOME MUT. INS. CO. 111 Cal. 503, 44 Pac. 189.

Avoidance of policy by breach of condition.

Cited in Schroeder v. Imperial Ins. Co. 132 Cal. 19, 84 Am. St. Rep. 17, 63 Pac. 1074, holding policy avoided by failure to give insurer notice of foreclosure proceedings within reasonable time after knowledge thereof obtained by insured.

— Keeping of benzine, etc.

Cited in Ackley v. Phenix Ins. Co. 25 Mont. 279, 64 Pac. 665, holding description of goods as "usually kept in retail drug store" sufficient to prevent forfeiture under prohibition against keeping of benzine, etc.

Cited in footnote to Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wade, 58 L. R. A. 714, which holds policy not avoided by bringing gallon of gasoline on premises for temporary use, though causing their destruction.

Distinguished in Mitchell v. Potomac Ins. Co. 16 App. D. C. 263, refusing recovery on fire policy excepting liability for damage by gasoline explosion, where evidence proves loss thereby, rather than by fire; Vandervolgen v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 123 Mich. 294, 82 N. W. 46, holding policy avoided by violation of condition on which sales of kerosene at night permitted.

— Effect of agent's knowledge.

Cited in footnotes to Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 52 L. R. A. 665, which holds statement that life tenant has fee-simple title to insured property does not avoid policy where agent knew facts; Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 57 L. R. A.

319, which denies insurer's right to rely on warranty by applicant that answers properly recorded, where medical examiner knew otherwise.

34 L. R. A. 861, STANDARD OIL CO. v. ARNESTAD, 6 N. D. 255, 66 Am. St. Rep. 604, 69 N. W. 197.

Liability of sureties for partnership.

Cited in London & L. Ins. Co. v. Holt, 10 S. D. 174, 72 N. W. 403, holding sureties for partnership acting as agents, not liable for money collected after dissolution by member of firm.

3 6105 063 244 052

3 6105 063 244 052

